Concerning this

NEW EDITION.

AS the Knowledge of Foreign Countries is a Science that no Man of either Learning or Business can excusably be without, so there is no certain way of attaining it, but by consulting the Travellers that have been upon the Spot. But the Number of Travellers is so Great, and their Writings so Voluminous, that the Study of them is Tedious; and considering the many unnecessary Things contain'd in such Writings, the Reading 'em is even Irsome. Wherefore an Abstract of what they have said, to the purpose, of Geography, and their Accounts of Places dispos'd in right Method, cannot but be acceptable to the Publick.

The following Sheets contain that, namely a faithful Description of all the Countries of the Earth, according to the Reports of Modern Travellers. The whole Book is nothing else but the Words of the most Credible Travellers and Historians, and most Judicious Geographers, dispos'd in a regular local Method. And altho' this may be call'd a discredit to our Book, as being only a Collection of what others have said already, yet when it is considered that no one Man can possibly view the whole Earth in a Life-time, and there never having happen'd a juncture wherein any Set of Men have at one time taken a Survey of all Countries, and concurr'd together in one general Description; it is impossible to come at a true Knowledge of the Earth but by this Method.

Had former Writers in Geography taken this Method, we had not had such mistaken Notions of Distant Countries; if the later Writers had not Transcrib'd only those that went before em, this Treatise had been less necessary; but since no Body has yet had recourse anew to the Fountain Heads, and since the last Age has produc'd a new Set of Travellers to all the most distant Parts of the Earth, nothing can be more seasonable and instructive than this Work.

As we have with the greatest Care endeavour'd to Write the exact Truth every where, and admit nothing that wanted good Authority; We have been also careful to avoid all redundancy, and have set down only so much as a judicious Reader will desire for his Information, without extending the Matter tediously to pall his Appetite. And we trust we have been so Happy in this, that it will be very difficult for any Body after us to observe an exacter Medium.

Altho' Geography be the Subject we undertake, yet to illustrate that, we have introduc'd a due Portion of the History of every Nation; but in this too we have been mindful to avoid Prolixity, remembering that it is but a Collateral Part, and only subservient to our proper Design. When Dr. Heylin in his Work enlarg'd so far in the Historical Part, it might indeed be necessary, because at that Time there were not many Histories of Foreign Nations extant in the English Tongue, but since of late Years that defect is so largely supply'd, it would be giving our Readers a double Trouble and Expence to Transcribe 'em.

ADVERTISEMENT.

... it, we hope we have omitted nothing that an Ingenuous Reader would desire in a Work of this Nature; nor have inserted any thing that such a One would wish to be Expung'd.

A Blame perhaps may be laid upon us for sending out the last Edition, without the Improvements that are now made. To that we answer, That these Improvements were then intended, and would have then been made, if an unforeseen Incident had not precipitated that Publication; for when the Maps were all Engrav'd, and Part of the Book Printed, a sudden and unexpected Notice was given of an intended New Edition of Dr. Heylin's Cosmography, wherein it was suppos'd the New Editor would have inserted the Observations of Modern Travellers, and renew'd that Learned Author's Descriptions. For this Reason the Design that was then on foot, namely, To abstract all the Modern Travels into Asia, Africa and America, whereby to make the Descriptions of those Parts of the World as Compleat as that of Europe, was by necessity shorten'd. But now that Editor has shewn himself, and let us see that our first Design is perfectly unperform'd by him, we have Resum'd it, and from no less than an Hundred of the Best and Newest Travels, have drawn up a true and full Description of Asia, Africa and America; which we hope is so Accurate as to need no Alteration, and is as full as we ever purpose to make it; and therefore the Buyers of this Edition will be in no danger of having it hereafter Depretiated.

It is necessary to Note, that in this Edition the Additions are as follow.

In the Introduction is added a Natural History of the Earth, Translated from the Physica, five de Rebus Corporeis of Monsieur le Clerc, wherein all the Modern Observations and Discoveries, proper for Illustrating that Subject, are exhibited, and the Opinions of the best Philosophers shewn, concerning all the Qualities and Effects of the Elements.

In Europe all the Alterations and Additions in the several Kingdoms, which the great Actions abroad have made necessary, and all the new Informations that late Travellers have given, are inserted. And because Spain is a Country more talk'd of now than formerly, we have drawn out an entire new Description of that Kingdom from many Writers of that and the neighbouring Nations.

The Descriptions of Asia, Africa and America are Written wholly anew, and so ample Accounts of every Part of those remote Countries are here given, that the Reader may with small Pains acquire almost as intimate a Knowledge of them, as he has of his Native Land.

In the Index of Ancient Names of Places, we have given the Modern Names apposite, that the Reader may at one View be inform'd of what perhaps was all he sought, without the trouble of turning to the Page.

This has encreas'd the Bulk of the Book to Forty Sheets more than it was, and therefore necessarily enhans'd the Price. But it must be remember'd, that in this one Volume the whole Earth is Describ'd, and the Buyer sees at once what he is to expect.

OF EUROPE.

NO Country has been more judiciously described than Great Britain and Ireland, by the Learned and Indefatigable Mr. Camden, which the Additions of the Skillful Dr. Gibson, in the late Edition, renew'd and supply'd; and therefore, when we say, that our Account of those Countries is an Abridgment of that, and made by the Learned Editor, we suppose our Reader will grant it to be a good one.

Monsieur de la Croix, Geographer to the French King, having in his Geography, given a very ample Account of France in its present State, we have chosen to Translate him entire, and have taken the liberty to add to him out of several late Travellers, as Dr. Burnet, Dr. Northleigh, Dr. Lister, &c. and our own Knowledge. Whereby the Description of that Country is render'd as compleat as can be desired in a Work of this Nature.

The Description of the Netherlands is Collected from very many Books of Travels and Histories, which the many Wars there have occasion'd to be very full of the Accounts of Places: This together with our own Knowledge, has enabled us to give, we hope, a very Satisfactory, as well as true Description of that part of Europe.

For the Description of Germany, we acknowledge our selves beholden to the Learned and Judicious, then Mr. Nicolson, now Lord Bishop of Carlisle, whose Travels over a great part of that Country, added to his great Reading, render'd him perfectly capable to give the World an ample Description of it. If therefore we confess to have Abridg'd his two Volumes of the English Atlas, we trust our Reader will rather Applaud than Censure us.

Switzerland and Italy, being Countries frequently travel'd thro', the Reader will believe we cannot err much there; we consulted Dr. Burnet and Mr. Misson, as the most Modern, and many others of earlier date.

Our Accounts of Spain and Portugal have been improv'd out of Mariana, and other Historians, Poblaciones de Espana por Mendez. Sylva Excellencias de Espana de Gregorio Lopez Madera. Antiquas Po- blaciones de Poza. Cosas Memorables de Espanna de Marinco Siculo, &c. Descripcion de Portugal de Duarto Nurex de Leon. Excellencias de Portugal de Antonio de Sousa Macedo, &c. Together with the Modern Travels of Mr. Willoughby and others, &c.

Scandinavia, or the Northern Kingdoms of Denmark, Sweden and Norway, were so amply describ'd by Mr. Todd, now D. D. and Prebendary of Carlisle, in that Volume of the English Atlas he Compiled, that in Abridging him, and consulting some later Travels, as Mr. Moldsworth, &c. we have render'd our Account of those Countries very perfect.

Dr. Connor having lived some Years in Poland, and made Observations all the time, we may allow his Account of that Nation to bear some Credit, and therefore by Illustrating our Description out of him and some others, we have, we think improv'd it.

The best General Account of Muscovy we could Collect out of former Geographies and Atlas's, we have improv'd out of Olearius, the Earl of Carlisle, some very Modern Anonimous Writers, Adam Brandt and his Excellency, Tsbrandts Ides.

Hungary having been the Theatre of long Wars, the Histories have furnished us with pretty good Accounts of the chief Cities in that and the Neighbouring Countries, which we have improv'd out of Dr. Edward Brown, and others.

The Learned Sir George Wheeler, by his Travels thro' Greece, has enabled us to Illustrate our Description of that part very satisfactorily. And in the other Provinces of Turkey in Europe, we have pick'd up the best Lights we could out of divers Authors.

Many small Pieces which we have consulted, we have omitted to name, lest we tire the Reader. Among those are the English Gentleman's Travels thro' Portugal, Spain, Italy, Germany, Sweden, Denmark and the Netherlands, in the Years 1693, to 1697. An Account of a Journey out of Poland into Muscovy, and of the Tumult occasion'd in that Court by the present Czar's Sister. A Letter concerning the Siege of Azoph and Kasikermen. The Sieur de Beauplan's Description of the Ukrain, and several Provinces of Poland. &c.

A Catalogue of the Books of Travels and Authentick Histories, out of which the Descriptions of ASIA, AFRICA and AMERICA, are almost intirely Extracted.

John Bapt. Tavernier's Six Voyages to Persia, India, &c.

Monsieur de Thevenot's Travels into the Levant, Egypt, thro' Syria, and Mesopotamia into Persia and India, between the Years 1660 and 1670.

Seignior John Francis Gemelli Careri, L. L. D. his Compleat Travels round the World by Land: thro' Turkey, Persia, India, China, the Phillippine Islands thence cross the South Sea to Acapulco in New Spain, and thence by Land to Mexico, thence to Vera Cruz, to the Havana, and so by Sea to Europe. Perform'd in the Years 1693, to 1699.

AN INTRO.

A N INTRODUCTION To the Study of GEOGRAPHY.

THE Word GEOGRAPHY, which is a Composition of the Two Greek Words Γῆ and Γραφή, the former signifying Terra the Earth, and the latter Scriptura or Scriptio a Writing, Implies a Description of the Earth; in which large Sense I think the internal and constituent as well as the External Parts are included, and therefore it may not be improper to say, that GEOGRAPHY Consists of these Two Parts, Viz.

- I. A N account of the Elements or Constituent Parts, Namely Earth, Water, Fire and Air.
- II. A VIEW of the Surface of the Land and Sea, or Terraqueous Globe.

THE Latter of these, which is the Whole in the Common Books of GEOGRAPHY, Consists of these Parts.

I. CHOROGRAPHY. 2. TOPOGRAPHY. And 3. HYDROGRAPHY.

1. CHOROGRAPHY, (from Χώρα Regio) is the Description of the respective Divisions or large Parts of the Earth, which bear the general Name of Countreys or Regions; And this may be consider'd four-fold. 1. Geometrically, as it relates to the Extent and Boundaries of Countries; to which ought to be added the Subdivisions into Provinces or Shires. 2. Naturally, wherein the Situation (with respect to the Heavens) the Climate, Soil and Products, ought to be declar'd. 3. Politically, wherein the Government and History is to be consider'd. And 4. Humanely, with relation to the Inhabitants of them, their Religion, Manners, Customs, &c.

2. TOPOGRAPHY, (from τόπος Locus) is the Description of Cities and Towns, wherein the Situation, Magnitude, Government, Trade, Opulency, Publick Structures, together with the various Changes, Improvements or Decrements they have at several times undergon, ought to be told.

3. HYDROGRAPHY, (from ῥῶς Aqua) is the Description of Rivers and Seas; wherein the Rise and Course of Rivers with all the peculiarities belonging to them, such as Rapidity, Cataracts, Overflowings and the like ought to be declared. The Extent of Seas; The Islands seated in them; The Shoars they Wash; The Havens, Bays, Capes, Rocks; As also, the Depths and Shoals. But this being a Work as large almost as the Description of the Earth, it is usually perform'd separate for the Use of Navigators.

THESE are the Parts of GEOGRAPHY as generally understood; and these are the Heads which we have all along Treated on in this Volume, and have been as particular in, as we judg'd necessary for the Reader's Information and Delight, or as we could with assurance of Truth.

T H E other Part of G E O G R A P H Y we mentioned, namely that which relates to the Internal Constituent Parts of the Terraqueous Globe, their Natures and Effects, is reckon'd to be more properly the business of the Natural Philosopher, and is therefore omitted by Geographers, or at least not compleatly handled. But since that part of Natural Philosophy is in reality necessary to one that desires a full Knowledge of the Earth, We have taken the Liberty to enlarge upon that Subject.

T H E R E is yet another Science which is necessary to a Geographical Student, for without a competent knowledge thereof he cannot have a full Idea of our Sublunary World ; I mean C O S M O G R A P H Y, or the Description of the whole Universe, which acquaints us with the other parts of the World, and shews us the Situation of Our Earth with respect to the Celestial Bodies, and the Distance, Magnitude, and Motion of those Bodies.

And Lastly, T H E D O C T R I N E of the S P H E R E, that is, the Technical or Artificial Part of C O S M O G R A P H Y, wherein the World is divided by Circles, for the better understanding the Motions of the Heavenly Bodies ; and the Seasons and Climates in the Several Parts of the Earth ; must be Learnt before you enter upon the Study of G E O G R A P H Y.

To Render therefore our Work Compleat ; We shall, by way of Introduction, give our Reader,

I. A G E N E R A L View of C O S M O G R A P H Y, wherein the Two Hypotheses of Ptolemy and Copernicus are explain'd, and the M A G N I T U D E, D I S T A N C E and R E V O L U T I O N S of the P L A N E T S declared.

II. T H E S P H E R E describ'd, in a plain and easy manner.

III. T H E Inhabitants of the Earth consider'd, with respect to Z O N E S, C L I M A T E S, S H A D O W S, &c.

IV. T H E Figure, Motion and Magnitude of the E A R T H.

V. A N Explication of Terms of A R T used in G E O G R A P H Y. Together with short and necessary I N S T R U C T I O N S to Beginners for the Understanding of Maps.

To this, which may properly be called an I N T R O D U C T I O N to G E O G R A P H Y, We shall Subjoyn, Two Books of Natural Philosophy, Viz.

CHAP. I.

Of the UNIVERSE.

THE Universe or Whole World is of indefinite Extent, that is, it is so vast and immense that the finite Mind of Man cannot reach its outmost Bounds, but is lost in the Contemplation of it; even almost in the same manner as it is overwhelm'd, when it endeavours to grasp the infinite and incomprehensible Nature of the Deity. Nothing but an Omnipotent God could form so perfect a Structure as that Part of the World, which we with our bodily Eyes behold; and therefore much more must the same God be the adorable Author of that far greater part of it, which we can only perceive and understand with the Eyes of our Minds.

But altho' we are not able to Comprehend the Whole, we may be well acquainted with some Parts of it; and therefore the Vortex of our Sun, and the Great Orbs that are under his Influence, the Wisdom of Humane Nature has obtain'd some tolerable Knowledge of.

By the Naked Eye it was observ'd that the Stars had a Motion; that Five of them particularly, besides the Sun and Moon, were discover'd to change their Situation so much as to obtain the name of Planets or Wandering Stars. This Knowledge alone was what the Ancients were contented with; but the ingenious Penetration of more Modern Astronomers, and the Invention of Glasses and Instruments that help the Sight to a vast Degree, have discover'd that those Five Planets are so many Orbs, and that even the Earth on which we Inhabit is like them a Globe also, and most probably to them appears a Star too, by Reflecting the Light that the Sun Darts upon us, which in all probability is the only Light that we Receive from them. That the Moon is an Opaque, or dark Body, is now acknowledged by every Body, and yet we see she affords us Light at certain times; that is, when she is in those Signs of the Zodiack that are in our Hemisphere, and can reflect to us the Light that the Sun casts upon her. It is apparent that she has no Light of her own, both from the deficient Light she affords at the time of her first Appearance, which we call New Moon, even tho' at that time her whole Body be above our Horizon; and especially during the time of an Eclipse, when the Earth interposing between the Sun and it, Robs the Moon of her borrow'd Light, and shews her in her true Condition.

From this Knowledge of the Moon, some curious Philosophers have by Observation and Reasoning, concluded that the Planets are also Opaque Bodies: and even some adventur'd so far as to affirm they are Habitable Worlds, as this Earth of our's is. But that Notion we shall leave to others to discuss, and proceed to the General Doctrine of Cosmography, or the Description of the World.

The whole Space of the Universe is fill'd with *Æther, or a purer Air, wherein all the Planets, and even our Earth, continually float in a Regular Course. That the Earth is a Globe, and hangs (if we may so term it) in the Air, is what is now granted by all Philosophers; and tho' at first sight this may seem a strange Doctrine, yet it is not inconsistent with Humane Reason, if we consider, that mighty Castles (for no less are the great Ships built now-a-days) float upon the Water, and great and ponderous Birds fly in the Air; and that the Almighty may as well have made Æther strong enough to support this great Globe, and yet flexible enough to let it move in, is not at all more difficult to conceive 'Tis true, the Ancients had no Idea of this, they believ'd the Earth to be a flat Plain, † or at most a Cone or rising Mountain; and so incredible did the Doctrine of the Globular Form of it appear to our Ancestors, that in the Year 612, Vigilius Bishop of Strasbourg was Excommunicated by Pope Zachary for Asserting it. 'Tis strange that the Ancient Philosophers whose studious Enquiries penetrated so far into all manner of Science, should content themselves with so imperfect a Knowledge in this. But tho' they were ignorant of it, we are well acquainted with it. The Discovery of America, and the same Ship sailing continually Westward till she Return to the Place she set out from, is an Experimental Demonstration that the Earth and Sea is a Globe.

The Ancients form'd an Idea of the Heavenly Bodies suitable to their Knowledge of the Earth; and accordingly as they fancied That a Flat Plain, so they suppos'd the Heavens like a Canopy spread over it, wherein the Planets fix'd in their Spheres, like a Nail in a Wheel, made a continual Circuit one above another; the Sun, according to them, being one of those Planets. Thus the System of the Universe, form'd by Claudius Ptolemaeus, a most celebrated Astronomer and Geographer, shews us the Earth at the bottom; next above her the Moon; then the Planet Mercury; next Venus; above her the Sun; next above him Mars, then Jupiter; beyond him Saturn, above whom the Firmament of the Fixt Stars, over which they placed two Crystalline Spheres; and lastly, the Primum Mobile, which they suppos'd to be the First Heaven that gave Motion to all the Spheres. For the better Illustration, we have here exhibited a Draught of it.

This

* Note.] It must be advertis'd that tho' this be the Cartesian Doctrine, it is not entirely concurr'd in, or indeed it must be acknowledged it is oppos'd by that very great Philosopher and Mathematician Mr. Newton; who supposes an Universal Gravity, whereby the Planetary Orbs are sustain'd, and at almost Idem wherein they move. But this Treatise being design'd for Learners, it would be improper to enter so large a Field as that Great Man's Arguments would lead us into; and for the present shall satisfy our selves with having let the young Reader know, that he must hereafter consult that Gentleman and Mr. Whiston, if he desires full Information.

† Note.] This Expression may probably be excepted against by the Learned, in regard that Pythagoras is said to have taught, That the Fire or Sun was seated in the Center, and the Earth like a Star suspended in its Sphere, made a Revolution round it: That Plato and Aristotle have some Expressions that way; and that Anaxarchus form'd an Hypothesis upon the same Doctrine. Yet we may justly enough say, the Ancients were of a contrary Opinion, since 'tis well known the general Belief was so.

SYSTEMA PTOLOMEI

This System was generally believ'd till the Discovery of America disprov'd one Part of it, and the Consideration of the Rapid Motion of the Sun, and the other Planets, and the much greater Rapidity of the Motion of the Fix'd Stars, put Nic. Copernicus, a famous German Mathematician, about 200 Years ago, upon Forming a New System, which might be more consistent with Reason.

Copernicus's System. The Copernican System therefore is thus. The Sun being found to be a Body, at least 300 times bigger than our Earth, it seem'd preposterous that so mighty a Body of Fire should whirl round so large a Circle as his Sphere in the Ptolemaean System is, in so short a time as 24 Hours: 'Twas therefore more reasonable to believe the Earth seated in the Sphere that Ptolemy had plac'd the Sun in, and that the Sun is plac'd in the Center; for by that means, if the Earth but turn round upon its own Axis in 24 Hours, every Side of it is turn'd to the Sun, and consequently a Day and a Night is afforded to all its Inhabitants, without putting the Sun, or even the Earth, to the necessity of making so vast a Journey as the Circle of its Sphere amounts to. And then he allow'd the Earth a Year in his Circuit round the Sun. This therefore was his Hypothesis; viz. That the Sun is seated in the Center, and has no other Motion than turning round upon its own Axis, which it performs in 27 $\frac{1}{2}$ Days. The Sun is surrounded with a vast Space of Aether, of many Millions of Miles extent, which is call'd its Vortex, which Aether is carried round with the Sun; and because the Planets float in it, they also are carried in a continual Circuit from West to East round the Sun in certain Periodical times, according to their Vicinity or Distance from the Sun. The Earth is one of these Planets, and has another attending her, viz. the Moon; for that Planet belongs to Us only, being in continual Circuit round this Earth, and with It carried on in the Annual Circuit that the Earth makes round the Sun: The Use of it being to Reflect the Sun-Beams to us at such times as He is gon from us. The like Concomitants have some of the other Planets, viz. Jupiter four, and Saturn five, we suppose for the same reason; and in regard that those Planets are so much more distant from the Sun than we are, they have consequently occasion for more Moons than we have. 'Tis certain by Ocular Demonstration, that there are four little Planets, which we call Satellites, that are in continual Circuit round about Jupiter; and so regular are their Motions, that the Eclipses of them are Calculated, and thereby a great Help found out to the Correcting of Maps, as we shall have occasion to shew more particularly by and by. The same Demonstration has discover'd the Five Satellites of Saturn; and moreover, a large Ring of Light surrounding that Planet. Of the other Planets, it is not necessary to speak more than of their Magnitude, Distance and Revolution; but the MOON being a sort of Appendix to the Earth, 'tis necessary to be a little more particular concerning it.

It is supposed from the Principle of Gravitation, wherein all Bodies incline to the Center; that the Moon is of a Substance less Dense, or of Parts less contracted than the Earth.

By our Sight it appears to be more dark in some Places than others, which, by the help of Telescopes, is found to proceed from the Inequality of its Superficies; whereof some Parts rise up into Mountains, and others sink into Valleys, as the Map of it, and the Selenography, or Description of the external Face of the Moon, set forth by the learned and accurate Chr. Hevelius has shewn.

Satellite of Jupiter.

Satellite and Ring round Saturn.

Upon

Upon the Question, whether it hath any innate Light? or, being an Opaque or Dark Body, reflects only the Light of the Sun? Disputes were held more frequently before the Use of Telescopes had decided the Controversy, and given it to the latter.

These things are to be observ'd. 1. When the Moon begins to recede from the Sun, and in the Evening is seen to rise out of his Rays where it before lay hid; a small portion only of her is seen by us, and appears horned, because the other parts of the enlightned Hemisphere is seen in the other Region of the Vortex. 2. On the seventh and eighth Day, being then the fourth Part of the Zodiac distant from the Sun, we see the half of her Hemisphere enlightned. 3. Afterwards as the Moon proceeds on the Zodiac, it appears more Gibbous, because the greater half of the Hemisphere is turned towards us. 4. When it comes into Opposition to the Sun, that is, to the greatest distance from him, which happens on the fourteenth Day, we see the full Hemisphere of the Moon enlighten'd. And in the same manner in re-treating from the Sun its Light decreases, till it becomes invisible.

The Motion of the Moon is not as that of the other Planets, round about the Sun only, but round the Earth, and with that round the Sun.

The Time of its Revolution round the Earth is about 28 Days; and with the Earth it is carried round the Sun in a Year.

The Course of the Moon is not upon the Ecliptick, as the Earth's, but deviates to the North and South.

These being premised, the Reason of the Eclipses of the Moon will easily be understood. The Moon suffers an Eclipse, when the Earth in its annual Motion passes between it and the Sun, whereby its Rays, however full they would be upon it, are totally intercepted: which happens only at the Full Moon. But however, it is not at every Full Moon that an Eclipse happens, because the Moon's Course lying to the Southward and Northward of the Ecliptick, she do's not always come within the Shadow of the Earth. Thus therefore at some times, but part of the Moon is Eclips'd. But it is seldom in the whole Year that it quite escapes it. However, altho' the Earth intercepts the Light of the Sun from falling directly on the Moon, yet it do's not nevertheless hinder, but that it will receive a faint imperfect Light, as we see in the Case of a Total Eclipse.

The Reason why the Moon affects the Flux and Reflux of the Sea, we shall speak to in its Place.

We proceed now to the Situation of the Planets, which in this System are thus; Viz.

Situation of the Planets.

The Sun is seated in the Center.

The Planet nearest to the Sun is Mercury.

Next beyond him is Venus.

Beyond Venus is the Sphere of our Earth, with the Moon.

Next to the Earth is Mars.

Next Jupiter, with his Satellites; And lastly,

At a vast greater Distance is Saturn with his Satellites and Ring.

A view of the whole, in their proportionate Distances from the Sun, is shewn in this Scheme.

SYSTEMA COPERNICI.

But

But, to be more exact, we shall set down the real Distance of every Planet from the Sun, according to the Observations of Astronomers. Viz. The Distance of the Earth from the Sun is 750 of the Diameters of the Earth; that is, 6485975 Miles *. This Distance we shall make a Standard for the rest; that is to say, divide it into 100000 Parts, and shew how many of those Parts each Planet is distant from the Sun, thus:

The Distance of	Saturn from the Sun is—	951000	} of those Parts.
	Jupiter —————	519650
	Mars —————	152350
	Earth —————	100000
	Venus —————	72400
	Mercury —————	38806

Next we shall consider the Magnitude of the Planets, viz.

The Diameter of the Earth is 8369 English Miles.
The Diameter of the Sun is equal to 111 Diameters of the Earth; that is, 928959.

The Diameter of Saturn is to that of the Sun, as 5, to 37
The Diameter of Jupiter is to that of the Sun, as 2 to 11
————— that of Mars, as 1 to 166
————— that of the Earth, as 1 to 111
————— that of Venus, as 1 to 84
————— that of Mercury, as 1 to 290

The Periodical Revolutions of the Planets round the Sun, is thus: Viz.

Revolutions of the Planets.	Sat. moves round the Sun in 29 years, 174 days, 5 hours
	Jupiter —————	11 y.	317 d. 15 h.
	Mars —————	1 y.	322 d. 0 h.
	The Earth —————	1 y. or	365 d. 6 h.
	Venus —————	————	224 d. 18 h.
	Mercury —————	————	88 d. ———

This is the Sum of the Copernican System, which is found so agreeable to all the Appearances in the Heavens, and all Objections to it have been so well answer'd by Galileo, Gassendus, Kepler, and others, that the generality of Astronomers now-a-days concur in it.

By these Systems we are inform'd of the Situation, Magnitude and Revolutions of the Planets; but of what Substance they are, is another Enquiry, and what we shall not pretend to meddle with. We have said already, that Astronomers judge them to be Opaque, or Dark Bodies; but whether they are inhabited or not, we shall leave to others to dispute: To which purpose, they that are minded to hear what is said upon that Argument, may consult Mr. Fontenel's Plurality of Worlds, and Mr. Huygen's Celestial Worlds discover'd.

As to the innumerable Number of those we call Fix'd Stars, the Reader must not expect a Theory of them; 'tis sufficient to say, that their Distance is so great, that, according to Mr. Huygen's Computation, a Cannon-Bullet, in as quick a progressive Motion as is common on Earth, (that is, according to Mersennus, One hundred Fathom in the Pulse of an Artery) would spend almost 700000 Years in its Journey between us and them. The Experiment, by which he made this Calculation, is set down in the Tract above-mention'd; but whether he be near the Truth, or no, I know not. 'Tis certain they are at too vast a Distance for Us to be well inform'd of 'em. The same Mr. Huygen supposes them to be Suns, and probably to have Planets belonging to 'em, as our Sun hath; whereby he imagines an Infinity of Inhabitable Worlds. But whether there be any Truth in his Conjectures, do's not belong to us to determine.

All the Use that has been hitherto made of the Fix'd Stars by Astronomers, has been only to make a kind of Map of the Heavens; for as the several Parts of the Heavens are shewn to us by the Motion of the Earth, it is very useful to us in Navigation, and many necessary Operations in Astronomy to be able to distinguish exactly, and express by writing the particular Parts. Now to do this, Astronomers have fill'd the Heavens with imaginary Images; that is, such a Constellation or Collection of Stars is call'd the Lion, another the Bear, &c. as may be seen on a Celestial Globe: A particular account of them belongs to Astronomy, and should not be mention'd here at all, but for the sake of the Twelve Constellations that compose the Zodiack, these being useful to our present purpose; for these Twelve Constellations, commonly call'd Signs, are ranged one by another quite round the Heavens, and serve very aptly to express the Course of the Planets; for when we are told Jupiter is in, that is, over-against Aries, Mars in Libra, Saturn in Scorpio, or the like, we immediately understand in what part of the Heavens those Planets are. The Zodiack also denotes to us the Seasons; for when the Sun is in the Ascending Signs, our Summer approaches; as on the contrary, the Winter comes on when he is in the Descending Signs: But of the Zodiack more hereafter.

We shall now finish this Chapter, having, we hope, given the Learner a tolerable Idea of the Universe.

* Huygen computes the Distance between the Earth and the Sun to be at least 10000 of its Diameters.

CHAP. II.
Of the SPHERE.

THE ARTIFICIAL SPHERE

THE Sphere is an Artificial Instrument, consisting of Circles which Astronomers have imagined in the Heavens, and invented for the more certain and easie expressing the Motion of the Planets, &c.

The Picture of it we have here exhibited, and the Description of it is as follows.

An Axis passes Diametrically thro' it, upon which the whole is suppos'd to Turn, express'd in the Cut by a single Line.

The two extreame Points thro' which the Axis passes are the two Poles, the one North, and the other South, the former call'd the Arctick from the Greek Word ἄρκτος, a Bear, because it is plac'd near that Constellation in the Heavens, and the latter Antarctick, as being opposite to it.

The Circles are Eleven in number, whereof seven are call'd the Larger, the other four are Smaller.

The Larger are the Æquator, the Meridian, the Zodiack, the Ecliptick, the Two Colures, and the Horizon; these are of the Circumference of the whole Globe.

The smaller are the Two Tropicks, and the Two Polar Circles.

The Æquator divides the Sphere into Two Equal Parts, call'd the Northern and Southern Hemispheres. 'Tis also call'd the Equinoctial Line, because when the Sun (or rather the Earth) passes under it, the Day and Night is equally long all over the Earth: Which comes to pass twice a Year, viz. Mar. 11. and Sept. 12. On this Line are computed the Degrees of Longitude, whereof the Number is 360 from West to East quire round the Earth.

The Meridian divides the Sphere into two Equal Parts, call'd the Eastern and the Western Hemispheres. The Meridian is mutable, being properly that part of the Heavens where the Sun is at Noon, wherefore every different Part of the Earth has a different Meridian; for since the Sun is always moving, the Meridian varies as you remove either Eastward or Westward: But in passing North or South it continues the same. Upon the great or brazen Meridian on Globes, the Degrees of Latitude are mark'd; being reckon'd from the Æquator to the Pole, both Northward and Southward.

The Zodiack is a Circle 16 Degrees Broad, that lies obliquely cross the Æquator, enclining on the East about about three Points to the Northward, and on the West as many Points to the Southward. It is call'd Zodiack from the Greek Word ζῳδιος [a Living Creature] because 'tis adorn'd with Twelve Signs or Images of Living Creatures, being so many Constellations, as we have already intimated. The Names, and Characters by which they are express'd are these, viz.

Fig. 1. Aries, Taurus, Gemini, Cancer, Leo, Virgo, Libra, Fig. 2. Scorpio, Sagittarius, Capricorn, Aquarius, Pisces.
 Aries ♈ Taurus ♉ Gemini ♊ Cancer ♋ Leo ♌ Virgo ♍ Libra ♎

Defn. 1. The Ecliptick is a Line in the middle of the Zodiack: And shews the Sun's, or rather the Earth's Annual Course Northward and Southward, which makes the Change of Seasons. The Sun never advances farther than the Ecliptick, but the Course of the Moon and the other Planets lies 8 Degrees farther on both sides, which is the Reason that the Zodiack, as we said above, is 16 Degrees broad.

Defn. 2. The Two Colures cut the Sphere into Four Equal Parts. The Colure of the Solstices pass'g thro' the Poles, cuts the Zodiack at the first Degree of Cancer and Capricorn. The Colure of the Equinoxes in like manner pass'g thro' the Poles, but cuts the Zodiack at the beginning of Aries and Libra. They shew the Seasons, for when the Earth in it's Annual Course passes under the Solstitial Colures the Winter and Summer begin. And when it passes under the Equinoctial Colures, the Spring and Autumn Commence.

Defn. 3. The Horizon has its Name from the Greek word ὁρίζων, to Terminate or Bound; because the Horizon determinates the seen Part of the World from the unseen. It is consider'd Twofold, viz. the Rational, which is a Circle that divides the World into two equal Hemispheres. And the Sensible, which is that great Circle, which a Man being plac'd in a Plain, or on the Sea, determines with his Sight round about, by which the Heavens and the Earth seem to be joyn'd as it were with a kind of Closure. Wherefore the Sensible Horizon must change as oft as the Beholder removes himself.

Defn. 4. The Tropicks are two Circles Parallel to the Æquator, and equally distant from it; the one North, and the other South; that on the North passing through the beginning of Cancer, takes its Denomination from that Sign; as the other by passing through the beginning of Capricorn, has its Name from that Sign. The Tropick of Cancer is 23 Deg. 31 Min. distant Northward from the Æquator, and the Tropick of Capricorn is the same Distance Southward of it. They were named Tropicks from the Greek word τροπή, which signifies Conversion, or turning back; because after the Sun has arriv'd at either of them, he goes no farther towards the Poles, but returns back towards the Æquator.

We will suppose our Reader a meer Learner, and therefore explain to him the Annual Course of the Sun. He must remember then, that the Sun rises and sets every day a little more Northward than he did the day before, when our Summer approaches; as on the contrary more Southward when the Winter comes on. Thus we will suppose him at the farthest Distance from Us, viz. in the Tropick of Capricorn, which happens every Year on the 11th of December, and is with us the shortest Day of the Year; every Day after that he Rises and Sets a little more and more Northward; so that by the 11th of March he is in the Æquator, and gives an equal Day and Night to all the Earth: Advancing still every Day Northward, he at length arrives on the 11th of June, at the Tropick of Cancer, which makes the longest Day with us, and then returns again to the Southward, toward the other Tropick. And thus by advancing Northward and Southward continually, affords a Winter, a Summer, a Spring, and an Autumn to all the Parts of the Earth.

This Definition is adapted to our Senses, because we think we see the Sun move, and rise and fall in our Horizon; but the Truth is (at least if we allow Copernicus's System) 'tis the Earth only that performs this Motion. We have said already, that the Earth turns round upon its own Axis every day; and in turning round, it advances the length of its Circumference every day upon a Circle (just as a Bowl, for example, upon a Green) so large, that a Year's time is taken up in its surrounding it. Suppose we then this Circle to be the Ecliptick, which as we have shewn already, lies obliquely cross the Æquator from Tropick to Tropick, and the Change of the Seasons will be very intelligible to us.

The two remaining Circles of the Sphere are the two Polar, viz. the Arctick or Northern, and the Antarctic or Southern. They are both Parallel to the Tropicks, the former 23 Degrees, 31 Minutes from the North-Pole, and the latter the same Distance from the South-Pole. They serve to Bound the two Temperate Zones, beyond them being the Frigid Zones.

So much for the Circles of the Sphere; we must next mention the Points, and then conclude this Chapter.

The Points are the Vertical, Cardinal, and Collateral.

The Vertical Points are the Zenith and Nadir; the former being that part of the Heavens directly over our Heads; and the latter the Point of the Heavens, directly opposite to it. Therefore these Points are mutable, for every Man by removing his Place, changes both his Zenith and Nadir.

The Cardinal Points are the four Quarters of the World, viz. East, West, North and South. The East is that part of the World where the Sun rises, the West where it sets, the South where it is at Noon, and the North opposite to it*. So that these Points are immutable, and the same to all the World; except with this difference, That in the Southern Hemisphere the Sun is full North with them at Noon.

The Collateral Points are the Divisions and Subdivisions of these, invented for the more exact expression of Situations and Bearings; they are those that compose the Mariner's Compass, and are commonly call'd Rhombs, or the Points of the Wind. They were first divided into Eight, then into Sixteen, and lastly, into Thirty-two. The Names whereof are thus: Viz. The four Cardinal Points, EAST, WEST, NORTH, SOUTH.

* This Definition may perhaps be carp'd at, because in the Winter-time the Sun rises much Southward of the East Point, and sets as much West of the West; as such, that when the Sun is much elevated above the Horizon, as in the Torrid Zone, and even with us in the midst of Summer, it can't be said to be in the South; however, the Exceptions will be easily conceiv'd, and in the general I am sure this gives an ignorant Learner the best Idea of the four Quarters of the World. And if the Latin Names of these Points be remember'd, this Definition will need no Apology.

Between each of which are the Principals, Viz.
North-East, North-West, South-East, and South-West.

Each of these Eight have two Collaterals; which retaining the Name of their Principals, acquire also a Sir-name from the Cardinal; Viz.

North by West, North by East, North-East by North, North-East by East, East by North; East by South, South-East by East, South-East by South, South by East; South by West, South-West by South, South-West by West, West by South; West by North, North-West by West, North-West by North.

These Collateral Points are Sixteen in Number, which together with the Eight Principal make 24, besides the Four Cardinal.

North-North-East. East-North-East. East-South-East. South-South-East.
South-South-West. West-South-West. West-North-West. North-North-West.

All which are particularly shewn in the SCHEME annex'd.

CHAP. III.

Of the Inhabitants of the Earth with Respect, to CLIMATES, SHADOWS, SITUATION, &c. And also a Definition of the Terms LONGITUDE and LATITUDE.

§. I. Of ZONES, CLIMATES, and PARALLELS.

AS the Sphere is divided into Five Parts by the Two Tropicks and the Polar Circles, so the Ancients divided the Earth into Five Zones answerable to those Lines, viz. The Torrid Zone, Two Temperate Zones, and Two Frigid Zones.

The Zones

Torrid
Zone

The Torrid Zone is the Space between the two Tropicks, which are always mark'd on the Globes and Maps answerable to those in the Heavens, and by consulting a Map of the whole World, will be seen to contain the greatest Part of Africa, Arabia, Part of India and China, the Islands in the Indian Ocean; The Kingdoms of Peru and Mexico, Brazil, &c. This Zone being constantly visited by the Sun, was by the Ancients esteem'd uninhabitable, but the Experience of Modern Navigators has convinc'd us of the contrary. On each side of the Torrid, lie the Two Temperate Zones: That is to say,

N. Temperate
Zone

The Northern Temperate Zone, is the Space included between the Tropick of Cancer, and the Northern Polar Circle, which comprehends all Europe, a good Part of Asia, and North America.

S. Tem-
Zone

The Southern Temperate Zone, is on the contrary the Space between the Tropick of Capricorn, and the Southern Polar Circle; this contains little Land, the South Part of Africa, and the South Part of America, viz. Chili, Amazonia, and Magellanica being all the Parts of it, we are acquainted with.

The Northern Frigid Zone, is that Part of the Earth contain'd within the Arctick Circle all round the North-Pole; and here Island, Norway, Lapland, Finmark, Samiandia and Greenland, included in it are found to be inhabited, and even Nova Zembla, and Spitsberg or Greenland, are frequently visited by Europeans, altho' the Ancients suppos'd this Zone uninhabitable for it's extream Coldness.

N. Frig.
Zone

The Southern Frigid Zone, is that Part round the opposite or Southern Pole, included in the Antartick or Southern Polar Circle. But what that is, whether Land or Water we are not inform'd.

S. Frig.
Zone

These large Zones are again divided into Climates, that is, certain Lines drawn round the Globe Parallel to the Equator, to shew the difference of the Days lengths in the several Parts of the Earth. Each Climate being so much, as to make the Difference of half an Hour in the longest Day of the preceding Climate.

Climates

The Climates are subdivided into Parallels, or half Parallels.

Parallels

The Ancients reckon'd but seven Climates, but the discovery of the rest of the World to the Moderns, has occasion'd the extending the number to Twenty Four, besides those of the Frigid Zone.

§. 2. Of different SHADOWS.

The Ancients used to divide the Inhabitants of the Earth, according to the different Shadows which their Bodies cast, when the Sun was in it's Meridional heighth, into Amphiscij, Heteroscij and Periscij.

The Amphiscij are the Inhabitants of the Torrid Zone, whose Noon-Shadows at different Times of the Year

Year fall different Ways, that is to say, in one part of the Year, when the Sun approaches the Northern Tropick their Shadow falls Southward, as on the contrary it falls Northward, when the Sun arrives at the Southern Tropick. And because twice in the Year the Sun passing directly over their Heads, their Bodies make no Shadow at all, they are also on that Account call'd Afric.

Temper
Zone The Heterosij are those that inhabit the Temperate Zones, whose Noon Shadows always fall one way, that is, in the Northern Temperate Zone the Shadow always lies North, as on the contrary in the Southern Temperate Zone the Shadow always falls South.

Perfur The Perisij are the Inhabitants under or near the North and South Poles, if any such there be, whose Shadow turns quite round 'em every 24 Hours, when the Sun is above their Horizon.

§. 3. Of different SITUATIONS.

The Inhabitants of the Earth are also divided, according to their different Situation, into Periaci, Antiaci and Antipodes.

Periaci The Periaci are those that live in the same Paralell, but opposite Meridians, and consequently must have the same Climate, Seasons and Latitude; but when 'tis Noon with one, 'tis Midnight with the other.

Antiaci The Antiaci are those that live under the same Meridian, but opposite Parallels. They have the same Longitude, and consequently Day and Night alike. They are also equally distant from the Equator, but on different sides of it, and have therefore different Seasons, so that 'tis Summer with one, when 'tis Winter with the other: And also the length of the Days in the one, is equal to the length of the Nights of the other.

Antipodes The Antipodes are those that live under both opposite Meridians, and opposite Parallels: Are distant from one another, the whole length of the Earths Diameter, and go with their Feet opposite to each other. And have therefore their Winter and Summer, their Noon and Midnight directly opposite to one another.

§. 4. Of different SPHERES.

The Inhabitants of the Earth are also distinguish'd, with respect to the various Position of the Horizon to the Equator Threefold: That is to say, as they Live in a Right, Oblique, or Parallel Sphere Right Sphere A Right Sphere is that Position of the Globe, which hath these Properties, viz.

1. Both the Poles in the Horizon. 2. The Equator passing thro' the Zenith and Nadir. And, 3. The Parallel Circles Perpendicular to the Horizon, as by the Cut in the Margin. The Inhabitants of this Sphere are those that Live under the Equinoctial Line.

Parallel Sphere A Parallel Sphere is on the contrary, that Position of the Globe which hath these Peculiarities, viz.
1. The Poles in the Zenith and Nadir. 2. The Equator in the Horizon. 3. The Parallel Circles Parallel to the Horizon, as in this Scheme. And this Position belongs only to those that Live under the Two Poles, if any such Inhabitants there be.

An Oblique Sphere hath these Properties, viz. Obli
Sph
1. One of the Poles above, and the other beneath the Horizon. 2. The Equator partly above, and partly under the Horizon. 3. The Parallel Circles cutting the Horizon obliquely, as is shewn in this Scheme. All the Inhabitants of the Earth, except those of the Two Poles and the Equinoctial Line, Live under this Position of the Globe.

§. 5. Of LONGITUDE and LATITUDE.

Lastly, The exact Situation of Places, and consequently of the People that inhabit them, is more particularly and minutely express'd by the Latitude and Longitude, for that being known, 'tis easie to discover what Climate or Parallel they live in, what Seasons, what Length of Days they enjoy; whether they be Antiaci, Periaci, or Antipodes to us; whether they live in a Right, Parallel or Oblique Sphere; and likewise informs us readily to find out any Place in a Map.

The Latitude is the distance of any Place from the Lati
Equator towards either of the Poles; so that it is Twofold, Northern, when the Place lies North of the Equator; and Southern, when the Place lies South of the Equator. And since the distance from the Equator to either Pole is but 90 Degrees, the Degrees of Latitude never exceed that Number. The Latitude being known, we are inform'd of the Climate and Length of Days; and may guess at the Fertility and Product of the Earth, in regard that the different warmth of the Sun is the general Cause of Fruitfulness and Sterility.

Note, Degrees of Latitude are of the same Extent in all Longitudes, that is, 60 Miles: But Degrees of Longitudes vary, as we shall shew presently.

The Longitude of a Place is it's distance from the Long first Meridian. We have already explain'd in the tude
Chapter of the Sphere, what the Meridian is, but what is meant by the first Meridian belongs to this Place. The Reader must know then, that when Ptolemy invented the Art of exactly distinguishing the Situation of Places, he did it by the Meridians and Parallels, the former passing thro' the Poles and the Equator, and thro' the Zenith of every Place, and the Latter lying Parallel with the Equator; the Equinoctial Line was found convenient for the Computation of Latitude: And for Longitude he fixt upon the Meridian of the most Western Part of the then known World, which was the Canary Islands, and of them Teneriffe having an exceeding high Mountain upon it, the Peak of that Mountain was wisely fix'd upon, to begin the Computation from. Accordingly all the Old Maps have the Longitude computed Eastward from this Peak, and because in Ptolemy's Time but one side of the Globe was known, the Degrees extended only to the Number of 180; but since the discovery of America, the Number has been increas'd to 360. viz. the Circumference of the whole Globe; the same first Meridian being still continued. About Threescore Years ago the French Geographers pretending to more exactness, remov'd the first Meridian to the Island Ferro, two Degrees and half more Westward. Which makes some small Difference in the setting out the Longitude in Maps, the old Ones deducing it from Teneriff and the new Ones that follow the French, from Ferro. Again, by reason of the Modern Observations to rectifie Longitude, many new Maps reckon from the real Meridian of the chief City, as London for Example in English Maps, Paris in the French ones, ones, &c in which Case Longitude is reckon'd two-fold, that is Westward as well as Eastward. As also in Sea-Charts the Longitude is usually computed from some noted Port, Cape, or the like. Thus the English Charts reckon from the Lizard-Point on the Coast of Cornwall: And here also the Longitude is reckon'd both East and West.

Difference of the time of Day, distant Places, known by the Longitude.
The Longitude of a Place being known, we are inform'd what difference there is in the Hour of the Day between that Place and Us: For in regard that the Sun goes round the whole Earth in 24 Hours, he gains 15 Degrees upon it in every Hour (that being the 24th of 360) or one Degree in 4 Minutes. So that of Consequence at a Place 15 Deg. East from us, it is Noon an Hour before it is so with us; and on the contrary, it is Noon an Hour later than with us at a Place 15 Deg West from us. Thus for Example, Constantinople being 31 Deg. 30 Min. East from London, it is 2 H. 6 M. past Noon there, when it is exact Noon with us. And Dublin in Ireland being 7 D. 37 West from London, their Noon is half an Hour after ours.

Longitude known by difference of Time.
And vice versa by knowing exactly the difference of Time we may discover the exact difference of Longi- tude. Wherefore if a Clock, or any other Automaton, could be made to measure the Time exactly when carry'd to distant Places, there needed no more than to attend it carefully, and observe the difference between it and a true made Sun-Dial, to observe the Longitude of any Place we come into. But because that is impossible, Modern Astronomers have thought it as effectual to observe some remarkable Phenomenon in the Heavens; as an Eclipse for Example; which being always calculated, and its appearance with us exactly known, if the time of its being seen in any other Part of the World be observ'd, the difference of that time by allowing 15 Deg. to an Hour, shews the difference of Longitude. But we shall have occasion to speak more particularly of this hereafter.

Note, Degrees of Longitude are of different Extent in different Latitudes, because the Meridians joyning together in a Point at each Pole, do necessarily grow narrower as they approach the Poles. So that altho' a Degree of Longitude on the Equator be of 60 Miles extent (or more exactly 69 Miles, as we shall shew in the next Chapter) yet they diminish in every Latitude; as is shewn in this Table.

CHAP. IV.

Concerning the EARTH; its Figure, Dimensions, &c. And a Table of Measures.

THE Opinion of the Ancients concerning the Figure of the Earth, was very different from what is now believ'd: Some held it to be like a large hollow Vessel; others, that it was an immense Plain, supported by Pillars like a Table. Which Opinions were so stiffly maintain'd by some of the Fathers, (particularly LeSartius and St. Augustine) and so firmly believ'd even after the Year 600. as to cause Pope Zachary (as we have said) to Excommunicate and Depose Vigilius B. of Strasbourg for asserting the Antipodes. And many of the Philosophers believ'd it to be a Cone or high Mountain, by which they answer'd for the disappearance of the Sun at Night. But better Philosophers have found that the Body of the Earth and Water is a Globe: Which will be illustrated by these plain and undeniable Arguments.

1. That the Earth is Globular, does plainly appear from the Eclipses of the Moon; for those being always round, the Earth which is the Body that intercepts the Beams of the Sun, and is the undisputed cause of such Eclipse, must necessarily be of a round Form.

2. The nearer one approaches to either of the Poles, the Stars nearest to the Pole are the more elevated from the Horizon toward this Zenith; as on the contrary, the farther one moves from the Poles the same Stars seem to withdraw from him, till at last they quite disappear. Again, the Stars Rise and Set sooner to One that travels towards the East, than they do to One that travels towards the West; insomuch, that if one should spend a whole Year in marching round the Earth towards the East, he would gain a Day; as on the contrary, in making the same Journey Westward, he would lose one. And this is actually seen between the Portuguese in Macao, an Island on the South of China, and the Spaniards in the Philippine Islands. The Sunday of the former being the Saturday of the latter; occasion'd by what we have said. For the Portuguese passing from Europe to the East-Indies, and thence to Macao; and Spaniards passing Westward from Europe to America, and thence to the Philippines, between 'em both, they have Travel'd round the Earth.

3. Lastly, That the Earth is round, is demonstrated by the Voyages that have been made quite round it; for if a Ship setting out from England, and sailing continually Westward, shall come at last to the East-Indies, and so home again, 'tis a plain assurance that it is a Globe, not a Flat, a Cube, a Cone, or any other Form. These Navigations are so frequently made, and afford such a Demonstration, that there is no room to doubt, and makes it lost labour to argue any further.

The Rotundity of the Globe in general, is not to be disputed on account of Mountains, Valleys, Seas, or the like; since little Excrescences or Caverns, as those are in comparison of the whole Body of the Earth, do not alter the main Form of the whole, any more than a Wart or a Scar on a Man's Hand may be said to alter its shape.

'Tis true, Modern Observations have discover'd to us, that the Earth is a little depress'd at the Poles, which alters its Figure from an exact Globe, to an oblate Spheroid; such as a Ball of Wax would be after it had been gently press'd between two parallel Boards.

The measure of the Earth comes next to be consider'd; that is to say, 1. Its Circuit. 2. Diameter. And 3. Surface.

Because it is impossible to measure the whole Circuit of the Earth, it has been judg'd sufficient to measure a part, from whence the length of the whole might be concluded: This Part is that we call a Degree, or the 360th part of the whole Circumference. But how much of the Earth answers to a Degree in the Heavens, has been much question'd of late. A Degree has been always divided into 60 parts, call'd Minutes, each of which, was reckon'd equivalent to a common Mile; but Modern Experiments have shewn that 69 $\frac{1}{4}$ English Statute Miles, are contain'd in a Degree. Among the several Observations in order to discover this, that of Mr. Norwood's in England, and that of the Academy of Sciences at Paris in France, are judg'd to be the most exact. The former in the Year 1635. made an Experiment in measuring the distance between London and York; where by taking the exact Latitude at both Places, he found a Degree to contain 69 $\frac{1}{4}$ of Statute English Miles, each containing 5280 Foot. The Gentlemen of the Academy, a few Years ago, made a new Experiment, wherein they observ'd with great Exactness, and found that 57060 Toises were the length of a Degree. The Toise, or Fathom, is 6 Paris Foot; the Paris Foot is somewhat larger than our English one, so as that 15 of that make 16 London Foot: This Proportion being known, 'tis very easy by Arithmetical Operations to discover that a Degree contains 69 Statute English Miles (of 5280 Foot in each) and 864 Foot. This being premis'd, and the Reader inform'd by what means to correct the common Computation; it will not perhaps be amiss to continue the old way of 60 Miles to a Degree, and the rather in regard that in all Journeys we reckon much frequenter by the large Computed Miles, than by the Statute ones.

The Circumference of the whole Globe of the Earth is	26293 $\frac{1}{2}$ English Miles.
The Diameter of the Earth is	8369 English Miles.
The Surface of the Earth contains	220048209 $\frac{1}{4}$ Square Eng. Miles.
The Solidity of the Earth is	306930160535 $\frac{1}{2}$ Cubick Miles.

CH A P. V.

Of TERMS of Art used in GEOGRAPHY.

§. I. Of LAND.

A Continent, is a large space of Dry-Land comprehending many Countries, all joyn'd together without any separation by Water. Thus Europe, Asia, and Africa, is one great Continent. As America is another.

An Island, is a Part of Dry-Land incompass'd with Water: As England and Scotland for Example, is one Island, Ireland another, &c.

An Archipelago, is a Cluster of small Islands lying near together; as those in the Egean-Sea, between the Coasts of Greece and Asia.

A Peninsula (quasi penè insula, Lat. or otherwise Chersonesus, Gr. from $\chi\epsilon\rho\sigma\omicron\tau$ Terra, and $\nu\eta\sigma$ Insula) is a Part of Dry-Land incompass'd with Water, except on one narrow side which joyns it to the Land, as the Morea in Greece, &c.

An Isthmus, is that narrow Neck of Land which joyns a Peninsula to the Continent.

A Promontory, is a high Part of Dry-Land stretching itself out into the Sea.

A Cape, is the extream Part of a Promontory, the most advanc'd into the Sea.

A Mountain, is a rising Part of Dry-Land over-topping the adjacent Country.

A Vulcano, is a Mountain that burns continually; many whereof at some times make violent Irruptions of Fire, as Vesuvius, Ætna, &c.

§. II. Of WATER.

The Ocean, is that Great Sea which surrounds the whole Earth, and hath different Names given to it in different Parts of the World, as the Northern Ocean is call'd the Hyperborean. The Western, between the Coasts of Africa and America, the Atlantick. That between the Coasts of America and the East-Indies, the Pacifick, or the South-Sea.

Otherwise, for more particularity, 'tis call'd Sea only, and denominated from the Shoar it washes, as the German-Sea, the British-Sea, the Irish-Sea, &c.

Some Parts of the Ocean run up into the Land, either thro' narrow Passes, or wide Mouths; the former are call'd Seas, as the Mediterranean-Sea, the Baltick-Sea, the Red Sea, &c. But the latter are call'd Golphys, as the Gulf of Venice, the Gulfs of Bothnia, and Finland, &c.

But Beds of Water are call'd Seas, altho' they lye between Lands, and communicate with other Seas thro' a narrow Straight, if they are extream large, as the Euxine-Sea, the Red-Sea, &c. Nay, and sometimes, altho' they have no communication, as the Caspian-Sea.

A Bay, is a Part of the Sea that is half surrounded by the Land, or at least bounded by two Promontories; as the Bay of Biscay, the Bay of Bengale, the Bay of Mexico, &c.

A Straight is a narrow Arm of the Sea. having Land on both sides of it. A Straight, is either between one Great Sea and another; between the Ocean and a Gulf; or between one Gulf and another. As for Example: 1. The Straight of Magellan lies between the Atlantick and the Pacifick Oceans. 2. The Straight of Gibraltar, thro' which the Atlantick Ocean flows into the Mediterranean-Sea: Or, 3. The Hellepont and the Straight of Constantinople; the former of which joyns the Egean-Sea to the Propontis, and the latter continues that to the Euxine-Sea: As again, the Straight of Caffa runs between the Euxine-Sea and the Palus Meotis.

A Harbor, is generally the Bottom of a Bay, or the Mouth of a large River, so call'd as being a convenient nient Place for Shipping to lye secure from Storms. We call the bottom of a Bay, the innermost part of it towards Land.

A Read, is a Place in the Water where is both convenient Harbor, and good Anchorage for Ships.

A Channel, is an Arm of the Sea running between two Shoars wider than what we call a Straight; as the Chan-nel between England and France, and that between England and Ireland. Thus much of the Sea. Next,

Of WATER within LAND.

A Lake, is a Collection of Water surrounded with Dry-Land, without any visible communication with the Sea.

A River, is a flowing Water, arising from a Spring in some high Land, and continually running in a Channel till it empties itself into some other River, or finally into the Sea.

A Fountain, is the Place where Water primarily arises or springs out of the Earth.

A Cataract, is a Precipice in the Channel of a River where the whole Body of the River falls perpendicularly from a great Height.

Short and Necessary Instructions to Beginners, for the Understanding of Maps,

IN all Maps the North is at Top, the South at Bottom; the East on the Right-hand, and the West on the Left: Or, if it be otherwise, it is always express'd either by Words on each side, or by a Mariner's Compass, wherein the mark of a Flower-de-luce, always denotes the North.

All Maps are laid down and proportion'd to a certain Scale, which is always taken from the Degrees of Latitude.

The Degrees of Latitude, are always mark'd on the East and West sides of the Map.

The Degrees of Longitude, are always mark'd on the North and South sides of the Map.

A Degree of Latitude, is always of the same breadth, viz. 60 Miles (or more correctly 69 Miles). Wherefore the distance of two Places seated directly North and South, is immediately known, by knowing the different Latitudes. But,

A Degree of Longitude, is of different extent; as is shewn at the End of the Third Chapter.

The Latitude and Longitude of a Place being known, you may find it immediately in the Map by drawing a Line or a Thread cross the Map both ways, and where the two Lines cut one another, the Place stands. Only with this allowance, that the Longitude is sometimes computed from Teneriff, and sometimes from Ferro, in which Case, the difference of two Degrees and half may happen.

The Earth being a Globe, a Map of the whole Earth must necessarily consist of two Parts, both Sides of the Globe being not to be seen at once. Accordingly, in a Universal Map, the Right-hand Circle, shews the Old World, or Europe, Asia, and Africa: And the Left-hand Circle, shews the New World, or America.

Upon the General Map, the Circles correspondent to those in the Sphere are Mark'd, viz. The Equinoctial-Line, the two Tropicks, and the two Polar Circles, all which cross the Map from East to West; and the first Meridians surrounding the two Hemispheres from North to South, the Parallels lying from North to South at Ten Degrees distance; and the Meridians at the same distance from West to East, are also mark'd upon General Maps.

Meridians and Parallels belonging to that particular Part. Which are made smaller or larger, as the Paper on which it is drawn will admit, and the distance of Places mention'd in it, are always exactly proportioned to the breadth of the Parallels. So that let a Map be never so small, the distance of Places is notwithstanding exactly shewn, if measur'd according to the Degrees of Latitude in that particular Map.

In both General and Particular Maps, the thick shadowing denotes the Sea-coast. Rivers are mark'd by large shadow'd Serpentine Lines; Roads by double Lines; Divisions of Countries by Prick-Lines; larger Pricks for Provinces, and smaller for Sub-divisions; and Divisions of Nations, are often shewn by Chain-Lines. Forests are represented by Trees: Mountains by rising Shadows: Sands by Prick-beds: Marshes by shadow'd Beds: Lakes by shadow'd Coasts.

The Names of Provinces, are written in larger Capitals, smaller Divisions, in smaller Capitals; great Cities, in round Roman Characters; smaller Towns, in Italic Characters.

The exact situation of a Town, is express'd by a little round o, by which simply, Villages are mark'd; but larger Places have addition of a Church for a Market-Town, if the size of the Map will admit: A City is noted by a Church with Houses about it, as much as the Scale will admit. Particular Qualifications of Cities are distinguish'd by Marks, viz.

A Bishoprick, has a Cross, or sometime a Mitre over it.

An Archbishoprick, has a double Cross over it.

An University, has a Star, or sometimes a Caduceus.

An Abbey, is shewn by a Crook, or Pastoral Staff.

A Fortress, by Angles like Bastions.

A Castle, by a little Flag,

A Gentleman's Seat, by a House only.

Other Marks are affected by particular Gravers, and are always explain'd in the Margin. These we have mention'd, are the common ones, and being well known to those that are conversant with Maps, the Gravers omit explaining 'em.

But we must Advetise, that in this Set of Maps our Scale is so small, that we have not always room to mark the Distinctions.

Concerning this Sett of MAPS, and the Correction of LONGITUDE by Modern Observations.

THe Art of making MAPS and Sea-Charts, is an Invention of such vast use to Mankind, that perhaps there is nothing for which the World is more indebted to the studious Labours of Ingenious Men. For by the help of them Geography is made plain and easie, the Mariners are directed in fetching us the Commodities of the most distant Parts. And by the help of them, we may at home, with Pleasure, survey the several Countries of the World, and be inform'd of the Situation, Distance, Provinces, Cities and remarkable Places of every Nation. To do this with Exactness, was an Art (to be sure) not easily attain'd; it was not one Man, nor one Generation of Men, that could bring it to any reasonable Perfection; and accordingly, tho' it was very Early begun, it is but now in our Days that a Method is found out, whereby Maps may be truly Corrected.

Even so early as Anaximander the Disciple and Successor of Thales Geographick Tables, or Maps have had a Being: A plain Demonstration of the Value of this Science; since it began with the beginning of Literature. We are told Alexander carried Callisthenes with him to Babylon, to make a Map of his Conquests; and undoubtedly the Greeks as well as the Romans had Geographical Tables of all their Countries, tho' none of 'em have been preserv'd to our Days, except that which shews the Unskilfulness of the Ancients in making them, I mean the Ancient Map of the Roman Empire still extant, under the Name of the Peutingerian Tables, from Comr. Peutinger, a Learned Gentleman of Augsburg, to whom we are beholden for the Publication of them. Those Tables contain an Itinerary of the whole Empire from West to East, with the distance of Towns by Mensuration; but then the Seas, Desarts or Forests, being not Travell'd through, or Measur'd, are not set down in their true Form, the Latitude or Breadth from North to South, being not at all regarded. This to be sure must have been the general Fault, before Astronomy was made to assist Geography, which had been faintly attempted by divers, but never effected by any before Ptolemy.

Claudius Ptolemaeus a very Learned Astronomer, who flourished at Alexandria under the Reign of Antoninus the Philosopher, making use of all preceding Discoveries, and joining the Observations of Hipparchus, Timocharis and the Babylonians, with those of his own, formed the System of the Universe, still known by his Name; and prescrib'd the Methods of discovering Longitude and Latitude, by Observation of the fix'd Stars, and the Course of the Planets; inventing also the Meridians and Parallels, the better to direct the exact placing of Towns on the Map; and himself publish'd a Sett of Maps, which were made use of for many Ages.

But since the Invention of the Mariner's Compass, and the great encrease of Navigation by the help of it, we have been able to visit all those most distant Places that Ptolemy had but imperfect Accounts of; have especially discover'd that he was very much mistaken in his Accounts of Longitude, and that all Maps hitherto extant are vastly erroneous in the Situation of Places Eastward. The Fault in General was computing the Degrees on the Earth faster than would answer to those in the Heavens, and thereby making Places to seem farther distant from the First Meridian than they really are: Thus France, Italy, Greece, &c. were by little and little so extended, and the Mediterranean Sea thereby so much lengthned, that upon exact Observation it is found, at Scanderoon, no less than 13 Degrees were gain'd, and the Voyage thither represented as 200 Leagues longer than it is. And the farther ther we go Eastward, the greater is the Error, the Coasts of India being laid 20 Degrees too far East, and China 27 Degrees beyond its true Situation. This fault had like to have prov'd fatal to Mr. Dampier and his Company: For when they stood off from the South-Sea to the East-Indies, they found the Voyage 500 Leagues longer than the Maps represented it, and themselves almost starv'd by trusting to 'em. But as by Astronomy, Geography was at first Corrected; so the Amendment of these Errors is owing to the great Improvement now made to that Science, and the exquisite Ingenuity and Industry of modern Astronomers; who by the assistance of excellent Telescopes and other Instruments of modern Invention, have made very considerable Discoveries in the Heavens, and thereby found out a way of ascertaining Longitude as well as Latitude at Land, and correcting the Maps to a perfect exactness.

This method is by Observation of Eclipses; whose beginning at London or Paris being exactly calculated, and thereby certainly predicted, and the beginning of the same Eclipse being observ'd at any distant Place, the difference of Time is certainly known, and 15 Degrees being allow'd to an Hour, the distance of Place may be fix'd to a Mile. The Eclipses of the Sun and Moon only, were at first made use of to this Purpose; but as those occur but seldom, and are visible but in some certain Places, the Observations could not be often made, and therefore this great Work would have been long a doing, if the discovery of the Satellites of Jupiter and their Eclipses had not afforded a new, and very considerable help to it; for these being four in number that make a continual Circuit round that Planet, there happens almost every day an Eclipse of one or other of them.

The Satellites of Jupiter were discover'd by Galileo, the Eclipses of them by Huygens, the Theory of them formed by the Academy of Sciences at Paris, and the Eclipses first calculated for a whole Year by Mr. Flamsteed, and together with the Method of computing Longitude thereby, communicated in the Philosophical Transactions of December, 1683. Since which Time an Ephemeris of them is annually calculated, and Observations for correcting Geography, are very commonly made abroad. Thus this great Work of discovering Longitude, which was thought impossible, is in a great measure perform'd; the Longitude any where on Land being certainly taken, and thereby the Coasts and Situation of Towns exactly laid down; and perhaps in Time the Art may be so improv'd as to be practicable at Sea too. At least if Ships were sent out to make these Observations, at all the Capes and Head-Lands round the Globe, the Seamen would be able to Correct their Reckonings very often in long Voyages.

This being premised, viz. That there is a way of ascertaining the Situation of places East and West, as well as North and South, and that many Observations have been made in distant Parts of the Earth, whereby the Coasts and chief Towns have been brought to their right Situation in the Map, and those being known, smaller Towns, and other Places dependent corrected by 'em: To evince that Sanson's, and all the Maps formerly Publish'd were exceedingly Erroneous, and that the Sett of Maps contained in this Book are Correct, we shall set down a few of those many Observations that have been made, and subjoin a Table of the differences between those Observations and the common Maps, viz.

Paris by Observation is found to be 2 Degrees 25 Minutes East from London. Brest 4 D. 25 M. West from London. Madrid 3 D. 37 M. West from London. Rome (F) 13 D.

10 D. East from Lond. Copenhagen 12 D. 53 M. Dantzick 19 D. Moscow 38 D. 45 M. Aleppo 38 D. 45 M. [Philos. Transf. June 1683. Feb. 1691.] At the Cape of Good Hope P. Tachard made an Observat. by the Satellite. June 1683, and found it to be 14 D. 30 M. East from Paris. [Voyage de Syam] Aden in Arabia near the Mouth of the Red Sea, by Observation is found to be 47 D. 30 M. East from Lond. Cape Comorin by Observation is found to be 76 D. East from Lond. Bombay on the Western Coast of India, is found to be 72 D. 30 M. East from London. Fort St. George 80 D. from London. [Philos. Transf. June 1683. & Observat. Physf. & Math: Europees & l' Acad. de Paris.] An Eclipse of the Moon being by Mr. Halley's Direction observ'd at Pondichy in the Bay of Bengall, by Mr. Benj. Harry, and the same Eclipse observ'd at London by Mr. Halley, at Dantzick by Mr. Hevelius, and at Avignon by Mr. Galles: the Meridional Distance between that Place and London, was found to be 87 D. [Philos. Transf. Feb. 1682] P. Camille and P. Beza, by Observation of the satellites, Sept. 29. 1689. at Malacca found that Place to be 99 D. 45 M. East from Paris. The West Point of Java is observ'd to be 104 D. East from Lond. Syam by Observation of an Eclipse of the Moon by P. Tachard 98 D. 30 M. East from Paris. Nimpo on the Eastern Coast of China, Observation by P. Neel. 117 D. 58 M. East from Paris. [Observ. Physf. & Math] The Western Coast of America was stretch'd out too far, as Mr. Halley's Observations in his late Voyage make appear, Cape Augustin on the Coast of Brasil, being 35 D. West from Lond. notwithstanding a late Author lays it down in 25. And Cape Frio on the same Coast (under the Tropick) is 42 D. 30 M. West from London.

It would be tedious to enumerate all the Observations that have been made; these we have mention'd are at such distant Parts, that almost all our Maps may be examin'd by 'em, and shall trouble the Reader with only these two more, viz.

France in the former Maps of it had been extended several Degrees on every side, so that the Kingdom was made to seem exceedingly larger than it is, but this has been corrected by many Years labour of the Academy of Sciences at Paris, and now very lately New Map correctly made, according to their Observations, was publish'd at Paris, from which this in our Collection is copied.

Moscow on the other hand, had been contracted in its Southern Part near 250 Miles; for the Palus Meotis was made to rise up to the 52 Deg. of Latitude, and the City of Azoph, is plac'd in 51 D. N. Lat. by Sanson and the Dutch Maps. But since the Conquest of that Place, the Czar has caused an actual Survey to be made of the Country South from Moscow, and of the Course of the River Don, whereby it appears that Azoph Lies in 47 D. and that the Course of that River is very much different from what was formerly represented, as may be seen in comparing the old Maps with that in this Book, which is Copied from that Survey.

Abundance of other gross Errors in former Maps corrected in this Set, might be mention'd, such as the Head of the River Nile laid down 15 Deg. that is 900 Miles more South than it really is; the Caspian Sea, being made of Oval form from East to West whereas in Truth 'tis almost an oblong Square from North to South; and many more, which to avoid Tiring the Reader, we omit, and leave it to his own Observation to discover.

But now to apply these Observations to our Maps, it must be remembred that the Degrees of Longitude in them are computed from the first Meridian, which was fix'd at Teneriffe, before the French remov'd it to the Island Ferro 2 D. 30 M. more West; but the Observations we here set down being deduc'd from London, which is 17 D. 30 M. East from Teneriffe, or 20 from Ferro, an Addition must be made of so many Degrees in places Eastward, or Subtraction proportionate for places Westward; and then the true Longitude of these Places as they ought to stand in the Maps will appear thus, viz.

By this Table may be seen the difference between the New Observations, which are according to the Truth, and the Old Maps. And thereby it appears, that India was laid almost 400 Leagues farther off, than it really is, and China no less than 500 Leagues too far to the East. Nay, to go no farther than Rome the fault is there so great, as to lay that City 135 Miles too far off, and the distance between Geneva and Rome, measur'd on an Old Map seems at least 40 Miles more than it is.

By these Tables will also be seen how these Maps agree with the Observations, and consequently whether they are not rather to be consulted than the Old Maps. But it is necessary to Advertise, That the four general Maps of Europe, Asia, Africa and America, are Engraven according to the Old, that so by comparing the particular Maps with them, the New Corrections may the better appear.

A

OR, A

Philosophical View of the Sublunary World.

IN TWO BOOKS.

I. Of the EARTH and SEA.

II. Of the AIR and METEORS.

Purposing to give our Reader a short Natural History of the Sublunary World, and finding that what is already written upon that Subject, for the Use of the Philosophy Schools is so copious, that there is no room to add; we thought it more proper to choose out one of the best of those Authors and Translate Him, than pretend to Write a New-System, which at last might not be so acceptable.

The Physica sive Scientia Naturalis of Mr. Le Clerc, has been well receiv'd and much read as well in Britain as in Foreign Parts. And the Two Books, in that Treatise, upon the Subject we are to speak to, being we think written in a plain and easie Manner, and more suitable to our Design than others, as containing all the Modern Experiments and Observations necessary for illustrating the Argument: We were soon determin'd to make use of Him, and have accordingly Translated those Two Books.

It may perhaps by some be objected, That several Things might have been omitted, as being improper for a meer English Reader. But since in retrenching, it is a difficult Matter to please; altho' we had begun it, we rather chose to leave off, and give the whole, wherein every Man may please his own Taste, and strike out what he thinks fit.

BOOK I.

Of the EARTH and SEA.

CHAP. I.

Of the EARTH consider'd in its self.

1. Having gone thro' the Introduction to Geography, we come now, as we promis'd, to give the Reader the Two Books of Natural Philosophy, relating to the Elements. And first of the EARTH, whereof we have already mention'd it's Figure, it's Diurnal and Annual Motions, and what Situation it keeps in those Motions; with the principal Consequences following thereupon, which we need not repeat here. But shall now proceed to inspect the Bulk of the Earth, and the Materials which are digged out of its Bowels.

2. And the first Thing that presents it self to our View, is that huge, massy Substance, the Globe of the Earth, consisting of many solid Materials, as well as great Quantities of salt and fresh Water; for which reason the Philosophers commonly call it, the Terra-queous Globe. And tho' the solid Matter may perhaps be more (taking it all together) than the fluid, yet the Water takes up the greater Part of the Surface of the Globe, as it is plain to any one that looks upon a Map of the Earth. For besides the Rivers, and Lakes, and Pools, and Fountains which water the Earth in various various Places; the Ocean and its particular Seas are much more extended than the dry Land. Which doubtless was order'd by the Maker of all Things, for the good of Mankind; there being such great occasions for Water to moisten the Earth, and supply us with Fish, and facilitate Commerce by Navigation.

3. But to refer what we have to say about the Waters, to another Place, if we consider the Earth properly to call'd, we shall find it to be a heap of various Bodies. For therein are discover'd Sand, Clay, Mould of various Colours, several sorts of Stones, many Salts, Sulphur, Bitumen, Minerals and Metals without number. Nor is it necessary to dig to the Center of the Earth, whither humane Industry can never penetrate, for the discovery of these Things; they are sometimes met with in great abundance, not many Feet deep. But in the Mines of Hungary and Peru, which are said to be deeper than ordinary, great store of such Things appear.

4. The Ancient Philosophers, (and Schoolmen who follow'd their Opinion, and maintain'd that the Earth is one of those four Elements whereof all Things consist,) observing such a medley of Things to lie under the surface of the Earth, they said this was not the pure Element they meant, but that it was somewhere about the Center. But since no Man could ever yet come at those Parts near the Center of the Earth, this Conjecture of theirs is good for nothing.

5. If Des Cartes his Hypothesis were but well grounded, That the Planets were once of the like Nature with the fixed Stars, consisting of a fiery Substance, and came afterwards to be crusted over with thick and solid Matter; there might be still at this Day a great Fire in the Center of the Earth, as some People imagine. But since the grounds on which that great Man supposed the Planets to be derived, may be reckon'd among those Things which are every way doubtful, and only seem not impossible, tho' perhaps as far from being true as real impossibilities; it is a rashness in his too great Admirers, to take this imaginary Fire at the Center of the Earth for a certain Truth.

6. If those Parts which now make up the Earth, were once loose, and carried round the same Center in a circular Motion, we could then gather from most certain Experiments, that the grossest of all the Parts fell down to the Center of the Earth. Now since we know nothing heavier than Metals, it would not be absurd to suppose, that the inmost Bowels of the Earth were fill'd with a prodigious store of various Metals. And this being presum'd, our Opinion would receive Confirmation from magnetick Experiments, by which it generally appears, That the Earth is of the Nature of a great Loadstone. Therefore we might with good Reason suspect, that at the Heart of the Earth, there is Iron and Loadstone in great abundance; which would be just contrary to their Opinion, who hold a fiery Center of the Earth. But this our Hypothesis is built upon no manifest Reason, and therefore for the avoiding of Error, it is much the safest way to suspend our assent in this Case.

7. However this is observable, that the deeper we dig into the Ground, the heavier the Matter is; and tho' there be no coming near the Center of the Earth, yet such Metals are digged out of the deepest Mines, as are rarely found in the Surface: And if instead of digging Mines a Mile and a half Deep, (which yet is hardly ever done) we could go some Miles downward, perhaps the Matter would still be closer and heavier.

8. But be this as it will, thus much we are sure of, as to the Parts about the surface of the Earth, that they are under a continual Change and Alteration; which may proceed from various Causes. Among those Causes we will not reckon human Labours: But this we see, that the hardest Bodies in the World, the very Adamant it self not excepted, being exposed to the open Air, do wear and waste in Time, and undergo various Alterations without the Hand of Man; and therefore the whole surface of the Earth, whereon the Air perpetually presses, must needs be subject to such Alterations.

9. Besides, the perpetual changing of the Seasons, Heat and Cold, Rains and Winds, Earthquakes and running Waters, &c. are always making a wonderful Change in that Part of the Earth, which is next the surface. And if we take in the daily Mutations of innumerable Animals and Plants, which are fed by the Fruits or Moisture of the Earth; and after a short Time putrifie, and return to Earth again: We shall have reason to believe, That this Surface on which we tread, especially in Countries that have been long inhabited, is for the most part composed of the Bodies of Men and Beasts, or rather of a Matter which is every Day putting on new Forms.

10. And by such perpetual Variations of Matter, there must needs happen an encrease of dry Earth, and a decay of Moisture; for it does not appear, that the parts of fluid Bodies, which have been once blended with Solids, and have been so impregnated with Salts as to lose their fluidness, do ever retrieve it again. This is evident in Plants and Animals, which grow bigger so long as they receive Spirit and Nourishment from Liquors, but afterwards turn to Corruption. Some conclude from hence, that in order to prevent too great a decay, or total failure of moisture in the Planets, God created Comets; that so their Fumes diffusing themselves thro' the Vortex of the Sun, might fall into the lesser Vortices of the Planets, and augment their Liquors.

11. Moreover, there must needs be a vast Change made in the Earth, by means of the many Fires which prey upon its Entrails; concerning which we shall say more in the III. Chapter.

12. We have hinted before, sect. 6. That Philosophers sometimes consider the Earth as a huge Loadstone, which when we come to speak of the Loadstone; we shall have opportunity to enlarge upon. Mean while we may here observe, that in this respect also the Earth is much altered; as appears from the Variations of the Magnetical Needle, which sometimes Points directly at the Pole, sometimes declines several Degrees towards the East or West. But this cannot be, without an Alteration in the pores of that magnetick Matter which flows out of the Earth, and which seems to come at one Time directly from the Pole, and at another Time from those Parts which are on the right or left side of the Pole. And whether this Variation proceeds from the Fires underground, which may spoil here and there a Mine of Loadstone (yet so as that it may afterwards recover it's Virtue again) or whether it be from some other Cause, is what no Man certainly knows.

CHAP. II.

Of Subterraneous Things in general; and first of SULPHUR and BITUMEN.

1. WE told you in the foregoing Chapter, that the Bulk of this our Earth is not one sort of Matter, but consists of innumerable Bodies of various kinds. Concerning the chief of which we will be as particular, as the Brevity we have prescribed to our selves, will permit. Proceed we therefore beyond the outward Crust, to see what we can find in the recesses of the Earth.

2. We don't pretend so accurately to divide all Fossils, as to reduce them to certain Heads, that by by their Definitions might be understood every thing wherein the inferior Species agree, or the general Heads differ one from another. To do this, it would be necessary for us to have (what we are very far from having) a perfect insight into all their Natures. However, to observe some Method, we will divide all the hidden Stores of the Earth, into three Ranks. The 1st, are such as are apt to burn. The 2d, such as are apt to melt in the Fire. The 3d, such as are reducible to Calx. The chief of these several Sorts, we shall consider in their Order.

3. Of those Things which are apt to burn, and easily take fire; the principal are Sulphur and Bitumen, and their various Kinds, or their different Mixtures, which we shall not enumerate. As for Sulphur and Bitumen, they are produc'd in abundance of Places, and vary much in their purity, requiring more or less refining to fit them for different Uses.

4. Sulphur then, according to the best Discovery of its Nature, is a Fossil of a Yellow Colour mix'd with a faint Green, very brittle, and reducible into the finest Powder, and is very apt to take fire. It has a strong smell, which quickly scents the Air, where but a small quantity of it is burnt; but if a good deal of it be burnt in a close place, it is enough to choak those in the Room, especially short-breath'd People. It is something more compact and heavier than Wood; but it don't weigh so heavy, nor prove so solid as Metals.

5. "It grows, says Pliny, in the Æolian Islands, between Sicily and Italy; but the best is in the Island Melos. It is found likewise in Italy, about Naples, and in Campania, in the Hills call'd Lucogæi. There it is dig'd out of Mines, and refin'd by Fire. There are four Sorts of it. 1. Sulphur vivum, call'd by the Greeks ἀρνεύς, because it is so pure, that it needs no refining by Fire. This grows in a hard Lump, and is the only Sulphur that is fit for Use, and is Transparent and Green as soon as it comes out of the Ground; whereas other Sulphurs want to be prepar'd with Liquors and Oyls. The 2d Sort, they call Glebe, and is us'd only in Fuller's Shops. The 3d Sort also, call'd Egula, is only good for working Woollen-Cloth, because it makes it white and soft. The 4th Sort is most proper to be us'd in Lamps.

6. "The first sort of Sulphur, is good for all such Diseases and Pains, as are inrag'd by Cold, and allay'd by Heat; and therefore the Virtue of it is very sensible in hot Springs and Baths whither People resort for the Cure of Pains in their Limbs: Nothing takes fire sooner than this Sulphur; by which it appears to be much impregnated with fiery Particles. There is a smell of Sulphur often goes along with Thunder and Lightning; and the Flashes are of a sulphureous colour.

7. "As for Bitumen, it is much of the same Nature; in some Places it is Slime, in others Earth. It is Slime in (the Dead Sea) a Lake of Judea; it is Earth about Sidon, a Maritime Town of Syria. Both these sorts of Bitumen are thicken'd and dry'd. There is besides, a Liquid Bitumen brought from Babylon, like that from Zacynthus, and is of a White Colour, (for Bitumen is usually Black.) And a Liquid sort is brought from Apollonia.

"All these Sorts, the Greeks call πίσσασφαλλον, as being a fit Composition of Pitch and Bitumen together. There is yet another sort of an Oily Nature, in a Fountain of Agrigentum in Sicily, which tinges the Stream of the River it runs into. The People of the Place gather it upon Heads of Reeds, to which it easily clings; and use it in their Lamps instead of Oyl. As for the rest of its Uses, they are much the same with those of Sulphur.

8. Naphtha too may be reckon'd a kind of Bitumen; for it is liquid, and only differs in this, that it takes fire sooner, and is harder to be quench'd. "Put it to

"the Fire, and it catches immediately; or hold any thing to the Fire that is smear'd over with it, and presently it is all over in a flame: There's no putting it out with Water; for it makes it burn but so much the more, unless you pour on a vast quantity indeed. But the best way is to throw Mire or Vinegar or Allum, or any gummy Matter upon it, which stifles it, and puts it out. There goes a Story of Alexander the Great, That being dispos'd to try the Experiment, he order'd a Boy in a Bath to be daub'd over with Naphtha, and the Candle to be put to him; in a Moment the Boy was all in a flame, and had perish'd, if the Standers by had not bestir'd themselves to put it out. Pofidonius writes, That in Babylon, where are Fountains of Naphtha, some produce Black, some White Naphtha; that the Fountains of White Naphtha flow with Liquid Sulphur, and are good for Matches: But those that flow with Black Bitumen, furnish the Lamps instead of Oyl.

9. "Maltha, seems to be a kind of Naphtha; it is an inflammable Slime found in a Pool of Samofata, a City of Commagene. If it touches any solid thing, it sticks to it, so that 'tis hard to disengage one's self from it. With this, the Citizens defended their Walls, when Lucullus besieg'd them, and the Soldiers Armour could not preserve them from being burnt. Water (in moderate quantities) does but inflame it; and Earth alone is found proper to quench it.

10. The Pit-Coal which is found in Scotland and the North of England, seems to be a Composition of Earth, Bitumen and Sulphur; and therefore it easily takes fire, and keeps burning till it is all spent. The Smoke of it smells strong of Sulphur and Bitumen; so that they who Work in Coal-pits, are sometimes kill'd with the Damp, if there happen to be Fire in the Mine. Thus the Vapours of Vesuvius, struck them dead, who came too near, or were troubled with shortness of Breath, as it happen'd to Pliny, the Famous Naturalist.

11. Having now reckon'd up the Fossils that are most useful for Fire, with their chief Properties, so far as they are known to us; we are next to search into their Internal Nature, from whence the Effects aforesaid do arise. But since our Eyes cannot pierce into the hidden Nature of these Things, we are left only to guess at it by the Effects; and therefore we will not be over-positive about it.

12. We see that all Bodies, as they have some general Properties in common one with another; so they have many peculiar Qualities, which must needs flow from peculiar Causes. Some People talk of I know not what substantial Forms, which make every particular Body to be what it is: But since they don't tell us what the Nature of those Forms is, it is just as much as if they had said nothing; nor are they a whit more Learned herein than the Vulgar, except it be in the use of hard Words. So that we must go another way to work, if we would make any good guess at the Causes of those Effects, which depend on the Nature of particular Bodies.

13. If we had but the Art to see thro' the Texture of Sulphur and Bitumen, we should probably find them to consist of the finest Parts imaginable, bending and branched, and full of Pores. 'Tis certain, such Bodies appear apter to take fire than any other, and to produce such Effects as we see are produc'd by Sulphur and Bitumen, and such like things.

14. For, First, since the whole strength of Fire consists in dissolving the union and cohesion of the Parts, as plainly appears in things that are burnt, and as we shall shew more at large in the next Chapter; That which is easy to burn, ought to have fine flexible parts, which will easily come asunder. Secondly, In those parts there must be Pores, which the Particles of Fire may presently enter, and so dilate them, as to break the Texture of Bodies, and bring them to pieces.

15. Thirdly, We suppose the parts of Sulphur and Bitumen to be branched, because those Bodies, whether Liquid of themselves, or made so by Fire, appear to be Viscid, and stick fast to the Bodies dip'd in them; which is peculiarly observable in Bitumen. Now they would not be so clammy and ropy, were not the parts connected by small Branches; neither would they cling to the Bodies they touch, except those small Branches enter'd the Pores and rugged surface of other Bodies.

16. Fourthly, A moderate quantity of Water cannot quench burning Bitumen and Naphtha, because their branchy parts, tho' vehemently agitated by the force of the Fire, yet are not soon disunited, but continue intangled in one another, for some time after they have taken fire; whence their flame comes to be greater, and of a different colour from the flame arising from other Bodies. Now Water pour'd upon this gross Flame, cannot sink into it, and put it out, because the Flame is very near as gross as the Water. But it must be extinguish'd either by watering it very plentifully, or else by throwing some grosser Body, such as Earth, upon it, and so smothering the Flame with its weight.

17. This is the reason why Workmen in Forges, often throw a dash of Water upon their Fires to keep their Coals from burning away too fast; not to augment the vehemence of their Fire, as some imagine; but by quenching some of its parts, to keep it from spending its force too soon. And for the same reason, burning Naphtha seems to be more inflam'd by a lesser quantity of Water, because such a quantity hinders its sudden consumption, and keeps it burning the longer.

18. Thus much in short, of the Nature of those Fossils which easily take fire; as for their differences our Conjectures cannot go far enough to discover them. This one thing perhaps may be properly added; That in some Fossils, those branchy parts are finer and fuller of Pores than in others. Naphtha which takes fire at the first touch, diffuses a strong smell, which is nothing but effluvia of the finest Parts, entering like Smoke into the Nostrils of those that are present. Now this Smoke being viscid, and impregnated with the Body of the Naphtha itself, immediately upon touching the Flame, it falls a flaming with a faint Light, and carries back the Flame even to the Naphtha. Of this, an Example shall be given in the following Chapter.

19. From these Explications, we may perceive how little reason we have to wonder that so strong a smell attends the burning of Sulphur, Bitumen and Naphtha; for tho' the Smell be not visible, like the Flame, yet it is gross in proportion to the grossness of the Flame. The Flame indeed breaks the parts of these Bodies into different Pieces, and cuts the Branches of those Parts into various Sizes; but since the Branches may be smaller and smaller in Infinitum, it is possible for the Particles that fly in the Smoke thro' the Air, to be still branched, tho' the most and greatest Branches are broken. And for this Reason the very Smell may suffocate; as it happen'd to Pliny, at his making too near an approach to burning Pesuvius; for when the rest of his Company upon smelling the Sulphur, preserved themselves by out-running it; Pliny, who was sitting on the Shore, got up, and lean'd on his two Servants, and presently sunk down again, not being able to breath in that gross Smoke, as his Nephew rightly conjectur'd.

20. To explain these Effects, something should have been said by the way, about the means and manner of raising Flame; but this is a thing which deserves to be consider'd more at large, as preparatory to our right understanding of Subterraneous Fires.

C H A P. III.

Of FIRE in general, and more especially of Subterraneous Fires, and Earthquakes occasion'd by them.

1. BEfore we come to speak of the Nature of Subterraneous Fires, we must say something of Fire in general. For we cannot shew how the Matter which maintains them is kindled, unless we first discover the way of producing Fire. Therefore we will begin directly to tell the various Effects of Fire; and then we will endeavour to find out their Causes: Which when we have perform'd, we will Discourse of Subterraneous Fires.

2. Now for the Effects of Fire, they are as various as the Matter which feeds it. The most notable are these: 1. If Fire be set to Wood, or to looser Materials, they begin to flame. 2. But for exciting a Flame both the Fire and the combustible Matter must have the advantage of a reasonable free Air; for else, the Fire is choked, and goes out. 3. Tho' a close Place is not wholly without Air, yet if that Air have no communication with the open Air, so as to go backward and forward thro' some passage, the Materials which were set on fire will go out; whereas Fire in an open place, will continue to burn till all the Fuel is spent, as it is well known to do in the bituminous Turfs which they burn in Holland. So a lighted Candle quickly goes out in a Glass so well stop'd, that no Air can come into it. 4. When Bodies have once taken fire, if we ply them with Fire while they are smoking and flaming, they are consum'd faster or slower, according as the Texture of the Parts happen to be close or slight; and nothing remains at last but Ashes. If Liquors are oily, or much of the Nature of Wine, they easily take fire, and are consum'd like other things; but if they be of a waterish Nature, and are put in such a Vessel as will hold out against the Fire, they only boil and vanish into Air by degrees, the heat of the Fire sending them out in perpetual Vapours. 5. Bodies of a closer Contexture, such as those we call Metals, viz Gold, Silver, Brass, Iron, Tin, Lead, and their several Mixtures, are melted by the heat of the Fire tho' not in the same space of time, nor with the same facility. Quicksilver, which is liquid, will waste all away in exhalations. 6. Metals when melted, lose much of their weight, and if always kept in the Fire, are at length wasted quite away, so as to have nothing remain but Dross; which may be calcin'd itself by a violent Fire, and at last reduc'd to nothing. But Gold, the finer it is, the longer it endures the Fire without losing its weight like other Metals. 7. Stones, and Bodies of a stony Nature, may be either melted into a glassy transparent Substance, or else be calcin'd, and reduc'd into Dust.

3. We don't reckon that effect of Fire which we feel in our Bodies, as distinct from the rest we have already spoken of. For it acts upon our Flesh after the same manner as it does upon any other Flesh: First it affects it gently, if it be at some distance; but if it be put to it, it excites a fervent Heat in the fat and juicy Parts, which running out catch the Flame and vanish in the Air, while the grosser parts are reduc'd into Ashes.

4. These are some of the Effects of Fire; but we must further observe how it is lighted, kept in, and put out, if we would be well acquainted with the Nature of it. Now that Fire is propagated by Fire, sufficiently appears from the fore-going Observations. But where there is none, it may be generated several ways. 1. By collecting the Sun's Rays in a Concave-

Concave-glass, which will set fire to that Point on which the Rays fall, provided it be a combustible Matter, such as Wood, Paper, or the like. 2. By striking Flints soundly one against another, or with a piece of Steel, the Sparks will fly out, and lighting on Sulphureous, or other fine combustible Matter, presently give fire to it. 3. If Wood be rub'd against Wood, or Iron, or any other solid Body, a great while together, and very hard, at last it will take fire, as is observable in Coach-Wheels, which are hard wrought in a dry Season.

5. Fire is kept in by adding to it the same Matter wherein it was first lighted, or some other proper Fuel. But there are some Materials, which tho' they will take fire, yet will go out again of themselves, unless you ply them with more of the same sort, or with a strong blast of the Bellows. Thus Wood easily kindles and flames; but a piece by itself goes out; so that you must be often laying on more to it, to burn along with it, if you would fairly burn it out to Ashes. But Sulphur and Bitumen, and other Bodies, which have an allay of them both, as bituminous Turfs, and Pit-Coals, don't want to be recruited; but when they are once well lighted, they keep in till they are quite consum'd.

6. There are several ways to put out Fire: 1. By letting it want Fuel. 2. For want of Air. 3. By pouring Water, or such kind of Liquor upon it. 4. By covering it with Dust, or any such thing as is proper to choke it.

7. Now in order to discover the Cause of all these Effects, as far as we can: We will begin with the Generation of Fire, which will open us a way to the knowledge of its Nature. I. In lighting Fire by the help of a Concave-glass, the Rays of the Sun, which is of a fiery Nature, are taken in; whence it is no wonder that Fire is lighted by Fire: All the difficulty is, how the Rays come to burn thro' a Concave-glass, and not thro' any thing else, or directly from the Sun without any medium? Now this is because they are scatter'd and divided as they shoot thro' the Air, and are reflected very near alike, from a plain or unequally rough Superficies; so that in this disposition, they have not power enough to burn. But when a Concave-glass is held to the Sun, all the Rays falling upon it, are united at a certain distance from its Center, and by their conjunction have force enough to burn. So we see the Fire in a Furnace that is open on every side, does not send up such a brisk Vapour as one that is closer, and has but a narrow vent. From whence 'tis easy to conclude, that Fire is a very thin, fluid Matter variously agitated, as that in the Rays of the Sun, which must be brought together into one Point, to set any thing on fire.

8. II. When Flint is struck with a Steel, or two Flints one against another, there darts out a Particle into the Air, which whirling round in a moment, throws off the grosser Matter, and subsists in the very finest which is contain'd in the Interstices and Pores of the Particles of the Air; which makes it reflect Light towards our Eyes, (as we shall shew when we come to treat of Light) and give Fire to a Body of a loose texture.

9. III. The Case is much the same in Wood, which is set on fire by much rubbing and fretting. For the Particles of the Wood in such violent action, are certainly loosen'd and divided, and drive the Air with incredible swiftness about the Superficies of the Wood, just as the Particles of Flint do, by which means Fire is generated. But because Wood is a softer kind of Matter, the Particles of it don't fly out so soon nor so far, but hang about the Surface, and the Wood requires much chafing to put its Particles in motion, and heat it to that degree as to make the Flame burst out. Besides, Wood while it grew in the Ground, was nourish'd with Sap deriv'd from the Earth, wherein there is always a mixture of Sulphureous Particles; now the Sap does not only turn into the Substance of the Wood, but after the watry Particles are gone off into Vapours, becomes dry and lodges in the Pores of the Wood like a kind of Rosin; which makes it the easier to take fire. And perhaps in Flints too there are sulphureous Particles, as may be discover'd by the smell: For if you strike one Flint against another a great many times till the Sparks fly in abundance, you'll perceive a smell of Sulphur.

10. Fire once lighted, must be supply'd with Matter fit for burning, otherwise it quickly goes out. The reason is, because the Flame does not only consist of the finest Matter, which is diffus'd thro' the Pores of the Air, and is extremely fluid; but likewise of a grosser Substance, which works out of the burning Materials with sulphureous or bituminous Particles, and whose force removes the pressure of the Air on every side. Now the said grosser Particles, as soon as they are broken by the violent motion of the Flame, disperse themselves abroad; and so failing at last, cannot withstand the Air any longer, which by virtue of its weight and elastick force, which by many Experiments is found to be in it, prevails upon the finest Matter, and takes it into its Pores again.

11. But however there is some difference in combustible Matters; for some go out unless perpetually and plentifully renew'd; others there are which if the Fire once take hold of, it never leaves them till it has quite consum'd them. Such are sulphureous or bituminous Matters, consisting of Parts that are branchy and wonderfully entangled one in another, tho' otherwise of a slight contexture. And when once one has taken fire, it presently communicates its motion to the rest with which 'tis engag'd, and that motion runs thro' the whole Mass, till it be all consum'd. But in other Matters which are little or nothing viscous, the Parts separating and flying off by the force of the Fire, don't stir those that remain, unless the Matter be still thrust forward into a Place where the Heat is stronger. One part of a Stick is burnt, and the other remains whole; but then, if there be a greater Flame, and consequently a greater quantity of Matter, it spreads abroad and burns all that may be burnt.

12. We could not well shew how Fire is kept in, without giving a hint by the way how it is put out; so that we shall say the less here upon this last Head. I. Fire goes out for want of Fuel, as we observ'd Section 10. II. For want of Air, as we see every Day in the choked Embers of Peat; for besides the Fuel, there seems to be something of Sulphur and Nitre in the Air, which yields a more subtile Aliment to Flame and Fire; and which if it be wanting, the grosser parts are not sufficient to continue the rapid motion, and so the Fire or Flame must needs go out. Thus in any Pan or Vessel where Live-coals are close pent up, after the nitrous and sulphureous Matter of the Air is spent, which is soon done, the Coals go out. As for the Matter which is diffus'd through the Air, we'll say more of it when we come to Discourse of the Air. III. It is very easy to understand how Water or Dust cast upon Flame, puts it out; for they being thicker and heavier than Air, do with their weight soon dissipate the finest Particles collected out of the Air, unless the force of the Fire be very great indeed.

13. And here I must say a Word or two of Smoke, which is the first and last effect of Fire. The production of it seems to be after this manner. When the parts of the Fuel are not yet put into such a motion as to crack and fly in pieces, and affect the ambient Air till it yields them out of its Pores a very fine sulphureous Matter, which breaks out into a Flame; yet those parts are mov'd enough to fly out in good store, and by their motion grow light enough to ascend upwards. So likewise when the Flame goes out, there is still motion enough left, tho' not to agitate the Air, yet to carry the Particles loosen'd by the heat, upwards Hence also we learn, why watry Liquors don't tak fire, but go off in Vapours, as we shall shew hereafter.

12. From what has been said, it is easy to give an Account of the Properties and Effects of Fire. I. Flame catching hold on Wood, agitates its parts with a most violent Motion, and by that means loosens and breaks it. The more subtile parts, and more easy to be reduc'd very small, do with the Smoke vanish into Air, and excite that hot Vapour which we feel when we approach the Fire; but the grosser sort, whose Contexture was not quite dissolvable by the Fire, turn to Ashes, whose Particles are very porous, as being thoroughly exhausted of every thing that could be devour'd by the Fire. And this is the reason why Ashes drink up a great deal of Water, because it sinks into their wide Pores. There is also in Ashes a good quantity of Salt; because the saline Particles, which were mingled with the moisture of the Earth that ascended into the Tree by its Roots, are too coarse and hard to be exhaled with other parts; yet there are Volatile Sales, which pass into the Air, while fix'd Salt remains, as appears by Chemical Distillations.

13. II. We have told you, why Flame requires Air, And III. Why it goes out when 'tis stifled. IV. We have given the Reasons, why things that are burnt, waste away in Smoke and Ashes. V. Liquors are of two Sorts; some are watry, that is, thin, and almost free from any thing viscous: Others are oily, fat and viscous. Water and such Liquors, being put into a Kettle, and set over the Fire, are presently in a quicker motion than it is natural for them to be in (tho' all Fluidity is attended with motion) and at last boil up, in which state we plainly see that they are in a very vehement Agitation. At the same time Fumes or Vapours are always rising out of the Liquors, till they are quite spent; because the parts in the briskest Agitation, are gradually separated from the rest, and being so separated, and becoming lighter by their motion, disperse themselves thro' the Air. They are too yielding to dispel the Air in which they roul, and draw forth the more subtile Matter out of the Interstices and Pores of the condens'd ambient Air, so as to be inflamed by it; and therefore they cannot turn to Flame. But the oily and fat Liquors, whose parts are like those of Sulphur and Bitumen, something yielding, but yet much stronger than watry Particles, do easily form themselves into Flame; which scatters their finer parts variously shatter'd and broken, and violently driven about in the Air, but leaves the grosser and harder, which in all inflammable Matters are much the fewer.

16. VI. Here we might shew how Metals are melted, and how Quick-silver evaporates; but this we shall refer to the Chapter of Metals; where likewise, we will shew how they are consum'd by Fire. VII. After which, we will say something of the Calcination of Stones.

17. What has been said, may satisfy us as to the Nature of Fire, which produces so many Effects, viz. That it is a very thin Matter, forc'd in great quantity out of the Pores and Interstices of the Air, and gather'd in a place which is rarify'd by the vehement commotion of the Particles of several sorts of Matter. Hence it is, that all the Effects of Fire depend upon Motion, as plainly appears from the foregoing Discourse.

18. So that when we say, Fire is hot; it is as much as to say, the Particles of it are most vehemently mov'd every way; the heat of Fire being nothing else but an extraordinary Agitation of invisible Particles. But, to avoid Mistakes, we must take notice that Hot and Heat have a two-fold sense; for when we speak of mere Bodies, they signify no more than we said just now: But when we speak of ourselves, who consist of Body and Mind, Heat is most commonly taken for a Sensation in the Mind, and we say, we are Hot when we are affected with that Sensation. For tho' we have not that Sensation till after our Bodies are put in some commotion by the Fire, or some other Cause; yet we don't use to think of that Commotion, when we say we are hot. But enough of this. Let us now proceed to the Consideration of Subterraneous Fires.

19. And it's plain from the Places where they break out, that they are very numerous. "Aetna (says Pliny) is seen burning every Night, after so many Ages, tho' in Winter the Snow lies on its Top, and its Ashes are cover'd with the Frost. So Chimæra, a Mountain in Phaselis, flames Day and Night without intermission. And so the Hephestian Mountains in Lycia (being touch'd with a flaming Torch) burn with that fury, that the Stones and Sands in the Waters thereabouts are burning hot. It is reported, That if one light a Stick at these Hills, and draw Strokes with it on the Ground, a Stream of Fire will follow it. The top of Cophantus in Bactria is seen on fire in the Night. In Media, Sittacene burns on the Confines of Persia; and at Susa near the White-Tower there are Eruptions in fifteen places, the greatest of which is visible in the Day-time. In the Field of Babylon, there is about an Acre of burning Ground, somewhat like a Fish-pond. So likewise the Ethiopian Fields about Mount Hesperius, shine in the Night like the twinkling of the Stars. There is Fire too in the Field of the Megalopolitans, tho' it don't break out to spoil a thick flourishing Wood that grows in the same place. Nymphaei Crater, not far from Apollonia, is continually burning, tho' a very cold Fountain is close by it: The Rains enflame it, and it throws out Bitumen, more liquid than is found any where else, but is easily qualify'd by that very cold Fountain. But what need we wonder at these Things? since Hiern an Aolian Island in the middle of the Sea, burnt, and the Sea burnt with it for some Days together, in the Social War. But the greatest Fire of all, is in a Hill of the Ethiopians call'd Θεῶν ὀχημα, The Chariot of the Gods, where that and the scorching Sun together, make a terrible heat.

To these burning Places, which Pliny has mention'd, we may add Mount Hecla in Thule (now Ise-land) the coldest Place of the North, which with the Places lying about it, sends up Flames and Flashes of Fire into the frozen Air.

20. There are moreover several Places that are seen to smoke, and may, with the application of a little Fire, be put into a flame. In Dauphiny, some Miles from Grenoble, there is a side of a Hill where this Experiment is commonly made, and Fire found hot enough to roast Eggs.

21. If here it be demanded, Whence these Fires proceed? That's easily answer'd, by remembering that Sulphur or Bitumen is usually got in most of those burning Grounds, and they smell very strong a great way about, especially a little before an extraordinary Eruption; so that having found the Matter for the Fire, let us next see how it comes to be kindled. And this may be done several ways, but we will not examine them all, but content ourselves with one. Now since the Earth contains such different Matters within it, it may easily be imagin'd, that there are Caverns in some Places, which are fill'd with no other Matter but gross Air, and sulphureous or bituminous Vapours. And it may so happen that a Flint shall drop from the Arch of the Cavern upon another Flint below, and strike fire out of it, which shall either inflame the Vapour, or the sulphureous and bituminous Matter thereabouts; which when they have once taken fire, keep it in very long, and communicate it to other Bodies of a like Nature; and when these get vent, they burst out in very violent Eruptions, as we see in Ætna and Vesuvius, and other Places aforesaid.

22. But these Eruptions are not alike constant and violent, because the Matter which feeds them is consum'd, and cannot break out again till it is recruited. Besides, it requires time for the Fire to creep thro' the Veins of Sulphur and Bitumen into new Mines which have never felt the Flame. The various Waters which run thro' the Bowels of the Earth, do sometimes open Passages, and sometimes stop them up, which either delay, or hasten the burning of such Materials. Some Places are almost continually in a flame; especially in the Night, or in Cloudy Weather, or a little before Rain; because in the Day-time, and in clear Weather, the Vapours are dispell'd before they take fire; but in a cold Night, or cloudy Air, the Exhalations are condens'd and easily inflam'd.

23. But when it so happens, that in vast Caverns the Vapours and thicker Matter take fire all at once, the Air in such a violent Commotion cannot rarify and disperse, but it must give a sudden concussion to the upper part of the Caverns, and make all the Ground above it to tremble; and then we are sure to feel an Earthquake. And the deeper the Mine lies, and the larger the quantity of Matter is, which takes fire at one time, the more violent and extensive is the Earthquake. Such a one was that of Sept. 18. 1692. which was felt as well in the Low-Countries as in London, and other Parts of England at the same time. But if the Cavern happens to be near the Surface of the Earth, there are many times Eruptions of Fire, which consume the Bowels of it, so that the Ground sinks in, and where the opening is wide enough, Trees and Houses are swallow'd up in it. In the Year aforesaid, in Jamaica, an Island of South-America, the Concussion was so great, that the Ground sunk in several Places, and a great many Houses fell in with it.

24. Nor is this our Account of Earthquakes, barely conjectural, and without any Proof or Experiment; for the great Eruptions of the famous burning Mountains are always attended with an Earthquake in the Neighbourhood. Some Years ago, when Vesuvius burn'd excessively, there was felt in Naples and the Parts adjacent, a very great Earthquake. At that memorable Eruption of Vesuvius, wherein Pliny perish'd, the Houses thereabouts totter'd with the violent and frequent shocks, and seem'd to nod this way and that, as tho' they had been rent from their Foundations, as his Nephew, who stood at no great distance, assures us.

25. But we have other common Experiments to confirm all this. We see when Mines are sprung and carry'd thro' the hardest Rocks, the Train of Gunpowder blows up whole Castles, and shatters the vastest Rocks to pieces. And this Powder is chiefly compos'd of Sulphur and Nitre, which when fir'd, in a narrow place, strike the Walls with inconceivable force, and blow up or shock the heaviest Weights.

CHAP. IV.

Of METALS.

METALS are such Fossils as may be melted by Fire, and beaten out with the Hammer: And of this Kind, there are Seven principal Sorts; Gold, Silver, Copper, Iron, Tin, Lead, and Mercury or Quicksilver; which may be variously mingled and chang'd into something like a new Species of Metals. But as to these Mixtures, we shall not concern ourselves with them in this place; but consider only the Native Metals.

2. There are some Properties common to all Metals, and some peculiar to each One by itself. The chief of them we will Explain in few Words, and give the best Reason we can for them. The common Properties are Three. 1. Liquefaction. 2. Ductility or Malleability. 3. Gravity greater than is found in other Bodies that are known to us.

3. I. Those Bodies are Liquid, whose Parts don't resist the Touch, but are easily separated; and are perpetually stirring up and down one among another; so that they would run about, unless they were contain'd and held in by the Sides of a solid Body. Thus Metals which before were Solid, run about when they are melted, and require some other solid Body to keep their Parts together.

4. Here we may observe how Fire dissolves Metals, viz. the Particles of the Fire penetrating the Pores of the Metals, sever their Particles and drive them about, so that they run to every side, and would be gone presently, did not some solid Body withstand their motion. But since the parts of Metals are very solid and heavy, the Fire does not easily dissolve them; nor are they put into a motion violent enough to evaporate, till they have run long indeed, and that in a most excessive hot Fire. By the same Reason, when the force of the Fire is abated, they quickly recover their former Solidity; for the cause of the Fluidity ceasing, the Fluidity itself stops upon it. The Particles of Metals falling back one upon another by virtue of their own Weight do press out and exclude the Particles of Fire, except fresh ones are still pouring in to keep the Metallick parts loose and in motion by their incessant pushing upon them.

5. So that the Particles in all Metals must be very heavy, that they may not be so hurry'd about by the force of the Fire, as to agitate the Air, and break out in a Flame; nor so soft as to be easily turn'd into Vapours like the Particles of Water; whence it follows, that Metals are neither inflam'd like Wood, nor exhaled and wasted like Water, tho' the force of the Fire makes them as liquid as Water.

6. Yet this is observable, That there must needs be in Metals some finer Particles, perhaps of Sulphur, or something like it, because after they have been in the Fire for some time, they loose of their Weight, tho' some sooner than others; as Lead, which looses a great deal of Weight every time 'tis melted. But the very heaviest of them, Gold itself not excepted, loose some of their bulk by a long continuance in the Fire, and an intense Heat: Whence we may conclude, that the most solid parts are at length broken by a long continu'd motion, and reduc'd to the same fineness and rarity which is in the lightest Particles that fly in the Air, and that therefore they pass into Vapours.

7. II. The second common Property of Metals is Ductility, that is, a pliability to the Hammer, to be beaten out into Bars and Plates, tho' in this too they differ, as we shall see hereafter; for Gold is more ductile, as well as more ponderous, than any other Metal.

8. Ductility consists in this, That the bulk of Metal may by the beat of the Hammer, be drawn out to a longer and broader extent, and that without dissolving the Continuity. Wherefore Things that are ductile, must have such parts as can easily lie one by the side of another, and yet their Conjunction be still firm and entire. So then, the Question is, What Figure is most apt to produce this Effect, so as to be consistent with other Properties; for while we explain one Property, we must take care not to overthrow another.

9. If Metals consist of Oblong and Quadrangular Particles, tho' every Metal has something singular in it, that Figure looks likeliest to produce those Effects, which we find common to all Metals. For such Parts may easily be sever'd one from another so as to become fluid by the operation of a vehement Fire; which when it remits its force, they are too heavy to maintain that Motion, and so return to be Solid Metals again. But what we chiefly consider here, is this, That the parts of this Figure when beaten upon an Anvil, can easily suit their sides one to another, so as to run out into long and broad Leaves, without falling in pieces one from another. We don't stand now to enquire, what is the Cause of Solidity, or Cohesion of the Parts. 'Tis sufficient for our purpose, if we find by Experience, that Solid Bodies become Liquid, and again recover their former Solidity, and preserve it intire, while they yield to be extended by the Hammer.

10. Therefore we may suppose, that the Particles of Metals are quadrangular and oblong: And this Supposition is confirm'd by an Experiment. If a Plate of Metal be heated red hot, and hammer'd upon an Anvil, and drawn out into a length, it is harder to break or split it where it is so drawn out, than in any other part; for which there seems no other Reason but this, That the oblong parts run out longer according to the length of the Plate, and for that reason are more closely united. But in Plates of Metal which are not hammer'd, it is otherwise; for they may be split or broken every way with the same ease.

11. III. Since Metals are the heaviest of all Bodies that are known to us, and Gravity is found by Experience to be so much greater, as there is a greater quantity of homogeneous Matter contain'd under a less circumference; the Gravity which is proper to Metals, seems to arise from one of these two Causes: Either the particular Particles consider'd by themselves, are extremely compact, and have no Pores but what are the smallest that can be; or else in a Lump consisting of many Particles, the Pores between those Particles are few and fine. And perhaps, both these Causes may meet together in Metals. Likewise the figure of the Particles in Metals, of which we spoke before, helps this. For there is no Figure fitter to make a Body compact, and leave less Pores in it, than the quadrangular.

12. Having thus Explain'd what concerns the common Nature of Metals; we will next examine them one by one, beginning with Gold, as first in order. This Metal is of a Colour between Red and Yellow, the heaviest of them all, the most ductile of all, and the least wasted in the Fire of all. However, tho' it be the most compact, it is not the hardest of Metals; for Iron is much harder, and more difficult to be melted.

13. There are, says Pliny, three ways of getting Gold. 1. Out of the Sands of Rivers, such as the Tages of Spain, the Padus of Italy, the Hebrus of Torace, the Padana of Asia, the Ganges of India. And this is the finest sort of Gold; for 'tis polish'd by rolling about in the Stream. 2. Out of Pits and ruinous parts of Mountains; where it is discover'd by a sort of shining Mould lying on the surface. Here they make a Drain, and after the Water has well wash'd the Sand, they observe what is left at bottom, and proceed accordingly. Sometimes, by rare good fortune, Gold is found just under the surface, as lately in Dalmatia, in Nero's time, where they got Fifty Pound weight a Day. In this Case, there is a shining Gum appears upon the Turf. The dry and barren Mountains of Spain, which produce nothing else, are plentifully stor'd with Gold. That which is got out of Pits, they call Aurum Gallicum or Canalicum, Channel Gold: It grows to the Crust of Marble, and does not sparkle as it is found to do in Saphirs, and other precious Stones in the Eastern Countries. They work their Channels along the Veins thro' the sides of the Pits, (this gives it the Name aforesaid) and prop up the Ground over them with great Posts. When they have brought up the Ore, they hammer it, wash it and burn it, and afterwards pound it in Mortars as fine as Flour.

That which runs from it in the melting (properly call'd Dross in all Metals) they call Silver. This is hammer'd and melted o'er again. Their Fining-Pots are made of Tascomy, a sort of white Earth like Chalk; it being the only Earth that endures the blast of the Bellows, and heat of the Fire and running Metal.

14. The third way of getting Gold, is a Work of more than Giganrick Pains. They Undermine the Mountains by Candle-light, &c. leaving Arches and Pillars as they go along, to support them. Sometimes they meet in their way with Rocks of Flint; thro' which they open a passage with Fire and Vinegar. But because the Workers in these Mines would be stifled with the Damp and Smoke arising from hence, their more usual way is to cut them out in pieces of a hundred and fifty pound weight, and carry them on their Backs from one to another in the dark, till they come to the Hands of those that are to lift them quite out, who are the only Men of them that see Day-light. If the Flint appear to be pretty long, they go as much by the side of it as they can. But this working thro' Flint, is none of their hardest Task: They sometimes meet with a sort of white Earth so firmly cemented with Sand and Gravel, that it is almost impenetrable. This they attack with Iron-wedges and Sledges, and find it harder to be conquer'd than any thing but the Love of Gold. When they have finish'd their Mine, they fall to beat down the Props of the Arches, beginning at the hindmost. Mean while there stands One on the highest part of the Mountain to watch when the Ground begins to sink; which as soon as ever he perceives, he gives notice to others to call out the Workmen, and gets away himself as fast as he can. The Mountain cracks, and falls asunder with an incredible noise and blast. The Miners stand by and see the Ruin of Nature, but no Gold is to be found as yet.

15. Before that comes, there's another Task as hard, and something more expensive, viz. To bring a River, and that many times from a hundred Miles distance, to wash these Ruins. And here, above all things, it is necessary to observe the height of Places, and to bring the Water from the highest Parts, that it may fall in upon the Work with a rapid Current. To this end, Troughs are laid a-cross Valleys and low Grounds, and if Rocks stand in the way, a passage is bor'd thro' them. In the brow of the Hills, just above the Work, they sink a Pond Ten Foot deep, and Two hundred wide every way. In it there are commonly Five Sluces about Three Foot square a-piece; when the Pond is full, these are open'd, and send forth a Torrent rapid enough to drive down great Stones before it.

16. A third Task there is still behind. The Trenches into which this Torrent is receiv'd, are thick set with a certain Shrub like Rosemary, which has a roughness and closeness proper to catch the Gold. The sides of the Trenches are made of Planks which may be mounted so, that the Water is carry'd cleverly o'er uneven Places. On these accounts Spain is improv'd and rises in Value. In this manner likewise, the Pit-Gold is wash'd, which keeps it from running into the Ground again, out of which it was dig'd with vast Pains. The Gold which appears immediately upon digging, needs not pass thro' the Fire, but is good Gold without any more ado. Thus there are some Ingots found in Mines, [as in Potosi in South-America] and Pits too, weighing above Ten Pounds. When the fore-mention'd Shrub is dry'd, it is burnt, and the Ashes of it are water'd upon green Turf, where the Gold may subside.

17. These are the Ways of getting and refining Gold. But before we come to speak of its Intrinsic sick Nature, we will give an Experimental proof of its Ductility out of Rohalt. The Weights of two equal Bulks of Gold and Water are one to another as 19 to 1; so that if a cubick Foot of Water weigh 71 Pounds, a cubick Foot of Gold must consequently weigh 1349 Pounds, or 21584 Ounces. Now a cubick Foot contains 2985984 cubic Lines; therefore an Ounce of Gold contains $138\frac{2}{3}\frac{2}{3}$ cubic Lines. If then an Ounce of Gold were beaten into a cubic Figure, its height would be $5\frac{1}{7}$ Lines; and its basis 26 square Lines, and $\frac{1}{2}$.

18. Besides, 'tis well known, that a Gold-beater will out of an Ounce of Gold, make 2730 square Leaves compleat, every one of whose sides shall be 2 Digits, and 10 Lines. But besides these Leaves, the very parings are near half as much. The Superficies of every Leaf contains 1156 square Lines; so that all the Leaves laid side to side in order, would make up a Superficies of 3155880 square Lines. To which, if a third part be added, which is the least that goes into parings, we may say, that Gold-beaters make of One Ounce of Gold, 4207840 square Lines. Now since this Number contains 159812 times the quantity of the Basis of a cubic Ounce of Gold, the said Ounce being $5\frac{1}{7}$ Lines in height, is drawn out into 159812 square Leaves.

19. So that from hence it appears how wonderful ductil a Metal Gold is; but this is much more apparent in the Trade of the Wire-drawers. A Silver Cylinder Two Foot Eight Digits long, and Two Digits Nine Lines about, so as to make the whole Superficies 12676 square Lines; such a Cylinder, I say, is cover'd with Gold-Leaf not exceeding the weight of half an Ounce. Afterwards this Cylinder is drawn out by Art smaller and smaller till it becomes Wire. Now if you take and weigh 150 Parisian Feet of the finest Wire that is made, it makes much about 36 Grains. Wherefore the whole Cylinder ought to make a Wire 370200 Feet long; whence it follows that it would be 115200 times longer, and 340 times broader than it was at first. Besides, this curious fine Wire when 'tis beaten flat to be twisted with Silk, has a Superficies twice as large as it had before (or 680 times more spacious than 'twas at first) and contains 8616960 square Lines.

20. But when the Silver-wire is thus beaten flat, still the Superficies of it is gilt; which proves that the half Ounce of Gold which cover'd the Cylinder at first, is so very much thin'd and extended as to make a Superficies of 8616960 square Lines. And since that contents contains 325795 times 26 Lines, and $\frac{1}{2}$ the compass of the Basis of a cubic Ounce of Gold; it follows that the thickness of the Gold which covers the Silver, must be but the 325795 part of the half depth of the cubic Ounce of Gold; and that $5\frac{1}{7}$ Lines are drawn out into 651590 equal parts.

21. Having said thus much about Gold, I shall take notice of that usual Question concerning it, as well as other Metals, Whether it be generated at this Day in the Bowels of the Earth? And how it is generated? For satisfying which Questions; more things ought to be known, than were ever known yet. In the first place it ought to be known, Whether after all the Gold was clean dig'd out of any Pit, there was ever found a new increase afterwards, when the Pit has been dig'd again. Which is a Secret to us; and if such a thing might be, yet it requires too many Years to make any certain Experiment. And perhaps after all, the whole quantity of Gold and of other Metals in the Bowels of the Earth, is as old as the Creation, and has receiv'd no augmentation since. Secondly, If Gold and other Metals were now generated, in order to know what they are made of, it would be necessary to ransack the Mines, and examine every thing in them, or near them, by various Experiments. This might possibly bring us, after a laborious Search, to discover the Seeds of Metals, and how they are mingled and united together by the help of Subterraneous Heat. But there is reason to fear, we should sit down at last with the loss of our Time and Pains, without finding what we sought for.

22. And here we will touch upon another famous Question, Whether it be possible for the Art of Man to turn Silver, or other Metals into Gold, or Copper into Silver? A great many Stories are told, which have induc'd Credulous Men to believe that this might be done; and they have attempted the doing of it, so long till they have consum'd their Estates, and instead of their imaginary Gold, have found real Poverty at the bottom. The Accounts which are given of such Transmutations, are too uncertain and ill-grounded, to influence a prudent Man. It don't indeed seem to imply any contradiction that Silver shou'd be turn'd into Gold: But since we are ignorant of their Nature and Formation, we cannot determine positively one way or other. It may be utterly impossible; or it may be so difficult, that all the Industry of Man cannot attain to it: But this is certain, that to bestow cost about so doubtful a Matter, is a very great Folly.

23. From the wonderful Ductility of Gold, we may conclude, That the parts whereof it consists come nearer to the perfect Figure of a Right-angled Parallelogram, than those of any other Metals. For so the parts holding close side to side, may be beaten and drawn out into Lengths of the greatest fineness, without breach of their continuity. This also is the cause why it is heavier than other Metals; because the more perfect this Figure is in the constituent parts of any Body, the more easily they cling together, and render the Body so compact as to exclude heterogeneous Matter. And perhaps the Particles of Gold are in themselves less porous, which makes it the heavier, as we observed, Sect. 11. and so not easily wasted by Fire.

24. And here we must not omit to take notice of another difference confirm'd by Experiments between Gold and other Metals. There are Two very acid and corroding Waters, call'd Aqua Fortis, and Regalis; the latter is the more piercing of the two. Now it is well known, that other Metals are dissolv'd in Aqua Fortis, but Aqua Regalis only dissolves Gold. The reason of which seems to be this, That the Particles of Nitre and Vitriol which are in this Water, are sharper and finer than those in Aqua Fortis, and therefore penetrate the very fine Pores and Parts of Gold, and like so many Wedges force them asunder; whereas grosser Particles float about the Surface, but cannot enter into the Pores of Gold to dissolve its Continuity.

25. Next after Gold, Silver is the most ductil and ponderous Metal; and endures the Fire best. And therefore its Particles seem to come nearest those of Gold, since in these Properties 'tis most like it. This makes it easily incorporate with Gold in melting: And indeed, if we will believe Pliny, there is a certain quantity, suppose a Tenth, Ninth, or Eighth part of Silver in all Gold.

26. "The same Author tells us, That 'tis found Plin. lib.
"only in Pits, and that without any such hopeful xxxiii.
"glittering signs as are found about the place where "Gold grows. The Earth about it is sometimes Red, c. 4.
"sometimes Ash-colour'd. It cannot be melted down "without a quantity of Lead. Near the Veins of it "is commonly found a Matter call'd Galenæ. In the "melting, part of it runs down to Lead, the good
"Silver swimming on the top, as Oyl does upon Water.
"There is scarce any of our Provinces without "it, but the best is in Spain, in the barren and mountainous "Parts; and wherever one Vein is discover'd,
"there's generally another not far off; as it happens
"in almost all sorts of Mines, which gave the Greeks
"occasion to call them Metals; quasi μετ' ἀλλὰ, as lying
"one behind another. The Vein of Silver which lies "highest,

" highest, is call'd Cruetaria. The Ancients in digging for Silver, were us'd to stop when they came to a bed of Allum, expecting to find nothing below that. But of late, they have discover'd a Vein of Copper below Allum, which is now their finishing stroke.

27. Silver and Gold are refin'd the same way, as Pliny observes. The Way which the Spaniards now use in America, is said to be this: First they pound their Ore in a Mortar just as it comes out of the Mine; next, they pour Water into it, which makes a consistence like a Lump of Clay. After this, they throw in Salt and Quicksilver, and beat them all together for a good while, pouring Water upon the Lump, to take off the Dirt; then they put this soft Composition of Gold, Silver and Mercury into a Fining-pot, where, by the help of a gentle Fire, the Mercury evaporates, and the Lump is reduc'd to a kind of Cinder, which afterwards a quicker Fire melts down into [Piggs or] Plates.

28. We told you, that Aqua Regalis only dissolves Gold, whereas all other Metals are amovible by Aqua-Fortis. But it is further to be observ'd, that Aqua Regalis has no effect upon other Metals; the reason of which deserves to be consider'd. Now, first of all, we must take notice, that Aqua Fortis is made by a Distillation of Vitriol, Allum and Nitre; but Aqua Regalis, over and above all this, has a mixture of Sal Ammoniac. And this Mixture of so many Salts makes the parts of Aqua Regalis very subtil, and apt to penetrate the smallest Pores, and sever the finest Parts, between which they are driven like so many Wedges, by the motion of the Water wherein they float; but in wider Pores they loose their effect, just as Wedges cannot split, except they be driven into fissures narrower than themselves. Since therefore, the Pores of Gold are the smallest of all Metallick Pores, they can only take in the Particles of Aqua Regalis, those of the Aqua Fortis being too gross to enter. But the same Particles of Aqua Regalis prove too small to fill up the Pores of any other Metals; they cannot be affected with any thing less gross than the parts of Aqua Fortis to fill and dilate them.

29. Copper differs from Silver, as Silver does from Gold, so that we need not insist long upon this Head.

Plin. 33. As to the Digging and Refining, Pliny says, 'tis to be order'd like Silver. There is a Copper-stone call'd Cassida, and another call'd Chalcitis which are found in Cyprus, from both which, this sort of Metal is extracted. Cyprus was once famous for Copper, as being the Place where it was first found; but since a much finer sort is brought from other Countries, the Cyprian is little valud.

30. Iron is much harder, less ductil, and fuller of dross than any of the Metals aforesaid. Besides, 'tis apt to grow rusty, whether it lie wet or dry; which Copper is not so subject to, Silver still less, and Gold not at all. Experience likewise teaches us, that Iron may be made much harder by Art. For after it has been well refin'd in the melting, and drawn out into Bars, let those Bars be heated again till they are just melting-hot, and then throw them directly into cold Water, and they will be much harder than before. But if you would soften the same Bars again, put them into the Fire, and heat them as before, and then lay them where they may cool by degrees, and they will loose much of their hardness.

31. If we enquire into the Causes of these Properties, we may suppose them to be some such as these:

1. That the parts of Iron are farther from the Figure of a right-angled Parallelogram, and much rougher, than the Particles of other Metals; which makes them more entangled one in another, and harder to be severed and melted. 2. That its parts are more rigid, and consequently, harder to be hammer'd out, and more apt to be broken. 3. That Iron consists of heterogeneous Particles, which is the cause, that whenever it is melted; it throws out abundance of dross. And this is the reason why it grows rusty so soon; for the moistness of the Air, and nitrous Particles which fly about in it, fastning upon its rugged surface, dilute and agitate the various Matters whereof Iron consists, which being sever'd one from another, hang upon the surface like so much Dross. And therefore to preserve Iron from rusting, it is found a good way to crust it over with Parger, or Pitch, thro' which the Air can have no passage. 4. That the Fire, in heating Iron till it looks white, does violently agitate its Particles, so that they are very nigh ready to run; at which time the grosser Particles of an irregular Figure, which before made the Pores unequal and large, lose their rigidity, and fall in closer one with another. Then if they be plung'd into cold Water, their motion is stop'd, and they rest in this state, by which means the whole Lump is more compact and hard. Observe, That Iron well refin'd and harden'd, is commonly call'd Steel.

32. Besides what we have now said of the Rust of Iron, it is further observable, that the Rust of Copper and Silver is not of the same Colour, but either Green, or Blew, and sometimes a medley of both. The Rust gathers much more upon Copper than Silver; because the Pores of Silver are smaller, the Parts more solid, and perhaps more refin'd. Gold is free from Rust, because it's solidity and fineness of Pores, is such as keeps out all other Matter: And yet Silver and Gold are softer than Iron, because Iron seems to have a stony Substance in it, which makes it more rigid; and rough Parts are more entangled one with another than smooth ones; tho' smooth Parts of a suitable Figure, render a Body more Compact, as we have observed in Silver and Gold.

33. " The next Metal we are to speak of, is Lead Plin. 34. XXXII.
" whereof there are two Sorts, Black and White. The " White is the best, call'd by the Greeks λευκός (by " the Latins Stannum) which is fabulously reported to " grow in the Isles of the Atlantick Ocean, and to be " brought from thence in Wicker Vessels cover'd " round with Hides. (England and the neighbouring
" Isles appear to have been call'd λευκοί, and the re" port was no Fable.) " Now it is known to grow in " Lusitania and Gallacia; in a sandy black Soil: Which " is judg'd of only by the Weight. There are small " Stones of the same Nature, to be found in the " Brooks when they are dry. The Workmen wash
" the Sands, and that which proves heaviest they melt
" in their Furnaces. In the same Place where they " find Gold, there are sometimes little black Stones
" speckled with White, which remain in the washing
" of Gold, being of the same Weight. These separate " and dissolve in the Fire, and turn to white Lead.
" There is no black Lead made in Gallacia, tho' Cambria
" which joins to it, abounds with Black alone;
" nor does the White yield Silver, whereas the Black
" does.

34. " Black Lead is found two Ways; either in a " Mine by it self; or mingled in the same Veins " with Silver. The first running of the Furnace is " call'd Tin; the second Silver; the remainder which " tarries behind in the Furnace (about a third Part " of the Ore) is melted again, and the third Part of
" it turns to black Lead.

35. Here we see Pliny reckons Lead and Tin to be much the same sort of Metal; and indeed the only Difference between them is this, that Tin is more refin'd, hard and light; Lead more soft, heavy, and mixt with Sulphur, or some other Fossil. 1. The reason why Lead is heavier, seems to be this, that the metallick Pores are full of heterogeneous and thinner Matter just now mention'd; whereas the Pores of Tin contain nothing but Air, or something more subtil than subtil than that. 2. Lead is softer, because it's metallick Particles, as well as the accessory Parts of Sulphur and the like Matter, are very flexible. For this reason it melts sooner than Tin, and wastes more in the melting; there being more of it's Parts that evaporate, or turn into dross. 3. The great store of Dross which Lead yields, and the Rust it contracts, shew what a mixt Matter it is.

36. Our last Metal is Mercury or Quicksilver, which in some Things agrees with, in others differs from the aforesaid Metals. It differs, in that it is Liquid, and when set over the Fire, easily evaporates. It agrees, in that it becomes solid and ductile by tempering Lead with it, &c. and then it is the heaviest of all Liquors. We shall enquire into the Causes of these Things, after we have given you Pliny's Method for discovering and making it.

37. "There is a Stone found in the Silver-mines, which yields a restless Liquor call'd Quicksilver, an universal Poyson. It eats through Things, and works thro' the Vessels wherein 'tis shut. Every Thing swims in it but Gold, and that sinks, and is very well purged by it: For which purpose they put them together in earthen Vessels. After the Scum is workt off, they pour the Quicksilver into Leathern Bags, through which it sweats, and leaves the pure Gold behind.

38. Besides the native Minium, which is found in Silver Mines, "There is another sort extracted from a Stone found among the Veins, of a different sort from that spoken of in the last Section. Of this second sort of Minium they make Hydrargyrum, which is used instead of Quicksilver. There are two Ways of making it; either by pounding the Minium with Vinegar in a Mortar; or putting it in earthen Platters, and covering them with a hollow Iron Cover, closed round about with Clay; then lighting a Fire under the Platters, and blowing it continually with a pair of Bellows, till the Iron-cover is so well bedew'd, that you may sweep it off. This Dew having the colour of Silver, and the fluidness of Water, is call'd Hydrargyrum.

39. Now if the Reasons of all these Things should be askt, we can offer no more but bare Conjectures; yet such as, if they be agreeable to the Principles we have laid down, ought not wholly to be rejected; tho' they are not clear enough to deserve our Assent.

I. The Reason why Quicksilver is liquid seems to be this, that it's Particles are less figur'd like a right-angled Parallelogram, than those of any other Metals, and probably they are cylindrical. The Angles of Square Particles hinder the Bodies which consist of them from being fluid; but if those Particles lost their Angles, and became cylindrical, the Bodies would be in a much greater Disposition to flow. If besides this, we consider how extremly smooth the Surface of such cylindrical Particles are, of which we suppose Quicksilver to consist, we must allow this to Conduce very much to it's fluidity.

40. II. Since Quicksilver is so very heavy, 'tis hard to conceive how its Parts come to evaporate so soon, and with so little Fire. But first, if there be neither Branches nor Angles in those Parts, they must needs fly asunder sooner than the Particles of other Metals. In the next Place, 'tis possible those little Cylinders may consist of finer Particles, which while they are join'd, make them Compact enough; but yet by Reason of their extream smoothness, are easily disjoin'd; so that Quicksilver does not only evaporate over a Fire, but those Vapours, receiv'd in a close Vessel, appear like white Dust; whereby 'tis plain the Figures of the Particles are changed: Just as we see watry Vapours coagulated, make Snow.

41. III. Quicksilver tho' naturally Liquid, yet mixt with Lead, it becomes solid and ductile, because the softer Parts of Lead, embracing the cylindrical and solid Parts of Quicksilver, stop their fluidity; and being ductile themselves, make the whole Consistence so too; tho' not altogether like other Metals. Do but release Quicksilver of its leaden Fetters, which is done several ways, and it recovers its former fluidity.

42. IV. Quicksilver is very heavy, because the parts of which its Cylinders consist, are so well Cemented together, as to leave no Interstices, but make the Bulk every way solid. Perhaps they are Orbicular, and join their plain sides very close together. And in this Position, they may make a very heavy Cylinder, and yet leave it extream fluid, tho' of themselves they are light enough to evaporate. To make this plainer by a familiar Instance; suppose you take the Ladies in Chess, and join their plain sides together, they will make a heavy Cylinder, tho' taken singly they are but light. This Cylinder rolls easily upon a Plane, while the Ladies are thus join'd together: But part them and put them in another Position, and when the Cylinder is spoil'd, their volubility is spoil'd too. We dare not affirm, that the Case is certainly the same in Quicksilver: But every Body must allow, that the Effects of it may be well produced by this, or the like way.

43. V. In the Mines Quicksilver is found either pure and liquid, or mixt and encumber'd with the more solid Particles of other Bodies; just as other Metals are mixt or pure. It flows out of the Stone thro' Tubes, which makes Pliny call it, Vomicam aterni liquoris, i. e. a Liquor vomited out of a Stone, and never coagulated.

44. VI. It breaks thro' Vessels, i. e. such as have any chink, or are very porous; for its Cylinders being both smooth and heavy, it either slips thro' the chinks, or works its way through a slight Contexture; which is the Reason that it easily soaks thro' the Pores of Leather.

45. VII. Every Thing swims in it, by reason of its gravity; but Gold, and that sinks, because it frets the surface of Gold with its active Cylinders, and puts its quadrangular, oblong Parts into Motion, and having thus disjointed them it easily admits them into its Pores. For Cylinders leave sufficient Pores between them to take in solid right-angled Parallelograms. But when Quicksilver has Gold enough in it, to fill up all its Pores, then it looses its fluidity, and becomes a soft Consistence, as it does when 'tis united with Lead.

46. VIII. Being poured upon Leather, it sweats through it, and leaves the pure Gold behind, because the smooth Cylinders easily pass through the Pores of the Leather; which right-angled Parallelograms cannot do by reason of their Angles.

47. IX. Of the second Sort of Minium they have found a way to make Quicksilver, because the Minium is either full of such Metal, which is extracted out of it's earthy Parts by the Method already mention'd; or else it does in good measure consist of such Globules as make the Cylinders of Quicksilver, and compose them by uniting them together, as the heat of the Fire drives them out of the Minium. Hence we see Minium made every Day out of pure Quicksilver, by the help of a vehement Fire, and an artful Management. For so the Cylinders are dissolved, and their Globules are partly broken, and partly alter'd in their Situation; which makes the Light to be variously collected and reflected from the Surface of Quicksilver and Minium, and this is the Cause of their different Colours.

48. And so much of Metals; which is far short of enough to satisfy those, that would be perfectly well seen in their Natures. We judged it sufficient, in a Compendium, to touch briefly upon such Things as are generally well known. A great deal more may be found in the Books of Chymists and Authors, that have made it their business to Study these Things. We have offer'd a Conjecture, which we thought might be of use to solve the Thing in Question; and shall be glad to have the Benefit of better Discoveries from others: Always allowing the Greek Poet's Authority to hold good, more especially in this sort of Knowledge:

Mors est vita scilicet propheta.

The best Gueſſer is the beſt Prophet.

CHAP. V.

Of ſuch FOSSILS as are calcin'd by the heat of FIRE.

1. THE Fossils of the third Kind are now to come under our Examination; and in this Rank we have placed ſuch as don't flame nor melt in the Fire, nor may be hammer'd out into Length and Breadth; but crumble into Duſt when they are pound- ed, and turn to a Calx when heated in the Fire. Theſe again may be ſubdivided into two Sorts, viz. Salts of various kinds, or Fossils which have much of the Nature of Salts: And ſuch as have no manner of affinity with Salt.

Plin. lib. 33. c. 7.

2. Salts are all ſuch Fossils, as have a ſharp and pungent taſte, tho' not all alike. We will begin with that which is properly ſo called; "Which (as Pliny ſays) is either made by Art, or comes of it ſelf; "there are ſeveral Ways for both; and both are made "of Water boil'd, or dried up. Thus the Tarentine "Lake is all dried up in Summer, and turn'd into "Salt. In ſome Places the Edges of Lakes only are "dried to Salt, as the Lacus Cocanicus in Sicily, and "another near Gela. And the ſame Thing happens in "ſome Pools of Phrygia and Cappadocia. Sometimes "about half the Pool is dried to Salt, as at Aſpendus, "where it is very remarkable, that whatever quantity "is taken away in the Day-time, it is made up again "the Night following. Now none of the Salt afore- ſaid grows together in hard Lumps, but is all ſmall "and fine. The Sea-water too yields a Salt of its "own accord, which is made of the Froth that is "left upon the Rocks and Shores. And ſome other "ſuch Salts there are which Water produces of it ſelf

3. "But beſides, there are Mountains of native "Salt, as Ormenus in the Indies, where it is cut like "Stone out of a Quarry, and grows again. In Cap- padocia they dig it out of the Ground, where it "plainly appears to have been form'd out of Water "congeal'd (as 'twere) and petrify'd like Iſing-glaſs. "The Lumps which are dig'd out, are very heavy. "At Gerrhe, a Town in Arabia, they build their "Walls and Houſes of large pieces of Salt, cement- ing the Joynts with Water. When King Ptolemy en- camp'd about Peluſium, he found Salt in the Ground, "which gave the hint to others to remove the Sand, "and find it in the Deſerts between Egypt and Arabia; "as likewiſe in the thirſty Sands of Africa, as far as the "Oracle of Jupiter Hammon. For the parts of Cy- rene are famous for Sal Ammoniac, ſo call'd, be- cauſe 'tis found under the Sands. It looks like that "ſort of Allum call'd Schiſum; coming out in long, "duſky pieces, of an unpleaſant taſte, but uſeful in "Phyſick, &c. It is gotten likewiſe at Egelaſta, in the "hithermoſt Part of Spain, in Lumps almoſt transpa- rent; and this is prefer'd by moſt Phyſicians above "all other Salts whatever. Laſtly, The Places where "Salt is found, are always barren, and produce no- thing elſe.

4. "Now for Salt that is made by Art, there are "ſeveral Kinds of it. The common and moſt uſe- ful Sort is made in the Salt-pits which take in the "Sea-water, with ſome mixture of Freſh, eſpecially "what falls out of the Clouds; but a hot Sun does "all in all to the making of it. The Africans heap up "their Salt about Utica, like ſo many Hills; which "Heaps, when they are once well harden'd by the "Sun and Moon, are not to be melted with any wet, "nor hardly to be cut with Iron. But in Crete, and "about Egypt, they make it of Sea-water only, with- out any Springs. At Babylon they have a thick ſort "of Water which makes liquid Bitumen like Oyl, "and therefore uſed in Lamps; when the Liquor is "ſpent, there is Salt left in the bottom. In Chaonia "they boil the Water of a certain Fountain, which as "it cools, it turns to Salt; but ſuch as is neither "pungent nor white.

5. Salt is all one, as to the Nature of it, whether it be made by Art, or be the Native Product of the Earth, or be owing to the heat of the Sun, which makes the Waters to evaporate, and ſo fits it for uſe. For the ſaline Particles are not produc'd by Art, but are only ſeparated from the watry Particles wherein they floated. All the Difference is in the quickneſs of its taſte, according to the different Situation of Places, and heat of the Sun. Let us proceed therefore to explain the general Properties of Salt, and enquire into their Cauſes.

6. And 1. Salt is heavier than Water: 2. 'Tis diſ- ſolved by it: 3. It melts in the open Air, if it be well refin'd from all heterogeneous Matter: 4. When the Water wherewith it was mingled, is boil'd away and evaporated, it is left in the bottom of the Veſſel: 5. It never corrupts, nor ſuffers Fleſh which is ſea- ſon'd with it, to corrupt: 6. It has a very keen taſte: 7. It is the only Thing, which, when thoroughly re- fined, the Fire cannot melt, but reduces to a Calx.

7. I. When Lumps of Salt of any bigneſs, are caſt into the Water, they go down directly to the bottom; whence 'tis plain, that a quantity of Salt is heavier than a like quantity of Water. The Reaſon is, be- cauſe there is more homogeneous Matter in the Lump of Salt, than in the quantity of Water; the ſaline Particles lying cloſer together than the watry Particles can do, for which reaſon the Pores between them are ſmaller; as will appear upon obſerving their Figure. But when a Lump of Salt thrown into the Water, comes to be diſſolved by the fretting and agitation of the watry Particles, thoſe Particles inſinuate them- ſelves among the Particles of Salt, and receive them into their Pores, and ſo carry them about according as they move themſelves.

8. II. But the way of diluting Salt ſeems to be this: When the watry Particles like ſo many Ropes encloſe the Salt on every ſide, and variously toſs and drive it about with their Motion, the ſaline Particles being much of a cubick Figure, acute in the Angles, but ſmooth on the ſides, are at laſt diſjoin'd, and carried away with the Water. Nor is the aforeſaid Figure of Salt barely gueſt at, but it's various Kinds having been carefully view'd thro' a Microſcope, the parts appear'd much pointed with Angles, tho' the Angles were not equally large and numerous in all the Particles: But the ſides appear'd ſmooth, ſo that 'tis no wonder they are eaſily diſjoin'd. That common Salt, whether pro- duced by Sea or Land, is of a cubic Figure, is prov'd by Dr. Liſter, in the beginning of his Book De Medicatis Angliæ fontibus. Printed 1682.

9. III. Salt expoſ'd to the Air, is apt to melt, be- cauſe in the Air there are many watry Particles, which falling upon the Salt melt, or rather diſſolve it. And this is confirm'd from hence, That when the Air is ve- ry clear, and far from abounding with watry Particles, Salt keeps well in it; but diſſolves immediately upon the change of Weather to Rain or Cloudy. We obſerv'd before, that to make Salt diſſolvable in the Air, 'tis ne- ceſſary it ſhould be refin'd from all heterogeneous Mat- ter; becauſe otherwiſe the Branches of ſuch Matter hold it together ſo that the Water cannot looſen it.

10. IV.

10. IV. Fossil and Marine-Salt, and such too as is made out of Salt-Springs, when 'tis boil'd in Water, does not evaporate, but remains in the bottom of the Vessel; and thus when the heat of the Sun has drain'd the Water out of Salt-Pits, we see the Salt is left upon the dry sides. The reason of this is not hard to be discover'd, when 'tis remembred (as we said) that Salt is heavier than Water; for that which is heaviest must needs remain last in the bottom of a Vessel exhausted with heat. Besides, whereas the sides of saline Particles, according to our Conjecture, are smooth, they cannot help falling into the Vessel, tho' they be something rais'd while they are engag'd with the watry Particles; for having no Hook to hang upon those Particles as they ascend, their own weight brings them down again.

11. But you must take notice, that this is to be understood of such Salts as come from the Earth and the Sea, which Chymists call fix'd Salts, because their weight fixes them to the bottom of the Vessel. But there are volatile Salts, that is, acid Particles Chymically extracted out of the Bodies of Plants and Animals. Now these being much finer than the other, and perhaps of a slighter contexture, are easily carry'd up into the Air. These Salts derive themselves indeed from the Salt of the Earth, because Plants and Animals are fed, and grow by the moisture of the Earth; but by various Fermentations they are attenuated and made fine enough to evaporate.

12. V. But the great Property of Salt is, That it neither corrupts itself, nor suffers those things on which 'tis sprinkled, to corrupt. Thus we see that Flesh, and other Things which are soon tainted without Salt, will keep good a vast while, when they are sufficiently salted. For the right understanding of this, we will here put in a Word or two concerning Putrefaction. That which makes Flesh, for Example, putrify, is the warmth and brisk motion of the Air, which gets into the Flesh, and by degrees severs the parts of it; these flying about in the Air, get into Peoples Nostrils, and strike upon the Olfactory Nerves so as to excite in the Mind a sense of a noisom Smell. Now this being the Case, it was needful, for preventing Putrefaction, that some Art should be found out, whereby to fix the Parts of Flesh in the same situation, against the force of the incumbent and surrounding Air. Which cannot be done better than by having something at hand, whose acute and rigid Parts may, like so many Nails, penetrate the Particles of Flesh, and fasten them close one to another: And such are the Particles of Salt, as we have represented them before. For this reason, salt Meat does not only keep sweet, but grows hard too; because it cannot be thus closely pinn'd together by the rigid Particles of Salt, but it must become harder. It may here be further observ'd, That as Salt keeps Flesh from being corrupted by the Air; so Flesh defends Salt from being melted by the same Air, because it retains the saline Particles within its deep Pores, and suffers not the humidity of the Air to touch them.

13. When Salt is thrown into the Fire, there are several things observable about it. First, That it crackles very briskly; but has soon done. The Reason of which seems to be this, that there are watry or airy Particles inclos'd in some cavities of the Salt. Now when 'tis thrown into the Fire, those Particles strike against the sides of the Cavities with incredible vehemency, and breaking their prisons, start out into the Air, which makes that crackling noise that strikes our Ears. This is more confirm'd by this Experiment, That if you dry Salt by a gentle Fire, and pound it as small as may be, and then throw it into the Fire, it will not crackle. And the same thing may be argu'd from the shortness of its crackling; for when the heterogeneous Matter is let out, there is nothing more in the Salt to make such a noise.

14. Secondly, Salt well dry'd, and decrepitated, as the Chymists call it, and set over the Fire in a Pan, remains a great while like Calx, just as Stones do; and cannot be melted without an extrem hot Fire, if nothing be mix'd with it. For the Particles of Salt, which are like a Prism, sharp at both ends, are very unapt to move of themselves, because of the mutual hold which their Angles have one of another. But at last the violence of Fire, which conquers every thing, blunts and breaks those Angles, insomuch that they run to Liquor, while the vehement heat lasts. But when it is taken off the Fire, the Liquor settles to a solid Substance like Glas; for which reason Glass-makers use a great deal of Salt and Nitre in their Trade.

15. VI. This seems to be the Nature of Salt, and this is all that we shall say of it at present; only take notice, That as there is a variety in the Taste and Acrimony of Salts, so must the Angles at the ends of the Prisms be various, more or fewer; sharper or blunter; as our naked Eyes may almost discern; but a Microscope makes it plain. Hence it is that Salts put to the Tongue, and variously pricking its Fibres, according to the variety of their Points, excite in us a sense of more than one sort of Taste.

16. To Salt, we will add three other sorts of Fossils, Nitre, Vitriol and Alum; whose Properties and Nature we will briefly explain, as well as we can. To begin with Nitre; there's one sort which grows of itself, and another sort which is made. ^{Plin. lib. xxx. c. 10.} There is but "little (says Pliny) in Media, in their hoary dry Valleys; they call it Halmiraga. But in Thrace there is less; they call it Agrium 'tis found near Philippi. There are a great many nitrous Waters, but they are not strong enough to condense. The most and best Nitre is to be had at Litæ in Macedonia; the People call it Chalastrium; 'tis white and fine, and very like Salt. There is a nitrous Lake, with a Fountain of sweet Water in the middle, &c. And this is what grows of itself. In Egypt they make a great deal of it, but it is not good; for it is dusky, and full of knots and stones. It is made almost as Salt is; only they use Sea-water in their Salt-works; and the Water of Nile about their Nitre. When the Nile retires, their Nitre-pits stand soaking for forty Days together; but as soon as the Nitre is grown firm, they are in haste to carry it off, lest it should melt again in the Pits. They pile it upon Heaps and it keeps very well. The Nitre-pits of Egypt were us'd to be only about Naucratis and Memphis; and the former had the preference; for the Memphian Nitre grows strong as it stands; for which reason there are several Piles of Stone thereabout. Out of these they make Vessels, and some they melt down with Sulphur among their Coals. This same Nitre they use also about such things as they would have last a long time. There are some Pits of reddish Nitre, according to the Colour of the Earth. In Asia the Aphronitrum is reported to be gotten from the distillation of Caverns; which is gather'd and laid to dry in the Sun. But that from Lydia is reckon'd the best. The proof of its goodness is, that it be very light, very friable, and very near of a purple Colour.

17. There is but this difference between the Natural and Artificial Nitre. That the one refines itself, the other is refin'd by the Art of Man, as we said before of Salt. And indeed, all Nitre is a kind of Salt, and hardly differs from Salt, properly so call'd, further than in these three respects, That well refined Nitre is more acid, and lighter than Salt; and easily takes fire.

18. If the ground of this difference be requir'd, it seems to be only this: 1. That the Angles at both ends of the oblong Particles of Nitre, are sharper than the Angles of the saline Particles; which makes them prick the Tongue more vehemently, and excite a greater sense of Acidity. 2. That the Particles of Nitre Nitre are finer and fuller of Pores, which when the Particles of Fire get in, they soon put the nitrous Particles in a hurry, till they break to pieces, and turn to Flame, as we shew'd before. Nitre exceeds Salt in lightness, because the saline Particles contain more homogeneous Matter in the same compass, than the nitrous do. Those that would know more of Nitre, may peruse the accurate Natural History of it, printed at London, in 1690. by William Clarke. Dr. Lister has view'd the Particles of Nitre thro' a Microscope, and found them to have six Angles, parallelogram sides, and pointed like a Pyramid at one end.

19. Vitriol, as we now call it, was by the Ancients call'd Chalcantus; there are several sorts of it, which we will describe out of Pliny. "The Greeks (saith he) have compounded the Name of two Words, signifying Copper and Shoemakers Black, for they call it Chalcantus. It is made in the Pits and Pools of Spain, which have that sort of Water. It is boil'd together with an equal mixture of fresh Water, and is pour'd into wooden Troughs; across these are fasten'd certain pieces of Wood, from which Ropes hang down with Stones ty'd at their lower ends. About these Stones the Mud gathers, and glazes them so as to make them look like Bunches of Grapes. Then they take them out, and keep them Thirty Days a drying. The Colour of this Matter becomes so shining, that one might mistake it for Glass. [Whence it came to be call'd Vitriol.] When it is diluted, 'tis as black as Ink; [for which reason they call it Shoemakers Black.] There are many ways of making it; As by digging Pits in the Ground aforesaid, the distillations of whose sides are frozen in Winter to Ice-icles, and make the finest sort. That of a white violet colour, they call Lancheton. 'Tis likewise made in Cisterns where the Rain-water and Mud is gather'd together and suffer'd to freeze. And sometimes they make it as they do Salt, by thickening it in the hot Sun. For these Reasons they distinguish it by two Names, Fossil and Fæctitious. The paler it looks, the worse it is.

20. Besides this Chalcantus of the Ancients, there are other sorts of Vitriol, Chalcitis, Sery and Misy. " Chalcitis is the Copper-stone; which differs from the Stone call'd Cadmia, because 'tis cut out of Rocks standing above-ground, whereas they dig for this latter. Besides, the Chalcitis crumbles to pieces presently, being naturally soft, as if it were Down grown together in a Lump; and has long Veins of Copper. The best is colour'd like Honey, has fine Veins, is friable, and free from Stones.

21. When it is old, they call it Sery, whereof the best is found in Egypt, far beyond that of Cyprus, Spain, and Africa. The proof of its goodness any where is, if it have a very strong smell, and grows oily, black, and spongy by rubbing: But these are chiefly the Properties of the Egyptian Sery; for that of other Countries grows bright, as Misy does, when 'tis rub'd, and is more stony. They burn it, as they do the Chalcitis, in a Coal-fire.

22. "Some say, Misy is made in Pits, by burning the Stone with a Fire made of Pine-tree, whereby the Ashes of that Wood incorporates with the yellow Flour of the Stone. It is indeed made of the Stone above-mention'd; the best is in Cyprus, the marks of it are small sparks of Gold; when it is scrap'd, the Matter of it appears earthy or sandy, like Chalcitis. A mixture of it is us'd in Refining Gold.

23. These are the several Sorts of Vitriol; which we will not stand to examine with all their Properties. We will only observe in general, 1. That it is near as heavy as Salt, though the weight of the several Sorts is not all alike. 2. The more refin'd, the sharper it is, and the Spirit, as the Chymists call it, is extremely Acid. 3. It is very Corrosive and Astringent. 4. It does not flame in the Fire, but turns to a Powder or Calx.

24. I. It is as heavy as Salt, because its Particles are as compact, and therefore contain as much homogeneous Matter in the same compass. II. It is very Acid, by reason of the very sharp Angles at the ends of its Particles, which the freer they are from heterogeneous Matter, the more acute and pungent they are. For as a sharp Knife will not cut so well when the Edge is clog'd with any thick Matter, as it will when the Edge is clean; so the Angles of Vitriol prick and penetrate more or less, as they are more or less clog'd. III. 'Tis no wonder that the Particles being so extremely sharp as to enter any Pores, do corrode things they are laid upon. They do likewise render Flesh firm, by piercing or fixing it like so many Nails or Pins, for the more Pins are driven into the Pores of any Body, the more is the Matter of it squeez'd together, unless they over-strain it, and break its Continuity. IV. Vitriol will not flame for the same reason as Salt will not. Dr. Lister has shewn that the Particles of Vitriol are taper at both Ends, and consist of Ten plain Sides.

25. In the last place we are to speak of Alum, which (as Pliny calls it) "Is the Sweat [Salsugo] of the Earth. Of this there are several Sorts. Cyprus produces both white and black, more different in their use than colour; for the white and liquid gives Wool a bright gloss; the black dyes it of a brown colour. This latter is also good to purify Gold. 'Tis all made of Water and Slime, sweating out of the Earth in Winter, and harden'd by the Summer's Sun. The first that's ready is the whitest. It is also got in Spain, Egypt, Armenia, Macedonia, Pontus, Africa, and in the Isles of Sardinia, Melos, Lipara, Strongyle. The best is in Egypt; the next best in Melos.

26. "Of this there are two sorts, Liquid, and Hard. The goodness of the Liquid is known by its being clear and milky, free from roughness, and naturally warm. The other sort is pale and rough. The Vertue of the Liquid Alum is to bind, to harden, and corrode.

27. "There is one sort of Concrete Allum which the Greeks call Σχίστη, growing into long streaks like Gray-hairs: whence some chuse rather to call it Tecyitis; and Chalcitis, from the Stone of whose coagulated Sweat it is made. This sort of Alum is none of the best for stopping running Humours. Another sort there is call'd Strongyle, which grows deeper in the Ground. This is divided again into two Sorts. One is fungous, or pappy, easily diluted with any moisture, and good for little. The other, which is better, is full of holes like a Pumice or Sponge, naturally round, and comes nearer to the White; it is free from Sand, friable, and sullies not the Hands with the touch. There needs nothing be put to it to make it run; a clean Coal-fire resolves it. There is no sort better for its binding, blackening, and hardening Quality.

28. We will not stand to take notice of some other Sorts of Alum besides those already mention'd. It is suppos'd, that what we now call Rock-Alum, which is white and almost transparent, was unknown to the Ancients. But the Nature of them all is much the same.

29. 1. Alum has a Salt taste, tho' not so acid as that of Vitriol. 2. It is extremely binding, whence the Greeks call it συσπνελα πικρά τὸ σίκεν, from its astringent Quality; besides that it corrodes and hardens things. 3. The Fire reduces it to Calx. 4. It is commonly lighter than Sea-salt. The reason of these Properties, according to the best Conjectures we can make, may easily be gather'd from what has been said already. The Particles whereof it consists, seem to be something singular in this, that they are thicker, rougher, and have blunter points than the Particles of other Salts. It would require a great many Experiments to be accurate on this Subject. Dr. Lister has shewn, by the help help of a Microscope, that the Figure of Alum is something flat, and has on that part which may be call'd the top or Head, a Plane of six Angles, and a like Plane on the opposite part; between which are contain'd two other Planes of four Angles a-piece; so that the whole consists of eleven Planes, viz. Five of six Angles, and six of four Angles.

30. Thus we have given some Account of Salts, which may furnish some Hints for further Enquiries. We are next to say something of Stones; not of all, or most sorts of Stones, for that would be Work enough for a great Volume; but something of them in general. Now Stones are such Fossils as are hard and rigid, easily beaten to Dust with the Hammer, and reduc'd to Calx by the Fire, and without any manner of Taste.

31. These common Properties of Stones may be thus accounted for, from Principles already laid down. I. The whole Substance of Stones is hard and rigid, because it consists of Particles which are so. II. The Hammer beats Stones to Powder, because the rigid Particles cannot bend, or yield to the stroke, and flow down by one anothers sides; and therefore a violent blow makes them fly, and dissolves their continuity. III. Stones don't flame in the Fire, nor evaporate, by reason of the weight and rigidness of their Particles. But since all parts of Stones are not equally hard, a continual Fire eats through the softer places, and often reduces Stones to a pretty light sort of Dust. Which Dust or Lumps of Stone left by the Fire, are call'd Calx.

32. Before we proceed with what we have to say about Stones, we will explain a principal and very remarkable Property of Calx. Now we see that Calx viva, or unslak'd Lime, when cold Water is thrown upon it, presently hizzes and grows hot; the Natural Reason of which, is a Question that deserves to be consider'd. In the first place it may be remember'd, that a vehement Fire wastes the softer parts of Stones, and empties the Pores which were before full of fine Matter. Now these Pores are not only wider and larger for the Air to come in and fill them; but there are besides very narrow recesses and various windings, which cannot admit any Air, but are full of subtiler Matter. So long as the Calx is expos'd to the Air, it continues in one state without any hizzing; because the Air don't press upon its surface with more than ordinary weight, nor is the subtiler Matter forc'd on a sudden out of its Pores.

33. But when a pretty large quantity of Water is thrown upon the Calx, the watry Particles press and strike its surface with their weight, and various Motion common to all Liquids, so as to enter the Pores, and dissolve the Texture of the Calx; at which time that subtiler Matter contain'd in the minutest Pores of the Calx, suddenly bursts out with a great force, and makes a ferment in the Water. For as Water over a Fire is made to boil by innumerable Particles of Fire rising up to it to put it in motion; so the bubbling of the Water thrown upon Lime is caus'd by an Eruption of the finest Particles in it. But after the Water has bubbled a little while, those Particles fly out of the Pores, and disperse themselves thro' the Air, and then the hizzing ceases; just as it does in Water set over the Fire, when the Fire is decay'd.

34. IV. Stones, and particularly the harder sort of Stones, have no Taste; because their Particles cannot be moisten'd so thoroughly, as to make a separation of what Salt they have, from the other parts, that it may enter the Pores and prick the Nerves of the Tongue; which is the only way whereby this Sensation, viz. the Tasting any thing, is excited in us; as was shewn before.

35. Stones are of two Sorts, the Common or Vulgar, and the Precious: But since this Division don't help to explain their Nature, 'tis better to divide them into Dark and Transparent. Of the first Sort are Flints, and that great variety of Stones us'd in Buildings and Statues. For the Light which is convey'd to us thro' right Lines falling upon those Stones, either finds no entrance into them, or if it does, it follows such crooked windings as can bring nothing of it to us. For the same Reason many Precious Stones, tho' shining on the outside, yet are very near dark, because they are tinctur'd with deep Colours.

36. Crystal is transparent; so is Adamant, and many Grains of Sand; because the Rays of Light pass thro' their Pores in right Lines: But we cannot insist on this, it requiring a large explication of the Nature of Light to understand it well. Most Precious Stones are either transparent, tho' in a less degree than the Adamant, or glittering and almost transparent.

37. It is a Question among the Philosophers, Whether Salts and Stones are generated in the Bowels of the Earth? Some hold the Negative, and some the Affirmative; which side is in the right, is uncertain. Those that are for their being generated, suppose them to be originally Liquors which grow to a firmness in time; and they imagine that the Subterraneous Fires boil a medley of Things together in the Earth, which afterwards disperse thro' the Veins, where they grow firm as they are found by us. This Conjecture of theirs is supported by an Observation upon the making of Glass, which is compounded of Sand and Stones reduc'd to Calx, and run together by a violent Fire, with a mixture of Nitre; as also by observing the various Mixtures made by the Art of Man, and so order'd as to resemble Precious Stones of divers Colours. But tho' this may possibly be so, yet it may be quite otherways: We don't know the Bowels of the Earth well enough to determine the Matter positively either way.

38. Among Stones, the Magnet is reckon'd for one; which because of its particular Nature, shall be accurately consider'd in the following Chapter.

CHAP. VI.

Of the MAGNET or LOADSTONE, and its Properties.

1. IT is not my Design to enquire when the Loadstone came first to be known, and how useful it is to shew the Poles of the World. Our present Business is only to give the Natural History of it. First then, We will observe its various Properties which Experience has made known: And in the next place, we will propose the most famous Opinions of Philosophers concerning its internal Nature and Disposition.

II. But first of all, it is observable, That the Loadstone is found in Iron-Mines, and is much of a Colour and Weight with Iron. However, it is not to be melted and hammer'd out like Iron; but flies to pieces under the Hammer, and turns to a Calx in the Fire; which shews that its Parts exceed those of Iron for hardness, rigidness, and an intricate combination one with another: This was worth observing, because it will be of Use in the following Discourse.

III. Let us now enter upon the known Properties of the Loadstone. And 1st. When it moves freely and without any obstacle, it points North and South, so as that part of it which stands to one Pole, never turns to the other. The way to give it a free motion, is to swim it in the Water, upon a piece of Wood.

2. Secondly, Philosophers have observ'd, That the Loadstone don't always point full North and South, but sometimes inclines to the East or West, without any constant Rule.

3. Thirdly, Two Loadstones plac'd at a certain distance from one another, do mutually approach or recede, according

(K)

according to their various Positions. Their parts which stand North, being oppos'd go off to a distance from each other; but the South-end of one draws to the North-end of the other; and so vice versa. These Parts of the Loadstones we shall, for brevity's sake, call their Poles, and for a Reason which will appear hereafter, we shall call that the South-Pole which turns to the North, and that the North-Pole which points to the South.

4. Fourthly, Two Loadstones will hold up one another in the Air by turns, if the North-Pole of the one be put to the South-Pole of the other, and vice versa; sometimes a lighter Loadstone will hold up a heavier, when the heavier will not hold up the lighter.

5. Fifthly, It is observable, that all Loadstones are not equally brisk and nimble in turning to the Poles of the World; nor is their Virtue all alike in attracting or holding up Weights.

6. Sixthly, Tho' a Loadstone for the most part has two Poles pointing North and South, as we said before; yet there are some irregular ones, which seem to have more Poles.

7. Seventhly, As one Loadstone holds up another, so it does Iron of greater or less weight than itself.

8. Eighthly, If Iron-dust be strew'd upon a Loadstone, the Particles will dispose themselves directly between the Poles and then by degrees incline to an orbicular Figure, so as to lie parallel with the Axis of the Loadstone, unless it be one of the irregular sort before mention'd. See the Figure, where A, is the Loadstone, B, the Region opposite to its Poles; C, the Dust. A like Observation is that of Iron-filings upon coarse Paper, or a thin Board, that if the Loadstone be held under the Paper or Board, it moves the Filings just as it mov'd itself, provided it be not held at too great a distance.

9. Ninthly, The Loadstone imparts its Virtue to Iron so effectually, that Iron touch'd with a Loadstone, appears to have all the Properties aforesaid tho' not in an equal degree. The great Use of this communication is experienc'd in the Mariner's Needle, by the help whereof they readily find the North and South, and all other Parts of the World.

10. Tenthly, 'Tis observable, that on this side the Line, the North-point of the Needle is more depress'd than that which stands to the South; on the further side the North-point is elevated, and the South depress'd; but under the Line it keeps no situation, nor is of any use.

11. Eleventhly, As the Loadstone communicates its Virtue to Iron; so when 'tis set in Iron, it attracts a greater weight of it, than it does by itself.

12. Twelfthly, Loadstones are spoil'd if they are suffer'd to lie long near one another with the North or South-Pole of the one oppos'd to the same Pole of the other. Or if they are thoroughly heated in the Fire; which likewise spoils the Magnetick Virtue in Iron: And this Virtue is much impair'd in Iron by its Rust, to which the Loadstone is not so obnoxious.

13. Lastly, Iron plac'd long-ways between North and South, and continuing so for a long time without alteration, has often acquir'd a Magnetick Virtue; as the old Crosses upon Churches are found to do.

IV. These are the chief Properties which the Loadstone is by Experience found to have; and they have put the Philosophers very hard to it, to assign a probable Reason for such wonderful Effects. However, they have attempted three ways to find it out.

1. Some have affirm'd, That there is a certain Sympathy between the North-pole of one Loadstone, and the South-pole of another; but an Antipathy between the North-pole, or the South-pole of one, and the same Pole of another. This Antipathy makes them repel one another, but the Sympathy is the cause of their mutual Attraction. Besides this, they teach that there is a Sympathy between the Loadstone and Iron, whereby the latter receives the Virtue of the former. And this way they account for all Experiments, very luckily, as they conceive.

2. But some People are apt to demand, What the meaning of Sympathy and Antipathy is? To these they answer, That Sympathy is an occult Quality, consisting in a certain Agreement and Alliance of Nature. But occult Quality, is only two Words for something utterly unknown; and therefore it would be a more frank and candid Answer to say, They don't understand, nor can imagine the Reason of these Effects. For to a second Question, What that Agreement and Alliance of Nature is, there is no plainer Answer given. So likewise Antipathy, or the Resistance and Discord of Nature, is an occult Quality; which teaches us as much of the Reason why one Loadstone recedes from another, &c. as we knew before; and they that say it, had as good say nothing.

3. Thales did not speak more intelligibly, when he said, This Stone had a Soul, which put Iron in motion. Nor would he, I presume, have given a clearer Answer, if he had been ask'd, What that Soul was? However, we may here take notice by the way, of what very great Antiquity the Knowledge of the Loadstone is.

4. Others considering the Experiment of the Dust, how it disposes itself about the Loadstone, have conjectured, First, That there is some invisible Matter whirling round the Stone; for otherwise the Iron-Dust would not place itself in that order, it being contrary to the Nature of Bodies to move of their own accord. Secondly, They think, that same Matter may be the Cause of all the wonderful Effects of the Loadstone. Thirdly, They suppose that the Earth itself may be of the Nature of a great Loadstone, about which the like Matter may circulate; and that a Loadstone may be so dispos'd with respect to the Earth, as it is with respect to another Loadstone. Of these Three Suppositions, the first seems undoubtedly true, the other Two more uncertain; but yet not contrary to the Nature of Things, and therefore not to be deny'd as absolutely false.

5. These Things being suppos'd, we are next to enquire, What is the Figure of that inconspicuous Matter, by which so many wonderful Effects are produc'd. Some imagine it to be like a Feather, or fletched Arrow, which turn'd the wrong way, would hardly enter there, where it passes clear with the right end of the Feather foremost. See the Figure, where this is represented.

Others rather fancy it to resemble a Screw, and that the Pore of the Stone is twisted in the same manner, which therefore can receive it but one way. See the Figure

6. Besides, they suppose the Pores of the Earth and Loadstone are parallel to their Axis, and adapted to receive such Particles; so that they may go out through one of the Poles, through which by the Inversion of their Fibres or Screw, they are hindred from retreating back; but if they return into the Earth or Loadstone, they may enter at the opposite Pole. So the Particles which come out at the Pole A, cannot return the same way again, but must come about to the Pole B.

V. Having briefly explain'd this Opinion, let us see how consistent it is with particular Experiments.

1. First, Since the said Matter flies about the Globe of the Earth, if it meets with any Body which has Pores

Pores fit to receive it, it enters in, and directs that Body according to its own Course. Its entrance will be there where the Pores lye open, but its Particles cannot return the same way for the Reason assign'd, Numb. IV. §. 6. The Point of the Screws or winged Particles will make their entrance at that Part, where the Pores are adapted for such Entrance; and if they meet with Pores otherwise disposed, they will work about the Stone by the force of their Motion, till it is in such a Situation, that they can easily penetrate it. But the same Parts of it will always stand to the North and South, because the Matter which comes from those two Points, always enters at one Pole of the Loadstone, and comes out at the other.

2. Secondly, The inclining of the Loadstone East or West, may be occasion'd by some change made in the Poles of the Earth; so that the Meatus of the magnetick Matter are turn'd a little on one side or other; the reason of which is unknown. But since there is nothing in it, contrary to the Nature of a Body, the probability of the aforesaid Hypothesis is not overthrown thereby.

3. Thirdly, The North-pole of one Magnet, repels the same Pole of another, and the like repugnancy is seen between their South-poles, because the Matter which goes out at the North-pole, cannot enter at the same Pole, by reason of the Figure or Motion of that Matter; and therefore the Pole of one Loadstone repels the same Pole of another, while the Particles of the magnetick Matter strike briskly upon the solid Stone, or its impervious Pores. On the contrary, if the South-pole of the one be set opposite to the North-pole of the other, there is a mutual Attraction of the Loadstones; for while the Matter passes freely thro' their Pores on both sides, and nothing obstructs it, it agitates the Air interspersed between the two Loadstones, and gives it such a strong turn as drives it to the exterior Parts of the Stones, which it forces one towards another; so that they are seen to draw nearer together, because the Resistance between their nearer Poles being removed, makes them give way to the greater pressure incumbent on their exterior Poles. But the two Loadstones ought not to be far from each other; for the magnetick Matter which is carried round them, describes not a very large Circle: So that if they be too far asunder, they are out of the Circle, and consequently out of the mutual Influence of each other. It is likewise further to be observed here, that since 'tis plain, that that Pole of the Loadstone which Points to the same Pole of the Earth, as the Pole of the other Loadstone does, repels this last; if the Earth is to be consider'd as a great Loadstone, that Pole of the Magnet which turns to the South-pole of the Earth, must be the North-pole, & vice versa.

4. Fourthly, One Loadstone holds up another, when their Poles are mutually opposed as before, because the Particles of the cochlear or winged Matter, getting into the Pores of the suspended Stone, maintain its hold. Nor is it material how heavy the attracting Stone is; for its attractive Virtue is not owing to its weight, but to the quantity of magnetick Matter, which the more Pores the Stone has fit to receive it, the greater it is.

5. Fifthly, There is the same Reason for the difference which is found between the virtue of Loadstones. Such as have most Pores, retain the greatest quantity of the winged or cochlear Matter about them; for when upon the Resistance it meets with from the Air surrounding the Loadstone, it finds Pores enough in the Stone through which it can easily circulate, then it continues to move about the Stone: But if it be repell'd by too great Solidity, it goes off some whither else. Therefore such Loadstones as are destitute of Pores suited for the Reception of this Matter, or whose Pores are but few, have little or no attractive Virtue.

6. Sixthly, Loadstones whose Pores cross one another, or run several ways, are irregular in their Situation; for the magnetick Matter flows upon those Parts, where it finds the readiest Admission.

7. Seventhly, The Loadstone draws Iron, because Iron has a sort of magnetick Pores, and seems to differ from the Magnet only in this, that it is softer, and more easily changed.

8. Eighthly, From the Iron-dust sprinkled upon the Loadstone, and disposed into a Circle about it, the Motion of the magnetick Matter may be discovered, as it was explain'd, Numb. IV. §. 4. For the magnetick Matter disposes and moves the Dust, according to its own Motion.

9. Ninthly, Iron acquires a magnetick Virtue for the Reason assign'd, §. 7. And yet the Magnet don't lose any Virtue, because it don't depend on the substance of the Stone, which communicates it self to the Iron; but on the external Matter before spoken of, which opens the Pores of the Iron, so that it circulates about it, as freely as it does about the Stone. And if some Particles which belonged to the Stone, remain with the Iron, the Stone is supplied with others from the Poles of the Earth.

10. Tenthly, The magnetick Needle is more depressed on this side the Line, because the magnetick Matter of the Earth flows out in great abundance, not only from the Poles, but also from Countreys remote enough from the Poles, by reason of the Earth's thickness, thro' which it reciprocates from both Hemispheres. Which will be better understood, when 'tis consider'd that the Earth is not Spherical, but Elliptical, or very like that Figure. For the same reason, the South Point of the Needle is depressed beyond the Line. But under the Line, the Needle don't Point North and South any longer, because the Circles of the magnetick Matter of the Earth are higher than its Surface thereabouts, so that the Needle is much below the magnetick Matter, which therefore don't pass thro' it, nor direct it any longer. This Scheme gives a view of this. A and B are the Poles of the Earth, thro' which the magnetick Matter issues in a right Line. CCCC denotes the magnetick Matter, flowing out of both Hemispheres, which brings it into a Circular Motion. D is the place where the magnetick Needle is supposed to be; whence it appears plain enough, that it cannot be toucht with the aforesaid winged or cochlear Matter.

11. Eleventhly, The force of the Loadstone will be augmented, if both Poles are tipped with Iron, because when the magnetick Matter is imparted to the Iron, its Pores are opened, and it becomes like the Stone; by this means a greater quantity of magnetick Matter gathers about the Loadstone, so that greater Weights may be taken up by it.

12. Twelfthly, Loadstones are spoild, if they are so set one against another, that the Matter falls upon those Pores where it cannot enter, because it either breaks them, or stops them up. So likewise the Texture of the Stone is disorder'd by lying in the Fire, so as to lose its Virtue, because its Pores are thereby corrupted. By the same way doth Iron lose its magnetick Power, as also by Rust which corrodes or fills up its Pores.

13. Lastly, Since the magnetick Matter is always flying about the Earth, no wonder if it settles upon such Iron as constantly stands the same way, and opens it self a free passage through its Pores.

V. This account of the winged or cochlear Matter flowing through the Pores of the Loadstone, will perhaps haps at first sight seem fully to solve the Phænomena, as indeed it is well enough suited to most of them. However there are almost insuperable Difficulties in the Supposition of either sort of Matter.

1. If winged Matter of the same Figure, and acted by the same uniform Motion, comes from both Poles of the Earth, we do indeed understand the reason, why the Poles of the Loadstone should always stand directed to the Poles of the Earth; but no good Reason can be given, why the same Pole should always stand one way, since the winged Matter from North or South might indifferently enter at either End.

2. If the cochlear Matter be variously inverted so as to answer all this, yet there is another Objection here, which cannot be solved, neither by this, nor the former Hypothesis. For since the Loadstone is a very solid Body, it cannot be doubted, but there are many more solid Parts than Pores in it. Therefore when two Loadstones are placed near one another, the Matter which mutually flows from them both upon each other, and meets with more solid Parts than Pores, ought to move them both backward; for the force of that Matter which we suppose to flow briskly and plentifully upon the solid Stone, is greater than the force of the Air can be, which is agitated and driven by it to the exterior Poles of the Loadstone; especially since the Air is certainly porous enough to give a free Passage to that Matter.

3. In the mean Time it must be allow'd, that this is an ingenious Account, and that nothing hitherto thought of, comes nearer the Truth.

CHAP. VII.

Of FOUNTAINS and RIVERS.

1. HAVING taken a view of the solid Matter whereof our Earth consists; we come now to the fluid Part, that is, the Fountains, Rivers, Lakes and Seas. But before we examine their Nature and Origin it will be needful to premise something about Water in general, tho' without entering into all the nice Enquiries which might be made about it.

2. In Water there are these Things observable, which Naturalists study to know and account for. 1. It is Transparent. 2. It is Liquid, but capable of being fixt. 3. It may be made Hot or Cold. 4. It easily evaporates by the heat of Fire or Air. 5. It is heavy, compar'd with Air and other Bodies; but much heavier than Air. 6. It is insipid, and without smell. 7. Yet it is subject to putrifie, according as the place is where 'tis kept. 8. It penetrates the Pores of some Bodies, and not of others.

3. I. Water is Transparent, for a Reason given before, Cæsp. V. §. 36. where we spoke of transparent Stones; because, as some are of Opinion, it consists of flexible Particles, like Ropes, which are not so close as to leave no Pores; nor so entangled, but that there are right Lines enough to transmit the Light. For since the Particles are not join'd close together, and are in perpetual Motion, the very fine Particles of Light do easily pass through their right Lines; unless the Water be very deep, or be put in Motion by some external Cause. Then indeed the transparency of the Water is very much obstructed, and it looks of a cloudy, obscure Colour, as it is obvious to observe in a rough Sea. For at such a Time, the vehement Agitation of the Water disturbs the Pores and spoils their straightness.

4. II. Water seems to be Liquid, for the same Reason as other Bodies are so. For since its Particles are flexible like Ropes, as we have described them, and leave Pores between one another, which are fill'd with finer Matter, when this Matter is put into a vehement Commotion, the Particles are easily tost about every way. Yet when the Motion of this restless Matter is restrain'd, as it is in Winter, then the Water congeals into Ice; whether this comes of Cold only, or there be besides nitrous Particles which fall out of the Air at that Time, and with their rigidity fix the watry Particles.

5. III. The Particles of Water being such as we have said, Ice is soon dissolv'd by the motion of the Particles of Fire. For these getting into the Pores of the Ice, do mightily shake the fine, flexible Particles of Ice, and in a little time restore to them their former motion. But if this Water be taken and set in the cold Air, the fiery Particles quickly vanish and the Water becomes cold as before, or freezes again, if the coldness of the Air be intense enough. And here we may observe by the way, First, That Heat is nothing but the various and vehement Motion of the Particles of the heated Body; and that Cold is nothing but their ceasing to move. Secondly, That Hot and Cold, are for the most part relative Terms; that being call'd Hot whose Parts are mov'd more vehemently than the Particles of that part of our selves wherewith we touch it; and that Cold, whose Parts are more quiet than the Parts of our Bodies. He that has a hot Hand, calls that Water cold, which another would call warm, whose Hand is cool.

6. IV. Water easily evaporates by the heat of the Fire or the Air, because its Parts are quickly separated and get into motion; so that the Airy Particles easily carry those of the Water about with them. Of these watry Vapours we shall say more when we come to speak of Meteors.

7. V. It has been shewn by various * Experiments, ^{* Cæsp. Ha. et. Phil. Trans. Aion. 168.} That the Gravity of the Air in the Place where we live, is to that of the Water as 1 to 840, or something more; so that Water is above Eight hundred times heavier than Air. For which reason we see that a Bladder, or any other thing fill'd with Air, can hardly be sunk under Water. And indeed, to make Air sink, there must be a weight added to it, which shall exceed the weight of the Water, as much as that of the Water exceeds that of the Air, and something more. Hence it is, that Water easily supports Wood, and vast Ships freight with the heaviest Cargo; for the weight alone will never sink them, unless the Goods and Vessel together should make a weight exceeding that of the Water. It is likewise worth observing, that Salt-water, as it is heavier than Fresh, so it bears greater Weights. But we shall say something further of the Gravity of Water compar'd with Air, when we come to speak of the Air itself.

8. Those Things that are heavier than Water, as Metals, Stones, &c. when thrown into it, go down straight to the bottom, and so much the quicker, as their weight is greater. Other Bodies of the same weight with the Water, neither float on the Surface, nor sink quite down, but remain suspended between the Top and the Bottom, as we see the Carcases of Animals do.

9. VI. Water is insipid, because its flexile Parts slip gently o'er the Tongue, and are not sharp enough to prick the Nerves and affect the Taste. But here we must be understood of meer Water, void of all kind of Salt; such in the first place, is Water distill'd; and next, that of Rain. For the most wholsom Fountain-water commonly derives a saltiness from the Earth. We don't speak here of Medicinal Fountains, whose Taste is more acute, but of such Water as is usually drank.

10. The purer any Water is, the less Smell it has; for the reason why the Particles don't prick the Tongue, is likewise the reason why they don't affect the Smell; their flexibility and smoothness is such, that they cannot pierce the Olfactory Nerves. Fountain-water water has indeed some smell, but then this is a sign that such Water is not pure.

11. VII. However, Water is apt to putrify, that is, it grows thick and stinking through heat and rest; as we find it does in Ponds and Marshes, and in close Vessels. It must be remember'd that what we said before of Water, is meant of such as is pure; for so we affirm that unmix'd Water cannot putrify: Which we prove, 1. By the Experiment of distill'd Water, which is kept very long without putrefaction. 2. By Rain-water, which being caught in clean Vessels, and presently stop'd up close, and bury'd Under-ground, is kept many Years in Countries where they want Fountains. This shews that the cause of Putrefaction is not in the Water itself, but in other things which are mingled with it; because pure Water, such as is distill'd, or comes out of the Clouds, keeps sweet for a vast while. But care must be taken that the Vessels in which such Water is kept, be stop'd so well that not the least Fly may get into them; and that they be made of such Stuff as will not corrupt, such as Glass or Clay.

12. Now for Standing water in Ponds or Marshes, it is corrupted two ways: 1. By the nature of the Soil, which often abounds with noisom Sulphur, whereby the Water is impregnated and comes to smell in warm Weather; as it does at Amsterdam, not only in the Ditches, but wherever the Ground is open'd for the Foundations of Houses. This Putrefaction is, owing to the Soil, and not to the Water. 2. By the nasty things which are thrown into it, or Bodies of Insects which dye in it; as also by the Eggs of Flies which are drop'd about wherever they go, and breed Worms.

13. Water is corrupted in wooden Vessels, especially at Sea, by the sulphureous parts of the Wood; and by uncleanly Things, as Flies-eggs, &c.

14. VIII. Water penetrates the Pores of certain Bodies, which are wide enough to receive its Particles. Thus it enters the Pores of Sugar and Salts, so as to separate and quite dissolve its Particles. But it cannot get into the Pores of Stones, or but a very little way; so that it only wets their Surface, without diluting them. It hangs on their outsides because they are rough, and because the Extremities of their Pores are open a little way. But such Bodies when wet, are soon dry'd in the Air, because the motion of the airy Particles carries off the soft and smooth Particles of the Water. Here it is observable, that if Bodies rub'd over with Oyl or Fat, be dip'd in the Water, they get very little wet; because the roughness of their Surface whereon the Water should hang, is smooth'd and made even by the Fat, and the Mouths of the Pores are clos'd up, so that there is nothing left for the watry Particles to hold by, and therefore they must needs slide off.

15. It may be demanded, How the Drops of falling Water come to be round, as in Rain, and other Cases, &c. Some answer, This don't happen by any Disposition peculiar to Water, but because the Drops are equally press'd by the Air on every side, and thereby forc'd into a round Figure, the resistance of the Particles as well as the pressure of the Air, being equal every way. This we find in all other Liquors which are let fall by Drops.

16. But others, who will not allow the Particles of Water to be oblong and flexible, according to Cartesius, but round and smooth, and mix'd with a kind of viscid Matter, affirm, That that viscid Matter which contains many round Particles, falling along with the Drops of Rain, makes them round too. For the same reason they will have it, 1. That the Drops of Water hang on the Leaves of Trees, and Sides of Vessels. 2. That Water may be condens'd, because the viscid Particles are flexible, and may be contracted into less room; which they prove by an Experiment made at Florence, in the Academy of Experiments there. A hollow Globe of Silver was fill'd with Water thro' a little Hole made in it for that purpose; which Hole was afterwards stop'd close with Silver melted into it. This done, they fell to beating the Globe with a Hammer, which reduc'd it by degrees to a Figure less spherical; By this they knew that the Water was condens'd, because a spherical Figure is the most capacious of all others. But proceeding to hammer the Globe, they observ'd after a while little Drops of Water issuing like Sweat thro' the Pores of the Silver; and at last, upon opening the Globe, the Water burst out with great force.

17. 3. They assert, that round Drops of Water have hung on the sides of Vessels, after the Air has been all pump'd out of them; which is a sign that the roundness of the Drops is not owing to the force of the Air. 4. If a Quil, or slender Glass-pipe be dip'd perpendicularly into the Water several times, the Water shall rise higher in it the second time, than it did the first; just as a Staff put into viscid Matter, brings not up so much of it at the first time, as it will the second. 5. From the same Cause they think it is, that when such a Quil or narrow Pipe is held up in the Air, the pressure of the Air don't force the Water out of it; because the viscid Matter of the Water spreads itself like a Net over the Hole of the Pipe, and so hinders the round Drops from falling.

18. We will not take upon us to determine whether of these Opinions has the advantage, because this would require a great many accurate Experiments, which we have not leisure nor conveniencies to make. We shall only remark upon the latter, That it does not furnish us with a Reason, why Water will not hang upon a greasy Staff; for greasy viscid things stick one to another easily enough. However, this Hypothesis seems to explain the suspension of watry Drops better than the former.

19. Having now finish'd our short Dissertation upon Water, we are next to say something about Fountains. Fountains are commonly divided into such as dry up in Summer, and such as flow always. Most are of Opinion, that the former are produc'd by Rain-water; but that the latter are continually supply'd some other way; as we shall see hereafter. But for the present we shall confine our Discourse to the perpetual Springs, which may be defin'd to be, Collections of Waters running down from the higher to the lower Parts of the Earth. Out of a great number of such Fountains, Rivers are gather'd, which carry the Waters into the Sea.

20. Before we proceed to enquire into the Original of Fountains, we may observe, That by all Experiments in Hydrostaticks, it appears, that the Surface of Water contain'd in any Vessel always lies even, so that 'tis impossible for any one part of the Surface to be higher than another, except it be made so by some external force. The reason of which is the equal pressure of the incumbent Air on every part of the Water; against which all the watry Particles bear up with equal strength; whence it follows that the Surface is level and even throughout. And it is a further consequence of this, that Pipes cannot convey the Water of a Fountain to a place that is higher than the Fountain itself; because then it would be rais'd above the Line of its Level; which cannot be, for the Reason aforesaid.

21. Now since there are many perpetual Springs which never fail in Summer, some Learned Men have thought their Waters were deriv'd from the never-failing Treasures of the Sea. They say, there are Subterraneous Tubes, thro' which the Sea-water is convey'd to the Fountains; in which Doctrine there are two Difficulties, which they think easy to be solv'd. 1. How is it possible for the Sea-water to be carry'd up to the Tops of the highest Mountains? 2. How comes it to pass that Fountain-water is not salt?

22. I. Taking it for granted, that there are Tubes in the Earth, thro' which the Water by the help of its weight and easiness to flow, may be carry'd a great way from the Sea, they conceive the Water shall march thro' the Coasts of Subterraneous Fires, such as we spoke of Chap. III. Whereby 'tis rarify'd and turn'd into Vapours; which being violently agitated, and steaming thro' the finest Passages of the Earth, come at last to its Surface, and so to the tops of the Mountains, if there be Tubes to convey them thither, and sometimes fly up into the Air; of which we shall say more when we come to speak of Meteors. And when these Vapours settle about the colder parts of the Earth's Surface, they condense into Water again, and drop from the Brows of Mountains and Hills into the Caverns below, and so run along the Crannies, till they find a place to break out at, and form themselves into Springs.

23. II. They say that Fountains, tho' deriv'd thus from the Sea, yet cannot be salt, both because the saline Particles mixt with the Sea-water, being long and rigid, are strain'd off in the narrow passages of the Earth; and also because those Particles never rise in Vapours, as we formerly observ'd. There are indeed some salt Springs, but their Saltness is not from the Sea, but from salt Mines thro' which they pass. For the Vein of a Fountain in such a passage must needs dilute and carry along with it some of the salt Particles. Thus we find in many Places, Waters impregnated with other Minerals; because they run thro' such Places where those Minerals grow.

24. But there are others, who cannot digest this Hypothesis, and that for several Reasons, two of which we will mention. First, It can hardly be imagin'd how such a vast quantity of Water should run thro' Subterraneous passages to Places so very remote from the Sea, so as to produce Springs in those Places, and in the highest Mountains too, sufficient to furnish the greatest Rivers continually, such as the Rhine, the Rhone, the Danube, &c. And whereas Subterraneous Fires make great and frequent alterations in the Bowels of the Earth, those passages would be often choak'd up, and many of the never-failing Springs must become dry. Secondly, If the Hypothesis were true, those Places that are nearest the Sea, whether Mountainous or Champain, would be most water'd with Fountains; and those that are farthest off would be most without them, because most of the Water would be intercepted, before it arriv'd so far. But Experience teaches us the contrary, viz. That on the Sea-coasts, especially where they are low, there is scarce a Spring to be found; while the greatest Rivers come from the remotest Parts.

25. Others therefore chuse rather to assign Rain for the Origin of Fountains; but their Opinion is liable to this Objection, That if Rain alone is the Cause of Fountains, 'tis hard to conceive how any of them should flow perpetually; since there happens sometimes very great Droughts, whereby many are indeed dry'd up, but yet many continue still to flow, lessen'd perhaps in their Streams, but never quite exhausted.

26. Upon a due Consideration of all these Things, it has seem'd necessary to many Learned Men to account for the Origin of Springs another way. It is well known by Experience that the heat of the Sun exhales a prodigious quantity of Vapours out of all sorts of Water, fresh or salt, as we shall see further when we come to speak of the Sea. Let it suffice at present to have hinted a thing well known to all. Of these Vapours, besides those that turn to Rain, many descend in Dew every Day. And in places remote from the Equator abundance of Snow falls every Winter, which continues upon many high Mountains till the Heat of Summer, and then for the most part dissolves. These Considerations taken together will make out the Origin of Fountains without our having recourse to those Subterraneous Tubes before spoken of.

27. * Since then a prodigious quantity of Vapours is rais'd out of the Ocean by the Sun's heat, especially between the Tropicks, and dispers'd abroad by the Winds, they must needs light upon the high Mountains in all the Countries about which they are driven; Such as the Pyrenean, the Alps, the Apennine, the Carpathian in Europe: Taurus, Caucasus, Imaus, and several others in Asia; Atlas and the Montes Luna, with other unknown Ridges in Africa, whence come the Nile, the Niger, and the Zaire; and in America, the Andes and the Apalatean Mountains; each of which far surpasses the usual height to which the aqueous Vapours of themselves ascend, and on the tops of which the Air is so cold and rarefy'd, as to retain but a small part of those Vapours that shall be brought thither by Winds. Those Vapours therefore that are rais'd copiously in the Sea, and by the Wind are carry'd over the low Land to those Ridges of Mountains, are there compell'd by the Stream of the Air to mount up with it to the Tops of the Mountains, where the Water presently precipitates, gleeting down by the Crannies of the Stone; and part of the Vapour entering into the Caverns of the Hills, the Water thereof gathers as in an Alembick into the basons of the Stone it finds; which being once fill'd, all the overplus of Water that comes thither runs over by the lowest place, and breaking out by the sides of the Hills, forms single Springs. Many of these running down by the Valleys between the Ridges of the Hills, and coming to unite, form little Rivulets or Brooks.

28. Many of these again meeting in one common Valley, and gaining the plain Ground, being grown less rapid, become a River: And many of these being united in one common Channel, make such Streams as the Rhine, the Rhone, the Danube, &c. This is the Origin of the Lago di Marie in Italy, which being lock'd up in the Mountains, and having no visible outlet, yet does not swell immensely, but either soaks out by subterraneous passages, such as the * Os Pitonium is prov'd to be, or else goes off in Vapours. And thus the Caspian-Sea, much larger than this or any other such Lakes; is form'd without growing bigger or less, as we shall see hereafter.

29. No body will wonder at such plentiful Collections of Vapours in the Mountains, except those who have never been there to observe them. All who have spent any time in such Places, have felt the Cold much sharper than in the low Grounds: So sharp even in the midst of Summer are the Nights in those high Ridges, that they are hardly to be endur'd without a Fire. And while the Sun shines clear in the Plains, 'tis common to see the Hills cover'd with Clouds; which the Country People take for a sign of approaching Rain. And hence it is that there is Snow lies at Midsummer in the cavities between the Mountain-tops, as all Highlanders know very well.

30. Nor does this Observation hold only in our Part of the World on this side the Tropick. † For Mr. Halley assures us, That during his abode at St. Helena, in the Night-time, on the tops of the Hills about 800 Yards above the Sea, there was so strange a Condensation, or rather Precipitation of the Vapours, that it was a great impediment to his Celestial Observations; for in the clear Sky the Dew would fall so fast, as to cover each half quarter of an Hour, his Glasses with little drops, so that he was necessitated to wipe them often; and his Paper on which he wrote his Observations would immediately be so wet with Dew, that it would not bear Ink. By which it may be suppos'd how fast the Water gathers in those mighty high Ridges.

31. If with these Vapours we take in the Rains and melted Snows, there is no doubt, but they will prove sufficient to furnish all the Rivers and perpetual Springs. It is apparent enough, that the greatest Rivers are swell'd by the Rains. Nay, there are many Countries, where the Rivers run highest in the hottest Part of Summer, when there falls not the least Rain; such as the Nile in Ægypt, and the Niger in Æthiopia, which overflow at a Time of Year, when the Season in those Parts is perfectly dry: The Reason is, because in Abyssinia from whence these Rivers come, there are prodigious Rains about that Time for several Weeks together. So likewise the Snows which melt in Summer, and run down from the Tops of the Mountains, do very much raise the neighbouring Rivers at the same Time; which makes the Rhone and the Lake of Geneva bigger in Summer, than in Winter.

32. So that if we take the condensed Vapours, Rains and Snows all together, we shall have Liquor enough and to spare for all the Springs; and there will be no need of subterraneous Pipes for deriving Water from the Sea to the remotest Parts of the Earth.

C H A P. VIII.

Of the S E A.

1. After the Consideration of Fountains and Rivers, it is proper in the next Place to view the common Receptacle of them all, the Sea. Which is that vast quantity of Salt-water extending from North to South, and from West to East, and surrounding the dry Land on every side, into which all Streams discharge themselves, and out of which mighty Gulfs and Bays are form'd, the greatest of which is the Mediterranean. The whole is in one Word call'd the Ocean, but variously distinguished and named from the several Countreys, by whose Coasts it runs. In it there are these Three Properties chiefly consider'd by Naturalists; First, Its inseparable Saltness; Secondly, Its constant equality of Bulk, notwithstanding the incessant flowing of all Rivers into it; Thirdly, The Tide, or flowing and ebbing of its Waters twice every Day. All which Properties we shall proceed to examine, and try to find out the Causes of them.

2. I. Our first Enquiry is, How the Sea comes to be Salt; and in the next Place, why it retains this Property always in the same Degree; notwithstanding the huge heaps of Salt which are daily got out of it, and the innumerable Streams of fresh Water continually running into it. Now the saltness of the Sea-water seems to proceed from the same Cause, as that of several Fountains of like taste, by the boiling of whose Waters Salt is produced, as was shew'd before. For since the bottom of the Sea is a Tract of such vast Extent, 'tis reasonable to think, that there are very large Mines of Salt in many Places of it. Which being diluted, spreads its Particles throughout the Sea. And there is something even in the River-water which helps to increase this Saltness. For the Rivers carry down with them an incredible multitude of saline Particles, which they wash off their Banks as they run along. These Particles are not indeed so considerable, as to Salt their particular Streams; but when they all meet together and settle in one Bottom, they may well be allow'd to change the taste of the Water sufficiently. We took notice before, that Salts don't evaporate; so that all the Salts carried into the Sea, remain there, while abundance of fresh Water is always exhal'd by the Sun. Therefore these saline Particles may increase the Saltness of the Ocean. Let us here consider the Earth as a huge Sponge (tho' more Compact) impregnated with various Salts; and the Rains, Dews and Mists as Water falling upon this Sponge, from which it should pass into a Vessel standing under it. Now in a very transient Passage indeed, the Water would not carry Salt enough along with it to make the whole Vessel like Brine, but yet every drop would contribute something to the saltness of the whole. Let us suppose a Fire to be made under the said Vessel; this will make the fresh Water evaporate, and the Remainder still more Salt. But if again those Vapours be received in an Alembick, and let run upon the Sponge, and so into the Vessel, they will qualify the saltness of the Water, provided they contain a greater quantity of fresh Water, than of Salt Particles. All this is easily applied to the Matter in hand.

3. Hence we may likewise be satisfied, why the saltness of the Sea is neither augmented nor diminished, at least not in a sensible manner. It is not augmented by the influx of Salt Particles, 1. Because a World of saline Particles are continually thrown off by the Sea upon its Shores, where they petrifie, and come no more into the Water. 2. Because People make Salt upon the Sea-coasts, where-ever they have heat enough, for common uses. 3. Water can be impregnated with Salt only to a certain Degree, at which it stands and rejects the overplus. In the next Place, the saltness of the Sea is not diminished, because as much is imported or diluted from it's own Mines, as is got out of it. 'Tis possible that in those Mines, from whence certain Parts are daily wash'd off, and dissolved through the Sea, other Parts may grow to them again; while the finest Particles in the oblong and pointed Pores of the Earth, grow into a Lump. But this Case would be well worth their Disquisition, who make it their Business to pry into the Bowels of the Earth.

4. II. To help us in finding out the Reason, why the Water of the Sea is not augmented, let us see whether there be not a way for its daily Diminution, as well as increase. This we have already hinted at in our Discourse about the Origin of Fountains, but now we shall give it a more accurate Consideration. It is plain enough, that there is a vast quantity of Vapours in the Air, from the abundance of Snow and Rain, which (as we shall shew more particularly hereafter) are form'd of condensed Vapours. But how to estimate the quantity of the Evaporations of Water by some certain Rule, is the material Point; which the Learned Mr. Halley has happily attempted in the following Manner.

5. He took a Pan of Water about Four Inches deep, and 7 Inches Diameter, salted to the same Degree as is the common Sea-water, by the Solution of about a 40th Part of Salt, in which he placed a Thermometer, and by means of a Pan of Coals, he brought the Water to the same Degree of Heat, which is observed to be that of our Air in the hottest Summer, the Thermometer nicely shewing it. This done, he affixed the Pan of Water with the Thermometer in it, to one end of the Beam of a Pair of Scales, and exactly counterpoised it with weights in the other Scale; and by the Application or removal of the Pan of Coals, he found it very easie to maintain the Water in the same Degree of Heat precisely. Doing this he found the weight of the Water sensibly to decrease; and at the end of two Hours, he observed that there wanted half an Ounce Troy all but seven Grains, or 233 Grains of Water, which in that Time had gone off in Vapour; tho' one could hardly perceive it smoke, and the Water were not sensibly warm. This Quantity in so short a Time, seem'd very considerable, being little less than 6 Ounces in 24 Hours, from so small a Surface as a Circle of 8 Inches Diameter.

6. To reduce this Experiment to an exact Calculus, and determine the thickness of the skin of Water, that had so evaporated, he assumes the Experiment alledged by by Dr. Edward Bernard to have been made in the Oxford Society, viz. That the Cube-foot English of Water, weighs exactly 76 Pounds Troy; this divided by 128, the Number of Inches in a Foot, will give 253½ Grains, or ½ Ounce 13½ Grains for the weight of a Cube-inch of Water: Wherefore the weight of 233 Grains is ⅓, or 35 Parts of 38 of a Cube-inch of Water. Now the Area of the Circle whose Diameter is 7.2 Inches, is 49 Square Inches; by which dividing the Quantity of Water evaporated, viz. ⅓ of an Inch, the Quotient 147 or 15 shows, that the thickness of the Water evaporated was the 53d Part of an Inch; but we will suppose it only the 60th Part, for the facility of Calculation.

7. If therefore Water as warm as the Air in Summer, exhales the thickness of a 60th part of an Inch in two Hours from its whole Surface, in 12 Hours it will exhale the ⅓ of an Inch; which Quantity will be found abundantly sufficient to serve for all the Rains, Springs and Dews; and account for the Caspian Sea being always at a stand, neither wasting nor overflowing; as likewise for the Current said to set always in at the Straights of Gibraltar, tho' those Mediterranean Seas receive so many, and so considerable Rivers.

8. To estimate the Quantity of Water arising in Vapours out of the Sea, he thinks he ought to consider it only for the Time the Sun is up, for that the Dews return in the Night, as much if not more Vapours than are then emitted; and in Summer the Days being longer than 12 Hours, this Excess is balanced by the weaker Action of the Sun, especially when rising before the Water be warmed: So that if we allow ⅓ of an Inch of the Surface of the Sea to be raised per diem in Vapours, it may not be an improbable Conjecture.

9. Upon this Supposition, every 10 Square Inches of the Surface of the Water, yields in Vapour per diem a Cube-inch of Water; and each Square Foot half a Wine-pint; every space of 4 Foot Square, a Gallon; a Mile Square, 6914 Tons; a Square Degree suppose of 69 English Miles, will evaporate 33 Millions of Tons.

10. And if the Mediterranean be estimated at 40 Degrees long and 4 broad, allowances being made for the Places where it is broader by those where it is narrower, (and he says he is sure, he guesses at the least) there will be 160 Square Degrees of Sea; and consequently the whole Mediterranean must lose in Vapour in a Summers Day, at least 5280 Millions of Tons. And this Quantity of Vapour, tho' very great, is as little as can be concluded from the Experiment produced. And yet there remains another Cause, which cannot be reduced to Rule, viz. the Winds, whereby the Surface of the Water is licked up sometimes faster than it exhales by the heat of the Sun; as is well known to those that have considered those drying Winds which blow sometimes.

11. To estimate the Quantity of Water the Mediterranean Sea receives from the Rivers that fall into it, is a very hard Task, unless one had the opportunity to measure their Channels and Velocity; and therefore we can only do it by allowing more than enough, that is, by assuming these Rivers greater than in all probability they be, and then comparing the Quantity of Water voided by the Thames, with that of those Rivers whose Waters we desire to compute.

12. The Mediterranean receives these considerable Rivers, the Iberus, the Rhône, the Tiber, the Po, the Danube, the Neifer, the Boryphenes, the Tanais, and the Nile; all the rest being of no great Note, and their Quantity of Water inconsiderable. These Nine Rivers he supposes, each of them, to bring down Ten Times as much Water as the River Thames; not that any of them is so great in reality, but to comprehend with them all the small Rivulets that fall into the Sea, which otherwise he knows not how to allow for.

13. To calculate the Water of the Thames, he assumes that at Kingslon Bridge where the Flood never reaches, and the Water always runs down, the Breadth of the Chancel is 100 Yards, and its depth 3, it being reduced to an Equality (in both which Suppositions, he is sure he takes with the most) hence the Profile of the Water in this Place is 300 Square Yards: This multiplied by 18 Miles (which he allows the Water to run in 24 Hours, at 2 Miles an Hour) or 84480 Yards, gives 25344000 Cubick-yards of Water to be evacuated every Day; that is, 20300000 Tons per diem; and he doubts not, but in the Excess of his Measures of the Chancel of the River, he has made more than sufficient allowance for the Waters of the Brent, the Wandel, the Lee, and the Darwent, which are all worth notice, that fall into the Thames below Kingslon.

14. Now if each of the aforesaid Nine Rivers yield Ten Times as much Water as the Thames doth, 'twill follow that each of them yields but 203 Millions of Tons per diem, and the whole Nine but 1827 Millions of Tons in a Day; which is but little more than ⅓ of what is proved to be raised in Vapour out of the Mediterranean in 12 Hours Time. Thus has this Learned Man made it appear, that the bulk of the Sea cannot be augmented by the Rivers that run into it.

15. III. We are now in the last Place, to enquire into the reason of the Tide, and shall begin with explaining all the Phænomena. Now the Tide is well known to mean the flowing and ebbing of the Sea; concerning which we may observe, 1. That the Waters in these Parts are found at certain Times to run from South to North for Six Hours together; this we call the Flux or Flowing; because the Sea advances upon the Shores, runs up into the Mouths of Rivers, and forces their Streams to go backward. 2. At the end of six Hours, the Water seems to continue in the same height for about a quarter of an Hour; and then it runs back again for 6 Hours more, from North to South, the Waters sink, and the Rivers recover their usual Courses: This we call the Reflux or Ebb. And here likewise the Water is at a stand for about a quarter of an Hour, and then it begins to flow again. 3. From hence 'tis concluded, that the Sea rises twice and falls twice in Twenty-four Hours; but yet the Flux and Reflux don't always begin at the same Hour; for there is about 50 Minutes difference every time; so that if the Tide begin to Day at Twelve a Clock, it will begin to Morrow at Ten Minutes before One. 4. This Tide is observable upon all the Sea-coasts of Europe; but the more Northern any Shore is, the greater and later is the Tide. On the contrary, in those Parts between the Tropicks there is hardly any Tide perceiv'd. 5. The Mediterranean, Baltick, and Caspian Seas have no Tide. There are indeed some exceptions, as in the Gulf of Venice, and several other Places, where the Water has different motions. But of this we shall say no more at present.

16. Besides these Phænomena, it is observable, that there is a great Correspondence between the Tide and the Moon's motion. For 1. As the Tide comes in later by Fifty Minutes every Day; so the Moon's Southing is Fifty Minutes later every Day as she grows older. 2. As often as the Moon approaches to the Meridian, so often the Sea rises; and is down again whenever the Moon is Horizontal; 3. So that from one full Moon to another, the Tides vary thro' all the Twenty-four Hours. Thus, if at this full Moon the Tide comes in at Twelve a Clock, it will set in at the same Hour next full Moon, and not before. 4. The Tides at New and Full-Moon, call'd Spring Tides, are the greatest; and those during the Quarters, call'd Neap-Tides, are the least. 5. 'Tis also observ'd, that Cæteris paribus, the Equinoctial Spring-Tides in March and September, or near them, are the

the highest, and the Neap-Tides the lowest of all others at any time of the Year besides.

17. These Things being known of old, tho' not so perfectly as at present, the ancient Philosophers could not chuse but think that the Moon was the cause of the Tide. But if they were ask'd, How this might be accounted for? They answer'd, It was by an occult Quality, or influence of the Moon, the Nature of which they did not at all explain. Therefore the Moderns have attempted a different Account of the Tide; and they allow the Moon to be the Cause of it, but as an Agent Mechanically operating upon the Earth.

18. I. We have formerly observ'd, That Bodies which move round their Center, do endeavour to recede from that Center, and this Conatus causes them to press upon the Bodies that are under them. And we have taken notice, that the Moon has such a motion round the Earth; whence it follows, that the Moon presses upon the Bodies that are under it, viz. the neighbouring Air, or Matter of like Nature. Now this pressure extends to the Center of the Earth, and by consequence must needs affect all the intermediate parts.

19. II. This being so; it is plain that while the Moon is in the Meridian of any Place, the weight of the incumbent Air is greatest upon the Water that lies just under the Moon. Now the Parts over which the Moon hangs perpendicularly, are those between the Tropicks about the Ecliptick, in which Places there are very large Seas running round the Earth from East to West, as upon a view of the Globe, it will readily appear. Therefore when the Moon is in that Tract, the Water must needs be press'd there more than any where else, and so be thrown out upon the Shores that lie North and South. And because the Moon is twice a Day in the Meridian, viz. above and below the Horizon; the Water does as often run out upon the Shores, and retire back again. This in short seems to be the reason of the Tide, which may be apply'd to the several Phænomena in the following manner.

20. III. 1. The Sea in our Parts ought to run Northward at the time of its Flux, because the Moon is always South of us, who live on the North-side of the Tropick of Cancer. And this Flux ought to last for Six Hours, wherein the Moon is either gaining or leaving the Meridian; for then it presses hardest upon the Water between us and the South. 2. But when the Moon is past on further, and the surface of the Water is come to an Equilibrium, finding no more resistance from the Moon, it is carry'd back again by its own weight into its common receptacle. But there is a little stand between the Flux and Reflux, because after the Water has been carry'd one way, that motion does for a time resist its gravity; besides that the neighbouring Waves which are rais'd at the same time, more toward the West, may stop the Reflux a while. 3. The effects of the said pressure must be perceiv'd Fifty Minutes later every time than other, because the Moon comes so much later to the Meridian. 4. The Tide is higher upon the most Northern Coasts, because the whole Lulk of the Sea which flows towards the Poles, stops there; and later, because the motion of the Waters being successive, it must needs be perceiv'd last in those Places which are furthest off from where it began. On the contrary, the Tide is not very sensible within the Tropicks, because the Water easily runs down from thence towards the Poles; not gathering there, but moving on further. 5. The Baltick, Mediterranean, and Caspian-Seas, must have no Tide; for they don't only lie from under the Course of the Moon, being without the Tropick; but the passages out of the Main-Ocean into the two former, which are only Bays of it, are so strait, that they cannot take in Water enough at the times of the general Tide, to be sensibly rais'd or mov'd thereby.

21. From hence it is plain enough how the Tide comes to keep time with the Moon's motion, and we need not review what has been said; but proceed to our two remaining Points. I. The Tide is highest at New and Full-Moons, because at those times the Moon presses hardest upon the Places under it; the reason is because 'tis then nearest the Earth, or in the extrem parts of the lesser Axis of that Ellipsis which it describes about the Earth. It is an Observation confirm'd by Experience, That heavy Bodies incumbent on the Center, the nearer they are to the Center, the more they gravitate: And therefore the Moon in her Perigæum gravitates more towards the Earth, than in her Apogæum. But when she is in her Quarters about the extrem Parts of the greater Axis of her Ellipsis, then she gravitates less, because farther from the Center of the Earth.

22. II. The Equinoctial Spring-Tides are the greatest of any, because the Moon is then vertical over the middle of the Ocean, and for that reason presses out a greater quantity of Water on both sides; which may be thus exemplify'd. If you put a Globe into a Vessel full of Water, so as to sink the Globe just in the middle of the surface of the Water, it will raise the Water more on all sides, and force a greater quantity out, than if it had been let fall nearer any side of the Vessel; the reason is, because it presses the bulk of Water more universally further off, than it can do nearer the sides of the Vessel. So likewise the Moon, when it presses upon that part of the Ocean under the Æquator, forces up the Water on both sides in greater abundance than it can do in places nearer the Poles. And we may add further, That in that place the Sea is furthest from the Center of the Earth; whereas toward the Poles it grows lower and nearer the Center; and therefore a pressure under the Æquator drives it more copiously towards the Poles, than when 'tis press'd on either side the Line.

23. There are some * very Learned Men, who are of Opinion, That the influence of the Sun, and motion of the Earth ought to be consider'd together with the Moon as concomitant Causes of the Tide: But because these Speculations have something too abstruse and difficult in them, we thought it best to stick to an easie and plainer Hypothesis in this Compendium.

BOOK II.

Of the AIR and METEORS.

CHAP. I.

Of the AIR.

1. AIR is that Diaphanous Body wherein the Earth is inclos'd and wrap'd up, and which is so necessary for Life, that we cannot breath without it. The Peripateticks, following Empedocles in this, reckon'd it one of the Elements; and maintain, That there is no Body, which has not Air for a part of its Composition. This is a Controversy we have no design to meddle with; we shall for the present only enquire into the undoubted Properties of Air, and the Causes of them.

2. As for the Properties of Air, they are found to be these: 1. It is Liquid, and cannot be congeal'd like Water. 2. It is much lighter than Water; but yet is not without its gravity. 3. It is Diaphanous. i. e. it transmits the Light. 4. It can easily be condens'd and rarify'd. 5. It has an Elastick Force. 6. 'Tis necessary for Flame and Respiration.

3. These are the chief Properties of Air; Upon each of which we will say something more particular. I. As for its being Liquid, we need not give a Reason for that here, having done it already in our Discourse about Water. But it is much more liquid than Water, and cannot be congeal'd; 1. Because it seems to have much larger Pores, full of finer Matter of a very quick motion, whereby the Particles of Air are continually driven about; as appears from this, That Air pent up in a Vessel is easily condens'd, whereas no body yet has been able to condense Water by any Invention. 2. The Particles of Air are very fine and branched, so that they leave interstices between one another, and can never be form'd into a compact Body.

4. II. When we were speaking of Water, we said, That it was 840 times heavier than Air; whence it follows, that a certain bulk of Air contains in it 840 times less homogeneous Matter, than an equal bulk of Water; and this also is the reason that Air may easily be condens'd, but not Water.

5. If it be enquir'd, What the weight of the Air is that presses upon upon us? This the Philosophers have endeavour'd to demonstrate by various Experiments, two of which we will here set down. I. It is certain, that Pumps 32 Feet long will raise Water so high, and that no Tubes can carry it higher; whence they conclude, That a Cylinder of Air as broad as the Cylinder of Water contain'd in such a Tube, tho' it be taken from the bottom to the top of all the Air, is not heavier than the Cylinder of Water 32 Feet high, because it can bear Water no higher, tho' the Sucker be rais'd and ply'd never so much. For they don't question but the Water in the Pump is rais'd by the force of the incumbent Air, there being no other Cause to be assign'd for it. For as for the fæta vacui of the Ancients, 'tis now universally exploded, as it deserves to be.

6. II. The other Experiment is made with Mercury in a Glass-pipe, thus: Take a Pipe 40 Inches long; stop one end close, and fill it with Mercury; afterwards turn down the open end in a Vessel of Mercury, and hold the Pipe perpendicular; the Mercury will descend to the 30th Inch, or thereabouts (for there is some variety according to the Temperament of the Air) and there it will stand suspended. But if you unstop the upper-end of the Pipe for the Air to come in, all the Mercury falls down directly into the Vessel aforesaid. Whence they justly conclude, That the Mercury is kept up by the weight of the Air, and that the weight of the Cylinder of Air from the bottom to the top is equal to 30 Inches of Quicksilver.

7. From hence we may add something by way of Corollary concerning what we are to think of the height of the whole Air. It appears by another Experiment, that the weight of Mercury is to that of Water as 13½ to 1, or thereabout; so that the weight of Mercury to that of Air (supposing Air to be only 800 times lighter than Water) must be as 10800 to 1, or very near; and a Cylinder of Air of 10800 Inches, or 900 Feet, will be equal to an Inch of Mercury. Therefore if the density of the Air were the same throughout, like that of Water, its height would not much exceed 5 Miles. But since the Air grows thinner as the weight of the Atmosphere decreases, and so takes up more room, the upper parts of the Air are much more rarify'd and diffus'd than those below. So that every Space which is equal to an Inch of Mercury, increases with the Atmosphere, and for this reason the Air must be much higher than 5 Miles; but how much is not to be determin'd, unless we knew in what proportion the Air is rarify'd according to its several degrees of distance from the Center of the Earth.

8. III. The Air is diaphanous, because having very wide Pores and separable Parts, it admits the Matter whereof Light consists, thro' right Lines. And hence it is, that not only the Sun and the Planets shine, or reflect their Light, upon us; but likewise the fix'd Stars are seen by us at an immense distance. But as deep Water don't transmit all the Rays which fall upon it, because the Series of Light is interrupted by the motion of the watry Particles; so, many of the Rays which fall upon this prodigious bulk of Air over us, must needs be broken off and intercepted before they reach us. Which perhaps is the Cause that where the Sky is very clear, it is not quite transparent, but appears of a blew and waterish Colour.

9. IV. Air is condens'd and rarify'd, because it consisting of branched Particles, those Particles are easily scatter'd by an extraordinary quick motion, which is call'd Rarefaction: Again, they are easily thrust into a less compais, while their Branches are driven together, and close one with another, and thereby crush out the liquid Matter which lay between them; and this is Condensation. There are innumerable Experiments to prove this; especially these Two: 1. * Take a Vessel full of Air, and put a Tube open at both ends into the middle of it, keeping the end of the Tube within the Vessel so as not to touch the bottom of it; a large quantity of Water may be pour'd into the Vessel through that Tube, whereby the Air must needs needs be compréss'd and forc'd into a less compass, if care be taken to keep the Tube so close that no Air can come out while the Water is pouring in. 2. There are a sort of Guns, into which such a quantity of Air may be forc'd, as shall shoot out a leaden Bullet with great violence.

10. V. These two Experiments demonstrate the Air to have an Elastick force, that is, a Power to return to the same State, and reoccupy the same Space which it fill'd before, whenever the force which crush'd it into a narrower Compass is removed. And therefore the Water springs out of the Vessel we just now described with a strong impetus, as soon as the upper end of the Tube is opened; because the Air which was pent up in a narrower Compass, dilates it self again, when the restraining Power of solid Matter is removed. For the same Reason a wind-gun, fill'd with Air, discharges a Leaden Bullet, when 'tis open'd. And such a Gun, when the Air is quite evacuated, and the external Air suddenly let into it, shoots out a Bullet very briskly.

11. And here we might enter into a more curious Enquiry about the cause of Elastick Motions, or how it comes to pass that a Body forcibly pressed out of its posture, recovers it again of its own accord, when the force is removed. But let it suffice at present to say, that this Elasticity is apparent in many Bodies, but particularly in Air.

12. VI. We have shew'd before, Book I. Chap. III. §. 12. That without Air, Flame and Fire go out, and that Air seems to have a nitrous or sulphureous Matter in it, which serves to feed the Fire. And indeed it is impossible, but the Air which lies upon so many Plants, Animals, and Minerals, upon which the Sun's heat continually operates, and extracts a good Part of them, must needs carry away with it innumerable Particles of Sulphur and Volatil Salt wherewith Things abound, as Chymical Experiments demonstrate. So that we laid down nothing in the Place above quoted, but what is agreeable to the Nature of Things. We will now produce an Experiment to prove how easily such Particles fly up into the Air. * Mr. Boyle extracted a Liquor out of humane Blood, whose colour was as red as Blood. It appear'd by the taste and smell, that many saline and sulphureous Particles of Blood were in it. This Liquor was put into a Glass-Vial, filling it about half full, and stood as still in it as any other Liquor, while it was stopp'd up; but as soon as it was open'd, and the external Air let in, presently a whitish Vapour, nothing of which was seen before, began to rise in great abundance; so that it not only fill'd the upper half of the Vial, but flew about in the Air like Smoke: And had not the Vial been stopp'd, it had quickly been emptied by that Evaporation. And so all Liquors of the same sort would soon flie out into the Air, if they were not kept in Vessels carefully stopp'd.

13. Wherefore no Body ought to wonder at our Opinion, that the Air is full of such Particles. Some Learned Men have thought this a good Reason enough, why Animals are so refresh'd with Respiration, that they can't live without it. But they have made very contrary Explications of this Matter. For some fancy that the nitrous Particles of the Air go into the Lungs, thro' whose Pores they pass into the Blood, to allay the heat of it, left by its perpetual Motion, and the access of sulphureous Particles it should be too much inflam'd. But others are of Opinion, that as the Air is emitted by Expiration, it carries out with it the sooty Particles of the Blood, contain'd in the Lungs; and so the Blood is cool'd, not by the Admission of nitrous Particles, but by the Emission of sulphureous Fumes which are ejected with the Air. This latter Account is more agreeable to the Experiment produced above, and seems to us the more probable of the two, tho' we don't care to be too Dogmatical either way.

14. Now since we have had occasion to say something here about Respiration, for our better explaining the Nature of Air; tho' this belongs to another Part of Philosophy which treats of Animals; yet we will add here a little more, which we have to say of it. I. That Air is necessary for Respiration, is plain from many Experiments, especially from this following. Mr. Boyle has found out a way of drawing the Air out of a Glass-Vessel, so that little or none shall be left in it. Now if a live Creature be put into this Vessel, upon the drawing out of the Air it presently falls into Convulsions, gasps for Breath, and drops down Dead, unless the Air be let in, and that very quickly.

15. II. The Air which Animals breath, ought not to be too Thin, because it would not suffice to dilate the Lungs, and bear the plying of the Chest in contracting them again. Therefore they that live in a thin Air must breath twice as fast as in a thicker, because all the soot of the Lungs is not clear'd off by one faint Respiration. This is experienced by such as continue for some Time in the Tops of very high Mountains, where the Air is so much thinner as it is higher than in the low Grounds. For tho' they sit down a pretty while to rest themselves after they are got up, they find their Breath shorter than it was below. The Case is the same in Boyle's Engine; for if only some of the Air be pumped out, a live Creature fetches it's breath harder and faster than it did before. But in a thick and foggy Air we breath more slowly; because the Vapours hinder the Air from passing to the furthest Recesses of the Lungs, and returning again so fast as it otherwise would do.

16. III. The Air which serves for Respiration must be pure and open. An Experiment has been made upon a Mouse in a Glass-Vessel hermetically Seal'd, so that no external Air could come in; that she has quickly begun to droop, and in less than three Hours has lain for Dead. But by breaking off the Neck of the Vessel, and blowing in Air with a pair of Bellows, she has by Degrees been brought to Life again; tho' had she been let alone a little longer, she had been past recovery. The like Experiment was tried upon a Bird in the same manner. Some think there are nitrous Particles in the Air, which cool the Blood, as we said before, and that when those Particles are spent, the Air becomes improper for this Purpose. But others say, that in the Experiment aforesaid, the Air is so fill'd with the Soot of the Lungs, that it can clear off no more, and so can cool them no longer, because it returns the same Fumes into them which it had carried out.

17. Whichever of these Opinions is true, the Thing it self is certain; and hence it is, that the Air of a close Room when there is much Company in it, grows hot and stifling, and is bad for Consumptive People. From the same Cause it is, that the Air of great Cities is not so wholesom even in clear Weather, as that of Countrey Towns and Villages; because the Countrey Air is perpetually ventilated and renew'd; whereas in great Cities the multitude of Houses hinders this, and by Consequence causes the Air to stagnate and grow corrupt.

C H A P. II.

Of METEORS in general, and Vapours arising from the Water, whence Fogs, Clouds, Dews, Rains, Snow and Hail are produced.

1. METEORS is a Greek Word, used by Philosophers to signify all those Things which mount up in the Air, and continue suspended in it, such as are mention'd in the Title of this Chapter. They are divided into two Ranks; for the Meteors aforesaid are form'd of aqueous Vapours; and there are some others wherein are found Exhalations derived from other Bodies, such as Thunder, Lightning, Thunderbolts, and other inflam'd Matters in the Air. This Division shall be follow'd in this Compendium, and therefore we begin with Meteors of the first sort.

2. Vapours are those watry Particles, which are sever'd from others by the Motion of the Air, and are carried about in it several ways, according as the Wind or warmth of the Air serves. We have already shew'd in the VIIIth Chapter of the preceding Book, how copiously they rise out of the Sea and other Waters, and that all Rivers and Fountains are fed by them. Now we will consider them as they hang in the Air.

3. I. We many Times observe in a hot Day, when there is no Wind stirring, such a company of Vapours rise out of moist Ground, as make thick Fogs, which are sometimes higher, and sometimes lower, as the multitude and motion of the Vapours happens to be. They are to be seen on the high Grounds as well as the low, but more especially about marshy Places. They are easily dissipated by the Wind, and particularly by a drying Wind. The Sun has the same Effect upon them; and we commonly see when there are thick Fogs about Sun-rising, they disappear a little while after 'tis up.

4. All this is easie. For 'tis plain, that Fogs consist of aqueous Particles rarefied, because they mightily bedew every Thing that lies open to them. These Particles being soundly moved, must needs fly up aloft in the Air; but if their Motion be something faint, they play about the Surface of the Earth. For this is agreeable to the Laws of Motion, that such Things as are about the Globe of the Earth, the more they are moved, the more they recede from the Earth's Center. Again, these Fogs rise out of all Places, Mountainous or Champain, and continue till they be dispell'd by Wind or Heat; but their Continuance is longest in the lowest Grounds, because those Places are fullest of Moisture, and are not so much exposed to the Winds. But when the Wind rises upon them, wherever they be, they are dissipated and driven about 'till we see no more of them. So likewise the heat of the Sun putting them into a brisker Motion, either dissipates them by Rarefaction, or raises them higher, and Forms them into Clouds.

5. Sometimes the Fogs stink, not because they come from stinking Water, but because the Vapours are mixt with sulphureous Exhalations which smell so. These Exhalations would perhaps fly up directly to the Clouds, if there were no Fogs to hold them, and so would not affect our smell; but after they are entangled and blended with the Fogg, they last as long as it does.

6. II. The Clouds are higher than the Fogs: They hang in the Air, and are carried about in it by the Winds. They are also of various Figures, sometimes so thin, that the Sun's rays pass through them; but often thick enough to intercept and obstruct them.

They appear too of several Colours, as White, Red and sometimes very Dark.

7. To begin with their Colours, they are varied according to the Situation of the Sun, and way of reflecting its Light with respect to us. This we shall enlarge upon hereafter; 'tis enough at present just to mention it. The Density of the Clouds proceeds from the closeness of the vaporious Particles one to another, and their thinness from the distance of those Particles one from another; of which there are several Causes. When they are very thin, they leave so many interstices, that the Sun's Rays shoot through them in many Places, but are intercepted in others. As to their Figures, all their Variety arises from their Plenty of Vapours, and the influence of the Sun and Wind. For they cannot be variously condensed, rarefied, and carried about in the Air, but their Figure must needs be changed.

8. These Things are plain enough: But to Account for their hanging in the Air, is a Matter of some difficulty. All the watry Particles whereof they consist, are heavier than Air; and so they would fall to the Earth, if there were nothing to hinder. Now there seem to be two Things which keep them up; First, The Winds, which blow from all Parts under the Region of the Clouds, and bear about with them many lighter sorts of Bodies; especially if those Bodies contain but a small quantity of solid Matter under a broad Superficies. Thus we see how easily Boys Paper-kites are kept up by the Wind, when they are mounted pretty high. And so the Particles of Water very much rarefied, may easily be suspended at that height. Secondly, New Exhalations and Vapours are perpetually fuming out of the Earth, and by their moving upward, hinder the Clouds from descending, unless the Density of the Clouds preponderate, as we shall see hereafter. Thus we see the vapour of the Fire carries lighter Bodies up the Chimney. Nay, the Smoke can turn a thin Plate of Iron artfully placed in it, so strongly as to turn about a Spit and roast Meat.

9. But it is a Question among the Philosophers, whether Clouds and thicker Fogs are composed alike, or whether there be something more in the Clouds? Some think Clouds to be grosser than all Fogs, and that they are composed of Flakes of Snow, rather than Particles of Water, such as make Fogs. Others again say, 'tis sufficient to consider Clouds as a closer sort of Fogs. And indeed the Fogs which hang upon the Tops of very high Hills, appear to People in the Plains to be all one with the Clouds; though those that are at them, perceive nothing but a thick Fogg.

10. III. There being always many Vapours in the Air, tho' not always visible, hence it comes to pass, that even in clear Weather great Dews fall, especially in Countreys where it seldom Rains. For when it happens, that the scatter'd Vapours are collected and condensed together, and forced downwards, they must needs fall and bedew the Plants and Grass.

11. The Time for the falling of the Dew, is either before Sun-rising, or after Sun-set. But that it may regularly fall at such Times, it is necessary for the Air to be calm; for windy or stormy Weather hinders it. But when it is calm Weather, and gentle Breezes are felt from the West about the Setting, and from the East about the Rising of the Sun, 'tis probable that by moderately cooling the Air, they collect the Vapours and precipitate them. And because the Morning Breezes are more general than the Evening, for this Reason the Evening Dews fall only here and there, but those in the Morning seldom fail to be universal.

12. It is likewise found by Experience, that the Dews are more copious in hotter Countreys, as * Pliny observes of the Summer Nights in Africa, which he calls rosida aestate Noctes. The Reason of which seems to be this, That in the Day-Time the heat of the Sun raises raises abundance of Vapours out of the Water, which Vapours are so extremely rarefied by the same heat, that they are dispersed far and wide; but the cool of the Night brings them together, and condenses them to that Degree that they fall to the Ground, but not in such large drops as Rain does. But in colder Countreys where there are frequent Rains, and the Vapours are less rarefied, most of them come down in Rain, and but a small Part turns to Dew. Besides, in Africa there is a greater Difference between the heat of the Day and Night, particularly in Summer; for there the Nights are long and very Cold, whereas in the Northern Countreys they are little colder than the Day, and much shorter than in Places nearer the Line.

13. IV. The Difference between Dew and Rain seems to be only this, that Dew falls at some particular Times as aforesaid, and in very small drops, so as to be seen when 'tis down, but scarce perceivable while falling; whereas Rain is grosser and falls at any Time. No Body can doubt, but the Rain drops out of the Clouds, because we find it don't Rain, except where we see Clouds, and the fairer the Weather is, the seldomer it Rains. The only Question is, how the Clouds come to be condensed, and discharge themselves upon the Earth.

14. And there are several Causes, which may, singly or jointly, produce this effect. I. The coldness of the Air may make the Particles of the Clouds to lose their motion, and become less able to resist the gravity of the incumbent Air, and consequently to yield to its pressure and fall to the Ground. II. The Wind may gather the Vapours in such abundance, as first to form very thick Clouds; and then squeeze those Clouds together till the watry Particles make Drops too big to hang any longer in the Air.

15. But here it is to be observ'd, That all Winds don't produce Rain, but only such as collect a great quantity of Vapours. Thus in Holland West-Winds are rainy, because they come from the Ocean, and blow up the Vapours; East-Winds blow clear, because they come over large Tracts of Land. North-Winds are Rainy because they come from the North-Sea; but not so Rainy as the West, because the cold North don't yield such a quantity of Vapours, as the kinder Climate of the Britannick Ocean. South Winds bring Rain too; for they consisting of Vapours rais'd by the heat of the Sun in a hot quarter, and so being elevated above others in the Air, seem to lie upon our Clouds, and press them down towards the Earth. However there are many Exceptions in these Cases, according to the variety of Causes conspiring to the same Effect, many of which we know nothing of.

16. III. Rain may further be produced thus; if the Vapours rise in so great abundance, as to reach and mingle with the Clouds above them, then they cause Rain in very large drops. And this may happen in still sultry Weather; for then the Clouds over our Heads have no sensible Motion, and in the mean Time the heat fills the Air with Vapours, which joining with the Clouds, and so being stop't in their progress, do open a Passage for the Stores of the Clouds to descend upon the Earth.

17. IV. Sometimes also the warm Wind thaws the frozen Clouds into drops, as we see Snow dissolved by heat. Now the thicker and sooner any such Cloud was gather'd, the larger the drops from it are; because the greater store of Vapours was condensed together. Thus we have many Times in Summer sudden Showers of Rain in excessive great drops.

18. And here we ought to remember, that in those Countreys between the Tropicks, when they have the Sun vertical, the Rain pours down for several Weeks together more like pail-fuls than drops. The Reason probably is, because at that Time the Sun draws up abundance of Vapours, and rarefies them extremely, so that they are elevated as high as possible, and then are precipitated as it were at once, being too copious and heavy to hang any longer in the Air. And besides, there may sometimes be a Concurrence of neighbouring Vapours, which will be ready to crowd into that Part of the Air, which is most rarefied by the heat of the Sun, and uniting with the Vapours rais'd in that Place, produce very great Clouds and Rains.

19. V. Some parts of the Cloud which should turn into Rain, are sometimes prevented by the Cold, and form'd into a Confluence which we call Snow; which appears to be form'd of watry Particles, from hence, that when it dissolves, it turns into Water. So that we may easily conceive Snow to be made of watry Particles, harden'd by Cold, and gather'd into Flakes, in such a manner as to leave large interstices between one another. Which Snow is not transparent, as the Water which produced it, was, because its more rigid Particles, being huddled together by Chance, don't leave straight Pores between one another, and to keep out the Matter of Light.

20. VI. But when it happens, that the Region of Air under the Cloud is very cold, the drops of Rain are congeal'd as they fall, and come down in Lumps which we call Hail. And these Lumps are greater or less, according to the bigness of the Rain-drops, whereof they are form'd. Further, these Lumps of Hail are sometimes variously figur'd, which we shall not Account for at present. This variety must needs be occasion'd by the infinite Variations and Mixtures of Vapours, Winds, Heat and Cold of the Air, &c.

CHAP. III.

Of the Rain-bow, Halo's, and Parheliis.

OF all Meteors there is scarce any more wonderful than the Iris or Rain-bow, which therefore the Jews call the Bow of God, and the Greeks Thaumantis, i. e. the Daughter of Admiration. The Red, Blew, and Yellow Colours which appear most lively in it, are so pleasing to our Eyes, that we can hardly look and admire enough. It is therefore well worth our while to enquire into the Nature and Causes of this Meteor.

1. First, We may take Notice, that the Rainbow never appears but in a Place opposite to the Sun, so that when we look directly at it, the Sun is always behind us. Secondly, It always Rains somewhere, when the Rainbow appears. Thirdly, This is the constant Order of the Colours; the outmost is Red or Saffron-Colour; the next is Yellow; the third is Green; the fourth and inmost is Violet or Blew: But these Colours are not always equally Bright. Fourthly, Sometimes two Rainbows appear together, of which one is higher and larger than the other, and shews the Colours aforesaid, but in an inverted Order, and much Paler. Fifthly, The Rainbow is always exactly round, but don't always appear equally intire, the upper or lower Parts being very often wanting. Sixthly, It's apparent Breadth is always the same. Seventhly, Those that stand upon the plain, low Ground, never see above half its Circle, and many Times not so much. Eighthly, The higher the Sun is above the Horizon, the less of the Circle is seen, & vice versa, so there be no Clouds to hinder. Lastly, When the Sun is above 41 Degrees 46 Minutes high, never any Bow appears.

2. These are the principal Phænomena of this Meteor, into the Reasons of which we will now enquire. And since none of them affect us so much as the diversity of Colours, we have hopes given us from several Observations, that upon discovering the Reason of this.

th. we shall get an insight into the rest. And this is done chiefly by the help of a Glass-Prisme, wherein the same Colours are seen in the same Order; as likewise in the Water spouted out of Fountains, by which placing your self as you stand when you see a Rain-bow, you may perceive a colour'd Bow in it. From these two Experiments we may learn by the way, That Colours are nothing else, but Sensations arising from the various Reflections of the Sun-beams to our Eyes; so that in a colour'd Body, the Colour is only a certain Disposition of the Parts, so suited for collecting or dispersing the Light of the Sun, that our Eyes are variously affected with it. Having premised thus much, we shall now proceed to a more accurate Disquisition of the aforesaid phenomena.

4. I. The Spectator must always stand between the Sun and the Rain-bow, as he must between the Sun and the Spout of a Fountain, to see the colour'd Bow there; because the Water reflecting the Light of the Sun towards us, that Light cannot come to our Eyes as it should do, but in such a Situation. If the Water of the Fountain be between the Sun and us, the Rays are reflected from it towards the Sun, or the Place over against us, not towards us; for which Reason we see no colours in Water, when we stand so as the Rays cannot come to us.

5. II. As the colour'd Bow at a Fountain disappears so soon as the Spout is stop'd; so when there is no Rain, there is no Rain-bow; because those Rays which form its Colours, are reflected to us by nothing but the watry-drops. Therefore the drops of Rain are, if I may so call them, the Seat of the Rain-bow, and not the Clouds, as the Peripateticks and others Thought.

6. III. Since Colours, as we said, arise from the various Ways which the Sun-beams are collected and reflected to our Eyes, they convey the Light to us variously, according to the various Situation of the aqueous Drops with respect to the Sun and us, and do therefore excite in us different Sensations of Colours. This plainly appears in the Glass-Prisme, which if we hold so as to look up at the Sky with it, it represents the Colours in a contrary Order to what it does when we hold it below our Eyes, and look downward. So likewise, as the drops of Rain are higher or lower, they exhibit various Colours to us; as Jac. Robalt has nicely and accurately described them, Phys. Part III. Cap. ult. which we cannot take in to this Compendium.

7. IV. Besides the brightest Rainbow, whose Rays shine most directly and fully upon us, there is sometimes another on the outside of it, in which the same Colours appear in an inverted Order; because the drops of Rain having a different Situation with respect to us and the Sun, collect and reflect the Rays to us in a different way. Which is easily observed in the Prisme variously placed. But because the Rays are not only refracted, as they pass thro' the Air into the aqueous drops, and out of the drops into the Air again, but are also reflected by certain Parts of the Water or Glass, therefore the fuller such Reflection is, the livelier are the Colours. If then the upper Bow don't reflect the Sun's Rays to us so fully as the lower does, the Colours form'd by such a weak Reflection, must needs appear fainter.

8. V. The Form of the Rain-bow ought to be round, because the drops upon which the Rays fall, are not all alike capable of reflecting, so as to produce Colours, but only those we see in a Circle about the Place we look at. Now when there is no Obstruction, but that we may see as far one way as another round about us, we seem to be under the one half of a Concave Sphere; thence it is that in that Part of the Air over against us, if it be full of Rain, and no Cloud in our way, we see a colour'd Bow in the drops which fall upon that Arch of the Air we look at.

But as the Rain is various, sometimes falling upon the whole Arch, sometimes only upon Part of it, and as the Clouds may interpose, so the Bow appears perfect or imperfect.

9. VI. But the Arch always appears as part of an equally large Circle, because, when there is nothing to hinder, that part of the Atmosphere to which we turn our selves, seems equally spacious at all Times; and the drops which reflect the Rays to us, must be at one certain Distance, neither nearer nor further off; as Robalt has Mathematically demonstrated.

10. VII. When we stand upon a Plain, that part of the Atmosphere before us, must appear but as half a Circle, and therefore the Rain-bow seen from such a Place, can be but half a Circle, with the two Extremities touching the Horizon. But if from the Top of a very high Mountain we looked down into a plain, the Atmosphere before us might appear larger than half a Circle; and then if it should chance to Rain, and the Sun shine behind us, the Arch of the Rainbow would be bigger.

11. VIII. And because all sorts of solar rays or drops of Rain are not proper to excite in us the sense of Colour; but a certain Situation of Drops, and certain Reflection is required; therefore the Situation of the Rainbow must vary according to the height of the Sun. Now the higher the Sun is above the Horizon, the nearer must those Particles be to the Horizon, which are capable of reflecting the Sun-beams, so as they ought to be reflected in this Case; and therefore the less part of the Circle, or shorter Arch appears, the remainder falling below the Horizon.

12. IX. But when the Sun is 42 Degrees high, then the Situation of such drops as should make the Bow appear to us, is so depressed, that they are all below the Horizon; this Robalt has exactly demonstrated; we must be content with the bare Mention of it.

13. There is one Thing we may add to the foresaid Observations, that as we go towards the Rainbow, it seems to retire from us; for there being a particular Distance required to see the Colours, whenever the Spectator changes his Place, the Situation of the Rainbow is changed too, provided it Rain beyond that place wherein the Bow first appear'd to be. Hence Philosophers rightly conclude, that the Rainbow don't appear the same to two Men; because since they are not in the same Place, the same Rays cannot be convey'd to them both. And indeed when the Extremities of the Bow seem to one Man to bear upon some remarkable Place, another Man that is nearer or further off, takes them to fall on this or that side of it.

14. Near a-kin to the Rainbow are the Halo's, or party-colour'd Circles, which sometimes appear about the Sun or Moon; so that this is a proper Place to say something of their Nature. 1. Then, it is observable that the Sun or Moon are always in the Center of such Circles, and keep the same Situation as they move. 2. These Circles consist of two Borders, the outer of which is Blew or Yellow, and the inner Red. 3. The Space contain'd in them, especially near the more shining Parts, is dusker than the Air without them. 4. Whereas the Rainbow never appears but where it actually Rains, the Halo's never appear when it does Rain.

15. To make these Things plainer, we will here set down the * Account of an Observation of a Halo * Phil. Trans. A. 1667. It appear'd about 9 a Clock in the Morning with a Circle 44 Degrees Diameter, the Limb of which was about half a Degree broad. The upper and lower Parts lookt Red and Yellow, with a Tincture of Purple, especially in the upper Part; the Red was within the Yellow; the other Parts appear'd a little whitish, and but indifferent clear. The Space within the Halo was something dusker than that without, especially near the most vivid Colours. The height of the Sun, at at the beginning of the Observation, was about 46 Degrees. There were thin white Clouds moving about in the Air, whereby the Blew Colour was made more discernable, and the brightness of the Sun was obscured, so that it was not greater than at an Eclipse. The Weather was something colder than usual at that Time of Year, and People said it froze the Night before. The Halo appear'd with the same Colour and Brightness from Nine a Clock till half an Hour past Eleven; at which Time the Colours began to fade and at Two a Clock in the Afternoon they quite vanished, after a short appearance of Recovery but just before.

16. In order to Account for these Phænomena, learned Men agreed, I. That the Air at that Time was full of icy Particles, of the shape of a Lens or something like it, capable of producing such Colours as Prisms do, by the Refraction of the Light, and reflecting it to us. II. That at such a Juncture the Sun or Moon must shine, that so those frozen Particles may repair from all Quarters about the bright Luminaries.

17. From what has been said we may conclude, I. That the Luminary ought to be in the Center of the Halo, because to make the Colours arising from the Refraction and Reflection of Light, visible, there must not only be a certain Figure of the frozen Particles, but the same Distance of them all from the Luminary, whose Light is refracted and reflected by them; as we have observed in the drops of Rain which form the Rainbow.

18. II. The Colour of the Halo is of two Sorts, because there is made by it a double Refraction of the Particles of Light, one when they enter into the icy Particles, and another when they are reflected back again. But because to make a Variation of Colours, the Rays must be variously collected and reflected, as we shew'd before; therefore 'tis necessary that in the icy Particles there should be some Variety; which some fetch from their Figure, as in the Rainbow; others from the internal Disposition of their Parts, which they will have to be such, that there is a kind of opaque Nucleus contain'd in them, and inclosed round with transparent Ice. Which if it be so, the Reflection of Light from the Nucleus, and from the extrem Parts must needs be different. And since a deeper Colour arises from the Reflection of a thicker Body, the inward Colour must appear Red, and the outward Blew or Yellow; because the Rays coming from the Nucleus, are nearer the Center, than those reflected from the transparent Parts.

19. III. The Space comprehended in the Halo, especially near the Ring, where the Colours are most vivid, must look something Dusky, because there is the greatest quantity of opaque Particles, as we shew'd before. Therefore the Air must needs be obscured in those Places. Some say the included Space is brighter than that without, because the icy Particles reflect the Sun's rays upon it; but this is contrary to Experience.

20. IV. 'Tis no wonder that Halo's, consisting of icy Particles, don't appear when it Rains; for then they must melt and come down. So when the Luminary is gone past the Collection of icy Particles which interposed between it and us, then the Halo is at an end.

21. Besides these Halo's, there are a sort of new Suns sometimes seen about the old One, call'd Parheli, because they are παρὰ τὸν ἥλιον, near the true Sun. 1. There appears a great white Circle, parallel to the Horizon, and passing through the Sun. 2. In several Parts of this Circle are seen the Parheli, tho' not all of a bigness, nor equally vivid. 3. Some represent the Colours of the Rainbow; others are Paler, and more like the Circle. 4. With these Parheli there often appears a Halo, which touches some of them that are nearest the true Sun. 5. These Suns don't keep to any certain Number, for sometimes there are Four of them, and sometimes Six. Gassendus in a Letter to Reverius has given an Account of Four that were seen at Rome, March 20. 1629.

22. To give a probable Reason of these Phænomena, we may in the first Place assume, that they proceed from such like Matter as produces Halo's; viz. icy Particles, which fly about in the Air between the Sun and the Eyes of the Spectators, in which notwithstanding there may be some Diversity of Figure.

23. I. The white Circle is form'd by a Reflection of the Sun Beams from the surface of the icy Matter, elevated to a certain height about the Disk of the Sun. For nothing can reflect the Sun's rays to us as is requisite in this Case, but such Things as are elevated above the Horizon to the same Angle with the Sun's altitude. Whence it follows, that the Circle ought to appear every where as high as the Sun, and therefore Parallel to the Horizon.

24. II. The Rays falling upon certain Parts of the Circle are transmitted from the icy Matter to us with a double Refraction and one Reflection; for which Reason they exhibit a Figure like that of the Sun, but colour'd like the Rainbow. These Figures are unequal, according as the Rays come to us more directly or obliquely.

25. III. They are colour'd like the Rainbow, for the Reason assign'd before; or else are Pale, if the Rays are only reflected to us. For as when we look upon a Glass-prisme at some Yards distance, no Colour but that of the Glass appears, because it only reflects the Light to us; so in the icy Drops which give us the Light only by Reflection, we must expect to see no Colour but that of Ice alone. But as the same Prisme when held before our Eyes, so as not only to give us the Rays reflected from its Surface, but twice refracted too, viz. at going in, and coming back again upon us from the opposite Surface, represents the Colours of the Rainbow: So likewise those icy Particles which are so situated between the Sun and our Eyes, that the Rays are reflected to us from the opaque Nuclei with the like double Refraction; those Particles, I say, must needs appear of the Colour of the Rainbow.

26. IV. 'Tis no wonder, that a Halo appears together with the Parheli, because, as we hinted before, they seem to consist of much the same Matter. There is no need to repeat here what we said before about Halo's.

27. The Number of Parheli is greater or less, according to the quantity of the icy Matter, which is elevated to the same apparent Altitude with the Sun. There are other peculiar Phænomena that belong to this Head, which we will not now insist upon, but leave them to be read in such Authors, as have made it their Business to explain this Meteor.

28. In order to confirm the aforesaid Conjecture by ocular Demonstration, * a very ingenious Man caused * Mr. Huygens in the Philos. Trans- a Glass-cylinder to be made about a Foot long, and inclosed in it a less Cylinder of Wood to serve for a Nucleus; and fill'd up the ambient Space with Water. Then he carried it into the Sun, and upon perusing it, all the forementioned Reflections and Refractions appear'd to the Eyes of the Spectators. Whence we may conclude, that much less Cylinders are able to perform as much. for May 1670. Num. 21.

29. It were to be wished that such icy Cylinders, upon their coming down after the appearance of the Parheli, were sought for and well inspected; but supposing they may possibly fall sometimes, yet this is but seldom, because such fine Particles may be born up a great while in the Air by the Winds, and Vapours ascending out of the Earth; and then they may be changed, as they fall thro' various warmer or colder Regions of the Air. Besides, the Winds may drive them into other Places, or they may often fall unobserved.

Certain

Certain it is, that so many Experiments would be required to form an exact Judgment of this and such like Cases, that a long Life would not be sufficient to make them in.

CHAP. IV.

Of Fiery Exhalations, Thunder, Lightning, the Thunder-bolt, &c.

1. BESIDES the Vapours which the Sun's heat raises out of Water and moist Places, there are a World of Particles carried off from Sulphur, Bitumen, volatilis Salts, and other bodies of the like Nature; these fly about in the Air higher or lower, according to the various Degrees of levity or gravity. These the Philosophers commonly call Exhalations; of which together with their Effects we shall discourse in this Chapter.

2. Since 'tis plain that there is a vast quantity of Sulphureous and Bituminous Matter all over the surface of the Earth, and that Plants and Animals abound with volatilis Salts; we need not wonder that the heat of the Sun fills the Air with such Particles. And 'tis impossible but the Winds must drive them about all over the Air; but without doubt they rise most plentifully out of dry Sun-burnt places, and hang thereabout, unless the Flux of the Air disperse them. This makes it no hard matter to account for all the Meteors inflam'd in the Air. We will begin with the most sudden and surprizing of them, which we will describe in Pliny's Words.

3. * " I. There are some fiery Meteors which are not seen till they fall, such as that which shot by the People at Noon-day, while they were at the shew of Gladiators exhibited by Germanicus Cæsar. Of these there are two sorts, which they call Lamps or Torches; and Darts. They differ in this, that the Lamp in falling still appears round, whereas the Dart burns all over and shews its length at once. Much after the same manner the Beams (the Greeks call them Σκῆπτρα) appear. One of these was seen when the Lacedæmonians were beaten at Sea, in that memorable Engagement which lost them the Empire of Greece. There is likewise what they call the Chasma, when the Sky seems to open. And sometimes there is an appearance of Fire as red as Blood, falling down upon the Earth; than which no sight can be more dreadful. Such a Meteor as this was seen in the 4th. Year of the CVII Olympiad, when Philip King of Macedon was enslaving Greece.

4. * " In the consulship of C. Cætilius and Cn. Papyrius, and at several other times, a light has been seen in the Sky by Night, very much resembling the Day-light. * Sometimes there is an Appearance of moving Stars, and that not only in the Air, but also on the Earth, and in the Sea. When Pliny was upon the Watch one Night in the Roman Camp, he saw such shining Appearances on the Pallisades; and they have been seen at Sea on the Sail-yards and other parts of the Ship — just like Birds that were shifting from one place to another. There are likewise instances of Peoples Heads that have been seen to shine in the Night. Among these may be reckoned the Ignis fatuus as we call it, which hovers up and down about the Earth. There is such an appearance of them in the Night, in those parts which ly between the Tropicks, that Pliny in * another place takes notice, that the Æthiopian Fields about Mount Hesperides, shine with them like so many Stars.

5. In all these Aerial Fires, three Things are observable. 1. That they are lighted without any human Means, and by some invisible Way: 2. That they run about the Air in various figures: 3. That some last longer than others, but all vanish in a very short time. The reasons of which are next to be inquir'd into.

6. I. We will not here repeat what we have said in the last Book about the way of lighting Fire; let it be only remember'd at present, that to make a Flame or Spark appear, there needs no more than that some Particle should be so whirl'd about in the Air, as to cast aside all the grosser matter, and play about in the most subtil part of Air. Now there are, as we said before, some matters apter than others to be put into such a motion, as the parts of Sulphur, Bitumen, Nitre, &c. When therefore a sufficient quantity of such matter is gather'd together, 'tis easie for one or two Particles to be whirl'd about by the heat of the Air, and being once inflam'd, to set Fire to all the rest about it. In consequence of which it may be observed, that the Aerial Fires are very rare in Winter, but common in Summer; and the hotter the Summer, the more common are such Fires; which is a sufficient indication that the matter of them is rais'd and inflam'd by the heat of the Air, and the impetuosity of its motion.

7. This may be demonstrated by an Experiment in what they call Aurum Fulminans. If Gold be dissolved in Aqua Regalis, and precipitated with Oil of Tartar, the Dust which sinks to the bottom being dried gradually and without Fire, may afterwards be fired by a moderate heat, and will make a noise like the shooting off a Musket. But you may make the Experiment as effectually, and with much less Charge, thus. Take 3 Drams of Salt-peter, a Dram and a Half of Tartar, one Dram of Brimstone, mix them together and beat them to a very fine Powder. This Powder will take Fire as easily as the Aurum Fulminans, but gives not quite so great a Crack. Now if we consider, that the Particles of Nitre, Tartar, and Sulphur which fly in the Air, are much finer than those which make the aforesaid Composition, we may easily imagine that a moderate heat will Fire them aloft in the Air, provided they be mixt according to the Proportion aforesaid.

8. II. This sort of Matter must be carried about in the Air in various Figures, according as the Winds blow, and as the quantity of it is greater or less; and according as it takes Fire, it appears in that variety which we have heard out of Pliny. If the Fire begins at one end, and burns by Degrees, 'tis call'd a Lamp; but if a long Exhalation take Fire at once, 'tis nam'd a Dart. Now while these Exhalations are in a Flame, they are sometimes hurried by the Stream of the Air one way or other. But if they continue in the same Place, as they do sometimes, then they are call'd Beams. At other Times the Clouds part, and the Sky seems to retire, which may be occasion'd by the Wind; at this opening a Flame flashes out, and this they call a Chasma. Burning Exhalations appear as Red as Blood, when they have less Sulphur in them, (which yields a paler Flame) than Nitre, Tartar, or Bitumen. Such an Inflammation may appear by Night or Day; but more plainly by Night in the Sun's absence, whose prevalent Light obscures all others. Shooting Stars are improperly call'd Stars, because they are but small Exhalations in our Air. Ignis fatuus seem to consist of a more greasie and gross Exhalation; for we see oily Substances are easily lighted, but not so soon spent, as those of Sulphur and Nitre.

9. III. Hence we learn, that all such inflam'd Exhalations must soon disappear, because the subtil Matter whereof they consist, is quickly spent. But since the Matter is not all alike, their Continuance is not exactly the same. Thus we see a Flame rais'd out of various Materials, lasts longer, or is out sooner, according as they are. Oil mixt with Sulphur or Bitumen, flames longer than it does with Nitre.

10. Having seen how Flame is suddenly kindled in the Air with a moderate heat, and illustrated this by the Experiment of Aurum Fulminans; it will next be easie to conceive conceive how Thunder is produced. For first it appears by the Experiment, that Flame which throws off the Air with great Violence, does sometimes occasion a great Crack. Now since, as we have observed, 'tis easie for heterogeneous Particles to mix in the upper Region of the Air in great Quantities, and to take Fire with no extraordinary heat; we need not have recourse to any Thing else for explaining the Cause of Thunder; but may define it to be, a rumbling Noise in the highest Region of the Air, occasion'd by the sudden Inflammation of Exhalations.

11. We cannot stand now to say much about the Noise, but shall just take Notice how all Experiments satisfy us, that the Noise cannot be produced otherwise than by a swift and vehement Explosion of the Air, which is forced every way, and its Motion being continued to our Ears, strikes the Tympanum, and excites in our Mind the Sensation of sound. This is so plain, and so constantly experienced, that we may take it for granted without further Proof.

12. 'Tis here proper to observe, that the Noise of Thunder sounds as if it pass thro' Arches, and were variously broken. The reason is, because the Flame is kindled among the Clouds, which hang over one another; while the agitated Air flies between them. Thus we observe; that the Inequalities of the Ground make a Gun discharged at a good Distance, to sound to us with several repeated and broken Reports.

13. It further appears, that the Flame is the Cause of the Thunder, because most commonly we see the Flash before we hear the Crack. There is not indeed such a Distance between the firing of the Exhalation and the Concussion of the Air, as there is between our seeing the Flash and hearing the Thunder. But because we see any Thing almost in instant, but a Sound is convey'd to us by a successive Motion of the Air, therefore more Time is required to hear than to see.

14. Some think that the noise of Thunder is caused by the falling of a higher Cloud condensed by sudden heat upon another Cloud under it, so that the Air between them is dispell'd with vast impetuosity, and hardly gets from between them, till the Cloud breaks. But 'tis scarce credible, that a Cloud tho' turn'd all at once into Water, should make any Noise only by falling upon a thinner Cloud, thro' which the Air might easily make its way. Besides, 'tis a Case without all Example. It is better therefore to look upon the firing of an Exhalation to be the Cause of Thunder; for tho' the Flash is not always seen, it don't follow that there is none; for the lower Clouds may easily intercept it from our sight, tho' some, where or other 'tis generally seen.

15. Those that imagine an upper Cloud to fall upon one below, do at the same Time acknowledge, that the Exhalations between them may often take Fire; but then their Notion of kindling Exhalations by Compression, because they are so close pent in between the Clouds, that all the Air is crush'd out from them, and they remain alone in the most subtil Matter, this is utterly unintelligible. Certainly the Matter of the Clouds is not of such a Nature, as can pen up the Exhalations so close: And as for Fire, it is much likelier to be put out than kindled in Clouds.

16. From what has been said, 'tis easie to define Lightning, which is nothing else but an inflam'd Exhalation compos'd of Sulphur or Nitre, or some such Matter, or of a mixture of several Sorts together. The Inflammation is sometimes with a Noise, as in cloudy Weather, sometimes without, as in clear, which makes some variety in it.

17. We have already accounted for the Noise; but it may lighten without Noise, when the Exhalation consists of Matter softer than ordinary, which is not so soon kindled. For Instance, if it consist only of sulphureous Particles, which are a softer sort, not so apt to Fire all at once, nor give the Air such a Concussion as shall make us hear the Noise of it. But if with the Sulphur be mingled many Particles of Nitre and Tartar, these last being harder, cause the whole Exhalation to burst at once with such impetuosity as rends the Air, and makes a vast Noise.

18. In cloudy Weather the Noise of Thunder is more diversified, because the Air is variously reverberated from the Clouds to us: But if there be no Clouds, the Air flows more freely and evenly through the open Spaces to our Ears. In such Weather it often Lightens without Thunder, because the Inflammation is only of sulphureous Particles; as on the other Hand, it often Thunders in cloudy Weather without any apparent Lightning, because, as we said before, it is intercepted by the Clouds.

19. Thunder and Lightning is generally attended with Rain, either at the same Instant or soon after. Many Times after a Clap of Thunder it rains faster, so that the Rain seems to be the Effect of the Thunder: Which the Asserters of the Hypothesis we just now Confuted, Account for thus; viz. That the upper Clouds dissolving and falling upon those below, precipitate them to the Earth. But there is no occasion for such a shift; for the heat of the inflam'd Exhalation alone, and the violent Concussion of the Air, are sufficient to dissolve the Clouds and bring them down.

20. When it Thunders and Lightens, sometimes there falls a Thunderbolt, i. e. A most rapid Flame which darts out of the Clouds to the Ground, and strikes thro' every Thing in its way. The peculiar Phenomena observ'd in it are these: 1. It strikes upon high Places, as Mountains, Trees, Towers, &c. oftner than upon low: 2. Sometimes it burns Mens Garments, without hurting their Bodies: 3. Sometimes it breaks their Bones, without hurting their Garments or Flesh: 4. In like manner, it has melted or broke a Sword without hurting the Scabbard; and on the contrary, has burnt the Scabbard all over, while no harm has been done to the Sword.

21. These are the chief Phenomena of the Thunder-bolt, for we will not here insist on those which are peculiar to Times and Places. From these we conclude the Thunder-bolt to be such an Exhalation, as we have described; which is suddenly kindled, and copious enough for the Winds to hurry it down from the Clouds to us. Some fancy that by one Cloud's falling down upon another, the Exhalation between them is struck out at the Extremities of the Clouds. But we have observ'd already, that their moisture would quench it, rather than inflame it, and shoot it to the Earth. It is more probable, that the Flame is beaten down by the Wind, and reaches the Ground before the Matter of it is quite spent. But since the Winds seldom or never blow downright, most Thunder-bolts are darted aslope through the Air.

22. I. For this Reason they strike most commonly upon high Places; for as they fly obliquely thro' the Air, they meet with Mountains, Trees, Towers, &c. in their Way. II. Since the Exhalations which form the Thunder-bolt are as various, as there are kinds of sulphureous, bituminous, and saline Bodies from which they are Collected; 'tis certain that the force of its Flame must be very different: So that sometimes it burns the Garments, and passes over the Body without hurting it. III. Sometimes it harmlessly penetrates the soft Flesh, and breaks the hard Bones: As we see Gold and other Metals dissolved by Aqua Regalis and Aqua Fortis, while the Paper receives no Injury by them. For the same Reason the Sword is melted, the Scabbard remaining entire; just as it would prove, if they were laid together in Aqua Fortis. For the acute Parts of the Aqua Fortis don't operate upon soft Matter whose Particles are branched, as they do upon harder Stuff, into whose Pores they insinuate themselves and dissolve the Contexture, as we shew'd before.

23. Besides, we observe that in Summer and Autumn Thunderbolts are more common; but in Winter and Spring more rare. For which a Threefold Reason may be given; 1. That in Winter and Spring the Cold in the upper Region of the Air is so great, as will not suffer the Exhalations to take Fire. 2. That in those Seasons the Exhalations are much fewer, because the Cold keeps them from ascending; for they cannot rise in any quantity without a considerable Heat. 3. That in Winter and Spring the Air is so fill'd with Vapours and Clouds, that all the Exhalations are diluted, and therefore cannot be inflam'd.

24. There are likewise some Places more obnoxious to Thunder-bolts than others; viz. Such as emit plentiful Exhalations for that Purpose, and where they are not easily dispersed by the Winds. Hence we see, that in the hotter Countreys, where the force of the Sun exhales all that can well be exhal'd out of the Earth, Thunderbolts are much more frequent than in colder Climates. So in very spacious Plains, which are swept, as I may say, with the Winds, the Exhalations are shatter'd and blown about: But in Places encompass'd with high Mountains, where the Wind cannot come to blow so freely, there they are kept together, and there Thunderbolts are very common.

CHAP. V. Of WINDS.

1. TIS well known that Wind is nothing else but the Stream of the Air, together with such Powers as the Air carries along with it: But there are a great many Phenomena of Winds, the Reasons and Grounds of which are not so easily discover'd, as will appear in this Chapter. Nor is their Cause and Origin, obvious to be Pointed out with due exactness. However, to see what may be done in this Case, we will First, Consider the Winds in general, as they are constant or variable. Secondly, We will particularly examine their various Phenomena: Lastly, We will say something of their first Origin.

2. The Winds may be divided into constant and variable: The former are up and down always at certain Times of the Year, and in certain Parts of the World; but the latter vary so much, that they can be reduced to no Rule. Now since 'tis easier to find out the Cause of one regular Effect, than of many irregular ones, let us in the first Place treat of constant Winds. And here we must take Notice, that the Winds are constant and periodical only in the widest Seas. Now the universal Ocean may most properly be divided into Three Parts, viz. 1. The Atlantick and Æthiopic Seas. 2. The Indian Ocean. 3. The Great South Sea, or the Pacifick Ocean; and tho' these Seas do all communicate by the South, yet as to our present Purpose of the Periodical Winds, they are sufficiently separated by the Interposition of great Tracts of Land; the First lying between Africa and America; the Second between Africa and the Indian Islands, and Hollandia Nova; and the last between the Philippine Isles, China, Japan, and Hollandia Nova on the West, and the Coast of America on the East. Now following this natural Division of the Seas, so will we divide our History of the Winds into Three Parts in the same Order.

3. In the Atlantick and Æthiopic Seas between the Tropicks, there is a general Easterly Wind all the Year long, without any considerable Variation, excepting that it is subject to be deflected there from some few Points of the Compass towards the North or South, according to the Position of the Place. The Observations which have been made of these Deflections, are these following. That near the Coast of Africa, as soon as you have pass'd the Canary Isles, you are sure to meet a fresh Gale of N. E. Wind about the Latitude of 28 Degrees North, which seldom comes to the Eastwards of the E. N. E. or passes the N. N. E. This Wind accompanies those bound to the Southward, to the Latitude of Ten North, and about a Hundred Leagues from the Guinea Coast, where, till the Fourth Degree of North Latitude, they fall into the Calms and Tornadoes.

4. That those bound to the Caribbe Isles, find, as they approach the American side, that the aforesaid North-East Wind becomes still more and more Easterly, so as sometimes to be East, sometimes East by South, but yet most commonly to the Northward of the East, a Point or Two, seldom more. 'Tis likewise observ'd, that the Strength of these Winds does gradually decrease, as you Sail to the Westwards.

5. That the Limits of the constant and variable Winds in this Ocean, are farther extended on the American side than the African: For whereas you meet not with this certain Wind, till after you have passed the Latitude of Twenty Eight Degrees on this side; on the American side it commonly holds to Thirty, Thirty one, or Thirty Two Degrees of Latitude; and this is verified likewise to the Southwards of the Equinoctial; for near the Cape of Good-hope, the Limits of the Trade Winds are Three or Four Degrees nearer the Line, than on the Coast of Brazil.

6. That from the Latitude of Four Degrees North, to the aforesaid Limits on the South of the Æquator, the Winds are generally and perpetually between the South and East, and most commonly between the South-East and East, observing always this Rule, That on the African side they are more Southerly, on the Brazilian more Easterly, so as to become almost due East, the little Deflection they have being still to the Southwards. In this Part of the Ocean, the Wind has been nicely observed for a full Year together, to keep constantly about the South East, the most usual Point S. E. by E. When it is Easterly, it generally blows hard, and 'tis gloomy, dark, and sometimes rainy Weather; if it comes to the Southwards, it is generally serene, and a small Gale next to a Calm, but this is not very common.

7. That the Season of the Year has some small Effect on these constant Winds, for that when the Sun is considerable to the Northwards of the Æquator, the South-East Winds, especially in the Strait of this Ocean (if I may so call it) between Brazil and the Coast of Guinea, do vary a Point or Two to the Southwards, and the North-East become more Easterly; and on the contrary, when the Sun is towards the Tropick of Capricorn, the South-Easterly Winds become more Easterly, and the North-Easterly Winds on this side the Line vere more to the Northwards.

8. That as there is no general Rule that admits not of some Exception, so there is in this Ocean a Tract of Sea, wherein the Southerly and South-West Winds are perpetual, viz. All along the Coast of Guinea, for above Five Hundred Leagues together, from Sierra Leone to the Isle of St. Thomas; for the South-East Trade Wind having pass'd the Line, and approaching the Coast of Guinea within Eighty or a Hundred Leagues, inclines towards the Shore and becomes S. S. E. and by degrees, as you come nearer, it veres about to South, S. S. West, and in with the Land South-West, and sometimes West South-West. Which Variation is better expressed in the Map hereto annexed, than it can well be in Words. These are the Winds which are observed on this Coast when it blows true; but there are frequent Calms, violent sudden Gusts call'd Tornadoes, from all Points of the Compass, and sometimes unwholesom Foggy Easterly Winds call'd Hermitan by the Natives, which too often infest the Navigation of these Parts.

9. That

9. That to the Northwards of the Line, between Four and Ten Degrees of Latitude, and between the Meridians of Cape Verde, and of the Eastermost Islands that bear that Name, there is a Tract of Sea, wherein it were improper to say there is any Trade-wind, or yet a variable; for it seems condemn'd to perpetual Calms, attended with terrible Thunder and Lightning, and Rains so frequent, that our Navigators from thence call this Part of the Sea The Rains; the little Winds that are, be only some sudden uncertain Gusts, of very little Continuance and less Extent; so that sometimes each Hour you shall have a different Gale, which dies away into a Calm before another Succeed, and in a Fleet of Ships in sight of one another, each shall have the Wind from a several Point of the Compass. With these weak Brizes Ships are oblig'd to make the best of their way to the Southward thro' the aforesaid Six Degrees, wherein 'tis reported some have been detain'd whole Months for want of Wind.

10. From the Three last Observables, is shewn the Reason of two notable Occurrents in the East-India and Guinea Navigations: The one is, Why, notwithstanding the narrowest part of the Sea between Guinea and Brasile be about Five hundred Leagues over; yet Ships bound to the Southward sometimes, especially in the Months of July and August, find a great difficulty to pass it. This happens because of the South-East Winds, at that time of the Year commonly extending some degrees beyond the ordinary limit of four Degrees North Latitude; and withal they come so much Southerly, as to be sometimes South, sometimes a Point or two to the West: There remains then only to ply to Windward, and if on the one side they stand away W. S. W. they gain the Wind still more and more Easterly; but there is danger of not weathering the Barbican-Shore, or at least the Shoals upon that Coast. But if upon the other Tack, they go away E. S. E. they fall into the Neighbourhood of the Coast of Guinea, from which there is no departing without running Easterly as far as the Isle of St. Thomas, which is the constant Practice of all the Guiny-Ships, and which may seem very strange without the consideration of the sixth Remark, which shews the reason of it: for being in with the Coast, the Wind blows generally at S. W. and W. S. W. with which Winds they cannot go to the Northward for the Land, and on the other Tack they can lie no nearer the Wind than S. S. E. or South: With these Courses they run off the Shore; but in so doing they always find the Winds more and more contrary; so that when near the Shore they could lie South, at a greater distance they can make their Way no better than S. E. and afterwards E. S. E. with which Courses they fetch commonly the Isle of St. Thomas and Cape Lopez, where finding the Winds to the Eastward of the South, they keep them favourable by running away to the Westward in the South Latitude of three or four Degrees, where the S. E. Winds are perpetual.

11. For the sake of these general Winds, all those that use the West-India Trade, even those bound to Virginia count it their best Course to get as soon as they can to the Southwards, that so they may be certain of a fair and fresh Gale to run before it to the Westwards, and for the same reason, those homeward bound from America, endeavour to gain the Latitude of thirty Degrees, as soon as possible, where they first find the Winds to be variable; tho' the most ordinary Winds in the Northern part of the Atlantick Ocean, come from between the South and West.

12. As to those furious Storms call'd Hurricanes, which are, as 'twere, peculiar to the Caribbe Isles, and which so dreadfully afflict them in the Month of August, or not much before or after, they do not so properly belong to this Place, both by reason of their small continuance and extent, as likewise because they are not Anniversary, some Years having more than One, and sometimes for several Years together there being none at all.

13. What is here said, is to be understood of the Sea-Winds at some distance from the Land; for upon and near the Shores, the Land and Sea-Brizes are almost every where sensible; and the great variety which happens in their Periods, Force and Direction, from the Situation of the Mountains, Valleys and Woods, and from the various Texture of the Soil, more or less capable of retaining and reflecting Heat, and of exhaling or condensing Vapours, is such, that it were an endless Task to endeavour to account for them.

14. In the Indian Ocean the Winds are partly general, as in the Æthiopick Ocean, partly periodical, that is, half the Year they blow one way, and the other half near upon the opposite Points; and these Points and times of shifting are different in different parts of this Ocean; the limits of each Tract of Sea, subject to the same Change or Monsoon (as the Natives call it) are certainly very hard to determine; but the Diligence I have us'd (says Mr. Halley) to be rightly inform'd, and the Care I have taken therein, has in a great measure surmounted that Difficulty, and I am persuaded that the following Particulars may be rely'd upon.

15. That between the Latitudes of Ten and Thirty Degrees South, between Madagascar and Hollandia Nova, the general Trade-Wind about the S. E. by E. is found to blow all the Year long to all Intents and Purposes after the same manner as in the same Latitudes in the Æthiopick Ocean, as is describ'd in the fourth Remark afore-going.

16. That the aforesaid South-East Winds extend to within two Degrees of the Æquator, during the Months of June, July, &c. to November; at which time, between the South-Latitude, of three and ten Degrees, being near the Meridian of the North-end of Madagascar, and between two and twelve South-Latitude, being near Sumatra and Java, the contrary Winds from the N. W. or between the North and West let in and blow for half the Year, viz. from the beginning of December till May, and this Monsoon is observ'd as far as the Molucca-Isles, of which more anon.

17. That to the Northward of three Degrees South-Latitude over the whole Arabian or Indian-Sea and Gulf of Bengall, from Sumatra to the Coast of Africa, there is another Monsoon, blowing from October to April upon the North-East Points; but in the other half Year, from April to October, upon the opposite Points of S. W. and W. S. W. and that with rather more force than the other, accompany'd with dark rainy Weather, whereas the N. E. blows clear. 'Tis likewise to be noted, that the Winds are not so constant, either in Strength or Point, in the Gulf of Bengall, as they are in the Indian-Sea, where a certain and steady Gale scarce ever fails. 'Tis also remarkable, that the S. W. Winds in these Seas, are generally more Southerly on the African side, more Westerly on the Indian.

18. That as an Appendix to the last describ'd Monsoon, there is a Tract of Sea to the Southwards of the Æquator, subject to the same Changes of the Winds, viz. near the African-Coast, between it and the Island Madagascar or St. Laurence, and from thence Northwards as far as the Line; wherein from April to October there is found a constant fresh S. S. W. Wind, which as you go more Northerly, becomes still more and more Westerly, so as to fall in with the W. S. W. Winds mention'd before in those Months of the Year to be certain to the Northward of the Æquator. What Winds blow in these Seas, for the other half Year, from October to April, I have not (says Mr. Halley) yet been able to obtain to my full satisfaction; for that our Navigators always return from India without Madagascar, and so are little acquainted in this Matter: The Account that has been given me, is only this, That the Winds are much Easterly hereabouts, and as often to the North of the true East as to the Southwards thereof.

North

19. That to the Eastward of Sumatra and Malacca, to the Northwards of the Line, and along the Coast of Cambaja and China, the Monsoons blow North and South; that is to say, the N. E. Winds are much Northerly, and the S. W. much Southerly: This Constitution reaches to the Eastwards of the Philippine Isles, and as far Northerly as Japan. The Northern Monsoon setting in, in these Seas, in October or November, and the Southern in May, blowing all the Summer Months. Here it is to be noted, That the points of the Compass, from whence the Wind comes in these Parts of the World, are not so fix'd as in those lately describ'd; for the Southerly will frequently pass a Point or two to the Eastwards of the Suez, and the Northerly as much to the Westwards of the North, which seems occasion'd by the great quantity of Land which is interspers'd in these Seas.

20. That in the same Meridians, but to the Southwards of the Equator, being that Tract lying between Sumatra and Java to the West, and New Guinea to the East, the same Northerly Monsoons are observ'd, but with this difference, That the inclination of the Northerly is towards the N. W. and of the Southerly towards the S. E. But the Plage Venti are not more constant here than in the former, viz. variable five or six Points; besides, the times of the Change of these Winds are not the same as in the Chinese Seas, but about a Month or six Weeks later.

21. That these contrary Winds do not shift all at once, but in some places the time of the Change is attended with Calms, in others with variable Winds; and it is particularly remarkable, that the end of the Westerly Monsoon on the Coast of Soromandel, and the two last Months of the Southerly Monsoon in the Seas of China, are very subject to be tempestuous: The violence of these Storms is such, that they seem to be of the Nature of the West-India Hurricanes, and render the Navigation of these Parts very unsafe about that time of the Year. These Tempests are by our Seamen usually term'd, The breaking up of the Monsoons.

By reason of the shifting of these Winds, all those that Sail in these Seas, are oblig'd to observe the Seasons proper for their Voyages; and so doing, they fail not of a fair Wind and speedy Passage; but if so be they chance to out-stay their time till the contrary Monsoon sets in, as it frequently happens, they are forc'd to give over the hopes of accomplishing their intended Voyages, and either return to the Port from whence they came, or else put in to some other Harbour, there to spend the time till the Winds shall come favourable.

22. The third Ocean, call'd Mare Pacificum, whose extent is equal to that of the other two (it being from the West Coast of America to the Philippine Islands not less than 150 Degrees of Longitude) is that which is least known to our own, or the Neighbour Nations: That Navigation that there is on it, is by the Spaniards, who go yearly from the Coast of New Spain to the Manilla's, but that but by one beaten Track; so that we cannot be so particular here, as in the other two. What the Spanish Authors say of the Winds they find in their Courses, and what is confirm'd by the old Accounts of Drake and Candish, and since by Schooten, who Sail'd the whole breadth of this Sea in the Southern Latitude of fifteen or sixteen Degrees, is, That there is a great Conformity between the Winds of this Sea, and those of the Atlantic and Aethiopic; that is to say, that to the Northwards of the Equator, the predominant Wind is between the East and North-East, and to the Southwards thereof, there is a constant, steady Gale between the East and South-East, and that on both sides the Line with so much constancy, that they scarce ever need to attend the Sails; and strength, that it is rare to fail of crossing this vast Ocean in ten Weeks time, which is about 130 Miles per Diem: Besides 'tis said, that Storms and Tempests are never known in these Parts: So that here is the very best of Sailing; no want of a fresh fair Wind, and yet no danger of having too much. Wherefore some have thought it might be as short a Voyage to Japan and China, to go by the Streights of Magellan, as by the Cape of Good-Hope.

23. * This is to be understood of the Pacific-Sea at a great distance from the Shores; for about the Shores are various Winds, and when the S. E. or S. W. blows, this Sea is thereabouts very rough and dangerous; for the least Wind raises it very high. But when the Wind lies, tho' it blow'd never so strong but just before, immediately there is such a Calm, as if there had been no Wind of a long time; whereas the Atlantic-Sea rous for several Days after the Wind has lain. The Pacific-Sea at a good distance from the Shore, is known to have a fair steady Wind, and is free from Storms, but the Coasts are apt to be rough; whereas on the contrary, the Atlantic is generally smooth on the Coasts, and tempestuous in the Main-Sea.

24. The limits also of these general Winds, are much the same as in the Atlantic-Sea, viz. about the thirtieth Degree of Latitude on both sides; for the Spaniards homewards bound from the Manilla's, always take the advantage of the Southerly Monsoon, blowing there in the Summer Months, and run up to the Northwards of that Latitude, as high as Japan, before they meet with variable Winds to shape their Course to the Eastwards: And Schooten and others that have gone about by the Magellan Streights, have found the limits of the S. E. Winds much about the same Latitude to the Southwards; besides a farther Analogy between the Winds of this Ocean and the Aethiopic, appears in that upon the Coast of Peru, they are always much Southerly, like as they are found near the Shores of Angola.

25. In the foregoing History are contain'd several Problems, which merit well the Consideration of our Attentest Naturalists, both by reason of the constancy of the Effect, and of the immense Extent thereof, near half the Surface of the Globe being concern'd. The chief of these Problems are, 1. Why these Winds are perpetually from the East in the Atlantic and Aethiopic, as likewise in the Pacific Ocean, between the Latitudes of 30 North and South? 2. Why the said Winds extend no farther with constancy, than to the Latitudes of 30 Deg? 3. Why there should be a constant South Westerly Wind upon and near the Coast of Guinea? 4. Why, in the North part of the Indian-Ocean the Winds, which for one half Year do agree with those of the other two Oceans, should change in the other half Year, and blow from the opposite Points; while the Southern part of that Ocean follows the general Rule, and has perpetual Winds about S. E.? 5. Why, in these general Trade-Winds it should be always true, that to the Northward of the Equator it is inclin'd to the Northwards of the East; and in South Latitudes, to the Southward thereof? 6. Why, in the Seas of China there should be so great an Inclination from the East to the North more than elsewhere? &c.

26. Among the constant Winds, we may reckon such as blow at certain times in some particular Countries. In Greece, Italy and the Parts thereabout, "Eight Days (says Pliny) before the rising of the Dog-star,
" there blow North-East Winds, which they call Pro-
" dromi. And two Days after 'tis risen, the same Winds
" (but then call'd Etesie) blow as long as before;
" and no Winds are more certain. Afterwards there " are frequent South-Winds to the rising of Arcturus,
" which is Eleven Days before the Autumnal Equinox.
" At which time Corus (a Wind N. W. by N.) sets in.
" This lasts all the Autumn, which is reckon'd a" bout Forty-four Days; then the Constellation call'd
" Vergilia sets, and Winter begins, about the III'd of " the Ides of November. Now the North-East Wind
" blows

* Voyage fait à la mer du Sud, en 1684, par Ruyseau de Luffa.

"blows again, but very unlike that before. Then (says Pliny, but erroneously) Seven Days before, and as many after the Winter Solstice, the Sea is calm, to favour the hatching of the Halcyons; whence they are call'd Halcyon Days; the rest are Winterlike. But we may observe this difference between the constant Winds by Sea and Land, that those by Sea are much more constant than those by Land, and freer (nay, in some places always free) from Storms.

27. As for the Variable Winds, they are felt most by Land, and in such parts of the Sea as are without the limits of the constant Winds to the North and South, viz. in the colder parts of the Ocean, and all over its outmost Bays, the principal of which are the Mediterranean and Baltick.

28. The Ancients (says Pliny) made but Four Winds, according to the Four Cardinal Points, (therefore Homer mentions no more;) this was quickly look'd on as too gross a Division. The following Age added Eight more to this Number; which was thought too minute and nice a Subdividing. And therefore they reduc'd this last Number to Four, taking every other, or middle Wind, and adding them to the old Account. But our Sailors, who are far beyond the Ancients for their Skill in Navigation, have divided the Horizon into 32 equal parts, adding 28 to the four Cardinal Winds; a thing exceeding useful in Navigation, but of no great concern in Natural Philosophy, except it be to give us a hint that the Wind blows from all parts of Heaven.

29. Of Variable Winds, some are common to all Countries, others are more peculiar to some particular Parts. Of this latter sort, the most famous are the Hurricanes; which chiefly infest the Caribbe Isles, but are not Anniversary, nor equally frequent. Their Fury is so great, that they throw down all before them, tear up Trees, overturn Houses, toss Ships prodigiously, and blow about things of vast weight. They are not even, continu'd Winds; but blow in Gusts, which suddenly come and go; neither do they extend very wide, but are sometimes confin'd to a narrow compass, and at other times take a larger scope. As for their duration, it is but for a few Days, and sometimes only a few Hours. They are more common in America than any where else; but yet Europe and Asia are not altogether without them; as appears from Histories and Travels.

30. It may be observ'd of all Winds, whether constant or variable, That some are drying, others are moist; some gather Clouds, others disperse them; some are warm, others cold. But their Influence is not one and the same in all Places: For such Winds as are cold in one Country, are warm in another: Those which Dry with us, are Wet in other Nations; & vice versa; of which we will give some Instances hereafter.

31. These are the principal Phænomena to be observ'd in Winds; for to examine every thing belonging to this Subject, would be the Work of a large Volume: Besides, no Reasons can be given for several things, before the Truth of them is better ascertain'd. Wherefore we shall at present confine ourselves to account for the Premises only, beginning with the Causes of constant Winds.

32. * Wind is most properly defin'd to be the Stream or Current of the Air; and where such a Current is perpetual and fix'd in its Course, 'tis necessary that it proceed from a permanent unintermitting Cause. Wherefore some have been inclin'd to propose the diurnal Rotation of the Earth upon the Axis, by which, as the Globe turns Eastwards, the loose and fluid Particles of the Air, being so exceeding light as they be, are left behind; so that in respect of the Earth's Surface, they move Westward, and become a constant Easterly Wind. This Opinion seems confirm'd, for that these Winds are found only near the Equinoctial, in those Parallels of Latitude where the Diurnal Motion is swiftest. And we should readily assent to it, if the constant Calms in the Atlantick-Sea near the Æquator; the Westerly Winds near the Coast of Guinea; and the Periodical Westerly Monsoons under the Æquator in the Indian-Seas, did not declare the insufficiency of that Hypothesis. Besides, the Air being kept to the Earth by the principle of Gravity, would require the same degree of Velocity that the Earth's Surface move with, as well in respect of the diurnal Rotation, as of the Annual about the Sun, which is about thirty times swifter.

33. It remains therefore to substitute some other Cause, capable of producing a like constant Effect, not liable to the same Objections, but agreeable to the known Properties of the Elements of Air and Water, and the Laws of the Motion of Fluid Bodies. Such a one is I conceive, the Action of the Sun-beams upon the Air and Water, as he passes every Day over the Oceans, consider'd together with the Nature of the Soil, and Situation of the adjoining Continents: I say therefore, First, That according to the Laws of Statics, the Air is less rarify'd or expanded by Heat, and consequently more ponderous, must have a Motion towards those Parts thereof, which are more rarified, and less ponderous, to bring it to an Æquilibrium: And Secondly, That the presence of the Sun continually shifting to the Westwards, that part toward which the Air tends, by reason of the Rarefaction made by his greatest Meridian Heat, is with him carry'd Westward, and consequently the tendency of the whole Body of the lower Air is that way. Thus a general Easterly Wind is form'd, which being impress'd upon all the Air of a vast Ocean, the parts impel one the other, and so keep moving till the next return of the Sun, whereby so much of the Motion as was lost, is again restor'd; and thus the Westerly Wind is made perpetual.

34. From the same Principle it follows, that this Easterly Wind should, on the North-side of the Æquator, be to the Northwards of the East, and in South-Latitudes, to the Southward thereof; for near the Line, the Air is much more rarify'd, than at a greater distance from it; because of the Sun twice in a Year Vertical, and at no time distant above 23 Deg. and a half; at which distance the heat, being as the Sine of the Angle of Incidence, is but little short of that of the Perpendicular Ray. Whereas under the Tropicks, tho' the Sun stay long Vertical, yet he is as long 47 Deg. off; which is a kind of Winter, wherein the Air so cools, as that the Summer-heat cannot warm it to the same degree with that under the Æquator. Wherefore the Air to the Northward and Southward, being less rarify'd than that in the middle, it follows, that from both sides it ought to tend toward the Æquator: This Motion compounded with the former Easterly Wind, answers all the Phænomena of the general Trade Winds; which, if the whole Surface of the Globe were Sea, would undoubtedly blow all round the World, as they are found to do in the Atlantick and Æthiopick Oceans.

35. But seeing that so great Continents do interpose and break the Continuity of the Oceans, regard must be had to the Nature of the Soil, and the Position of the high Mountains, which I suppose, the two principal Causes of the several Variations of the Winds from the former general Rule: For if a Country lying near the Sun, prove to be flat, sandy, low Land, such as the Deserts of Libya are usually reported to be, the Heat occasion'd by the Reflexion of the Sun-beams, and the retention thereof in the Sand, is incredible to those that have not felt it; whereby the Air being exceedingly rarify'd, it is necessary that the cooler and more dense Air should run thitherwards to restore the Æquilibrium: This I take to be the Cause, why near the Coast of Guinea the Wind always sets in upon the Land, blowing Westerly instead of Easterly.

36. For there is sufficient Reason to believe, That the Inland Parts of Africa are prodigiously hot, since the Northern Borders thereof were so intemperate, as to give the Ancients cause to conclude, That all beyond the Tropick was made uninhabitable by excess of Heat. From the same Cause it happens, that there are so constant Calms in that part of the Ocean call'd the Rains (describ'd in the 7th Remark on the Atlantick-

See) for this Trade being plac'd in the middle, between the Westerly Winds, blowing on the Coast of Guinea, and the Easterly Trade-Winds blowing to the Westwards thereof, the tendency of the Air here is indifferent to either, and so stands in Æquilibrio between both; and the weight of the incumbent Atmosphäre being diminish'd by the continual contrary Winds blowing from hence, is the reason that the Air here holds not the copious Vapour it receives; but lets it fall into frequent Rains.

37. But as the cool and dense Air, by Reason of its greater Gravity, presses upon the hot and rarified, 'tis demonstrative, that this latter must ascend in a continued Stream as fast as it rarifies; and that being ascended, it must disperse it self to preserve the Æquilibrio, that is, by a contrary Current, the upper Air must move from those Parts where the greatest heat is: So by a kind of Circulation, the North-East Trade-Wind below, will be attended with a South-Westerly above, and the South-Easterly with a North-West Wind above; that this is more than a bare Conjecture, the almost instantaneous Change of the Wind to the opposite Point, which is frequently found in passing the Limits of the Trade-Winds, seems to assure us; but that which above all Confirms this Hypothesis, is the Phenomenon of the Monsoons, by this means most easily solved, and without it hardly explicable.

38. Supposing therefore such a Circulation as above, 'tis to be consider'd, that to the Northward of the Indian Ocean, there is every where Land within the usual Limit of the Latitude of 30. viz. Arabia, Persia, India, &c. Which for the same Reason as the Mediterranean Parts of Africa, are subject to unsufferable Heats when the Sun is to the North, passing nearly vertical; but yet are temperate enough, when the Sun is removed towards the other Tropick; because of a Ridge of Mountains at some Distance within the Land, said to be frequently in Winter cover'd with Snow, over which the Air as it passes, must needs be much chilled. Hence it comes to pass, that the Air coming according to the general Rule, out of the N. E. in the Indian Seas, is sometimes hotter, sometimes colder than that which by this Circulation is returned out of the S. W. and by Consequence, sometimes the Under-Current or Wind is from the N. E. sometimes from the S. W.

39. That this has no other Cause, is clear from the Times wherein these Winds set in, viz. in April, when the Sun begins to warm those Countreys to the North, the S. W. Monsoon begins, and blows during the Heats till October; when the Sun being retir'd, and all Things growing cooler Northward, and the Heat increasing to the South, the North-East Winds enter, and blow all the Winter till April again. And it is undoubtedly from the same Principle, that to the Southwards of the Æquator, in part of the Indian Ocean, the North-West Winds succeed the South-East, when the Sun draws near the Tropick of Capricorn.

40. But I must Confess, that in this latter occurs a Difficulty not well to be accounted for, which is, why this Change of the Monsoons should be any more in this Ocean, than in the same Latitudes in the Æthiopic, where there is nothing more certain than a S. E. Wind all the Year.

41. 'Tis likewise very hard to conceive, why the Limits of the Trade-Wind should be fixt about the Thirtieth Degree of Latitude all round the Globe; and that they should so seldom transgress or fall short of those Bounds; as also that in the Indian Sea, only the Northern Part should be subject to the changeable Monsoons, and in the Southern there be a constant S. E.

These are Particulars that merit to be consider'd more at large, and furnish a sufficient Subject for a just Volume; which will be a very commendable Task for such, who being us'd to Philosophick Contemplation, shall have leisure to apply their serious Thoughts about it.

42. As for the North-East Winds, which the Greeks call Etesia, and which set in at the end of July, and blow all August in Greece, Italy, and other Countreys as Pliny has told us, they seem to proceed from hence, viz. That the Sun coming to our Tropick at the Summer Solstice, does not only heat the Air directly under it, but diffuses its Heat further North; which Air mounts into the upper Region, and makes room for the more Northern Air, which is heavier and thicker, to come into its Place. Now after this Air is come in, in great abundance, and the Sun retires again towards the South, its own pressure puts it into a Circulation, and being rarified, it mounts, and comes to the North again thro' the upper Region, and so causes a South Wind, which Pliny observes to succeed the Etesia about the Autumnal Æquinox.

43. After this the Stream turns again thro' an overcharge of Air and Vapours crouded up in the North Parts, which produces a N. W. by N. Wind. This Stream, as Pliny says, continues all the Autumn; and then through the Winter Season, we have North-East Winds from Nova Zembla, and the Northern Parts of Muscovy. These Winds coming over vast Tracts of Land, cover'd with Snow and Ice, are extream Cold; and they blow in this Season, because the Air on the left Hand, with respect to the North, being exhausted, the Stream must needs flow from that Part, where the Cold is greatest, and the Air thickest. But a N. W. by N. Wind preceeds the N. E. because it comes from that Quarter, where there are very wide Seas, over which it finds a smoother Passage, than over the uneven Tracts of Land, which lie directly between us and the N. E.

44. And this is the Reason, why the Winds are more regular and constant by Sea than by Land. For the smooth Surface of the Water has nothing to retard their Current, or turn them out of their way; but by Land they meet with Mountains, Valleys, Woods, and other Obstacles, whereby they are retarded, and turn'd aside. Besides, the Vapours which rise out of the Sea, are nearly equal; whereas those from Land are more or less, according as the Wind serves, by which means the Stream of the Air may be variously altered.

45. From the same Cause it is, that the Winds by Land vary so much; concerning which we cannot be nicely exact, unless we knew how to describe the Situation and Nature of all Countreys; which cannot be done, since they were never yet sufficiently known. We must be satisfied with this general hint, that the Mountains and Woods, the Heat and Cold, the Moisture or Dryness of Countreys create such endless varieties in them, as cannot be reduced to any certain Rules.

46. If the causes of Tempests and Hurricanes be demanded, they are hardly to be accounted for in all Particulars. However it may in the first place be noted, that the ratio of all Liquids is much the same, and therefore an extraordinary Motion may be excited in the Air, by the same way as it is in the Water. Now if Water fall from a high Place, or if there be a Confluence of several Streams together, this gives it a violent Motion, and causes many Whirlings and Eddies in it. This is apparent in the Torrents falling down from Rocks, and the Confluences of Rivers. If therefore something Analogous to this may happen in the Air, there must needs be furious Tempests of Wind rais'd in it. And such a Thing may happen, if an extraordinary quantity of Vapours be driven by the Wind upon a certain place, which they cannot easily get over by Reason of Mountains or contrary Winds which oppose them. For Example, suppose a Wind from some Point between North and East, carry a vast Collection of Vapours out of Africa into the Caribbe Isles; this Wind lights upon the Continent of America; now 'tis possible, that not only the Mountains and Woods of Panama may resist the Current of this Wind, and croud the Vapours together there; but a contrary Wind from a Point between South and West, may blow at the same Time on the Western Shore of America, which shall force the Vapours back again.

When

When such a rencounter happens, there must be a wild Uproar in the Air about the Caribbe Isles, and in all that Tract between South and North-America, and the Vapours in this circular Motion, must needs be furious on all sides, just as it is in Water. For we see at the Confluence of two Rivers, if their Currents be rapid at the place where they fall in, they cause violent Eddies, which whirl about Things that are cast into them, swallowing them for a Time, and then throwing them up again.

47. This shews us the Reason, why heavy Bodies are often tost in the Air by the whirlings of Hurricanes, and then dash to the Ground again. For the Air being in a circular Motion is with great Fury tost backwards and forwards between the Ground and the Clouds. For as the Waters of the rowling Sea don't run to the Shoars in an even Stream, but in such Waves as dash by fits and turns; so the Course of a violent Wind is in broken and distinct Blasts:

Urgeturque eadem veniente, urgetque priorem.

48. Such Tempests don't extend very far, (tho' their Bounds are uncertain) because as the Neighbouring Air gives way to them, they spend themselves in the progress of their Motion. Thus when a great Stone is cast into the Water, we see a great Agitation round about the place where it fell; but the more the Waves retire from the Center of Motion, the slower and less sensible they grow. And as such Motions don't last long in the Water, no more do they in the Air, for the same Reason.

49. Though there may be unusual Storms of Wind any where, when the Air and Vapours are driven together thereabout by contrary Winds; yet they are more frequent about the Caribbe Isles, especially when the Sun is vertical there, in June and August; for their Air being rarified by the Sun's heat, the usual Winds bring thither a vast quantity of Air and Vapours, which being crouded together in the Gulf of Caribbe, cause a great Æstuation about the neighbour Islands. When the Sun is on this side the Æquator, as we said before, the Air is more rarified thereabout, and it may so happen, that the S. S. E. Wind, which constantly blows beyond the Line, may sometimes transgress its Limits, and bring the Vapours of the Æthiopick Sea to the same place, where those of the Atlantick are already gather'd; which being kept in by the Shores of America, must necessarily be driven about the Caribbe Isles.

50. These are plausible Conjectures, but they cannot be affirm'd for certain Truths, till we are assur'd by good Observations, that at the Time of the Hurricanes, there is a Concourse of all the Winds from the adjacent Seas, about the Caribbe Isles; which is an Observation not easily made.

51. To come now to the common Phænomena of Winds, 1. The dry ones seem to be such as carry few Vapours along with them and therefore lick off the moist Particles from Bodies o're which they pass. Thus in Holland the North and East Wind with the intermediate Points, are drying: Because the cold Northern Sea yields but few Vapours, in Comparison of those which come from warmer Parts of the Ocean: And from thence towards the East are vast Tracts of Land, where the heat at Midsummer is but very small. But the other Winds, especially the Westerly are moist, because they issue from warm and vaporous Parts. The Western Ocean seldom fails to send us rainy Winds. However this Property varies according to the various Situation

b. II. of Countreys. * Pliny says, that in Africa the South Wind blows clear, and the N. E. is cloudy; because the dry Desert of Africa don't emit Vapours enough to produce any considerable Rains; whereas the Mediterranean, which lies to the N. E. of Africa, yields Vapours in great abundance.

52. 2. Such Winds gather Clouds, as blow from the Quarters where the Vapours arise, which in Conjunction with the Vapours of our own Region, fill the Air. On the other side, those Winds make fair Weather, which bring little Vapour along with them, and bear away that which hangs over us.

53. Winds are warm or cold, as the Countreys are from whence they blow. And therefore when a brisk Wind blows from a cold Quarter, it allays the heat of Summer, which is very tiresome in still Weather. Thus a quick Blast of a pair of Bellows will put out a Flame, which a gentle Blowing increaseth. For the quick Blast drives all the Flame to one side, where, except it find extraordinary Store of Aliment, it is stifled by the force of the incumbent Air: But a gentle Wind augments the Motion of the Flame every way, and makes it seize on more Parts of the Fuel.

54. Now because all the heat or cold of Wind, proceeds from the heat or cold of the Countrey whence it blows; therefore the same Winds are not or cold every where. Beyond the Line, they are just the reverse of what they are with us. Their cold Winds are from the South, as ours are from the North. And as our South-Winds are warm, for no other Reason but because they bring us an Air heated by the Sun, for the very same Reason, the North-wind are warm to our Antipodes.

55. From what has been said it is manifest enough, that the Sun is the cause of Wind, and Motion the cause of Vapours. But if we except those constant and periodical Winds which blow in some Seas, the limits of the rest cannot be determin'd, nor can we say when they will begin, or when they will end. For instance, we cannot give a reason, why an East Wind shall generally blow one Summer, and a West Wind another. Possibly the Reason of this might be discover'd, if for several Years together a nice Observation were made of the Winds, and their shiftings in several Countreys; for that which seems unconstant and irregular to us, might perhaps be found to follow certain Courses; at least we should know how far a rais'd Wind would continue its blast. But till such Experiments are made, we must rest satisfied with Conjectures.

56. There are some who fancy, that the Waters in the Bowels of the Earth are rarified into Vapours by the subterraneous Fires, and that those Vapours issuing out at the chinks of the Ground, create Wind. And because the Situation of Mountains is commonly such, as permits those Vapours to flow but one way, therefore, say they, the vehemence of the Wind is in such or such a Place. This they endeavour to make out by the Experiment of the Æolipyle, which is a Brass-ball with a Neck, in which there is a very slender Pipe opening into the Ball, thro' which they pour Water into the Cavity thus. First, They throw the Ball into the Fire, that the Air in it may be dilated, and go out at the slender Pipe aforesaid. Then they immerse it in cold Water, whereby the remaining Air is condensed, and makes room for the Water to enter. Which done, the Ball is put into the Fire again, and the Vapours issue out of it with great Violence like Wind.

57. But then they shew us no Place, whence the Matter of the Winds can come with so much force. They talk indeed of * Caves which are the Store-houses of the Winds; but if it were so, all places must be full of Caves, whereas we hear of but very few. Besides, in the Places where such Caves are, the same Winds would blow constantly, or however would seldom fail; but this is what was never found yet. So that we had better acknowledge, that the reason and peculiar Causes of the variable Winds are unknown to us; especially since they blow by Sea as well as by Land, as far as the out-bounds of the constant Winds. A larger or less quantity of Vapours, together with the change of Seasons, causes a ferment in the Air, this is plain; but the Reason why it should be so, is known to him alone who sees all the Air at one view, and knows the various Changes in it; which 'tis past Man's skill or ability to find out.

EUROPE

E U R O P E

OF the Name of Europe the Ancients tell many fabulous Stories, and make it deriv'd from a certain Daughter of Agenor King of Phœnicia, nam'd Europa, whom Jupiter falling in Love with, metamorphoz'd himself into a Bull, and swam with her on his Back to the Island Creet or Candy. But a little to palliate this Fable, the Poetical Part is taken away by others, and the Story told, That one Asterius a Cretan Captain, making War with the Phœnicians, carried away this charming Princess, and sail'd with her in a Ship call'd The Bull to Creet, where he married her, and had Issue Minos and Rhadamanthus, whom the Poets make two of the Judges of Hell. This Rape is by Historians judg'd to have happen'd about the Year of the World 1665. in the time of Gideon Judge of Israel.

But whether this Lady, or any other particular Person, or whether the small Province of Thrace, call'd Europa, gave Name to this part of the World, we must conclude with Herodotus, is utterly unknown. But whence soever the Name was deriv'd, it was call'd Europa by the Romans, and at this time l'Europa by the Italians and Spaniards, l'Europe by the French, and Europe by the English, but by the Turks, Rumeli or Alfrank, Frankoba by the Georgians, and Frankistan by the rest of the People of Asia.

It is bounded on the North by the Frozen Ocean; on the South by the Mediterranean Sea, which divides it from Africa; on the East by Asia, from which it is parted by the Archipelago, the Euxine or Black Sea, and the Palus Maotis, or Sea of Zabacha, and thence by a Line drawn from the River Tanais or Don, to the River Oby in Muscovy, and on the West it is bounded by the Atlantick Ocean.

Europe is seated between the 34th and 72 Degrees of Latitude, itude, and between the 8th and 10th Degree of Longitude, reckoning the first Meridian to pass through the Island of Tunisia; and contains in breadth from the North Cape to Cape Mesopotam in the Mediterranean, about 2000 Miles: And in length from Cape St Vincent in the West, to the Mouth of the River Oby in the East about 3000 Miles.

Altho' Europe be the least of the four Parts of the World it is however more considerable than any of them; being much to be preferred for the Mildness of the Air, the Fertility of the Soil throughout, the many Navigable Rivers, the great Plenty of Corn, Cattel, Wine and Oyl, and all Things necessary, not only for Subsistence but even for the Luxury of Human Life; but especially for the Beauty, Strength, Courage, Ingenuity and Wisdom of its Inhabitants; the Excellency of their Governments, the Equity of their Laws, the Freedom of their Subjects, and which surpasses all, the Sanctity of their Religion.

Europe was Peopled after the Flood, as is generally believed, by the Posterity of Japhet, who came from the lesser Asia over the Hellspont into Greece. Tho' others say, that those of Shem, passing by Land betwixt the Caspian-Sea and the Palus Meotis, went thro' Tartary and Siberia into Scandinavia, and thence afterwards into France, Germany, &c. Whether of those two Opinions be most to be credited, we know not: But be that as it will, Europe hath for many Ages been exceeding Populous, and her Inhabitants Illustrious for their Courage, Wisdom and Vertue; by which they Conquer'd the greatest part of Asia and Africa, and made those Parts subject to the two Empires of Greece and Rome. And in these latter Ages, almost one half of the Earth that was formerly unknown, hath been discover'd by Europeans, and possessed by the Colonies, they have sent thither.

The CHRISTIAN RELIGION is profess'd throughout all Europe, except that Part of it possess'd by the Turks. But by reason of the Innovations made by the Church of Rome, the Western Church is divided; Italy, Spain, France, part of Germany, and the Netherlands, with Poland, still following the Doctrine of the Church of Rome, whereas England, Scotland, Ireland, Denmark, Sweden, Norway, great part of Germany, the United Provinces, Switzerland, &c. have embraced the Reformation, and profess the Protestant Religion. And in Moscow, some parts of Poland, in Walachia, Moldavia, Podolia, Volhinia, and Greece, the Doctrine of the Eastern or Greek Church is follow'd.

For Learning and Arts the Europeans have been most renown'd: All the Scholastick Sciences they have brought to a much greater Perfection than either Asiatics or Africans ever did: And the Invention and Improvement of many useful and ingenious Arts, particularly Navigation, is wholly owing to the Genius and Industry of the Inhabitants of this part of the World.

The Languages of Europe are many, but are all deriv'd from these six Original ones, viz. The Greek, Latin, Teutonic or Old German, Celtick, Gothick and Sclavonick; different Dialects whereof, with accidental Additions, being the Languages of all the considerable Parts of Europe, except Tartary and Turky.

The Governments of Europe are mostly Monarchical, but exceedingly more easie and gentle than those of Asia and Africa.

In Europe are these Sovereign Princes and States, viz.
The Emperour of Germany.
The Emperour or Czar of Moscow.
The Grand Seigneur or Emperour of the Turks.
The Queen of Great Britain.
The King of Spain.
The King of France.

The King of Portugal.
The King of Sweden.
The King of Denmark.
The King of Poland.
The King of Hungary.
The Pope.
The King of Prussia.

Six Republicks, viz. 1. The State of Venice; 2. The States General of the United Netherlands; 3. The Cantons of Switzerland; 4. The Grisons; 5. The Republick of Genoa. And 6. The Republick of Lucca.

There are besides these, no less than 300 Subaltern Sovereign Princes in Germany, Italy, &c. who tho' they are Tributaries or Feoffees to the Emperour, or some other Superiour Prince, have Supream Authority in their own Estates: Of these there are both Spiritual and Temporal.

Of the Spiritual the most considerable are,
The Grand Master of Malta.

The Grand Master of the Teutonic Order in Germany.

The Three Spiritual Electors of the Empire, viz. The Archbishops of Mentz, Triers and Cologne.

The Archbishop of Salzburg, and Twenty Two Bishops in Germany.

The Grand Prior of Malta, who is also call'd, The Grand Prior of Germany.

Several Abbots, whereof the Abbot of Fulda in Germany hath the largest Territory

Several Provosties of the Church, whereof the most considerable is that of Berchtelsghaden.

Of the Temporal Princes there are Five Electors of the Empire, viz. The Duke of Bavaria, the Duke of Saxony, the Marquis of Brandenburg, the Count Palatine of the Rhine, and the Duke of Hanover.

The Arch-Duke of Austria.

The Great Duke of Tuscany.

Many Dukes; the most considerable whereof are

The Dukes of Savoy, Mantua, Modena, Parma, &c. in Italy

The Dukes of Wurtemberg, Luncenburg, Mechlenburg, Holftein, Lauenburg, Weimar, &c. in Germany. And

The Duke of Courland in Poland.

Several Marquisses, viz.

Of Baden, Durlach, Ohnsbach, and Culembach in Germany.

Several in Italy, whose Estates are of small Extent.

The Landgrave of Hesse Darmstat.

Several Princes, whereof the most considerable are

The Princes of Orange, Anhalt, Dombes, Monaco, Sofarin and Castiglione.

Divers Counts, the principal whereof are

The Counts Nassaw, Furstenburg, East-Frizeland, Henzelszen, Arenburg, &c.

Besides these, there are

The Cham of Tartary.

The Waiwoods of Transilvania, Walachia, Moldavia, and the Ukraine.

And the small Republicks of Geneva and Ragusa.

The Division of Europe into its different Regions will be seen in the following Description of them.

G R E A T B R I T A I N.

BRITAIN, Britannia, in General.

B R I T A I N, an Island large, populous and fruitful, is, in Longitude, about 15 Degrees and 50 Scruples; and in Latitude, in the North-part 59 Degree, 40 Scruples; but in the South about 50 Degrees and 10 Scruples. Among the Ancients it was look'd upon to be so considerable, that in their Writings they call'd it Insula Magna; and Caesar went yet higher, boasting, That he had found another World. By the best Estimate that can be taken, 'tis computed at about 1836 Miles in Compass, &c. from Carnes to the Land's-end, 912. from the Land's-end to the Kentish-foreland, foreland, 320. and from thence all along the Eastern-coast to Carbness, about 704. The Ancients differ exceedingly in their accounts of this Matter, but their Authority is not much to be heeded: For few of those Writers knew the Island, and those that did, had not yet such a near acquaintance with it, as to take its Dimensions with a tolerable exactness.

The FORM of it is Triangular, the Lands-end, the Kensilke-foreland and Carbness, shooting out into so many Promontories, and making the three Corners. It's Bound, the Sea, has several Names, adapted to the several Shores: On the North, 'tis called the Northern-sea; on the West, the Irish-sea; on the South, the Channel; and, on the East, the German-Ocean. This advantage of the Sea surrounding it, as 'tis a Security against Enemies, so also against the violent Colds to which the Climate would be otherwise expos'd: It supplies us both with Peace, and Health. For the Tides and constant Motions of the Sea send us in a softening sort of Vapour which qualifies the natural sharpness of the Air, even to that degree, that in some parts of France and Italy they feel more of the Winter than we in England.

The SOIL does, in a great measure, owe its Fertility to the same cause; the Vapours not only softening the Air, and by that means nourishing every thing that grows, but also furnishing us with easie Showers in their proper Seasons. Insomuch, that our Ancestors had a fancy, that this must needs be the Fortunate Islands, so much talk'd of by the Ancients; as having of all others the best claim to those agreeable Pleasures and Delights, with which they furnish'd that happy place. I know not whether it was, nor more the Courage and Vigour (observ'd to be in these Westerly Inhabitants) than any natural Cause, which gave rise to that Opinion, That the farther West, the Constitutions were more firm and the Courage greater.

That part of the Island which lies toward the Western Ocean; is mountainous, as in Cornwall, Wales, and also many parts of Scotland; but the inner Tracts are generally a plain, champion Country, abounding with Corn and Pasture. The most remarkable MOUNTAIN, is that continu'd Ridge which runs from South to North, dividing, as it were, the whole Island into the East and West parts, and is by Writers call'd the English Apennine.

The ISLANDS lie round it in great numbers; some single, as the Isle of White, the Isle of Man, &c. others as it were in Clusters, as the Cassiterides, the Orades, and other little Slips that are scatter'd all along the Coast of Scotland. It has on all sides very convenient Harbours, and is accommodated with navigable Rivers in abundance, which convey the Riches of the Sea and of Foreign Nations into the very heart of the Kingdom. Of all the rest, these three are by far the most considerable; the Tames, the Severn, and the Humber, which carry along with them into the Sea vast numbers of lesser Rivers. Their course, with the Towns and Cities they touch upon, are better represented in the Map, than they would be by an enumeration of Particulars.

The INHABITANTS of the several Parts, are of a different original. Those of Cornwall and Wales are in a great measure the Posterity of the Ancient Britains, who, upon the Invasions first of the Picts and then of the Saxons, betook themselves to those mountainous corners and out-skirts, and have ever since maintained both themselves and their Language too, against the mixture of Foreigners. Of late years indeed, the Cornish are come over to the English modes and ways of Living. and have begun to lay aside their ancient Tongue; which cannot perhaps be more plausibly attributed to any one thing, than the great number of Representatives they return to Parliament; for whom 'tis natural to carry back with them the Humours and Inclinations of the Court, and, at their return, to settle themselves in a method of Living agreeable to the Entertainments they meet with in their time of Attendance. But the Welsh have no such intercourse with the polite parts of the Kingdom; and so keep on in the old Channel, both as to Customs, Language, and other Circumstances of Life. The Scots are originally Irish, but not without a mixture of Picts, who (tho' they were subdued by the former, and fell under their Government could not yet be entirely cut off, any more than the Conquer'd usually are in other Kingdoms. Bede and our other Historians are very clear and positive in the matter, That the West-parts of Scotland were People from Ireland; and the Irish, which is their Language puts it beyond all dispute: But the exact time when this should happen, is a point the Learned still differ about, while the Natives are concern'd for their own Antiquity, and their Neighbours do not love to see them run up their Original too high. As for the rest of the Island, tho' the Britains were for many hundred years in full possession, and after that the Roman made a considerable figure among us; yet we can not well imagine there is much of the Blood of either Nation among us at this day. The Britains indeed may with some Reason value themselves upon their descent from the Romans, with whom, in such a vast compass of Time, they could not but have frequent Inter-marriages, and so incorporate themselves as were into one People. This they may insist upon, and by such a step be carried to the Trojans, (whom they are so fond of) with more reason and less vanity. But whoever considers, how the Foreign Wars under the later Emperors clear'd this Island of the Roman and how the prevailing power of the Saxons sweep off the miserable Britains, will have but a mean opinion of our Title to a Descent from either. 'Tis true we have more of the Roman Language to shew than the Britains, but we had it at second hand only from the Normans; whereas, the Remains they produce have been deriv'd to them from Age to Age, ever since their mutual Correspondence with that People. So that the Saxons, as far as we can go with a tolerable probability; and they, along with the Danes, (who for many years over-ran the whole Kingdom) and the Normans (who conquer'd it) are the great Ingredients of our Inhabitants at this day.

And as we are a mixture of the Northern Nation and of the French or Norman; so we seem to retain something of the HUMOUR and TEMPER of both, keeping a mean between the two. The French-man is brisk, gay and airy; the Hollander or German is unactive, heavy and unweildy; the English-man has neither so much of the first Qualities as carry him to Levity: nor of the second, as to make him fairly chargeable with Dulness. His Fancy does not out-run his Judgment, nor his Judgment drown his Fancy. This difference is very remarkable in particulars, War and Learning. In the first, what more notorious than the slowness of the German, the quickness of the French, and the settled Courage and Conduct of the English? In the second, nothing more apparent, than the Bulks of Lectures, and Comments, and Common-places, that the first has given us; the little Whimseys and pert Essays that have had from the second; and the solid Argument and substantial Matter which the last have sent into the World. The French, 'tis true, have done great Honour to Learning, under the protection of a Prince, who has establish'd a more lasting Name, by eminent Patronage to that, than by the progress of his Arms. But they have this advantage, that their Language has settl'd it self in most parts of Europe, and conveys the utmost extent of their Learning, as far as it reaches. Could but our English Tongue propagate it self into as many Corners of the World, or would the great Men among us make themselves Masters of the Roman Style, and so pen their Discourses in a Language universally known, our Books would undoubtedly make their own way: They would carry Instruction abroad, and bring Reputation to our own Kingdom. Our Divinity, particularly, as it is grave and substantial, so it is much courted and admired by Foreigners; insomuch, that of late years we have had great numbers of Germans, Swedes, Danes, and other Nations, who have travell'd into England upon no other design, but to inform themselves in our Methods of Preaching, and by learning the Language to be capable of receiving profit by our Writings.

The State of RELIGION, so far as we have any light from History, is in short thus. When Julius Cæsar came over, his short stay and small correspondence with the Natives gave him little opportunity of informing himself in their Affairs. But when he observes, that such of the Gauls as desired to be instructed in the Rites and Discipline of the Druids, came over into Britain for that purpose, 'tis plain that this was the Religion of the place. Nor need we build only upon that hint, after he has told us how at that time 'twas a current Opinion, that the Discipline of the Druids came originally out of Britain, and was thence transplanted into Gaul. This was their Religion, till the plantation of Christianity; for which their old Persuasion (which taught 'em to believe One God, and the Immortality of the Soul) may seem in some measure to have made way. How early it was introduc'd is a point which has been much disputed among the Learned. Some will have it, that Joseph of Arimathea sail'd from Gaul, and preach'd Christianity among them: But that, in several particulars, looks too like a piece of Monkish Forgery. The general Tradition is, that, at King Lucius's request, Pope Eusebius sent over Eluthanus and Meduanus to preach Christ; an Opinion which is handl'd at large by Archbishop Usher and Dr. Stillingfleet. The latter of these is inclin'd to have Christianity very early in this Island, proving it to have been planted by no less Hand than that of S. Paul. The Reasons alledg'd by the particular Patrons of these Conjectures, are too many and too large for this place: The Authors themselves have deliver'd 'em at large. Upon the Invasion of the Saxons, Christianity was confin'd to that poor corner which was the shelter of the Britains and nothing but Paganism prevail'd amongst that warlike Crew; till Pope Gregory sent over Austin the Monk, who, by his indefatigable Industry, laid such a foundation for Christianity; that his Successors gain'd ground apace, and in some Years propagated it over the whole Nation. Such was the pious Zeal of those times, that Religion quickly receiv'd encouragement from all Hands, and Kings and Princes honour'd it with Religious Houses and Churches in great numbers. Thus it went on without Interruption, till the Danes broke in upon them; who, from an innate barbarity and hatred to Religion, as well as a thirst after the Wealth and Riches of those holy Places, spar'd none of them that lay in their way, but burnt and plunder'd whatever they came near. Upon an accommodation with that People, it reviv'd and grew mightily; so that England, for number of Religious Houses, was perhaps as considerable as any part of Europe. Till King Henry the Eighth by Act of Parliament had them dissolv'd, when (quitting his subjection to the See of Rome) he made a Reformation of the Corruptions that had crept in among us and establish'd the Protestant Religion.

The first LANGUAGE in this Nation, was British, which (as the People and Religion) was driven off by the Conquerors, and succeeded by that of the Saxons. By the Danish Invasions, a mixture of that Tongue crept in among us; but did not cause any considerable Alterations, especially as to the Fundamentals, wherein they agree pretty much. But the Norman Conqueror, so soon as he was settl'd in his new Territories, quickly discourag'd both; and succeeded so well in his endeavours to establish the Norman, that before the end of Henry the Second, (what by contraction of the Old and interpolations of the New) we find the true native Saxon quite moulded into another form. For how should it be otherwise? Their publick Pleadings were in French, French was the Language of the Court, and Children were to learn no other Tongue. Thus, by degrees, (partly by reason of a fondness we have always entertain'd for French Eopperies, and partly because of a harshness that has been still fancy'd to run through our own Language) our Ancestors have endeavour'd to supply and refine it from the French, and every Age has been bringing in new Words, new Phrases, and new Dialects. So that now it makes a very great figure in our common Conversation and Writings; tho' we may still safely affirm, That the most full and significant Words in use among us, are the remains of the old Native Stock. And as it has been an unaccountable Levity in our Ancestors to affect Foreign Commodities when they had more substantial Wares at home; so would it become their posterity to look back into the Ruins of their original Language, and try whether they cannot meet with expressions of a stronger Meaning, than the loose and verbal Harangue of our Neighbours, agreeable indeed to the Humour of an effeminate Nation, but by no means suited to the masculine Genius of the English. This way of restoring our old Words has been of late practis'd, with good success, by an eminent Author.

SECT. II.

Of the ancient State of BRITAIN.

The name of Britannia and Insule Britannica were of a large extent among the Ancients, and us'd sometimes to signify all the Islands lying in this Western part of the World. But to restrain them to the more limited acception: Britain (as I observ'd before) was so little known to Julius Cæsar, that, as one says, He rather shew'd it to the Romans than subjected it to the Empire. So that his Accounts of it are short and lame, rather taken from report than any certain knowledge he could have of their Affairs. He tells us. That all the Sea-coasts over against Gaul were peopl'd from that Country, but that the inner parts were Aborigines, or sprung out of the Ground; which is a fair Confession that he knew nothing of the matter. Had he drawn the In-landers from the same Original as he did the Sea-coasts, he had light upon that by Conjecture which after Ages have found reason to advance into an establish'd Opinion. The British Language is so much of a piece with the old Gaulish (as near as we can judge by the broken remains that are left us of this latter;) the Customs of both Nations were so alike; and 'tis likewise so very natural to imagine, that after the propagation of Mankind, in their progress Westward and their quest after new Countries, out of Gaul they should come over into Britain, lying within Sight; that an impartial Judge cannot stick in this point. Let it suffice here barely to have recited the common Heads from which the Arguments for this Opinion are fetched; especially since the great Oracle of our Nation, Mr. Cambden, has prov'd every Particular with such a strength of Reason and Judgment as puts the matter beyond Dispute. I know the Britains are very proud of their original from the Trojans, and would fain have Brutus to have left his Name to the whole Island; but the same Author has considered the pretences to that Title so exactly, and convinc'd them so fully of their Mistake, that if any thing could, nothing need to be added to what he has left us. Claudius was the next Man that came among us, who by his own Conduct and that of Aulus Plautius, made his way into the more inward parts of the Island, by the defeat of the Britains. After these, Vespasian, Publius Ostorius, and Paulinus Suetonius, prov'd very troublesome to the Inhabitants, who all the while omitted no opportunities of returning their kindness, by surprizing the Roman Legions, entering into Confederacies against their new Governors, and more than once breaking out into actual Rebellion. But it was Agricola, who under Vespasian, Titus and Domitian, gave the finishing stroke to the Conquest of Britain; not by the same methods which his Predecessors had us'd, Hardships and Severities, but by the more gentle ties of an obliging Humour. 'Tis true, he was almost continually engaging one Party or other of them, for eight years together; but unless his good Temper had seconded this success of his Arms, though he might quell them for the present, yet he had left them in an entire hatred to the Roman Lords, and a full resolution to take up Arms upon the first opportunity. By which means, the Supplies necessary to defend the Garrisons, would have cost the Romans more than all the Revenue of the Island was worth. But he observ'd, he had a stubborn morose People to deal with; a Nation that was inur'd to all kinds of Hardship: and therefore instead of Threatnings (which could not work upon them) he betook himself to artificial Insinuations, and began to encourage the Roman Customs and Modes of living. This softn'd them by degrees, and melted them into Idleness and Luxury: so that in a short time, he had par'd off that aversion to the Romans, and happy was the Man that could imitate them most.

To the Romans succeeded the SAXONS, who came over upon this occasion. In the Reign of Valentinian the Younger, the Necessities of the Empire abroad, had oblig'd the Romans not only to recall most of their own Forces out of Britain, but also to deprive the Island of her own native Strength by their frequent Levies. The Scots and Picts (two Warlike People) laid hold of this opportunity to plunder the Frontiers, and make in-roads into the Territories of the Britains who by this time were quite dis-spirited by Slavery, and had suffer'd their old native Courage to dwindle into Eate and Cowardice. In this condition, all the refuge they had, was to fly to the Romans, who had neither left them Forces to protect them, nor (which is worse) a manly resolute Spirit to stand upon their own Guard. The Romans were too warmly engag'd nearer home, to relieve them; upon which they send the same request to the Saxons, who had convinc'd them of their Courage, by their frequent Piracies upon our Coasts, even while the Romans continu'd among us. So that we find under the later Emperors, the Comes Litoris Saxonici, or Count of the Saxon Shore, to have been a standing Officer, whose business it was to guard the Sea-coasts against their In-roads and Depredations. Upon this application, they come over, repel the Enemy, and are mightily pleas'd with their new Quarters, especially being a little straiten'd at home. In short, they begin to lay hold on all occasions of a Quarrel with the Britains, pretend they had not stood to their Terms; and carry'd on their Designs so successfully, that they never desisted till they had banish'd the old Inhabitants, and made themselves Masters of the greatest part of the Island.

The DANES about the year 800, though they had not so fair a pretence of coming over, yet by main force edg'd themselves in among the Saxons, and us'd them much at the same rate as that People had done the Britains. They robb'd and plunder'd, till they had forc'd them to a Composition, and had Lands assign'd them in several parts of the Kingdom. Nor would they be content with this; but made frequent Incursions into their Neighbours Territories, which occasion'd the raising of that sort of Tax call'd Danegelt, a Bribe to keep them from over-running the Kingdom. But neither did this do. Their Insolence was such, that the English could not long bear it; so, entering into a secret Plot, they made a general havoc of them in one single Night, putting them all to the Sword. At this, Suene, King of the Danes, was highly enrag'd, and to revenge the Injury, invaded England with a strong Army, and possess'd himself of the Crown; which was enjoy'd only by four Kings of that Race, and then return'd to the Saxons.

Scarce had the Saxons recover'd their ancient Rights and Government, but they fell into a worse Confusion, upon the Death of Edward the Confessor. He was an easie Prince, and rather inclin'd to attend the Duties of Religion than the Secular Affairs of his Kingdom. Leaving no Issue behind him, the Title to the Crown came to be contested by two very powerful Parties, who yet had neither of 'em a right to it; for Edgar Atheling was the only Man then living of the Saxon Line. But Harold Earl Godwin's Son took advantage of his tender years, and possess'd himself of the Throne. William Duke of Normandy, afterwards stiled the Conqueror, took these proceedings very heinously, imagining that by his relation to that Family, by virtue of the Confessor's Promise when he was banish'd into Normandy, and also Harold's obligation to see it discharg'd, he had fairer pretensions than any other. Whereupon he landed with a powerful Army, Conquer'd the English in a set Battle (wherein Harold was slain) and immediately took possession of the Government.

The Civil Government of BRITAIN.

But though these were distinct Kingdoms, yet still there was a Face of Monarchy in the Nation ; and the Prince that was most Powerful of the Seven, generally Lorded it over the rest, as if they had been only so many tributary Kings. For they were continually at War one with another, and the Conqueror always taking the Dominions of the Enemy into his own Kingdom, they all came at last into that of the West-Saxons, under King Egbert ; who by a publick Edict, order'd the whole Kingdom to be stil'd Engla-land, which we have now contracted into England. One of his Successors, presently upon this took the Title of King of Great Britain, and another that of Monarch of all Albion.

The

The King is Supreme in all Causes, both Ecclesiastical and Civil; having the same Power in Matters relating to the Church, that the Pope had, before this Island dispos'd his Jurisdiction under Henry the Eighth. But yet he cannot enact Laws singly and by himself, but must have the Concurrence of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and of the Commons assembled in Parliament, before any thing can pass into a Law. The Parliament does not meet but upon the more weighty Affairs of the Kingdom, and are both call'd and dissolv'd at the King's Pleasure, who is suppos'd to be Judge of the Exigencies of the Nation. This is the Supreme Court, wherein Causes are finally determin'd, and from which there lies no Appeal; whereas, Appeals are made to this from the other Courts.

The chief Courts are. 1. The King's Bench, so call'd, because the King us'd to sit there in Person; but now administers Justice by a Lord Chief Justice, and three more Judges, or as many as he shall think fit. 2. The Common Pleas (from determining Pleas between Subject and Subject) consists of a Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, and three other Judges to assist him. 3. The Exchequer (from a Table at which they sat;) where all Matters belonging to the King's Revenue are determin'd by the great Officers and Judges belonging to it, viz. The Lord Treasurer, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the Chief Baron, and four other Barons. 4. The Chancery, (so call'd from sitting within the Rails or Chancels;) instituted to moderate the Rigour of the Law, which by reason of an infinite number of unforeseen Circumstances that attend a great many Causes, is too often Oppression and Injustice. Hither, therefore, they make their Appeals, who think themselves injur'd by the Letter of the Law: And if it appears that they have Equity on their Side, the Judgments given upon strict Law are revers'd, and the Parties reliev'd. In this Court is the Lord Chancellor, or Lord Keeper of the Great Seal, and twelve Masters of Chancery, as Assessors, the chief whereof is the Keeper of the Rolls. 5. The Court of Admiralty, where Sentence is given in Marine Affairs, by the Admiral of England, a Judge, two Clerks, &c. 6. The Court of Requests (from the Petitions receiv'd there) managed by the Lord Privy Seal, the Masters of the Requests, a Clerk, and two or three Attorneys.

The Court of Wards and Liveries (from taking Cognizance of the Causes of Minors) and the Court of Star-Chamber (which was chiefly to restrain the Exorbitances of Great Men, and punish Misdemeanors, &c.) are both abolish'd.

Besides these Courts, the King, for the Ease of the Subject, sends down two Judges into each County; the one of Life and Death, and the other of Nisi Prius, who are to determine Causes without putting the Parties to the Trouble and expence of giving Attendance at the Superior Courts; except where the Case is weighty and difficult, and then it is referr'd to a Trial at Westminster: And as these Circuits were contriv'd for the Ease of the Nation in general; for the Peace and good Government of each particular County, the King has Lord Lieutenants, whose Care it is that the State suffer no Damage. Each County also has its Sheriff, who is to get up the Publick Revenues, to attend the Judges, to take care that such as are condemn'd be duely executed, &c. And several Justices of the Peace, who may Commit for Felonies, Trespases and other Misdemeanours.

Before the Conquest, we find that England, according to its several Branches, was govern'd by three sorts of LAW'S, the West-Saxenlage, the Danelage and the Merchanlage. For as the Authority, which the first and last of these bore in the Hierarchy, was sufficient to establish their own Laws in their Neighbouring Countries; so the Power to which the Danes arriv'd, did effectually engage such Places as they over-ran most, in the Use of their Customs and ways of Living. But upon William the Conqueror's coming in, these Laws were in a great measure laid aside. At first, he intended to have brought in the Norman Usages, and to have establish'd them here entire; till he found the Humour of the English were much set upon their own Laws, and so was induced, from a prudent Regard to his own Safety, only to Reform, Alter, Add, &c. but so, that the old Body was his Foundation. Tho' in his whole management of Affairs, he omitted no Opportunities either of Force or Insinuation, to discourage the establish'd Customs, and to wean them from the Affection they had to the Usages of their Fore-fathers. Thus, he won upon them by degrees, till he had confirm'd himself in his New Conquests, and in an absolute Power, or something that look'd very like it; especially if we take an Estimate from his Arbitrary Proceedings towards the English, rather than from his fair Words, Contracts and Promises; which Conquerors, when they find them inconsistent with their Designs, seldom want either Inclination or Pretences to break and cast off. But the succeeding Kings (whether for want of Policy, or, Courage, or both) found it hard to maintain themselves in that absolute manner of Government, and to complete what their Predecessor had begun. For the People began to insist upon their Liberties (whether justly or unjustly. I shall not determine; 'tis a Controversie has cost Pains and Paper enough already) omitted no Advantages of Wars abroad or Disturbances at home, whereby they might gain Ground and extort new Privileges. More especially in the Reigns of King John and Henry III. they broke into open Wars, for the Redress of Grievances; and brought them to such Straits, that they were glad to come off by admitting the Nobility and Gentry into a nearer Share of the Government. Whereupon, the Great Charter, call'd Magna Charta, was granted, and Statutes began to be made according to the Necessities of the Kingdom; by which, and the Common Law, or the common Usages of the Nation, our Law-Courts proceed at this Day, in their Judgments and Decrees.

SECT. IV.

The Ecclesiastical Government.

The Church of England is govern'd by two Archbishops and twenty five Bishops. The Archbishop of Canterbury is Primate of all England; the Archbishop of York is Primate of England, but not of all England: A Controversie which caus'd many hot Disputes and Quarrels, but was at last determin'd in favour of Canterbury, against all the Pleas and Arguments brought by the other for Independency and Freedom. The Archbishopricks and Bishopricks, with their Extent and Jurisdiction, will best appear from the following Scheme.

As to the Precedency of these, the Archbishop of Canterbury is first, York second, London third, Durham fourth, Winchester fifth; and the rest according to order of Consecration.

As in the Civil Government, the Parliament is the Supreme Court, so is a Synod in the Ecclesiastical; call'd among us a Convocation: Wherein Matters of Doctrine and Discipline are from time to time stated and determin'd, and by the King and Parliament pass'd into Laws.

The chief Courts of the Archbishop of Canterbury are,

1. The Court of Arches, where the Dean of the Arches sits as Judge.
2. The Court of Audience, where all Complaints, &c. are received.
3. The Prerogative-Court, where the Business of Wills is handled.
4. The Court of Faculties, where the Rigour of the Canon-Law is moderated.
5. The Court of Peculiars, wherein is lodg'd a Jurisdiction over Parishes exempt from the Bishop of the Diocess.

Besides, every Bishop holds his Court within his own Diocess, and takes Cognizance of Excommunication, Censures, and other things relating to the Church.

SECT. V.

The Divisions of England.

The most remarkable Divisions of England, are these three. 1. That of the Romans into Britannia prima, secunda, Maxima Caesariensis, Valentia, Flavia Caesariensis. The Bounds of these several Branches are very uncertain, and can only be gathered from Conjecture. Britannia prima seems to have been the South Part of Britain. Secunda probably was Wales. Maxima Caesariensis and Valentia seem to have been those Countries that lay upon the Frontiers of Scotland. And Flavia Caesariensis was, likely enough, the Heart of England.

2. That of the Saxons, into seven Kingdoms; whereof we have given an Account, under Sect. 3. concerning the Civil Government.

3. That of King Alfred into Hundreds (call'd in some Parts of England, Wapentakes) and Countries.

Besides these, the Romans branch'd it into so many several People, the Names whereof are generally of a British Original, relating either to the Figure of the Place, the Nature of the Soil, or the Disposition of the Inhabitants. This Division cannot be more conveniently represented, than in a Table along with the Counties of England, as they stand at this Day, and fall within the Bounds of the several People.

CORNWALL.

THE County of CORNWALL has its Name from lessening by degrees into a sort of Horn: which very exactly answers the Nature and Form of that Tract; as may be seen either by the General or Particular Maps. As it lies out from the rest of the Kingdom, so had it formerly its Laws and Usages distinct from England. But 'tis by degrees reconcil'd, not only to the same Laws, but even to the same Language. Now, few or none among them know any thing of the old Cornish; having a great fondness for the Englisk Tongue and Modes of Living.

Their greatest Commodity is Tin; which has given occasion to an Opinion that the Phanicians traded thither, and left Name not only to the County in General, but to many Particular Places in it. But whatever Advantage might be reap'd from the Mines anciently (which probably was very considerable;) 'tis certain that the Earls of Cornwall have been prodigiously enrich'd by the Revenues arising from them. Nor could it be well otherwise; all Europe fetching their Supplies, at least the greatest share of them, from these Parts. Which vast In-comes have induc'd the Earls to grant them large Privileges; to procure them such Charters from Time to Time as might tend to the Improvement of their Trade or Convenience of Management, and to erect Courts and constitute Officers, in a Method agreeable to the Nature of the Employment, and the Humour of the People.

'Tis observable, That through the whole County, abundance of Towns are scatter'd, which have their Names from Irish Saints, who had come over into these Parts; and on account of their Piety and Religious Course of Life had a wonderful Veneration paid them. And after their Deaths, the particular Places wherein they had spent their Time in Devotions and Retirement, were consecrated to their Names, and had signal Pieces of respect paid them by their Neighbours.

The most Remarkable Places are

{	Falmouth,	{	Fowey,
	Launceston,		Saltash,
	Truro,		S. Columbs.
	Wadebridge,

Falmouth, a Town of considerable Trade, which the Convenience of the Harbour brings to it: 'Tis a Port very Large, and withal Safe, by reason of the Creeks on all sides, which protect it against the Violence of Winds and Storms. The two Forts, one on each Side, viz. S. Maudit's and Pendinas, render it a Place of yet greater Strength and Security.

Launceston or Leunston, on the East-side of the County (call'd in Domesday Launstaveron, from a College there dedicated to S. Stephen) is two Towns, now grown into one, and is become so considerable that the Affizes are always held in it.

Truro, a Mayor-Town, suppos'd to be so call'd from its three Streets; but especially considerable in those Parts for the more than ordinary concern that it has in the Stannaries.

Wadebridge, about five miles from Padstow, is remarkable for a Bridge of seventeen Arches, the largest by much in the whole Country.

Fowey, a Haven on the South-side of the County, remarkable for Sea-Fights; and has in Memory of them, for its Arms, a Compound of those of the Cinque-Ports.

Saltash, on the West-side of the River Tamar, a Town conveniently seated for Trade, well stor'd with Merchants, and endow'd with good Privileges.

S. Columbs, not far from the Irish-Sea, tho' a Place of no great Trade or Resort, is made famous by its Relation to S. Columba, a very pious Woman, from whom it had the Name.

Ancient Places.

Voluba seems to have left its Name in our present Falmouth before-mentioned.

Belerium can be no other than the Land's-End; call'd also by Ptolemy Ἀρμίσσαρον or Arwestaum.

Cenionis ostium, cannot any where be plac'd more probably than at that large Port, the Convenience whereof we have describ'd under Falmouth.

Ocrinum (probably so call'd from Ochr, an Edge) seems to be that Promontory, call'd at this Day, the Lizard.

Uzella seems to have left some Remains of its Name in the present Lestwithiel, which was a Place of good Note and Trade, till the Sands stopping up the River, hindred Ships from coming up to it.

Tamara is the River which parts this County from Devonshire, and likewise a Town upon it, now call'd Tamaraton.

Things Remarkable.

Biscaw-woune (near S. Burians) a Place so call'd where are nineteen Stones set in a Circle, which by some are imagin'd to have been erected in memory of a Victory. But if we compare them with others of the same Nature, in other parts of the Kingdom, to imagine them Funeral Monuments, will perhaps be a more plausible Conjecture.

Main-Amber (near Pensans) a stone of a prodigious Bigness, which yet was so plac'd that one might move it with a Finger. In the late Civil Wars it was thrown down.

Other-half-stone (not far from S. Neot's;) an Inscription, with large barbarous Letters, the Reading whereof implies it to have been a Funeral Monument. See Camden's Brit. Engl. p. 9.

Wring-cheese; near this Place, is a large Stone like a Cheese, and so plac'd between some others, that it seems to be press'd by them.

Hurlers, at a little distance, is a square Set of Stones so call'd from an Opinion advanc'd by the common People, that they are so many Men chang'd into Stones for hurling the Ball on Sunday; an Exercise to which they have been always famous. But we need not acquiesce in their Fancies, since it appears plain enough, that these (as well as many others in this County) were Funeral Monuments; from a Cross discover'd upon one of them, by an ingenious Gentleman.

DEVONSHIRE.

AS Devonshire, in the Time of the Romans was included under the same common Name, Danmonii, with its Neighbour Cornwall; so in after-Ages did it share in several Privileges and Advantages. Particularly in those of the Tin-mines, which it had in great abundance; as the four Stannary-Courts, and the Officers belonging to them do plainly evince. Nay, by the best Computations which can be drawn from the Registers and Publick Papers belonging to each County, it appears that this afforded a greater Plenty than Cornwall. And that not only of Tin, but also of Silver; Mines whereof were discover'd about Comb-Martin, in the Time of Edward I. and did great Service to King Edward III. towards carrying on the French Wars.

The Soil of it self is Lean and Poor; but they improve it strangely, by a sort of Sea-Sand, which they sprinkle upon it: And where that is scarce, they make use of Marle, Lime, and burnt Turf.

The more considerable Towns are,	{	Taustock,	{	Exeter,
		Plimouth,		Barnstaple,
		Torneffe,		Topesham,
		Torbay,		Okehampton.
		Tiverton,

Taustock, adjoyning to Cornwall, is not at present remarkable for either Wealth or Buildings; but receives all its Glory from the old Abbey, and the Laudable Custom (while that stood) of reading Saxon Lectures, in order to keep up the Knowledge of our old Mother-Tongue.

Plimouth, a flourishing Town, occasion'd by the Convenience of its Harbour, for the Reception of great Ships. Which the Government observing, has pitch'd upon it as the most convenient Place in those Parts, for the Building of Ships, and has accommodated it with a Dry-Dock, capable of a First-Rate-Ship, a Basin before it of above two hundred Foot square, and Houses for Officers, Stores, &c. in proportion. They had a Mayor granted them by Henry VI. who governs the four Wards, into which the Town is divided; whereas before they were govern'd by four distinct Captains (for they so term'd them) and their Inferior Officers. The Place is eminent for the Birth of Sir Francis Drake.

Torneffe, upon the River Dert, was formerly, a Town of great Note, and accordingly had very considerable Privileges granted by the Kings of England. The Condition of it at present, will not bear the Character which it formerly had.

Torbay, upon the Eastern Coast, has been very remarkable and much talk'd of for the Landing of the Prince of Orange, the late King William III. on Nov. 5th. 1688.

Tiverton, upon the Ex. is remarkable for a good Free-School, and for its Woollen-Trade, which very much enriches the Inhabitants.

EXETER, the most considerable Place in all these Parts, stands upon a gentle Hill, and is encompass'd with a Ditch and very strong Walls. That the Romans knew it, is plain from the Itinerary of Antoninus, which begins here. The Saxons came then into the entire Possession of it, when Atheistane turn'd out the Britains, who had not till that Time solely enjoy'd it, but had the Liberty of Living in common with the Saxons. As the Kings of England have endow'd it with many Privileges, so has it suffer'd very much from Sieges: Notwithstanding all which, it might have been more considerable than it is at this day, if the Wears of Topesham did not hinder Ships of Burden from coming up to the City, as they formerly did. On the East-Side stands the Cathedral, built by King Atheistane, and by Edward III. honoured with the Title of an Episcopal See.

Barnstaple, on the Irish-Sea, is a neat Town, govern'd by a Mayor, two Aldermen, and a Common-Council of twenty four. 'Tis a Place of good Trade, so that the greatest part of the Inhabitants are Merchants; and is pretty eminent for a Bridge built by one Stamford, a Citizen of London.

Topesham, a Town near Exeter, had its Rise from the Misfortune of that Place: for upon the Obstructions of the River Ex, made by Edward Courtney, Earl of Devonshire, upon a Displeasure conceiv'd against the Citizens; this began to be a Place of Resort, where the Vessels landed, and from whence the Lading was carry'd by Land to Exeter. But in the Time of King Charles II. such effectual Endeavours were made towards the removing of those Damms, that now they carry Lighters of the greatest Burthen up to the City-Key.

Okehampton, so call'd from the River Ock, upon which it stands, is a considerable Market-Town, incorporated by King James I.

Ancient Places.

Isca, mention'd by Ptolemy, is so plainly convey'd to us in the present Ex, call'd by the Britains Isca; that there's no place of doubt, but this is the same River.

Isca Danmoniorum, is our Exeter.

Moridunum, tho' it has left nothing of the Name, seems yet to have its Meaning preserv'd in a Sea-Coast-Town, call'd at this Day Seaton: For Mor is Mare, and Dunum a Town.

Herculis Promontorium is easily discovered by the present Name Hirty-point; of which no tolerable Reason can be given, unless we allow it to be a Corruption from that old Name.

Things Remarkable.

Lay-well, is a Well near Torbay, which in the Compass of an Hour, ebbs and flows several Times; bubbling up now and then like a boiling Por. The neighbouring People look upon it to be Medicinal in some sort of Fevers.

At Withicombe, in a Storm of Thunder and Lightning (14 Car. I.) a Ball of Fire came into the Church, while they were at Divine Service, which kill'd three Persons and wounded sixty two; and besides, did Damage to the Value of 300 l. and upwards.

And at Crews-Morthard, in the same County, a like Storm happen'd, which melted the Bells, Lead and Glas; and was so violent, that it rent the Steeple: This was in the Year 1689.

The Organ in the Cathedral at Exeter is accounted the greatest in England, the largest Pipe being 15 Inches Diameter.

At Norb-Taunton, there is a Pit of ten Foot deep, out of which there sometimes springs up a little Brook, that continues for many Days together.

The Common People tell you, That it presages some Publick Calamity ; but whether the particular Times, at which it has been observed to rise, will justify that Interpretation, I know not.

D O R S E T S H I R E.

TH^O the County of Dorset lies much upon the Sea, yet have they not those Advantages from Navigation, or such Conveniency of Harbours, as other Counties that have less Sea-Coast. Which possibly may be owing, in some measure, to the fruitfulness of their Soil, which both employs the Inhabitants, and supplies them with all Necessaries of Life ; whilst Parts that are more barren send the Natives to Sea, both to employ their Time and provide a Maintenance.

The more considerable Towns { Lyme, Dorchester,
 Shirburn, } { Shaftesbury,
 Blandford, Winburn.

Lyme, a Place of good Trade and well-stocked with Merchants, lies upon the Sea-Coast, near the Borders of Dorsetshire. Navigation is that which has raised it from a very mean Condition ; for the Convenience whereof they have built a very remarkable Peer, which requires a great Sum of Money yearly to maintain it. This Advantage supplies it with Wealth at home ; but, that which has given it a Name abroad, was the Landing of the Duke of Monmouth, upon which occasion we frequently meet with it in the Histories of those Times.

Dorchester, the Place from which the whole County had its Name, must, for that Reason, have been formerly of much more note than it is at present. Its Decay probably is owing to the Revolutions of Wars ; for that it has been a Place of Action, we learn both from our Histories and the Remains of Antiquity they still meet with. Of late Years it seems to have recovered itself ; being thought fit to have the Privilege of a Mayor and Aldermen bestow'd upon it by King Charles I.

Shirburn, upon the Edge of Somersetshire, derives its ancient Glory from being an Episcopal See ; and its present from Populousness, and their improvement of the Woollen Manufacture.

Shaftesbury, seems to have been of considerable Note in the Times of the Saxons ; in whose Histories we find it frequently mention'd. That it was built by King Alfred, appears by a Stone dug up out of the old Ruins ; the Reading whereof Malsbury has convey'd to us. It grew so considerably, that about Edward the Confessor's Time it had no less than 104 Houses.

Blandford (upon the Stour) a pretty Market-Town, which owes its Beauty to a Fire that happen'd in it, and burnt it down ; after which it was nearly rebuilt.

Winburn, upon the same River, is seated at the Foot of a Hill ; being pretty large and populous. In the more early times it was famous upon the account of Religion, and the Nunnery there ; But afterwards for being a Seat of War in the Danish Commotions.

In this County, we must also observe Portland, an Island of about seven Miles Circumference, guarded with a continual Ridge of Rocks running round it. The Inhabitants are not many ; but the Soil affords good store of Corn and Pasture.

And on the East-side of the County, is Purbeck, which is of a contrary Nature, being mostly Heath and Wood ; but well stock'd with Fallow-Deer.

Ancient Names.

Durnovaria, mention'd by Antoninus in those Parts, can be no other than the present Dorchester, whether we respect the Name, the Distances, or the Remains of Roman Antiquity, which they trace out.

Vindogladia, also discovers it self in the present Name of Winburn ; the first Syllable whereof is manifestly a Relick of the old Denomination : And the second (which implies a River) does very well answer the Gladia, deriv'd from the British Cledian, Swords ; by which Expression they sometimes denoted their Rivers.

Things Remarkable.

In the Isle of Portland, Wood is so very scarce that their common Fuel is Cow-Dung dried hard by the Heat of the Sun ; which being so order'd makes a clear Fire, without any offensive smell.

Maiden-Castle, near Dorchester, is a most stately Piece of Antiquity, and appears from the Form, Contrivance, and other Circumstances, to have been a Work of the Romans.

White-Hart-forest, on the Borders of Somersetshire, has its Name from a White-Hart, kill'd by a Gentleman of this Country, against the express Order of King Henry III. For which fact, there is yearly paid into the Exchequer a pecuniary Mulct, call'd White-hart-Silver.

It was a pleasant Humour, and a very lucky Discovery, that happen'd some Years ago near Winford-Eagle. Digging a Barrow or Tumulus, the Workmen came to an Oven (with an Urn in it) and one of them putting forward his Hand, in hopes of some farther Discoveries, found it too hot for him to hold it long there. 'Tis probably owing to some Mineral ; the same natural Heat being commonly discover'd by the Miners.

SOMERSETSHIRE.

THE County of Somerset is not so well accommodated with Harbours, as might be expected from a Tract of Ground that lies so much to the Sea. In some Parts it is exceeding Marshy ; but in others affords plenty of good Corn and Pasture.

The more considerable Towns are, BRISTOL, Bridgwater, BATHE, Somerton,
WELLS, Taunton.

BRISTOL is parted by the River Avon, which divides this County, for some Miles together, from Gloucestershire. Its Wealth and Glory cannot be of any great Antiquity, because we find little or no mention of it in the early Times of the Saxons. No, nor in the Danish Plunders neither ; which few Places escap'd, that had Riches enough to expose them to the Depredations of that People. But after the Conveniency of the Place for Trade with most Parts of Europe, was observ'd and understood ; the Inhabitants seem to have flock'd thither, and by their good Success and Commerce to have improv'd it to that Degree of Wealth and Beauty, it may justly glory of at this Day. Their Buildings are fair, the Inhabitants numerous, and their Churches and publick Edifices very Beautiful. To these Advantages, a new Honour was added by King Henry VIII. who made it a Bishop's See, upon the Suppression of the Monasteries, and gave it for its Diocess the City of Bristol (a County incorporate by it self) and the County of Devon, formerly belonging to Salisbury.

BATHE stands upon the same River, and has the same Dignity of a Bishop's See, but in other respects falls far short of Bristol. It lies low in the middle of a Range of Hills, wherewith it is very much fortified. This natural Strength of the Place was, no doubt, the Reason of all those Contests, which the Saxons and Britains had about it, in their Engagements in those Parts. Its Name and Reputation have both the same Original ; the hot Springs, I mean, arising there, which many Ages have known, but none have experienc'd so Medicinal as the present. Great Numbers of the Nobility and Gentry flock thither in the Summer-time, and the Physicians begin to frequent them more than ever : Which Concourse from all Parts, makes it a little strange that the City should not increase more in Wealth and Buildings. As it affords Remedies to the Sick, so does it give a great Diversion to the Antiquaries, by shewing a number of Ancient Monuments and Inscriptions, set up in the Walls. That it enjoys the Title of a Bishop's See, was occasioned by Joannes de Villula, Bishop of Wells removing his Seat thither, about the Year of our Lord, 1088. Whereupon, to compose a Quarrel which had risen between the Monks of Bathe and Canons of Wells, about the Right of Election ; it was agreed, among other things, That the Bishop should take his Title from both Places ; tho' by others 'tis affirm'd that for some time after, he was only call'd Bishop of Bathe.

WELLS, so call'd from the Wells and Springs it, is situated at the Bottom of Mendip-Hills. It was made a Bishop's See by Edward the Elder, about the Year 905, and the Bishop kept his Residence in it, till John de Villula, the Sixteenth Bishop, having purchas'd the Town of Bathe of King Henry I. transferr'd it thither. The Place is populous, and very beautiful, whether you respect the Publick or private Buildings.

Bridgwater (corruptly so call'd from Bugh-Walter, as appears by the ancient Records) lies upon the River Parret, and is a large and well-peopled Town.

Somerton, as inconsiderable as it is at present, was once the chief Town in this County ; as may be reasonably inferr'd from its giving Name to the whole ; and from the frequent mention of it in our ancient Histories.

Taunton, a Town seated upon the River Thone, which gives it the Name, is very neat and beautiful in it self ; but render'd much more agreeable by the delicate Prospect it gives us of green Meadows, and Numbers of pretty Villages all round.

Ancient Places.

Uzella, mention'd by Ptolemy, is an Aestuary on the West Side of this County, occasion'd by the Concourse of two large Rivers, emptying themselves into the Sea about the Stert-point.

Ischalis, appears from the Coins and other Marks of Antiquity, that are dug up at Ivelchester (a Town upon the River Ivel) to have been seated at that Place.

Aque Solis, by the Course of the Itinerary, and the Import of the Word, can be no other than our Bathe ; especially, if we add to these Evidences, the Monuments mention'd to be found, in the Description of that Place.

Things Remarkable.

Ochie-hole, a remarkable Cave in Mendip-hills, of a vast length ; where they discover several Wells and Springs.

The Serpent-Stones are common at Cainsham near Bristol.

Abundance of Diamonds are about the Rock near Bristol ; being lodg'd very artificially in a hollow sort of Flint.

A Monument of large Stones, not unlike that of Stone-Henge in Wiltshire, is at Stanton-drew in this County ; but being interrupted with Buildings and Enclosures, it is not so much taken notice of as it might otherwise deserve.

Cheddar-Cheeses (so call'd from the Place near Wells, where they are made) are so large as sometimes to require more than one Man to set them upon the Table.

The Elvers at Bristol is a Dish perhaps not to be met with elsewhere : 'Tis a sort of Eel, which at a certain Time of the Year, swims upon the Surface of the Water in great Numbers. These they skim up in small Nets, and by a peculiar way of Dressing, bake them into little Cakes ; and so fry, and serve them up.

Amongst the Rarities of this County, Glastenbury may justly be reckon'd ; which by the Remains of Religion and its venerable Aspect, affords abundance of Pleasure to a curious Admirer of Antiquities.

W I L T S H I R E.

AS the County of Wilt was for many hundreds of Years almost a constant Scene of Action in the Wars between the Saxons and Britains, and afterwards between the several Saxon Kings; so does it afford greater remains of Antiquity than perhaps any County in England can pretend to. 'Tis divided into North and South; and agreeable to this Division, is of a different Soil and Aspect. The first abounds with little Hills, which are render'd very entertaining by the small Rivers gliding between; and naturally produces much Wood. The latter is a Champain Fruitful Country.

Places of greatest Note, are { Salisbury,
Malmesbury,
Devizes, Marlborough,
Wilton.

Salisbury is two-fold, the Old and New. Old Sarum was seated upon a high Hill (as most of our ancient Towns here in Britain are observed to have been) being a Place chiefly intend'd for Strength, and a defence against the Enemy, but what was a security against Foreigners, prov'd a Grievance to the Inhabitants; who found the inconveniences of the Garrison Soldiers to be such, that they seem'd Intolerable. To remedy this Evil, and to accommodate themselves with the convenience of Water (the want whereof had been a great inconvenience in their old Quarters) they began to remove into the lower Grounds in the time of Richard I. where they laid the Foundation of New Sarum. And immediately Richard the Bishop, began a most stately Cathedral Church which at this day has deservedly a name among the most considerable Structures of this Island. The Bishops See was remov'd to Salisbury, upon the uniting of Shrewsbury and Wilton into one, by Heimannus, about the year 1056. But though that may be of advantage to the place, and set it somewhat forward in its growing condition, yet it could never have arriv'd to that Degree of Wealth, Populousness and Splendor, if the Western Road had not been turn'd that way, by the Authority of some who was nearly concern'd for its Prosperity. Their want of Water was amply supplied by their remove from the higher Grounds; for now every Street has its little Rivulet running through it.

Malmesbury, though at present a handsom Town and well maintain'd by the Cloathing-Trade, was yet formerly much more considerable on account of its Monastery. For Maildulpbus an Irish-Scot leading here an Hermit's Life, left behind him a Scholar (Aldhelmus) a very eminent Man, who built a stately Monastery; whereupon the place was call'd Mealdelmesburygh, and by contraction Malmesbury; which Name seems to be a compound of Maildulpbus and Aldhelmus, the Master and the Scholar.

Devizes, anciently very famous for a strong Castle, the Government whereof has been thought an Hononable Post by Persons of the best Quality. But now that is quite Demolish'd; and the advantage of Peace hath given it what is much more valuable, a good Trade, a thriving People, and plenty of every thing. It is Govern'd by a Mayor, Recorder, &c. and hath in it two great Parishes.

Marlborough, upon the River Kenmet, runs along the side of a Hill: It was formerly eminent for its Castle, and it is mention'd in our Law-books and Courts of Justice, upon account of the Statute made here for the suppression of Riots, in 32 Henry III. call'd to this day Statutum de Marlborough. The Keep of the old Castle is figur'd into a Mount of curious contrivance, by his Grace the Duke of Somerset, the Owner of it.

Wilton does not require a mention upon account of any Figure it makes at this Day, but may justly call for that respect, as being once the chief Town in the whole County. And it might have improv'd as well as its Neighbours, had it been allow'd the advantage of the Western Road, which at first it enjoy'd. But when that was turn'd through Salisbury, the rise of one was the ruin of the other; and this Place has ever since been dwindling by degrees into that low condition we see it in at present.

Ancient Places.

Cunetio may very probably be sett'd at Marlborough; the Castle there appearing from Roman Coins to be of Roman Antiquity.

Sorbicdunum is agree'd upon by all Authors to be Old Sarum. However they may differ about the original of the Name, they are unanimous in their Opinion of its Situation.

Verlucio keeps something of its Name in the present Worminster, (a Town lying upon the little River Drer-ril;) for by changing the (v) into (w) which without any straining may be done, and adding the Saxon Termination minster, we have the Name complete.

Things Remarkable.

Wansdike, or Wodensdike, (so call'd from the Saxon God Woden) is a wonderful Ditch crossing this Shire from East to West. Whenever it was cast up, the design seems to have been a Boundary or Fence, either to distinguish Territories, or to be a guard against the Enemies in this Frontier Country.

Stone-henge, is a Monument so remarkable, that it has engag'd many Learned Pens in conjectures about its Founder's Design and Antiquity. The Opinions contain'd in three or four separate Books written upon that Subject, are crown'd up, and the whole matter Stated in the new Edition of Camden's Britannia, Page 108, whither I refer the Reader.

The Barrows upon Salisbury Plain, lying scatter'd here and there, afford good entertainment to a curious Traveller; and the rather, because they are of several Forms and Figures, which perhaps in other places is not so common.

HAMSHIRE.

OF all the Counties which border upon the Sea, there are few that have the Advantage of so many Creeks and Havens, as Hamshire. By which means the South part is abundantly supplied with all the conveniencies the Sea affords, Through the whole they have good Store of Corn, and plenty of Wood in all Parts; but what they are most remarkable for, is their Bacon, which is reputed to be the best in the Kingdom, and accordingly is sold into all parts.

Towns more considerable, Winchester,
Southampton,
Portsmouth,
Basingstoke,
Andover,
Christ-Church.

Winchester, whether we consider its ancient or present condition, may deservedly lay claim to the first Place. For as it was of good Note in the times of the Romans, so under the Saxon Government was it the Seat of the West-Saxon Kings. But that which has chiefly secur'd its flourishing condition, is the Bishop's See, settl'd there very early by King Alfred the Saxon; and (which is more) never remov'd from its first Foundation, as most of its Neighbours have been, to the great damage of the Places from which they were drawn. This favourable concurrence of Circumstances was encreas'd by Edward III. when he settl'd here the Staple for Cloth and Wool. The Cathedral hath been from time to time enlarg'd and put under the protection of several Tutelar Saints. But its greatest Glory, is the College built here by William of Wickham, Bishop of this See; which supplies both Church and State with great numbers of Learned Men. The Royal Palace began by King Charles II. is very stately and magnificent; and the Hospital built by Bishop Morley for 10 Ministers Widows, is a work of great Charity and Goodness.

Southampton within these hundred years was a rich, populous, beautiful Place; but now by the loss of its Trade, all this Finery is gone, the Buildings decay'd, the Town poor, and the Inhabitants thin. It ought not however to be omitted amongst the considerable places of these parts, both upon account of its former Eminency, and also for the Figure it still bears in our Naval Affairs.

Portsmouth, after it was by Queen Elizabeth completely Fortified with new Works, became a place of great Note and Resort, in times of War especially: but in times of Peace, the Trade it has will hardly maintain it in the same Grandeur. And as the Place is of great importance to the Nation by its Strength, and Works of the best Contrivance; so is it of great consequence to our Fleets, being furnish'd of late years with Docks and all other necessities for building and repairing Ships of the biggest Rates.

Basingstoke is a well frequented Market, upon the High-Road.

Andover is a Corporation pretty large and populous.

Ancient Places.

Regnum can be no other than the present Ringwood, (lying upon the River Avon) which may seem by a fair Interpretation to signify the Wood of the Regni.

Alani Ostium, is probably that Mouth out of which the Stour and Avon empty themselves jointly.

Trisantonis Ostium is agree'd upon all hands to be the Harbour of Southampton, beginning at Calshot-Castle.

Clausentum, by the distances from the two Stations on each side, as it stands in the Itinerary, must of necessity be that Old Town which stood formerly near the present Southampton, and was called by the same name.

Brage, by the course of the Itinerary, is probably a little Country Village that lies between Salisbury and Winchester, the two Stations on each hand, and is called at this day Broughton.

Venta Belgarum, is undoubtedly Winchester, to which it has probably given the first Syllable of that name.

Segontiaci, mention'd by Caesar, by all the Circumstances must have been those People who liv'd about the Northern limits of this County, about the Hundred of Holestot.

Vindonum, we call at this day Silchester; though by the Britains it was call'd Caer Segonte, as being the chief City of the Segontiaci, just now mention'd.

Things Remarkable.

Arthur's Round-Table at Winchester is much talk'd of and admir'd as a Relick of King Arthur's. But that Fancy is to be reckon'd among those many ridiculous Errors which have been convey'd to the ignorant Country People by Ballads and Romances, and having got such footing that 'tis hard to undeceive them. This Table is probably as old as the Tornaments; and it may be a good Conjecture, that it was design'd to prevent all quarrels about Precedency among the Combatants.

Silchester, which we observ'd but now to be the Vindonum of the Ancients, shews vast remains of its Antiquity and once flourishing condition. The thinness of the Corn where the Walls and Streets have run, with other Observations to be made upon the Place, afford very good entertainment to a curious Traveller.

The Isle of WIGHT.

South of Hamshire lies the Isle of Wight, about 20 Miles long, and 12 over, where broadest. The North is mostly taken up with Pasturage, Meadows and Wood; but the South bears abundance of Corn. As to Ecclesiastical Government, it is under the Jurisdiction of the Bishop of Winchester; but as to Civil, under Hamshire. The Inhabitants are a Stout sort of People, having been all along inur'd to frequent Skirmishes, by lying expos'd to the first Attacks of the invading Enemy.

Carebrook, a Castle in the middle of the Isle, of very great Antiquity. Of late Years the Imprisonment of King Charles I. therein has made it more remarkable.

Yarmouth and Cowes, both lying over against Hamshire, are their two Havens of greatest Safety and Importance.

The Needles, the Shingles, the Mixon, and other Shelves round it, are a good security to the Place against an Enemy, but very troublesome to the Seamen.

BARK-

B A R K S H I R E.

THE County of BERKS lying out in length from South-East to North-west, as it is accommodated all over with very convenient Rivers, so has it the Advantage of the Thames running along one side of it. Which being navigable, is of great profit not only to the particular Towns seated upon it; but also to the whole County, the narrowness whereof gives the Inhabitants an opportunity of conveying Goods by Water, without any great inconvenience or expence of Land-carriage. This I take to be the great enricher of the County: For tho' in several Parts, especially in the middle, and where it borders upon Wiltshire, they have good store of Corn; yet this, without the assistance of the River, could not turn to near the same account.

Towns of note, { Abingdon,
 { Windsor, { Reading, { Wallingford, } { Newbury,
 { Hungerford,
 { Maidenhead.

Abingdon carries in its very Name the Character of Religion, being so call'd from the famous Abbey that was built there by Cissa the West-Saxon. Some modern Authors are inclin'd to think this the old Clotefoo, so famous in our Ancient Histories for the solemn Meetings and great Councils before the Conquest. And the Situation of the Place makes it convenient enough for holding such general Assemblies, being almost at an equal distance from the several Parties concern'd. But whether this Honour belongs to it or not; 'tis certain, the Abbey grew to be so eminent and considerable, that here (as in many other places throughout England) it laid a good Foundation for a handsome Town; which encreas'd strangely, after that Henry V. had contriv'd the high Road through it. Malt is the greatest Trade, and the Market-house its greatest Ornament.

Windsor stands in the North-west corner of this County, upon a high-Hill; from whence there is a delicate Prospect of Woods and Fields all round. This advantage of Situation, with its convenient distance from London, has induc'd several of the Kings of England to take a more particular delight in it, both on account of its Strength and Pleasure. The Palace is a most noble Structure, adorn'd with a delightful Terrace-walk by Queen Elizabeth, but beautify'd chiefly and brought to perfection by King Charles II. who at a vast Expence, adorn'd it with most curious Paintings. St. George's Chappel and the Noble Order of the Garter, instituted there by King Edward III. are Honours wherein the place may justly glory; the greatest Princes in Europe having esteem'd it a high Favour to be admitted into that Society. And it was an Honour to this Castle, to be the Prison, to the King of France and King of Scots, at the same time, under the powerful Prince Edward III. As for the Town: Old Windsor is very much gone to decay, upon the rise of the new one, which lies to the West of the Castle, and (as it were) under it. The growth of the Town is in a great Measure owing to the Court, which the pleasure our Princes have taken in it, has drawn hither. And accordingly, 'tis easie to observe, what difference there is between its present Condition, now 'tis almost forsaken by the Court; and its state in the Reign of Charles II. by whose Inclination to the Variety of Diversions it affords, the Town flourish'd much beyond its Neighbours.

Reading is conveniently seated upon the River Kenet, at a small distance from its emptying it self into the Thames. It was before the Conquest eminent for a strong Castle; which lasted no longer than the time of Henry II. by whom it was demolish'd lest it should afford Refuge and Protection to King Stephen's Party. About an Hundred Years ago, Cloth was its greatest Trade and Employment; but the Advantage of the Situation upon the River has in a great measure drawn the Inhabitants from that Business, and turn'd them to the Malt-Trade, by which the Wealth of the Town is much improv'd. The Streets and Buildings are neat and handsom; and sometimes the Assizes are held here.

Wallingford, upon the River of Thames, was also famous for its Castle, which was exceeding strong and attempted more than once by King Stephen, in the civil Wars between him and Henry II. That which made Abingdon chiefly flourish, was the cause of this Town's decay, viz. the change of the High-Road. But yet for all that, the Malt-Trade does not only support it, but of late Years has also encreas'd its Wealth, Buildings, and Number of Inhabitants.

Newbury carries its rise and original in the very Name, which implies a relation to some old Burg near it; and that was Spene, at a little distance from this new Town. Tho' the Name destroys all its Pretensions to Antiquity, yet it bears Figure in our modern Histories, upon account of Engagements here between the King and Parliament, in the late Civil Wars. The Cloth-Trade, and the convenience of the River, have improv'd it into a handsom, pretty Town.

Hungerford, upon the edge of Wiltshire, has been all along more considerable, upon account of the Title it has for many Ages given to a very eminent Family, than for either Wealth or Neatness. In all the Country round, it has a particular Reputation for the best Trouts.

Maidenhead, considering what time it has had for improvement, is grown into a handsom Town. For its first encrease was occasion'd by building a Wooden Bridge over the Thames; which before that, us'd to be Ferry'd, at the Expence and Trouble of the Traveller. But the new Bridge, as it made the Road this way much more easie and convenient, so did it induce the Inhabitants to build Inns and provide all Accommodations for the Entertainment of Strangers.

Ancient Places.

Gallea was undoubtedly our Wallingford, as appears both from the Course of the Itinerary, the remains of the old Name in the present, and the ancient grandeur and largeness of the Town.

Spine is now an inconsiderable Village, about a Mile from Newbury; which carries the old Name in its present Spene, and has also left the remains of it in a part of Newbury, still call'd Spinham-Lands.

Bilricci, also, a People in those Parts, may seem to have left something of the Name in the present Bray near Maidenhead.

THE County of Surrey, (as we call it at this day) lies all a long upon the South-side of the River of Thames; from which Position, it has the Name. For, what our Age has contracted into Surry, was call'd by our Fore-fathers Sutbrige. That part of the Country which borders upon the Thames, is so adorn'd with a mixture of Woods, Meadows, and fair Buildings, that nothing can be more Entertaining: The other parts are Fruitful enough, though not so Pleasant.

More considerable Towns, are, { Southwark,
Guilford,
Kingston, Richmond,
Lambeth.

Southwark, (so call'd from its Southerly Situation, with respect to London) by its near intercourse with that noble City, has improv'd it self into a flourishing condition, not only beyond all other Places in this County, but equal to most of our Cities in England. Before the Building of the Bridge, their Commerce was maintain'd only by Ferrying; but upon erecting a Wooden-bridge, it seem'd to be a sort of Suburbs to London; and lastly, by the stately Stone-bridge of 19 Arches, (upon which the buildings are continu'd like a street) one would think it a Part of the City. Accordingly, in the Reign of Edward VI. it was annex't to London; and by virtue thereof the Inhabitants had a Power granted them to use all such Laws within their Burrough, as the Citizens did within their City.

Guilford, (for so it is commonly pronounc'd, though written Guldford and Guildford) is seated upon the River Wye, and is a populous Market-Town; I know not whether we may attribute its growth, in some measure at least, to the Benefaction of Sir Richard Wyton; by whose Industry, principally, the River upon which it stands, was made Navigable. 'Tis certain that all this part of the Country is very much en-gag'd to the first Contrivers, since they receive such considerable advantage from it.

Kingston upon Thames, has its Name from the Solemn Coronation of three Saxon Kings, Athelstan, Edwin, and Ethelred, in the Danish Wars. 'Tis a Market-Town, not very large indeed, but populous and of good resort.

Richmond, hard by, has been particularly pitch'd upon by several of our Kings, for their Diversion and Pleasure, whenever the Affairs of the Nation would give them leave to retire.

Lambeth, over against Westminster, upon the River of Thames, has all its Reputation from the Palace of the Archbishop of Canterbury, which is very large and stately. It has belong'd to them successively ever since Arch-Bishop Baldwin obtain'd a Manour in this Place by exchange with the Bishop of Rocheſter, about the year 1183.

We meet with none of the old Stations in this County; the Noviomagus, (which Mr. Cambden places at Woodcot) being more conveniently settl'd in Kent.

Things Remarkable.

The Mole (a considerable River) in two several places goes under ground for some space; particularly for 2 miles together, near Whitchill; from whence the Place is call'd the Swallow.

At Albury the Hypogæum, or Perforation, made through a mighty Hill, and design'd for a Coach-passage, is Remarkable and Surprizing.

Epsom-Wells have been in so great request of late years for their Mineral-waters, as to cause a considerable increase of Buildings, for the Entertainment of Gentlemen resorting thither, for their Health or Pleasure.

A Skeleton 9 Foot 3 Inches long, taken up in the Church-yard of Worton, and distinctly measur'd, may justly be reckon'd among the Remarkables of this County.

S U S S E X.

Sussex, (or as it is more truly written, South-Sex) derives its name from the ancient Inhabitants, the South-Saxons, who had that denomination with respect to the East-Saxons. The Downs take up the Sea-coast; the middle consists of Meadows, Pastures, and Corn-fields; and the more Northerly part of it abounds with Wood. The Iron-works turn to good account; as did formerly the Glass-Houses; but now the latter are quite laid aside.

More considerable Towns, are, { Chicheſter, Arundel,
Lewes,
Key.

Chicheſter, in its Saxon name Ciſſanceaſter, discovers its first Founder, viz. Ciſſa, Son of Willa, who sett'l'd the Kingdom of the South-Saxons. Notwithstanding which Antiquity, we do not find that it flourish'd very much till the Conqueror's time, when the Bishop's See was remov'd from Selfy to this Place; where it still continues in a good condition. The City had undoubtedly been much more Wealthy, Large and Populous, if the conveniency of the Harbour had seconded the advantage of the Bishop's See. But the Haven is of it self not very commodious; and is also at too great a distance.

Arundel, owes its Name and Reputation more to the Castle and its Earls, than either the populousness of the Town, or wealth of the Inhabitants. The Castle was a place of great strength, and of considerable moment in our Wars; and the Earls, Persons of great Worth and Honour. But though the condition of of the place will not answer either the figure it makes in our Histories, or the reputation it has in the opinion of Strangers; as however a Market-Town, and sends two Burgeses to Parliament.

Lewes, at a little distance from the Sea, is seated upon a rising ground, and is a Town of good Note: Tho' anciently it seems to have been more considerable. For when King Athelstan settl'd Mints in the more eminent Towns of the Kingdom, he pitch'd upon this place for one, and gave it two Minters.

Rye, upon the Sea-Coast, joyning to the County of Kent, owes its rise to the decay of its Neighbour Wincheſea. For the Sea, in those parts, does as it were dispose of its wealth among the Coasters, according to the several ages. So that by its breaking in one while and retiring another, they enjoy the advantage of it in their turns. Rye has flourish'd by its kindness these many ages, in Buildings, Navigation, and Fishing; whilst many of its Neighbours are ready to starve, and are daily drawing towards ruine.

Ancient Places.

Portus Adurni (the place where the Exploratores kept watch against the Saxon Pirates under the later

Emperours; must be upon this Coast. And we cannot pitch upon any part with greater probability, than Ederington, a Little Village, which seems still to retain something of the old Name; and besides, is a very convenient place for Landing. Which indeed in our present search, is a circumstance of great moment; since those Guards upon the Sea-Coast, were set to hinder the Pirates from Landing; and by consequence, must have been fixt where the shore was most convenient for that purpose.

Things Remarkable.

It was a pleasant humour of John de Camois Lord of Broodwater in this County, in Edward the First's time; to make over his own Wife to Sir William Painell, by Will, in the same manner as Men bequeath their Goods and Chattels.

The Arch with the Inscription, at Lewes, in the little demolish'd Church near the Castle, is well worth the sight of a curious Traveller, if there be any thing left of that ancient Building: But if Time has destroy'd it, the best information we can have, is from Mr. Cambden's draught, which he has given us in the Britannia, under his Description of this place.

K E N T.

Amongst the Counties of England, no one can pretend to lead us so far back into its Antiquities as this of Kent. In all Revolutions, this has had the first share: The Romans made their first Attempts upon it; and Julius Caesar has left us a general account, in what condition he found them at that Time. Their Successors, the Saxons, after Depredation, Piracies, and at last open Violence, establish'd their first Kingdom in this Corner, about the Year 456. The Normans too (if we may believe Tradition, which is not grounded upon much Evidence from History) had it particularly in his Eye; and had us'd it as he did the rest of the Kingdom, but that they obtained the Continuance of their Ancient Customs and Usages, by a notable Stratagem.

Nor could it well be otherwise: For as their Situation exposes them to the immediate Attempts of Foreigners; so do the Riches and Fruitfulness of their Country invite them to a settlement there before any other Part. The Soil is exceeding rich; so that they abound with excellent Corn-Fields, Meadows, and Pastures. They have Apples also, and Cherries in great abundance; which turn to better account here than in other places, by reason of their nearness to London, whither they sell them by whole sale. Besides this Fruitfulness of the Soil, which furnishes them with most Necessaries; they are supply'd with what conveniences our foreign Trade brings in, by their Harbours and noble Rivers.

More Remarkable Places are,

{	Canterbury,	{	Deptford
	Rocheſter,		Maidstone,
	Dover,		Remney,
	Greenwich,		Chatbam.

Canterbury, upon the River Stour, as it is the principal City in those parts, so is it the Metropolis of the whole Kingdom. For upon the conversion of the Saxons to the Christian Faith, Ethelbert King of Kent gave this Place to Austin the Monk; who was made Arch-Bishop of the Engliſh, and so fixt his See here. And here it has continu'd ever since; save that for a little while it was remov'd to London (the chief City of the Kingdom;) but in honour and memory of Saint Austin, it was return'd to Canterbury. The Church that is most eminent, is Chriſt-Church; for St. Austin's (built below the City for a burying-place for the Kings of Kent and the Arch-bishops, when it was not lawful to bury in Cities) is laid in its own ruines; by which we may still perceive what a stately Fabrick it has once been. The City is populous and wealthy; having in it abundance of Halloons and French; the first of them settl'd here in the time of Queen Elizabeth, and brought along with them the Art of Weaving Silk: the second came over of late years, upon the persecution of Lewis the XIV.

+ Rocheſter is the other City in this County, being made an Episcopal See by the same Athelbert that gave Canterbury to St. Austin, upon his Conversion to the Christian Faith. The Situation of it, is low, and the bounds narrow, but the Suburbs make it pretty large. Anciently, it was of great note for its Castle, which the nature of the place render'd exceeding strong: So that when Odo held it against William Rufus, nothing could bring him to a surrender but want of Provisions. The noble Stone-bridge (through which the Medway runs with a most hideous noise) was built, upon Simon Montfort's cutting down the Wooden one, in his attempts upon this place.

Dover, next these two, makes the greatest figure in our Histories; not for its extent or riches, but the convenient passage it affords into France. It has also a Castle of great Strength; and was anciently accounted of so much Importance, as to be commonly called the Key of England, without which it was impossible for Foreign Enemies to make their way, with any advantage, into this Nation. Upon this account, William the Conqueror took particular care to have it well fortifi'd and guarded; distributed vast quantities of Land to his Soldiers, purely for that Service. The Peir was built by Henry VIII. and repaired by Queen Elizabeth at vast expence, after the Sea had began to break in upon it.

Greenwich

Greenwich, lying upon the Thames, is remarkable for its Royal Seat, built by Humfrey Duke of Gloucester, and enlarg'd by King Henry VII. and is a Place much celebrated in our Histories for giving Birth to that most excellent Princess, Q. Elizabeth.

Deptford is at a little Distance, and draws its Reputation from the noble Dock, and other Accommodations for building and repairing of Ships; whereby it is of great Use and Importance to the Royal Navy of England.

Maidstone (so call'd from the Medway upon which it lies) is a pleasant populous Town, and seems to have been formerly of greater Eminence than its Neighbours, as being the Shire-Town, where the Assizes are generally held. Unless, possibly, the convenience of its situation, almost in the middle of the County, may have been the principal means of procuring that honour.

Romney, lying near the Sea-Coast to the South East, was formerly very considerable both for its Harbour, and the Sea-Services done by the Inhabitants to the Crown. But when the Ocean overflow'd these parts, in the Reign of Edward I. and remov'd the passage of the River another way, it began to forsake the Town, and by consequence to rob it by degrees of its former glory.

Chatham, near Rochester, is eminent for the station of the Navy-Royal; and has been much more so since the improvements of Docks, Launches, Store-houses, &c. made by King Charles II. and King James II. 'Tis also remarkable for its fund of Naval Charity, for the support of Persons wounded in the Sea-Service; establish'd in the Year 1588. under the Title of the Chest at Chatham.

Ancient places.

Vagniacæ, by the course of the Itinerary, must be Maidstone, especially if Noviomagus, the next Station on one Hand, may be fix'd at Hollowood hill, and not at Woodcot in Surrey (as Mr. Camden imagines.)

Durcbrovīs is agreed on all hands to be Rochester.

Regulbium, mention'd by the Notitia, has left the express Remains of its Name in our present Reculver; which also demonstrates its Antiquity by the Roman Coins discover'd thereabouts.

Durovernum is beyond all dispute to be settl'd at Canterbury.

Duroletum seems to fall in (as to the Sound) with Lenham; which yet is too far out of the Road, and has nothing to support it, besides the bare similitude of Names. Bapchild lies directly in the way, and does not want either Antiquity or a due distance to answer the Itinerary; which has induc'd a modern Author to remove the Station thither.

Cantium Promontorium, is the Kentish-foreland.

Dubris, by the present name and the circumstances of the place, can be no other than Dover.

Anderida, mention'd by the Notitia, has been by some fix'd at Newenden, by others at Hastings or Pensley in Suffex. Indeed the names mention'd in that Book, wanting the assistance of the Distances, are very hard to find out; having no other Directions, but barely their Situation upon the Sea-coasts; which we infer from the use of them, viz. to be a Guard against the Invasion of Pirates.

Lemanis is, by Mr. Camden, plac'd at Sturval-Castle near Hithe, but by Mr. Somner at Romney.

Noviomagus, by the Distances in the Itinerary, must be brought much nearer Maidstone than Woodcot in Surrey is, where Mr. Camden fixt it. The discovery of a large Roman Camp upon the River Ravensbourn (which empties it self into the Thames near Greenwich) makes it probable enough that the old Noviomagus ought not to be sought in another place.

Rhitupia, is the same as our Richburrow; which daily shews the Marks of its Antiquity; viz. Roman Coins of Gold and Silver.

To these we may add the Island, which Solinus (according to different Copies,) calls Thanatos and Atbanates, from whence the present name of Thanet is deriv'd. 'Tis made by a division of the Waters of the River Stour, near its entrance into the Sea, and is about eight miles long and four broad. The Soil is a white Chalk, which produces Hay and Corn in great abundance.

Tutiaris Insula is probably Sheppey,

Things Remarkable.

The vast Pits near Fecsham, narrow at the top but within very large, are thought to be some of those out of which the Britains us'd to dig Chalk to manure their Grounds. Which seems a more probable Opinion, than that the Saxons should contrive them, in imitation of their German Ancestors, for a sort of Granary wherein to protect their Corn and Goods against the violence of Cold and Plunders of an Enemy.

Below Greenwich, there is great plenty of Scurvy-grass.

Bromley Hospital, built by the right Reverend Father in God Dr. John Warner, for the maintenance of twenty poor Ministers Widows, is a most noble Foundation, and may well serve for a pattern to Persons who are dispos'd to settle such Charities in other Places.

The Royal Observatory at Greenwich, furnish'd with all sorts of Instruments for Astronomical Observations, and a Dry Well for discovery of the Stars in the day-time, is very curious.

Tunbridge Wells have of late years been found so useful for carrying off several Distempers, that the great resort of Gentry has caus'd the building of a good number of Houses near the place; and a Chapel, wherein Prayers are read twice a day during the Season.

Gavel-kind is a Custom peculiar to this County; whereby all Lands are divided equally among the Males; and in default of them, among the Females. They would derive this and other Privileges from their Composition with William the Conqueror; which Opinion is yet stiffly oppos'd by their Learned Country-man Mr. Somner, in his excellent Treatise upon that Subject.

The Cinque-Ports are a Constitution not to be met with in other places, being five Ports under the Constable of Dover-Castle, establish'd by William the Conqueror for the better security of this Coast. The Ports are Hastings, Dover, Hithe, Romney, and Sandwich; which, upon account of their Sea-Services, enjoy several Immunities; their Governor is styl'd Lord Warden of the Cinque-Ports.

G L O C E S T E R S H I R E.

THE County of GLOCESTER, according to its several parts, has a different Soil and Appearance. In the East, 'tis hilly ; in the West, woody ; and in the middle, a sweet fruitful Vale. The middle parts are much indebted to the Severn, which runs along for Forty Miles together, bringing in Necessaries from abroad, and conveying the Native Commodities into Foreign Parts. The Western Tract was one continu'd Wood, thick and unpassable ; but the discovery of the Veins of Iron (which requires vast quantities of Wood to support them) has made it much thinner.

The more remarkable Towns, are { Gloucester, Tewkesbury, Cirencester,
Camden,
Winchcomb,

GLOCESTER, the principal place in this County, is a Town well-built, beautify'd with many fair Churches, and exceeding well provided with Hospitals for the maintenance of their Poor. The Severn, along which it is stretch'd, secures it on one side, and it has Walls to defend it on others. About the time of William the Conqueror, forging of Iron seems to have been the Business of the Town; since Domesday tells us, That the Tribute requir'd of them, was a certain quantity of Iron-bars. It has had its misfortunes both from Wars and Fire, but still rose again and flourish'd, at length K. Henry VIII. made it an Episcopal See; which at this Day is its greatest Glory.

Worcestershire, seated at the meeting of the Severn the Avon, and another little River, is a large beautiful Town, the great Business whereof is Woollen-club. In the Histories of our Nation 'tis mention'd upon account of the Battel between the Houses of York and Lancaster, wherein the latter Party was almost entirely defeated.

Cirencester, call'd commonly at this day Ciciter, was of good note both under the Romans and Saxons. Its eminence among the first is discover'd by ancient Coin, Pavements and Inscriptions; and the frequent mention of it in the Saxon Histories make it probable that it bore some considerable Figure among the latter. Add to this, the extent of the Town, which has formerly been two Miles round; but now not above a fourth part of that compass is inhabited. They have also had three Parish Churches, of which only one is left, very fair indeed and large.

Camden, in the North part of the County on the edge of Worcestershire, is a good Market-town, famous especially for the Sticking Trade. The South Isle of this Church is adorn'd with several most noble and curious Monuments of Marble.

Ancient Places.

Abone appears by its situation upon Severn, its distance from the next Station, and most of all from the present name, to be that which we call at this day Aventon.

Trajectus, where they Ferry'd over the Severn, was probably at Oldbury; which both carries Antiquity in its name, and is situate over against Aberc.

Cuminum, mention'd by Ptolemy, was our Cirencester.

Gleevum is agreed by all to be the present City of Glocester.

Things Remarkable.

The Whispering-place, in the Cathedral of Glees-ter, is a Curiosity much talk'd of and admir'd by Travellers. 'Tis a Wall built so in an Arch of the Church, that if you whisper never so low at one end, another that lays his Ear to the other end shall hear each distinct Syllable. Which yet the more knowing Inhabitants affirm to be purely accidental, and not the Effect of any curious Contrivance.

Stones like Cockles and Oyfters are found about the Head of the River Avon, or the Hills near Adelsey.

In some Parts of the County, they had formerly a Custom very unaccountable, That the Lands of condemn'd Persons should be forfeited to the King only for a Year and a Day, and after that return to the next Heirs; but 'tis now quite abolish'd.

O X F O R D S H I R E.

THE County of OXFORD is accommodated with Three large Rivers, which answer the Necessities of its several Parts. The Thames supplies the South and West, the Teme the East, and the Cherwell the middle. The two last empty themselves into the first, and are carried with it in one Channel into the Ocean. The Bottoms of this Shire abound with Meadows and Corn-ground; the Hills are well stor'd with Wood; but were much more so before the Civil Wars between the King and Parliament.

The more considerable
Places are, { Oxford, } { Dorchester,

OXFORD, as it gives its Name to the whole County, so is it upon several Accounts very eminent: The Air is sweet and healthful, the Prospect on all Hands very pleasant; the private Buildings are neat, and the publick sumptuous. But that which gives it a Reputation, not only above its Neighbours, but above all other Places in the Kingdom, is, One of the most noble Universities in the whole World. The Constitution whereof is so regular; the Discipline so strict; the Endowments so plentiful and convenient for Studies; and, in a Word, every Thing so agreeable to the Education of Youth, that we need not wonder it should daily send abroad such Numbers of learned Men, for the Service of Church

Church and State. Of what Antiquity it is, I shall not pretend to determine: Whole Volumes have been writ upon that Subject already. Let us thank Providence, that 'tis in such a flourishing Condition at present, and leave the nice Disquisition of what it has been, to others. The following Scheme will afford the best view of its State and Increase, in the several Ages.

The Danes, who were a rude unpolish'd People, enemies to Learning, Religion, and every thing that was Honourable, sack'd and burn'd this place among others, in their Ravages through the Kingdom. And about the Reign of King John, (at which time 'tis said there were three Thousand Students, who lodg'd up and down in the Town,) the Scholars were heavily afflicted with the rude carriage of the Citizens, and retir'd in great Numbers to Reading, Cambridge, Windsor, and other places; But about Henry the Third's Reign, and so downward, (as pious Persons built Colleges and Halls for the entertainment of Students) they began to be less dependent upon the Town; especially being supported with good Revenues, as well as accommodated with convenient Lodgings.

The chief of its publick Buildings are,

1. The Schools a noble stately Pile of Building, wherein Exercise for the several Degrees are performed, the publick Lectures read, &c.

2. The Library, built by Sir Thomas Bodley, and commonly call'd the Bodleian Library; famous throughout Europe for its prodigious Stock of Books, both Printed and Manuscript.

3. The Theater a Magnificent Work, and of admirable Contrivance, Built by the Right Reverend Father in God, Gilbert Sheldon, Arch-Bishop of Canterbury.

4. The Museum, commonly call'd Ashmole's Museum, is a neat Building; the lower part whereof is a Chymical Elaboratory; and the upper, a Repository of Natural and Artificial Rarities.

Woodstock, distant from Oxford about 6 miles to the North, by its name implies a situation in a woody part of the Country; and accordingly its greatest Reputation has been the Park, along with a Royal Seat built there by King Henry I. who probably was induc'd to pitch upon this place for the convenience of Hunting; a Diversion much us'd and admir'd by our Fore-fathers. At present the Town is not very populous, nor the Trade considerable.

Banbury, on the edge of Northampton-shire, is a pretty large Town; and is principally known upon account of its excellent Cheefe.

Dorchester lies upon the River Tame, at the other end of the County; and is a place of great Antiquity and Dignity: For, as it seems to have flourish'd under the Romans, so had it the honour of an Episcopall See under the Saxons; till in William the Conqueror's Reign, that was Translated to Lincoln. The removal of the See, and the turning of the High-road another way, have left scarce any Image of its former Grandure.

Henly stands in the utmost Limits of this County, Southward, and is a Town of good Wealth and Buildings. The growth of it has probably been owing to its situation on the River of Thames; and partly also to the Passage over the same River by a Wooden-bridge, which drew Travellers that way.

Ancient Places.

Ancalites, a People mention'd by Cesar, seem to have liv'd in these Parts; and 'tis probable, by the Circumstances, they were seated about the South-corner of the County; and that Henly was their chief Town; especially if it may be allow'd so much Antiquity as some are willing to grant it.

Things Remarkable.

Roller-stones, in the Western part of this County, are a number of huge Stones plac'd in a Circle, which some have thought to be Monuments of a Victory; others, a Burying-place; and again, others, a place for the Coronation of the Danish Kings. See Plot's Oxfordshire, p. 342.

The Labyrinth made by King Henry II. at Woodstock, for his Fair Rosamond, is much talk'd of; tho' now nothing is to be seen of it.

Ashop-Wells near Banbury, have been much reformed to of late years by the Nobility and Gentry.

BUCKINGHAMSHIRE.

THE County of Buckingham (so call'd probably from great numbers of Bucks in this Woody Country) is for many miles together extended from North to South. The Chiltern is one part of the County; which is a continued Ridge of Hills; and below them lies the other Branch call'd the Vale, being a pleasant Champaign Country, consisting of Meadows, Pastures and Corn-grounds.

The more considerable
Towns are, { Buckingham, Ailsbury,
 Wickham,
 Stony-Stratford.

Buckingham gives name to the whole County, and is at present a Town of good Note; though anciently it was not very considerable, if we may go by the computation of Hides and Burgesses in Domesday. I know not whether the strength of the place, may not be the reason why it made so considerable a Figure, when the Houses were few, and the Inhabitants thin. 'Tis certain the Castle (now quite gone) was built a good while before the Conquest; and Nature too has in some measure contributed towards its Safety, by surrounding it on all sides but the North, with the River Ouse; which must needs make it a valuable Refuge in those troublesome and warlike Times.

Ailsbury was also a place of Note, in the beginning of the Saxons; being taken from the Britains about the year 572. At present it is a large and populous Market-Town, pleasantly seated in the midst of Meadows and Pastures, wherein are fed prodigious numbers of Sheep.

Wickham, in the Road between Oxford and London, is a large and populous Corporation, well built, and of good Trade. It has a throng Corn-Market and the Woods all round bring in considerable Revenues yearly by supplies sent to the neighbouring Counties; some of which are hard enough put to for Fuel.

Stony-Stratford, in the North part of the Shire takes its name from the Stony-Ford that led over the River at that Place. 'Tis a good large Town, in the middle whereof stands the Cross, erected by King Edward I. to the Memory of Queen Eleanor.

Ancient Places.

Pontes, by the course of the Itinerary, must be somewhere about Colebrook; for if that Guide were wanting, the condition of the place would naturally point this out in our search after the old name; For where should we search for it, but at division of the River into four Channels; over each of which here is a Bridge, within a very little space one from another?

Lectodorum does not discover it self by the same evidence, but yet seems plainly enough to be Stony-Stratford, both upon account of its Situation upon the Military way, and also from the import of the name in the British, which by those who are skill'd in the Language, is affirm'd to signify the same thing as our present Appellation.

Things Remarkable.

At Borstal they still preserve the Horn, by the Liberty whereof that Estate was convey'd to Nigel d'Boftal in the time of one of the Williams.

Pen, and the Towns upon that Ridge, are observ'd to be the highest Ground in all these parts; there being a sensible Ascent thither all along from London and as sensible a Descent when you are past it.

BEDFORDSHIRE.

THE County of Bedford in the South part is Barren; in the middle Woody, and in the North Fruitful. As the Soil distinguishes it into these three Parts, so has Nature divided it into two others, by the Channel of the River Ouse, which is the principal River of the County, and runs through it.

Towns more remarkable;
are, { Bedford,
 Dunstable.

Bedford, the principal Town of the County, tho' it can hardly pretend to Roman Antiquity, was yet of very good repute among the Saxons; and was one of those which suffer'd from the Danish Depredations. But its greatest Miseries were occasion'd by the Castle built there after the Conquest, which was a certain refuge to one Party or the other in all the Civil Wars that follow'd. The Town is parted by the River Ouse, and join'd by a Stone-bridge: The South-side has two Churches, and the North three. The Site of the old Castle is now a spacious Boating-Green, whither the Neighbouring Gentry resort for their Recreation.

Dunstable, so call'd from its high situation, stands upon the end (as it were) of the Chiltern, upon a dry chalky Soil. This quality of the Soil puts them to some inconvenience for Water; with which notwithstanding standing they are supplied tolerably well with four publick Ponds, one in each Street. It is pretty populous, and well furnish'd with Inns, having the advantage of lying upon the Northern-road, from London. The Cross in the middle of the Town was erected by Edward, to the Memory of his Queen Eleanor.

Ancient Places.

Saline must in all probability be the place now call'd Chisierfield, near Temerford, by the course of the Itinerary, the Roman Money, with other marks of Antiquity, discover'd there.

Magionum, need be sought at no other place than Dunstable, which stands upon a Roman-way, and has the evidence of Roman Money to assert its Antiquity.

Things Remarkable.

At Harewood, the River was observ'd to stand in the year 1399; and again in 1648; which have been look'd upon as Prognosticks: the first of the Civil Wars that ensu'd; the second of the Death of King Charles I.

Fuller's-Earth is dug up in great abundance about Woburn.

A Woman in Dunstable, had nineteen Children at five Births; 5 at two several ones; and three together at 3 more.

HERT-

HERTFORDSHIRE.

THE County of Hertford seems to owe its flourishing Condition more to its situation than Soil: For the many Thorow-fairs to and from London, have mightily Enrich'd the particular Towns, by the advantage of entertaining Travellers; and its nearness to the City, (together with the Healthfulness of the Air) has induc'd great numbers of the Nobility and Gentry to purchase and build in those Parts.

The most remarkable Towns are, { S. Albans, } { Hatfield, { Hertford, } { Roxham,
 { Ware, } { Stortford.

S. Albans, (the old Verulamium of the Romans, and the Malling-hæster of the Saxons) was of such considerable Note under the Romans, as to be a Municipium; but in the famous Inturrection of Queen Boadicea, was entirely laid Waste by the Britains: However it recover'd it self, and afterwards had the honour of being the Birth-place of S. Alban (the Protomartyr of Britain, in the time of Dioclesian;) a Person so eminent for Piety and Goodness, that the Town afterwards took his Name, as the greatest Honour it could do it self. For when Offa had built a large and splendid Monastery, Dedicated to the Memory of S. Alban, the Town presently flourish'd, and was particularly ambitious of a Relation to that Saint. From time to time there have been discover'd vast remains of Roman Antiquity, in the place where the old Verulamium stood, now turn'd into a Corn-field. The Church of the Monastery is still standing, and is a most noble Pile of Building. At present, 'tis a large flourishing Town, having the advantage of being a Thorow-fair on the Northern Road from London.

Hatfield, (so call'd, as if one should say a Ford of Harts; for their Arms is a Hart couchant in the Water) is a Town rather noted for giving name to the whole County, than any riches or beauty of its own.

The Assizes indeed are still kept here, a mark of its ancient Prosperity; but the Place is neither Populous nor of any tolerable Trade.

Ware, so nam'd from the Wear in the River Lee is a populous thriving Place, owing its rise to the decay of Hertford; for about King John's time, the High-Road was turn'd this way; and ever since, Ware has been encreasing, and the other dwindling away by little and little.

Hatfield is more remarkable for the stately Seat of the Earl of Salisbury, than any thing the Town it self can boast of beside.

Roxham, or Roxe's Town (on the North-side of the County) is so call'd from a certain Lady nam'd Roxia, who erected a Cross in this place. The Town (ever since Richard I. granted it the privilege of a Market) has been still growing; and deals especially in Malt and Corn.

Stortford, upon the little River Stort, is of late years grown into a considerable Market-Town, and is very well furnish'd with good Inns.

Ancient Places.

Verulamium has been by all Men and all Ages so undoubtably settl'd at S. Albans that it is even at this day known by the name of Verulam in several of our Writings; and commonly enough in Conversation.

Dunobrivæ, upon account of the beginning and end, must be sought somewhere upon a River, dur signifying Water, and brivæ a Passage. The course of the Road directs us to look for it below Flemsted, where the ancient Highway crosses the Water.

Things Remarkable.

The little Brook Wormer near Redborn, is by the Inhabitants thought to portend Dearth or troublesome Times when it breaks out. The Font at S. Albans wherein the Children of the Kings of Scotland us'd to be Baptiz'd, was a most noble Monument, plac'd here by Sir Richard Lea, Master of the Pioneers; but it is since taken away, as it seems in the late Civil Wars.

MIDDLESEX.

THE County of Middlesex, or Middle-Saxons (so call'd from its situation between the East and South Saxons, is of no large extent, but is furnish'd with great numbers of fair Buildings and sweet Seats, for the retirement of Nobility and Gentry.

Places most considerable are, { London, Cap. } { Fulham, { Wesminster, } { Chelsey,
 { Uxbridge, } { Hamsted.
 { Hampton-Court,

LONDON, (The Metropolis of our Nation) as one of the most flourishing Cities in the whole World is it of such Antiquity, that the most ancient Records and Memorialls can give us no account of its Original. Under the Britains, it was a considerable place; and Ammianus Marcellinus, even in his time, call it an ancient City. Its Glory appears more distinctly under the Romans, who probably out of a desire of its Greatness would not grant it the privilege of a Municipium; Governing it by a sort of Commissioners sent yearly from Rome. But though they would not allow it too much Power and Authority, they own'd its Glory and Eminence, by giving it the honourable name of Augusta. Also, when Constantine had confirm'd Christianity, upon the removal of the Flamin, a Bishop's See was settl'd here. At the beginning of the Saxon Government, it had its share of the Misfortunes with which this Warlike People oppress'd the whole Nation; but bore up however against the Storm, till the Conversion of that People to Christianity. Then Ethelbert King of Kent, built a Church Dedicated to S. Paul, which Posterity by degrees improv'd into a most stately Fabrick. This, along with the greatest part of the City, was consum'd in that most dreadful Fire which happen'd in the year 1666; and put all things into such confusion, that the ancient State of this noble City, must have been in a great measure hidden from Posterity, had not the industrious and learned Mr. John Stow, rescu'd it from Oblivion by his excellent Survey. To him I refer the Reader for matters of Antiquity; and shall content my self with a short description of the several Buildings, and other Curiosities, which it boasts of at this day. Premising thus much in general; that within these Hundred years and especially since the above-mention'd Fire, the City has grown so strangely both in publick and private Buildings; has also stretch'd itself out so far on all sides, that by a Draught of an hundred years old; nay, of one taken immediately before 1666, compar'd with its present extent and Beauty, one could not imagine it to be the same City.

I. The Tower, at the East-end of the City, is a large stately Fabrick, fortified with Walls and a broad Ditch; where the Arms and other Warlike Preparations are laid up as in a common Store.

II. Gresham College, so call'd from Sir Thomas Gresham the Founder, was instituted for the Improvement of Arts and Sciences; and accordingly there are great Salaries sett'd for the several Professors of Divinity, Law, Physick, Astronomy, Geometry and Musick.

III. The Royal Exchange was built by the same Sir Thomas Gresham, and a most noble Ornament to the City, as well as a singular convenience to Merchants.

IV. Guild-hall, (or the Senate-house) a most beautiful Building.

V. Paul's Church, as was observ'd before, was consum'd in the dreadful Fire of 1666; but is now rising again with new Beauty and Majesty. A magnificent Building it is, if we look upon its Extent and Strength; and if upon the Contrivance, a most curious Fabrick. The Quire is finished, and Divine Service constantly celebrated in it.

VI. Christ-Church-Hospital was Founded by King Edward VI. for the Maintenance of Orphans: one Thousand whereof are suppos'd to be annually provided for by this Charity. After they have gone through the several Schools, they are bound out Apprentices, at 15 years of Age; or sent to one of the Universities, where they are maintain'd for 7 years.

VII. Charter-house (so call'd from the Carthusian Monks) was erected into an Hospital by Thomas Sutton Esq; by the name of The Hospital of King James, endowing it with Revenues sufficient for the Maintenance of 50 Poor Brothers or Pensioners, who are to be either poor decay'd Gentlemen, or Merchants, or Superannuated Soldiers, 40 poor Scholars, who are either put to Trades, or sent to the University; with a Master, Preacher, Physician, and other Officers.

VIII. The Inns of Court are chiefly Four, The Inner-Temple, the Middle-Temple, Grays-Inn and Lincolns-Inn; besides several others of less Note. Here great numbers of young Gentlemen are educated in the study of the Laws, and qualified either for publick Pleadings, or for the Service of the Kingdom in any other Capacity, that requires a more than ordinary knowledge of our Customs and Constitution.

Besides those Ornaments we have mention'd, the Churches are spacious and beautiful; the publick Halls of the several Companies large and stately; the Squares uniform and pleasant, and the private Buildings and Shops exceeding pleasant. A late ingenious Author hath made it probable from the number of Burials and Houses in London, Paris, and Rouen; that the first of these is altogether as big and populous as both the other two.

WESTMINSTER, as it is a City distinct from London, with separate Magistrates and Privileges, so was it formerly at least a Mile distant from it, till by degrees the Suburbs of the former joyn'd the latter, and made them both together like one entire City. It seems to owe its rise to the Church, which Sibert King of the East-Saxons built there to the honour of S. Peter; and which, together with its Westerly situation from London, caus'd its name to be chang'd from Thorney, into the present one of Westminster. Edward the Confessor built it anew, and endow'd it largely; His Fabrick was afterwards demolished by Henry III. who erected a new one, very stately and magnificent; to which Henry VII. added a Chapel, commonly call'd King Henry VIIIth's Chapel, for the burial of himself and Children. It was by Q. Elizabeth converted into a Collegiate Church, consisting of a Dean, twelve Prebendaries, &c. The greatest Curiosities it affords are the Tombs and Monuments of our Princes, and of the most eminent Nobility, with several Persons famous for Learning and other Excellencies in their respective Ages.

Near the Abbey is Westminster-Hall, a spacious Room, wherein (and in places round it) Justice is publickly administred in the several Courts, mention'd in the Introduction. Nor ought the School to be omitted, since it is so serviceable to Church and State, in furnishing both with Persons every way qualified for the discharge of their several Stations.

White-Hall is conveniently seated between S. James's Park and the Thames, and is the Residence of our Kings. It was the House of Cardinal Wolsey, and converted into a Royal Palace by King Henry VIII.

Uxbridge, upon the edge of the County, is a pretty large Town stretch'd out on each side a long Street; lying upon the Road, it reaps great advantage by the entertainment of Travellers, and is well stor'd with Inns. 'Tis mention'd in our Histories, particularly upon account of the Treary held there, in the Reign of Charles I.

Hampton-Court, is a Royal Seat, lying pleasantly upon the River Thames, and accommodated with most excellent Prospects all round. Cardinal Wolsey begun it; and King Henry VIII. finish'd it: But their Structure, though very large and magnificent for that Age, is far excelled by the Additions made to it by his late Majesty; whether we compare the Buildings themselves, or the Gardens, and other contrivances about it.

Fulham, is only remarkable for the residence of the Bishops of London, who have here their Palace for a retirement out of the City.

Chisley, situated pleasantly upon the Thames, is noted only for its noble Hospital, built for the maintenance of lame and decay'd Soldiers. It was begun by King Charles II. carry'd on by King James, and finish'd by his late Majesty; a Building as in itself very magnificent, so accommodated with all manner of Offices convenient for the design, and also with pleasant Walks and Gardens.

Hemsted, at a little distance from London to the Northwest, is remarkable for the goodness of the Air, which has caus'd its enlargement in Buildings of late Years.

Ancient Places.

Sulleniatae is Breck's-Hill, upon the edge of this County, as appears both from the distances and remains of Antiquity, (Coins, Urns, Bricks, &c.) that have been discover'd there.

Londinum, London, call'd also Augusta, a Title of Preheminence among the Romans.

The Green-houses at Hampton-Court, with Stoves under them, to preserve foreign Plants in gradual Heats, suitable to the Climes whereof they are Natives, is an admirable Contrivance.

E S S E X.

ESSEX is so call'd from the East-Saxons who inhabited it, and had that Name from their Situation, with relation to the South-Saxons. As 'tis on the Side accommodated with the Sea, so is it in all Parts furnish'd with good Rivers, which do not only water it, but convey likewise all Necessaries from abroad, and give them an Opportunity of sending out such Commodities as they can spare for the Use of foreign Parts.

Towns more remarkable, are { Colchester, Chemsford,
Harwich,
Maldon.

Colchester, seated on the Brow of a Hill, and extended from East to West, flourish'd in the Times of the Romans under the Name of Colonia; from whence possibly the present Colchester (or as the Saxons call'd it Coleceaster) has its Original. Next to this their Antiquity; the Inhabitants glory that Helena, Mother to Constantine the Great, was born in this Place. At present 'tis large and populous, containing a great many Parishes.

Chemsford or Chelmsford, has a convenient Situation, juſt at the Meeting of two Rivers. The Place ſeemſto have been of no great Note, 'till the Biſhop of London, in Henry I.'s Time, turn'd the high Road thro' it, which before lay thro' Wittle. At preſent the Aſſizes are held in it.

Harwich is more Famous upon account of its Harbour, than either the Riches or Building of the Town. The Convenience of Passage from hence to Holland, is the Occasion why 'tis so much Spoke of, and so well known.

Malden, tho' of it self large and well inhabited, (being one Street reaching a Mile in length) is yet of greater Eminence by reason of its Antiquity, and the considerable Figure that it made among our Forefathers. Claudius Caesar, in his Attempt upon Britain, storm'd this Place, and left a strong Garriſon to hold and defend it. But when the Insolence of the Soldiers came to ſuch a Height, that the poor Britains could no longer bear the Indignities and Oppreſſions, theſe (under the Conduct of Boadicea) form'd themſelves into a Confederacy, burnt this Colony, and put all the Inhabitants to the Sword. Under the Saxons we hear little or nothing of it; tho' in the Conqueror's Time, it ſeems to have been in a tolerable Condition, Domeſday reckoning 180 Houſes.

Ancient Places.

Duoclitum, by the Course of the Itinerary, the found of the present Name, and the Remains of Antiquity discoverd thereabouts, cannot well be any other than Leyce, about six Miles from London.

Concennies Infula, has the plain Remains of the old name left in it the Island Canvey above five miles in length, which feeds great numbers of Sheep.

Cesareomagus is Dunmow, written anciently Dunmage and Dunmarg, the last Syllable whereof is a plain Relick of the old magus; and as for the first (Dun) every one knows how common that is in the ancient names of places. All the Objection is, that it lies a little out of the Road, which the Itinerary seems to take in that Journey; but any one who observes what wheelings and windings the Itinerary takes in other parts of England, will reckon that to be no exception.

Canonium, is Wittle, through which the High-way pass'd before Henry I.'s time : And, besides, 'twas a place of Note among the Saxons, and after the Conquest ; which agrees well with that observation, That the Saxons settl'd in the deserted Stations of the Romans.

Orthona, a Garrison under the Count of the Saxon Shore, seems to have been at Ithancester, mention'd by our Histories, and seated about the utmost point of Denzey Hundred.

Camalodunum, from the present name, the course of the Itinerary, and the consent of all judicious Writers, must be concluded to have been at Maldon; which we describ'd before.

Ad Ansfam seems to be Wittham; for the Road lies thro' it, the Distances answer, and it still shews an old Camp.

Colonia is by all agreed to be Colchester.

Idumani fl. ostium, is Black-water-bay, ydu in British signifying black.

Things Remarkable.

The Caverns near Tilbury, in a chalky Soil, have given Occasion to some Conjectures; tho' perhaps no one does so well agree either with the Nature of the Ground or the Custom of the Britains, as the Opinion, That they were intended by that People for Supplies of Chalk to manure their Lands.

Wall-fect-Oysters are got in great Abundance upon this Coast, and so call'd from a Wall (built to secure the Inhabitants against Inundations) along which they lie.

It was a pleasant Custom which they had in the Priory of Dunmow, That whoever did not repent of his Marriage in a Year and a Day, upon Oath made thereof before the Prior and Convent, should have a Gammon of Bacon deliver'd him.

S U F F O L K.

THE County of Suffolk, contracted from Suth-folk (for so it was written among the Saxons) is so call'd from its situation with respect to Norfolk or North-folk. The Soil is, in most parts, very fruitful; assisted by a sort of Marle mixt with Clay.

Towns more remarkable, are { Bury,
Ipswich,
New-market,
Cire.

Bury (so call'd by contraction for S. Edmundsbury; seem to owe its Original and Growth, in a great measure, to the Translation of the Body of St Edmund to this Place; an excellent Prince, who was barbarously murder'd by the Danes. And even the Danish Cruelties, which were the Ruin of most other Places, did a considerable Service to this Town; King Cnutus, out of a Desire to make amends for the Injuries done it by his Father Sueno, taking a particular liking to it, and endowing it with many Privileges. The Popes also, out of a Regard to the Sanctity of St. Edmund, granted it large Immunities. So that the Monastery and Town grew apace in Wealth and Reputation, 'till the general Dissolution by K. Henry VIII. And now, tho' the First is destroy'd, the Second is still in a flourishing Condition.
seems

Ipswich is a Place mention'd in our Histories about the latter End of the Saxons; by whom it was call'd Gypswic. The Advantage of a Harbour has made it considerable; and, accordingly, that of late Years having not been so commodious as formerly, the Town it self has gone a little to Decay. For about an hundred Years ago, they had fourteen Churches; which are so far from being encreas'd, that at this Day there remain only twelve. Their Number of Ships also is considerably diminish'd of late Years; which must be an Argument that their Trade is not so good as it has been.

Newmarket, upon the Edge of Cambridgeshire, by the very Name betrays its want of Antiquity. That it is of Note at present, is not owing either to Manufactures or any particular Commodities; but partly to its Situation upon the Road, and partly to its Convenience for Hunting and Horse Races: By which Entertainments the Court is often drawn thither; and accordingly, there is a House built for her Majesty.

Clare, upon the River Stour, is very often mention'd in our English Histories, on account of the Earls to whom it has given Title, and who, in their several Ages, have been Men of great Worth and Eminence.

Ancient Places.

Villa Faustini seems to belong to St. Edmunds-bury, by the Course of the Itinerary.

Combretonium discovers it self in the present Brettenham, upon the River Bretton; the Termination Ham being an Addition purely Saxon.

Extensio, or 'Εξέσθ, a Promontory, shooting it self a long Way into the Sea; which we, at this Day, call Eastness.

Gastionum is Burgh Castle, upon the Coast of Norfolk, near Yarmouth.

Things Remarkable.

That vast Ditch which runs along Newmarket-heath, is a Work so prodigious, that the common People cannot conceive it made by any but the Devil; and upon that Fancy have call'd it Devil's-dike. Whereas, 'tis plain, that it was contriv'd as a common Fence and Bound between the two Kingdoms in the Saxon Heptarchy.

It was a facetious sort of Tenure, by which Hemingston in this County was holden, viz. upon Condition, That every Christmas-day the Lord of it should dance, make a Noise with his Cheeks puff'd out, and let a Fan in the Presence of the King.

Upon the Sea-coast, near Aldburrew, the Inhabitants valu'd themselves upon a signal Favour of Providence; which, in a time of great Dearth, sent 'em a Crop of Pearse among the hard Rocks, in the beginning of Autumn. But the more Judicious find no Occasion for the Miracle; but think it may be very well solv'd, by imagining the Sea might cast in some Pulse, left in it by the Shipwreck, and so cause that unusual Growth.

N O R F O L K.

THE County of Norfolk is so call'd with respect to Suffolk, as if one should say, the Northern People, or the Northern Branch of the East-Angles. Of all the Shires in England, this is observ'd to be most populous, for the Compass, and to be thickest set with Towns and Villages. They are generally rich, and live handsomely, which perhaps may be one Reason why they have been so much given to the Study of the Laws; so that even your ordinary sort are not altogether unacquainted with the little Niceties of Courts and Pleadings. Riches breed Quarrels, and Quarrels Law-suits, and those drive the Parties engag'd to the Examination of their Cause; which would never be thought of nor started, if they were as hard put to it for the common Necessaries of Life, as they are in many other Places.

The more remarkable Places, are { Norwich,
Yarmouth,
Lynne,
Walsingham.

Norwich is as much as one should say a Castle or Fort to the North, with relation to Caistor, about four Miles South from it, out of the Ruins whereof Norwich seems to have risen. For that it is much more Modern, appears from hence, that we do not find it mention'd before the latter end of the Saxon Times;

whereas Caistor was, no doubt, the ancient Venta. It is seated upon the side of a Hill from North to South, about a Mile and a Half, or two Miles in length: The Inhabitants are wealthy, the City populous, and the Buildings (both publick and private) very neat and beautiful. It has 11 Gates, and is surrounded with Walls, except where 'tis defended by the River, viz. on the East. Domesday tells us, it had no less than 1320 Burgesses; and altho' it suffer'd very much by the Insurrection of Ralph Earl of the East Angles against William the Conqueror, yet was that Damage abundantly repair'd, when the Episcopal See was remov'd hither from Therford. The great Number of Netherlanders, who came over, upon the Tyranny of the Duke of Normandy, and settl'd here, seem also to have been a mighty Advantage to the City, by settling the Manufacture of worsted Stuffs.

Yarmouth, on the Mouth of the River Yare, seems to have risen out of the Ruins of the old Gastionum, as Norwich did out of those of Caistor or Venta. It is not of so much Note, as one wou'd expect from the Advantage of the Sea, and the Convenience of the Harbour. The Reason is, because the Violence of the Wind upon this Coast is such, that they have much ado to keep the Haven so open and free from Heaps of Sand, as to maintain a tolerable Trade. At present their great Business is the Herring Trade. They have but one Church, very large and stately, with a high, lofty Spire.

Lynne,

Lynne, about the entrance of the Ouse into the Ocean, next to Norwich, is the best Town in those parts, having grown in Wealth, Buildings and number of Merchants, by the convenience of a very safe and advantageous Harbour. The Soil too all about it contributes to its greatness; for 'tis far and luscious, and very fruitful. The very name implies a moist, fenny, situation; Hlyn signifying so much in the old British.

Walsingham was one of the most famous Places in these parts, till the Dissolution of Monasteries by K. Henry VIII. for then, its Monastery (from whence sprung all its Glory, Reputation and Riches,) was plunder'd and demolish'd. Before, rich Jewels, Gold and Silver, were heap'd in with so much profuseness, according to the Superstition of those Times, that it was the great admiration of Strangers and Travellers.

Ancient Places.

Sigmagus seems to be Tetford, which was formerly a place of great note, till the Bishop's See was removed to Norwich, and then it fell to decay.

Gariensis Ofham discovers it self by the present name of the River Tare, and of the Town at the mouth, Ta mouth.

Venta Icenorum, the capital City of the Iceni, was at Castor, three miles South of Norwich; now fallen to decay, but known to be a place of Antiquity by the old Walls, and the discovery of Roman Coins.

Metaris Aestuarium, mention'd by Ptolemy, is suppos'd to be the Washes near Lynne.

Iciani, by the name should seem to be Ice-borough.

Brannodunum is plainly Brancafter near Walsingham.

Things Remarkable.

Carleton in this County was held by a pleasant Tenour, That 100 Herrings bak'd in 24 Pies should be presented to the King, in what part of England soever he was, when they first came into season. The custom is still observ'd, and the Herrings duly convey'd to the King by the Lord of the Manor.

Herrings are observ'd to be more plentiful upon this Coast, than any other part of England; which brings in great advantage to the Inhabitants.

S. Benet's, an Island so loose and unfix'd, that it seems to be kept from swimming away, only by the Roots of Trees.

CAMBRIDGESHIRE.

THE County of Cambridge, according to different parts, is of a different Soil. The South is fertile, well-till'd, and bears abundance of Barley; whereof they make vast quantities of Malt. The North is more wet and spongy, and so fitter for Corn than Pasture; not only upon account of its loose softness, but by reason also of the frequent overflowings in those parts.

The principal; Cambridge, Towns are 3 E.g.

Cambridge seems to be the Daughter of the old Camboritum, and possibly may have borrow'd the first Syllable of her name from the Mother. The University is her greatest Glory, which for many hundred years has furnish'd Church and State with Persons of Learning, Piety and Prudence. When it was first instituted, let others determine: Thus much is certain, that like Oxford, at first it afforded the Scholars no publick reception or place of Studies, but oblig'd them to take up with such Lodgings in the Town as they could get. By degrees, the inconvenience of this method was observ'd, not only from the mean Accommodation they met with, but also from the frequent Commotions caus'd by the Insolence of the Towns-men. Whereupon, pious and charitable Persons began to erect Inns and Hostels for the reception of Scholars, in order to give them an opportunity of retirement, and an independance upon the Town. But still they liv'd upon their own Estates, enjoying only the convenience of Lodgings, without any manner of Endowments; till, in the Reign of Edward I. they began to build Colleges, not only for the Reception, but also for the maintenance of certain numbers of Scholars, according to the Revenues assign'd to that purpose. The order and time of their Foundation, with their respective Founders, are as follow.

This University, as well as its Sister Oxford, has its publick Schools and Library; but falls far short of them in stateliness of Buildings, number of Books, and other Ornaments. The Structures most remarkable in Cambridge, are, 1. King's-College-Chapel, which for contrivance and largeness, is look'd upon to be one of the finest in the World. 2. Trinity-College Library, begun under the Government of the famous Dr. Barrow, and now entirely finish'd; for beauty and design (considering also the bigness of it) perhaps it cannot be match'd in the three Kingdoms.

Ely is seated in the chief of those spongy Islands, B. P. W. F. I. wherewith this northern part of the County abounds. wood. Whether it had the name from Eels, I shall not dispute: 'Tis certain, the softness of the Soil and the watry situation do both make the Conjecture more plausible than Polydore Virgil's fancy about the Greek μαρσ, signifying a marsh. For what have we to do here with a Greek Original? The place owes its rise to Religion; for Etbeldreda, Wife to Egfrid King of Northumberland, founded here a Nunnery, which afterwards, by the Patronage of Kings and Noblemen, grew up to an incredible degree of Wealth and Revenues. Inasmuch, that in Henry I.'s time it was advanced to the dignity of a Bishop's See, and had Cambridgeshire assign'd it for its Diocese, which before belong'd to Lincoln. Notwithstanding these Advantages, the City cannot boast of any great beauty, either in publick or private Buildings; for its fenny situation, making the Air thick and gross, has render'd it no very desirable place of Residence. The Cathedral, indeed, is a spacious and beautiful Building.

Ancient Places.

Cambristum, situated upon the River Cam, and implying as much as a Ford over it, is the old Grancaster of the Saxons, out of the Ruins whereof the present Cambridge seems to have risen.

Things Remarkable.

The vast Ditches thrown up by the East-Angles in several parts of this County, to prevent the Incursions of the Mercians, are such as few other places can shew.

Sturbridge-fair, so call'd from the River Sture upon which it is kept every year in September, is very famous for resort of People and variety of Wares.

H U N T I N G D O N S H I R E.

THE County of Huntingdon seems to have that name from the convenience of Hunting, an opinion that is back'd by the ancient condition of this Shire, which is said to have been almost one entire Forest till the Reign of Henry II. At present it is a very good Corn-Country; and the East-parts, which are fenny and very fat, afford excellent Pasture.

The more remarkable Towns, are

}	Huntingdon, Goodmanchester, Kimbolton, S. Ives.
---	--

Huntingdon, the chief Town of the Shire, is seated upon the River Ouse. Formerly it was much more considerable, than at present it is; as appears from its fifteen Churches, being reduc'd to two. The cause of this decay seems to be the obstruction mention'd by Speed to have been made in the River which before was navigable to this Town, to the great profit of the Inhabitants.

Goodmanchester, call'd formerly Gormanchester, stands over-against Huntingdon, on the other side of the River. It has improv'd it self chiefly by Agriculture, wherein the Inhabitants are very industrious; and they boast, that at one time they have entertain'd the King in his Progress, with a noble Show of nine-score Plows. And in this their Employment, they have been so successful, that in the Reign of King James I. the Town was made a Corporation.

Kimbolton, a pretty fair Town, seated in a bottom, is the Ornament of the East-part of this County.

S. Ives, upon the River Ouse, is call'd by a late Writer, a fair, large and ancient Town: But within these three or four years it was a great part of it burnt down; and so, possibly, may hardly merit that character at present.

Ancient Places.

Durobriva, i. e. the passage of the River (viz. Nen) must be Dornford, formerly call'd Dorm-ceaster and Caer-Dorm; whether we respect the course of the Itinerary, the discovery of the ancient Coins, or the marks of an old City.

Durosponte, by the import of the Word, must have been some place upon the Ouse; the name signifying a Bridge over the Ouse. Goodmanchester bids fairest for it; which, as an Evidence of its Antiquity, throws up old Roman Money: And besides, that more modern name was only given it, when King Alfred bestow'd these parts upon Gorman the Dane.

Things Remarkable.

It has been observ'd of this County, that the Families have gone strangely to decay; and that even an hundred years ago, there were few Sir-names of any note, which could be drawn down beyond the Reign of Henry VIII. The cause is uncertain; unless we should impute it to the great quantity of Abby-lands that were in this Shire; which, upon the Dissolution, fell into Lay hands, and perhaps would no more stick by them here, than they have done by their owners in other places.

N O R T H A M P T O N S H I R E.

THE County of Northampton is a plain, level Country, abounding with Pasturage and Corn-fields. The number of Churches is an argument of its populousness; for they are so thick set, that from some places you may see no less than thirty Steeples at a time. For Houses also of the Nobility and Gentry, it may vie with any County in England, of an equal bigness.

The more remarkable Towns, are

}	Northampton, Peterborough, Dantrey.
---	--

Northampton, seated at the meeting of two Rivers, seems to be of no great Antiquity, since we hear little of it in our Histories, till after the Conquest. But in the Commotions rais'd by the Rebellious Barons, it was made the Seat of War: And sometimes, the Kings of England have held their Parliaments at it; induc'd by the convenience of its situation, almost in the Heart of the Kingdom. The Buildings of it were very handsome, and the Town it self pretty large; having within the Walls seven Parish-Churches, and in the Suburbs, two. But in our Age, a most dreadful Fire laid it in Ashes; by which the Inhabitants

R U T L A N D S H I R E.

Rutlandshire is the least of all the Counties in England; and, before the Conquest, seems to have been part of Northamptonshire. For till long after the coming in of the Normans, we do not find it nam'd as a distinct County. 'Tis of form almost circular; the Soil is rich, and the Situation pleasant.

Towns more remarkable, are } Uppingham, } Okeham.

Uppingham, in the South-part of the Shire, is a well-frequented Market-town, and has a handfom School.

Okeham (situated pleasantly in the middle of the Vale of Camore, and so call'd from Oaks) belong'd formerly to the Ferrars, and is at present a Market-town of good note.

Ancient Places.

Margidunum, by its Termination, seems to point out to us some Hill in these parts, where we are to look for it. Market-Overton has certainly the best right; which, as it is seated upon a high Ground, and answers the distances exactly enough, so does it cast up abundance of Coins in Testimony of its Antiquity; and shews store of Marle, to answer the Marga in the beginning of the old name.

Things Remarkable,

At Okeham, was born a Dwarf who was scarce 18 inches high, when a year old, and when 30, only about 3 foot and 9 Inches. When the Court came in progress that way, he was serv'd up in a cold Pye at the Duke of Buckingham's Table.

'Tis an old custom at the same Town, That the first time any Baron of the Realm comes through it, he shall give a Horse-shoe to nail upon the Castle-gate: And in case he refuses, the Bayliff has power to stop his Coach, and take one off his Horse's Foot.

L I N C O L N S H I R E.

THE County of Lincoln is very large, and is branch'd into three Parts, under three several names, Holland, Kesteven and Lindsey. The first is a soft, marshy Ground, abunding with Rivers and Fens; the second is much better Peopl'd, has a more wholesome Air, and a Soil more fruitful; the third juts out into the Ocean with a large Front, and is bigger than either of the other two,

The more considerable } Lincoln,
Towns, are } Stamford, } Boston, } Grantham.

Lincoln (probably so call'd from its watry situation, Lbin in British implying so much) is the chief Town of this County both in Antiquity and Dignity. For it was fortify'd by the Britains; and Vortimer himself was bury'd in it. Notwithstanding the Calamities which the Danes brought upon it, it still kept up its Head; and, at the Conquest, was in a thriving condition, as we learn from Domesday. About which time, the Bishop's See was transferr'd thither from Dorchester; upon a publick Order, that no Bishops should have their Seats in obscure Villages. The Diocese was exceeding large; and notwithstanding Ely was taken out of it by Henry II. and Peterburgio and Oxford by Henry VIII. it is still by much the greatest in England. The Cathedral, as it now stands, is a most stately Pile, and of excellent Workmanship; to which perfection it was brought by several Hands. 'Tis said, there was once 30 Churches in it; but now not above 18. So much has Time spoil'd it of its ancient Grandeur.

Stamford, upon the River Welland, is so call'd from the stony Ford that was in that place. Before the Conquest, it flourish'd much; and in the time of Edward III. upon a Contest between the Northern and Southern Students in Oxford, a great number of them retir'd hither, and settl'd an University. But upon an Accommodation, they went back again, and a publick Act was pass'd, That no Oxford-man should ever profess at Stamford. In the Civil Wars between the Houses of York and Lancaster, it was destroy'd with Fire and Sword, and could never after perfectly recover it self; tho' at present it contains some seven Parishes.

Boston or Botolph's Town, at the mouth of the Witham, is built on both sides that River, and joyn'd with a wooden Bridge. In Edward I's time, it was ransack'd and burnt down by a wicked Gang, which could never be discover'd: Only their Ring-leader confessed the Fact, and was hang'd. But it recover'd it self; especially by the Staple of Wool being settl'd here, which very much enrich'd it. The Inhabitants at present deal mostly in merchandise and Grazing; and with so good success, that the Town is populous and well-built, and the Market much frequented. Their Church is a beautiful Building, the high Steeple whereof is a good Guide to Mariners.

Grantham is a good Market-town; and is much talk'd of upon account of its exceeding high Steeple.

Ancient Places.

Gaufennæ may be conveniently enough settl'd at Brig-casterton near Stamford, where the River Gwash or Wash crosses the High-way; which possibly may be some remain of the old Gaufennæ.

Ad Pontem is plainly Paunton, near the Head of the River Witham; which may be inferr'd not only from the similitude of Names, but also from the distances and marks of Antiquity, discover'd in that place.

Croccalana, tho' it wants the Analogy of names to claim a place at Ancaster, is yet sufficiently demonstrated to belong to it, both by the distances from the Stations on each side, its situation upon the high Way, and the Coins, Vaults, &c. that have been discover'd there.

Lindum

Lindum is on all hands agreed to be Lincoln.

Things Remarkable.

About Belvoir-Castle, they find the Astroites, or Star-stone, resembling little Stars with five Rays.

In Stamford, they have the Custom, which Littleton calls Burrough-English; whereby the youngest Sons inherit such Lands as their Father die possess'd of.

Between Stamford and Lincoln, they have many Spaws or Chalybate-Springs: Those which are most used, are Bourne and Walcot, near Folkingham.

At Wragby, 8 Miles East of Lincoln, a Woman brought forth a Child with two Heads, Anno 1676. which lived some Hours.

At Salselby, near the Sea-coast, one Mr. John Wafen was Minister 74 Years; in which time he bury'd the Inhabitants three times over, save three or four Persons. He dy'd in August, 1693. aged 102.

N O T T I N G H A M S H I R E.

THE County of Nottingham is exceeding well water'd by the River Trent, and those lesser ones that run into it. The West-part of it is all taken up with the spacious Forest of Sherwood.

The Towns more considerable, are { Nottingham, Southwell,
 Newark,
 Mansfield.

Nottingham, the chief Town of the County, is very pleasantly situated; having on one side sweet Meadows; on the other, Hills of an easie ascent. The Town is very beautiful, being adorn'd with a delicate Market-place, neat Churches, and convenient private Buildings. But that which has made it most famous in all Ages, is its strong Castle; built by Pevecel base Son to William the Conqueror. In the beginning of the Civil Wars, Charles I. set up his Royal Standard here in the year 1642. but a little after it came into the Hands of the Parliament, and that War being over, it was order'd to be pull'd down. The Duke of Newcastle hath since erected a splendid Fabrick in the place, begun in the year 1674.

Southwell is famous at this day for its Collegiate Church of Prebendaries, dedicated to the Virgin Mary. Here, the Archbishops of York have a Palace, and three Parks.

Newark is a pretty Town lying upon the Trent; so call'd as if one should say a new Work, from the new Castle built there by Alexander Bishop of Lincoln. Our modern Histories mention it pretty much upon account of its being a Garrison for King Charles I. which held out to the very last.

Mansfield is the chief Town in the Forest of Sherwood, and is a plentiful and flourishing Market.

Ancient Places.

Agelocum or Segelocum is probably at Littleburrow upon Trent, both because the old Way goes along by it; and also because within the marks of an ancient Wall in the Neighbouring Field. the Country people meet with Roman Coins, which they call Swine-penies.

Things Remarkable.

Mortimer's Hole, and that Vault wherein David II. King of Scotland was kept Prisoner, are Rarities wherewith they entertain Strangers in the Castle of Nottingham.

At Workensop, they have Liquorice in great abundance.

D E R B Y S H I R E.

THE County of Derby, towards the South part is hardly six miles broad; but in the North, is thirty. The East and South are well till'd and fruitful enough; but the West, commonly call'd the Peak of Derby, is nothing but Rocks and Mountains: which yet makes amends for its Barrenness, by the abundance of Lead, Iron, &c. which they dig in those parts.

The Principal Town of this Shire, is Derby, so call'd from being a shelter for Deer, which implies, that this was formerly a woody Tract. It was pretty famous in the times of the Saxons; but at the Conquest was very much impair'd: Whether by the Danish Tyranny, I know not; only thus much is certain, That the Danes made it a Harbour and Retreat in their Depredations, till they were driven out of it by the victorious Lady Ethelfleda. At present, it is a handsome Town and pretty large, having a reputation for admirable good ALE above its Neighbours. The Trade of the place is a sort of Retail, viz. buying Corn in order to make advantage of it by Sale to the High-land Countries.

The Peak (as was observ'd) is a craggy, mountainous Country, yet is not altogether useless; for the Hills feed great numbers of Sheep, and it affords also a mixture of Vales pleasant enough. Under Ground they meet with, 1. Lead, 2. Antimony, 3. Mill-stones, 4. the Fluor, a Stone like Crystal.

Remarkable Things.

Buxton-wells, in the Peak of Derby, have a good reputation among the Naturalists; and are said to have a Virtue very Sovereign in many Distempers.

The Devil's Arse in Peak is a Spacious Hole, with a great many corners, like so many Apartments.

Elden-hole is remarkable for its deepness: Mr. Corton plumb'd it to the depth of 800 fathom, but could find no bottom; at least, that he could certainly know to be so.

Near Poles-hole, is a little Brook, consisting of both hot and cold Waters, which are unmixt, and yet so near that you may put the Finger and Thumb, one in hot and the other in cold, both at the same time.

W A R W I C K S H I R E.

THE County of Warwick is divided into two parts, the Felden, and the Woodland; that on the South side, and this on the North-side of Avon. By this division 'tis certain, that as one was a Champaign, so the other was a windy Country: The first afforded all the Pasture and Corn-grounds, and the second was of little use, besides Fuel. But the Iron-works in the Countie round, have so consum'd the Wood, that they have long since made way for the plough; and at present, what by Marle, and other good Contrivances, all this part produces abundance of Corn: So that the Felden is turn'd, in a great measure, into Pasturage.

The chief Towns, { Warwick, are, { *Coven*try,
 { *Brem*ingham,
 { Stratford upon Avon.

Warwick, the principal Town of this Shire, tho' it seems to have been eminent even in the time of the Romans, does yet owe its rise, in a great measure to the noble Lady Erbefleda, who rais'd it out of Ashes. And indeed, we cannot wonder why it should be particularly pitch'd upon, in those warlike times for a Retreat and Sanctuary, since Nature her self seems to have made it for that purpose. The Hill on which it stands, is one entire Rock of free Stone; and the four ways leading into the Town were cut through it. The Castle is exceeding strong, and was of great consequence in times of War; but now 'tis a noble and delightful Seat. On the South of the Town, is a Prospect of a sweet, fruitful Champaign; on the North, of Groves and Parks. The two publick Ornaments, are the County-hall and the Market-house. This was the condition of the place, till of late; when a most dreadful Fire, enforc'd by a very strong Wind, laid the best part of the Town in Ashes: But 'tis hoped, the Contributions of the Kingdom will be so liberal, that in a few years we shall see it rise out of its Ruins with a fresh Beauty.

*Coven*try, so call'd from a Convent there, had formerly the honour of a Bishop's See; which, within a few years, was remov'd back to Lichfield; but upon this Condition, That the Bishop should take his Title from both places. They own Leofrick Earl of Merca and Godiva his Wife, for their greatest Benefactors. The growth and increase of the Town seems to be owing, in a great measure, to the Manufacture of Cloaking and Caps, for which they were once very eminent; tho' now they are almost laid aside. That which they value themselves upon, is a stately Cross, built by Sir William Hellies Lord Mayor of London, for Beauty and Workmanship not to be match'd in England. The Walls (which were very strong,) were demolish'd at the Restoration, by order of King Charles II.

Bremingham, is a very populous Town, abounding with handsem Buildings: It seems to be of a late date, and to have risen chiefly by the Iron-works, which are the great Business of the place.

Stratford upon Avon is a pretty Market town; and has a fine Stone-bridge over the Avon, consisting of 14 Arches.

Ancient Places.

Præsidium, mention'd by the Notitia, is in all probability the Town of Warwick; than which no situation can be more proper for a Garrison.

Manducæddum must be sought for upon Watling-street, and there we meet with Manchester; which as it carries in it some Remains of the old Name, so does it shew its Antiquity by a Fort, which they call Oldbury.

Things Remarkable.

On the side of Edge-hill, is the shape of a Horse cut in the ground; and the Trenches that form it are kept open by a Freehold in the Neighbourhood, who hold Lands by that Service.

About Shugbury, they often meet with the Astretites; which being put into Vinegar, keep themselves in motion, as appears by Experiment.

In memory of Godiva their great Patroness, the Inhabitants of *Coven*try have a yearly Cavalcade or Solemn Procession, with a naked Figure, representing her riding naked on Horse-back through the City. The occasion is this: Godiva (as Tradition says) redeem'd the Town from very heavy Taxes, laid upon them by her Husband Leofrick; these he would upon no Terms remit, unless she would consent to ride through the Town naked; which she did, and cover'd her Body with her long dishevel'd Hair.

W O R C E S T E R S H I R E.

THE County of Worcester is very happy both in its Air and Soil; and is excellently water'd by the River Severn, which runs through the very midst of it. The South part has also the advantage of the Avon, running out of Warwickshire into the Severn.

The more remarkable { Worcester,
Towns, are { Kidderminster, { Evesham, { Dunsmuir.

Worcester, the chief place in this County, seems to have had its original from the convenience of its situation upon the Severn. For that River being the Boundary between the Britains and Saxons, the frequent Incursions of the former oblig'd the latter to fence and guard it with the utmost diligence. And to go yet higher; it might probably enough be one of those Garrisons which the Romans built to keep in awe the Britains in those parts, and to secure themselves against Plots and Insurrections. In the year 680. it was made an Episcopal See, and the Church was fill'd with marry'd Presbyters; till Dunstan turn'd them out and plac'd Monks in their room. But those too too were at last ejected by King Henry VIII, who plac'd there a Dean and Prebendaries. The City itself is large, populous and wealthy, dealing much in the Cloth-Trade. 'Tis govern'd by a Mayor and six Aldermen, who are Justices of the Peace and elected out of the 24 Capital Citizens.

Kidderminster, at a little distance from the Severn, is not remarkable for any Antiquity it can claim; but is however, a handsome Town, adorn'd with a beautiful Church, and has a Market very well frequented.

Evesham, upon the River Avon, was very famous among our Fore-fathers, upon account of the Monastery built there by Egwin, about the year 700. The Town is seated upon a gentle ascent, and is neat enough; receiving not only great Advantages, but the pleasure also of an open, free Prospect, from the spacious and fruitful Vale of Evesham, which produces Corn in great abundance.

Droitwich, upon the River Salwarp, has got both its Reputation and Riches, by the Brine-pits, and the purest kind of Salt which they make. They had a Charter granted them by King James I. and the Borough is govern'd by two Bailiffs and a certain number of Burgeses.

Ancient Places.

Branoninum, call'd also Branogenium, is undoubtedly the City of Worcester, call'd by the Britains at this day Cæwr Urangen.

Things Remarkable.

The Brine-pits at Droitwich afford great quantities of fine white Salt; and would yield much more, but that the Proprietors are careful, for their own Interest, not to over-stock the Markets.

The River Severn, about Holt and the neighbouring Parts, breeds prodigious numbers of River-Lampreys.

Washbourn under Breden-hills, with some other Villages, are entirely sever'd from the main Body of the County.

S T A F F O R D S H I R E.

THE County of Stafford, as to the Figure, is broad in the middle, but narrow towards each end: As to the Soil, 'tis mountainous, and not very fruitful toward the North; but in the middle and South-parts, is very fertile and pleasant.

The chief Towns } Stafford, are, } Litchfield.

Stafford, upon the River Sow, requires our mention, more upon account of its giving name to the whole County, than any Beauty, Riches or Populousness of its own. Nor was it very considerable, about the Conquest; For we find by Domesday, That the King had in this place only 18 Burgeses. The Barons of Stafford, owners of Stafford-Castle, were exceeding favourable to it, got it erected into a Borough in the Reign of King John, and procur'd for it large Privileges and Liberties.

Litchfield, upon the River Trent, is a very ancient Town, and seems to have had that name from the dead Bodies of those Christians who are said to have been put to death here, in the time of Dioclesian. Osmy King of Northumberland settl'd a Bishop's See in this place, as early as the year 606, which also afterwards had its Archbishop for some time; but that lasted not long. The situation of it is low; and the City is handsome and pretty large. Its greatest Ornaments, are, the Cathedral, the Bishop's Palace, and the Houses of the Prebendaries; which make a noble Show. 'Tis divided into two parts by a sort of Lough, which yet have communication by two Causeys. It was first made a Corporation by King Edward VI. who granted to it Bailiffs and Burgeses.

Ancient Places.

Eroctum will best suit with the course and order of the Itinerary, if it be settl'd at Wall, about a mile South of Litchfield. For the Remains of old Walls and Buildings, plainly shew it to be a place of Antiquity; which being gain'd, the agreement of the Distances are a sufficient Argument to prefer this place before any other.

Pennocrucium should seem at first sight, to be Penkridge, upon the River Penk; and the Distances, as well as Sound, would favour such a Conjecture well enough. But there is one Objection against it, That it lies a considerable way from the Old Road, and so cannot well be suppos'd to be one of their Stations, which seldom were remov'd from the Way. Stretton, a little lower, carries Antiquity in its very name (as much as if one should say the Street-Town) suits the Distances very well, and has the advantage of lying upon the Road, from which it takes the name.

Things Remarkable.

Below the Confluence of the River Tame and the Trent, northward, there is great store of Alabaster.

The three Stones, erected Spire-wise in the Church-yard at Checcley, with the little Images cut upon two of them, upon what account soever they might be set up, are very remarkable.

S H R O P S H I R E.

Shropshire (as a Frontier-County between the Welch and English) has more Castles built in it, than any other County in England. Insomuch that a late Author observes, That it seems to be parted from Wales with a continu'd Wall of Castles: And is said by another, That no less than 32 Castles have been built within this Shire, besides the fortify'd Towns. The Soil of it is fruitful, and the Country pleasant.

The chief Towns } Shrewsbury, are, } Ludlow.

Shrewsbury, the chief Town of the County, tho' it cannot pretend to Roman Antiquity, did yet rise out of the Ruins of an old neighbouring City, Uricondum; and was of very good note among the Saxons. So that, about the Conquest, we find 252 Citizens reckon'd reckon'd in it; and Roger de Montgomery, who had it bestow'd upon him by the Conqueror, improv'd it considerably with Building; and fortify'd it with a strong Castle. And indeed the natural situation of the Town is encouragement enough to pitch upon it particularly for a place of Strength and Sanctuary. The Severn had in a great measure done the work to their Hands, having almost encompass'd it and made it look like a Peninsula. At present, 'tis well-built, well-Inhabited and well-traded. For, standing in the Confines of England and Wales, it is (as it were) the common Mart of both Nations. Of the publick Buildings, the most noted is the School, which is a stately stone Fabrick, erected and endow'd by Q. Elizabeth, for one Master and three under-Masters. It has likewise a curious Library, which together with the School and Houses for the School-masters, make it look like a College.

Ludlow, at the meeting of the Rivers Trent and Corve, owes its original to the Castle built in the place by Roger de Montgomery; which he enclos'd with a Wall. The Town is beautiful and in a thriving condition, notwithstanding all the Misfortunes it has undergone in the turns of War, by being a Frontier between England and Wales. For which King Henry VIII. made it amends very amply, when he settl'd there the Council of the Marches, consisting of a Lord President, so many Counsellors and other Officers; which does not only add to its Reputation, but also is of considerable consequence to it in point of Interest.

Ancient Places.

Rutunium discovers it self very distinctly in the present name of Reuten, in the West-part of this County, not far from the Severn; which Analogy of Names is of so much the more force, because the Distances agree very well on both sides.

Uricinium is call'd at this day Wroxeter (at some distance from Shrewsbury); and the ancient Fortifications and Buildings of the Romans (the Remains whereof are visible) are nam'd The old Walls of Wroxeter.

Things Remarkable.

Where the Rivers Clune and Temb meet, arises the famous Carr-Caradock, a large Hill, which was the Scene of that Action between Ostorius the Roman, and Caratacus the Britain; whereof Tacitus has given us a very distinct Account.

The Swearing-Sickness in the year 1551. which over-ran the whole Kingdom, was observ'd to begin in Shrewsbury.

'Tis a pretty Device the Fishermen in those parts have invented, viz. a little Cradle (as they call it) of an Oval Form, made of split Sally-twigs, and next the Water cover'd with an Horse's hide. In this one Man seats himself, rows with one hand very swiftly, and with the other can manage his Net, Angle or other Fishing-tackle.

C H E S H I R E.

THE County of Chester is a fruitful Country, and very well water'd. It boasts most of its Pelarine Jurisdiction, by virtue whereof its Earl was stild Comes Palatinus, and all the Inhabitants held of him as in chief, and were under a Sovereign Allegiance to him, as to the King. He held also his Parliaments, where even the Barons were oblig'd to give their Attendance. But when this unlimited Power (which had been granted about the Conquest) came to break in by degrees upon the Regal Authority it self, and was justly suspected by our Kings, Henry VIII. restrain'd their Sovereignty, and made them dependent upon the Crown. Notwithstanding which, all Pleas of Lands and Tenements, &c. ought to be judicially determin'd within this Shire; no Crime but Treason forcing an Inhabitant of this County to a Trial elsewhere.

The more considerable
Places are, { Chester,

sell, B.P. 1682.

Chester, call'd from its western situation West-Chester, was (under Agrippa Lieutenant of Britain) the Seat of the Legion call'd Vicesima Victrix, settl'd there to curb the Incursions of the Ordovices. And accordingly, the discovery of Roman Coins, Inscriptions, &c. are a sufficient mark, not only of its Antiquity, but likewise of the Eminent Character it bore in those times. A little after the Conquest, it was made a Bishop's See, by Peter, Bishop of Lichfield; but did not enjoy that Dignity long. In all the Disturbances between the English and Welsh, this City has constantly had its share; being immediately expos'd to their Fury when ever they met with any favourable prospect of an Incursion. Perhaps, it might be in consideration of their good Services, that King Henry VII. was mov'd to incorporate the Town into a distinct County. But his Successor King Henry VIII. did it the greatest Honour, when upon the expulsion of the Monks, he erected it into a Bishop's See; a Dignity that it had wanted for many hundred years. The City it self is of a square Form, the Buildings whereof are very neat; and the chief Street is adorn'd with Piazza's on each side. It has eleven Parish Churches. The Sea is not so kind as it has been formerly; having withdrawn it self, and depriv'd the City of the advantage of an Harbour.

Nantwich, lying upon the River Weaver, is a Town very well built, with a handsom Church. It seems to owe its Growth to the Brine-Pits, which afford them the whitest Salt, in great abundance. Upon which account, 'tis call'd by the Welch Hellath-wen that is, White-salt-wich.

Ancient Places.

Deva, is on all Hands agreed to be the City of Chester.

Benium seems to have left something of its name in the ancient Banchoer, a Monastery of great eminence among our Fore-fathers, lying upon the River Dea, and the Distances, with other Circumstances, do moreover asser it to the same place.

Coggi, a People of the Britains, are settl'd in these parts upon the Authority of an old Inscription, dug up near this Castr.

Cendatum seems to be Congleton in this County, by the sound; but the distances and Course of the Itinerary do not much favour the Conjecture. An old Inscription dug up at Presbrig in the Bishoprick of Durham, would encline us to carry it thither, by its mention of this ancient place.

Things

Things Remarkable.

The County is remarkable for making excellent Cheese, which it sends thorew the whole Kingdom.

In the Heaths and Bottoms, through which the Wever passes in the South-part of the Shire, they dig up Trees under ground; a thing indeed not peculiar to the County, but remarkable enough.

In this County, they make abundance of Salt.

HEREFORDSHIRE.

THE County of Hereford is water'd by the pleasant Rivers Wye, Lug and Munow, which empty themselves in one Chanel into the Severn. Being a sort of Frontier in the Wars between the English and Welsh, it has had greater numbers of Forts and Castles, than most other Counties. Tho' it abounds with good Corn and Pasture-grounds, yet is it most eminent at this day for its vast quantities of Fruit, of which they make so much Cyder, as does not only supply their own Families, but furnish London and other parts of England. Their Red-streak (so call'd from the Apple) is highly valu'd in all parts.

The chief Town

Hereford, so call'd as if one should say The Ford of the Army, is encompass'd with Rivers on all sides, but to the East. 'Tis Daughter to a place of Antiquity at about three miles distance, call'd by the Romans Ariconium, at this day Kenchester. But our Hereford seems not to have risen before the Saxon Hierarchy was at its height; nor to owe its Growth to any other cause than the Martyrdom of Ethelbert King of the East-Angles, villanously murder'd by Quindreda Wife to King Offa, while he courted her own Daughter. Whereupon, he was taken into the Catalogue of Martyrs, and had a Church built to his memory in this place; which was not only soon after erected into a Bishop's See, but had signal Respects shew'd it by the West-Saxon and Mercian Kings. The City is pretty large: Before the Civil Wars, it had six Churches; but now it has only four.

Ancient Places.

Blestium, by the Distances, can be no other than Old Foari (upon the Munow) call'd by the Britains Castle-bean, a name implying Strength and Antiquity.

Ariconium must be Kenchester, near Hereford; which asserts its claim to Antiquity by the old Walls, Chequer-works, Bricks, Coins, &c. observ'd and discover'd about it.

Things Remarkable.

A Well, below Richard's Castle, is full of small Fish-bones or Frog-bones; and notwithstanding it be sometimes empty'd, a fresh Supply always succeeds: Whereupon, 'tis call'd Bone-Well.

Mareley-hill, near the Confluence of Lug and Wye, was in the year 1575. remov'd by an Earthquake to a higher place.

In a common Meadow call'd the WVergins, between Sutton and Hereford, two large Stones set on end were remov'd to about twelvescore spaces distance, no Body knew how: This hapn'd about the year, 1652.

YORKSHIRE.

THE County of York is, by much, the largest in all England, being divided into three Branches; each of which is as large, or indeed larger than any ordinary County. The Divisions are term'd Ridings; a name corrupted from the old Saxon Thrihing, which consisted of several Hundreds or Wapentakes. They are, according to the several Quarters, call'd WVest-Riding, East-Riding and North-Riding, to which we may add Richmondshire. We will consider each of these under their several Heads; but the WVest-Riding being the most flourishing part, and abounding most with beautiful Towns, requires the first place.

WEST-RIDING.

West-Riding is for some time bounded by the River Ouse, by Lancashire, and the Southern-limits of the County in general.

The more considerable Towns are

York, Leeds, Ripon, Halifax, Wakefield, Pontefract.

* YORK, the Metropolis of this County, and an Archiepiscopal See, stands upon the River Ure or Ouse, which runs quite through it from North to South. At what time precisely it was built, we have no evidence. Thus much is certain, That it was the Residence of the Sixth Legion call'd VIETRIX, that Severus had his Court here, that Constantius the Emperor dy'd in this place, and was immediately succeeded by his Son Constantine the Great, who receiv'd the last Breath of his dying Father. We need no further evidence of its Glory under the Romans. Upon the settlement of the Saxons, it was erected into a Metropolitan See by Pope Honorius; and has continued so ever since. It suffer'd very much in the Danish Ravages; but it recover'd it self, when the Norman Government was establish'd, and the Disturbances of that Revolution were blown over. The City is large, pleasant and adorn'd with beautiful Buildings both publick and private. The Bridge over the Foss or Ditch is so throng'd with Buildings, that you would take it for one continu'd Street. The publick Structures of greatest note, are, 1. The Minster, or Cathedral Church, built in the Reign of Edward I. 'Tis a most stately Pile, and particularly remarkable for the fine Carvings in the Quire, 2. The Chapter-house, for its small Pillars and the contrivance of the whole Fabric, is one of the neatest Buildings in England.

Leeds, upon the River Aire, is of good Antiquity; and the very name implies that it has been all along a populous thriving Town; for 'tis deriv'd from the Saxon Leod, gens, populus. It has grown strangely by the advantage of the Cloth Trade especially; and was by King Charles II. honour'd with a Mayor, 12 Aldermen and 24 Assistants.

Rippon, situated between the Ure and the Skell, was of good note even in the Infancy of the English Church, upon account of the Monastery built there by Wilfrid Archbishop of York. The Town has grown mightily by the Woollen Manufacture, which they have now pretty much laid aside. The Church is a neat and stately Fabrick, with three Spire-steeples; and was built by Contributions.

Halifax, upon the River Calder, is suppos'd to be nam'd from a certain holy Virgin, who had her Head cut off by a lustful Villain, with whose impure Desires she would not, by any means, comply. Her Head was hung up on a Tree; and was reputed so sacred, as to be frequently visited in Pilgrimage. Whereupon, the little Village of Horton came by degrees to be a large and noted Town, and took its name from that which had rais'd its Reputation, viz, the sacred Hair of the Virgin's Head: For so much Halifax implies. Notwithstanding the Soil hereabouts is very barren, the Inhabitants by their Industry in the Cloth Trade are grown exceeding rich. The Parish is vastly large, having in it twelve Chapels under the Mother-Church of Halifax, two whereof are Parochial.

Wakefield, upon the River Calder, is a large Town; nearly built, has a well-frequented Market, and has grown mainly by the Clothing-Trade.

Pontefract, so call'd from a broken Bridge, is a Town well-built and admirably situated. It had a most noble large Castle, seated upon a high Hill, which is now demolish'd.

Ancient Places.

Danum mention'd by Antoninus and the Notitia, is undoubtedly Doncaster, call'd by Ninius Caer-Dan.

Cambodunum belongs to the little Village Almondbury, six miles from Halifax; as appears both by the Distances on each hand, and the Ruins of an old Roman Work, with a triple Fortification, still plainly visible.

Legecelium cannot be more conveniently seated than at Ceslieford, near the Confluence of Calder and Aire; where they meet with great numbers of Coins, which they call Saracins Heads.

Olicana appears to be Ilkeley, from the affinity of the two names, the remains of Antiquity found about it, and its situation in respect of York.

Calcaria, tho' commonly seated at Tadcaster, and that upon very plausible Reasons, ought nevertheless to be remov'd to its Neighbour New-ton-kime, where the ancient High-road runs along, crossing the River at S. Helensford, and where they meet with great store of Roman Coins, and other marks of Antiquity.

Isurium is sufficiently asserted to Aldbrough near Burrow-bridge, both by its nearness to the River Ure, the great number of Coins they dig up, and its due distance from the City of York, answering the computation of Antoninus.

Eboracum is by all agreed to be the City of York, the eminence whereof in the time of the Romans, we have already taken notice of.

Things Remarkable.

Helifax-law is eminent: By it, they behead any one that's found stealing within such a Liberty, without staying for a legal and ordinary Process.

S. Wilfrid's Needle at Rippon was mighty famous. In the Church, they had a little close passage into a Vault, whereby they pretended to try the Chastity of Women: If they were Chaste, they pass'd with ease; if not, they were stop'd and holden, without any visible Impediment.

The Devil's Rolts, near Burrow-bridge, are three huge Stones, set on end in the form of Pyramids: which have their name from a foolish fancy of the Vulgar, that they were pitch'd there by the Devil, but are by the Learned (according to different Conjectures) look'd upon to be either Monuments of some Victory, or British Deities.

In the Levels or Marches, they dig up great quantities of Fir, and some Oak.

E A S T - R I D I N G.

The Bounds of the East-Riding are thus: The North and West-sides are limited by the River Derwent; the South, by the mouth of Humber; and the North, by the German Ocean. In some parts 'tis pretty fruitful, tho' in every respect it falls much short of the West-Riding; the middle of it being nothing but Mountains, which they call York-moors.

The chief Towns } Beverley, are, } Hull.

Beverley began to be a Town of note, after John de Beverley Archbishop of York, a Person of great Piety, retir'd hither, and ended his days in it. For King Athelstan having a singular Veneration for him, for his sake endow'd the Town with several Immunities; and others of our Kings have been exceeding kind to it upon the same account. So that now (notwithstanding its nearness to Hull, which one would think should very much prejudice it) it is above a mile in length; and is adorn'd with two beautiful Churches. The Minster is a very fair Structure. The chief Trade of the place is Malt, Oatmeal, and Tann'd Leather.

Hull, or Kingston upon Hull, is so call'd from the River upon which it stands, and King Edward I. its Founder. By the convenience of their Harbour, the advantage of their Island Fish-Trade, and the particular Favours of their great Patron Michael de la Pele, the Town is so grown both in Wealth, Buildings, Populoufness and Commerce, that it infinitely exceeds all its Neighbours. They have two Churches, an Exchange for Merchants, and a Trinity-house for the Relief of Seamen and their Wives; besides other Buildings, which are very ornamental and of great use in the management of their Trade, and the administration of their Government. As to the Strength of the place, they have a strong Cittadel begun in the year 1681. But their situation is the best Bulwark against the Enemy: For by advantage of the Level all about, they can let in the Flood, and lay all under-water for five miles round.

Ancient Places.

Derwentio must be seated somewhere upon the River Derwent: Auldby is the likeliest place, both upon account of its name, which implies an old Dwelling; and also by reason of the Remains of Antiquity still visible about it.

Abus can be no other Æstuary than the Humber, which is a very spacious one, and receives a great many considerable Rivers.

Delgovitia is probably Wigton, upon the little River Foulness; Degwe in British signifying a Statue or Image of a Heathen God, and it appearing that not far from hence there stood an Idol Temple.

Ocellum Promontorium, is Spurnhead; where Kelley seems to be a Remain of the old Ocellum.

Peateriam discovers it self by the present name Peat-rington, and by its distance from Delgovitia.

Sinus Sanctaris is that Bay near Bridlington; in the turn whereof is Sureby, which exactly answers the name, as 'tis translated into Latin, from the Greek Ἑσπερίος.

Things Remarkable.

The Gipsys or Gipseys (for so they are call'd at present) about Flamborough, are a sort of little Springs which jet out of the Ground, and spout up Water to a great height. They never come, but after great Rains, and lasting wet Weather. See Camden's Britannica, English, pag. 748.

NORTH-RIDING.

The North-Riding is (as it were) the Frontier of the other two; extending in a narrow Tract from East to West, for sixty miles together, and bounded on one side with the River Derwent and the Ouse, on the other by the Tees.

The chief Town is,

Gisburgh, four Miles from the mouth of the Tees, formerly famous for the Abbey there ; which, by the Ruins, seems to have been equal to some of the best Cathedrals in England. Its Eminence appears, in that it was the common Burial-place for the Nobility in these parts. The pleasant Situation, the goodness of the Air, the neatness of the Inhabitants, and other Advantages, make the place very agreeable and delightful.

Ancient Places.

Dunus Sinus discovers it self by a little Village seated upon it and call'd Dunescy, hard by Whitby.

Things Remarkable.

About Whitby, they find the Serpent-Stones; which the credulous, common People imagine to be Serpents turn'd into Stones by the Prayers of S. Hilda.

Upon the same Shore, they find the Black-Amber or Geate, which grows within the chink or cliff of a Rock.

The Seales (or Sea-veales, call'd also Sea-calves) sleep upon the Rocks near Huntcliff in great Drove and there Sun themselves.

RICHMONDSHIRE.

This part of the County lying to the North-west, is almost all Rocks and Mountains, which yet in some places afford good pasture; and under-ground, great store of Lead, Coal, &c.

The chief Town is

Richmond, upon the River Swale, so call'd as if one should say a rich Mount ; which name it had given it by Aan the first Earl, immediately after the Conquest ; who fortify'd it with Walls and a very strong Castle. It has three Gates ; and taking in the Suburbs is pretty large and populous ; but within the Walls it is but narrow.

Ancient Places.

Bracchium is to be sought for at the confluence of Baine and Cre; where, at a place call'd Burgh, are the Remains of an old Fortification, and where an Inscription was discover'd making exprefs mention of this name.

Catacrætonium (so call'd from a Cataract in the River Swale) does plainly discover it self in our present Catarrick.

Lararia, by the course of the ancient High-way and the Distances in Antoninus, must be about Bowes, on the edge of Stancmore; which has had its Antiquity attested by ancient Inscriptions.

Things Remarkable.

Upon the Confines of Lancashire, where the Mountains are rough, wild and steep, there are little Rivulets hurry along so deep in the Ground, that it creates an Horror in one, to look down to them: Those they call Hell-becks, upon account of their gaftliness and depth.

Sir Christopher Medcalf, a Gentleman of these parts when Sheriff of the County, is said to have been attended with 300 Horse, all of his own Family and Name, and all in the same Habit, when he receiv'd the Judges, and conducted them to York.

D U R H A M.

D*urham* (commonly call'd the Bishoprick of Durham from the absolute Power which the Bishops hereof us'd to exercise in this County) is nam'd by our ancient Writers, the Patrimony of S. Cuthbert. This Saint, who liv'd here in the Infancy of the Saxon-Church, was so much respected by our Kings and Nobility for his exemplary Vertue and Piety, that they thought they could never sufficiently express their respect to his Memory, nor heap Lands, Privileges and Immunities enough upon his darling Church. Inso-much, that at length, it was made a County-Palatine; and accordingly the Bishops have their Royalties, and are both Spiritual and Temporal Lords.

Durham, in Saxon Dun-holm, from its high situation, owes its original to the miseries and misfortunes of the Monks of Lindisfarne, in the time of the Danes. For being by that barbarous People disturb'd in their own Seats, they were forced to seek Protection for themselves, and a shelter for the Relicks of Saint Cuthbert, in the most convenient place they should meet with. Here they fix'd; and when that dreadful Storm was blown over, and Religion reviv'd, they flourish'd in great Pomp and Reputation. In William the Conqueror's time the place was made a Seat of War, by those who could not bear the violation of their ancient Rights and Liberties. The Town is defended by the River, on all sides but the North; and is wall'd round. The Cathedral is a noble Pile of Building, and the Church exceeding rich.

Bernard-castle, upon the River Tees, was so call'd from Bernard Baliol (Grandfather to John Baliol King of Scots;) its Founder. 'Tis a good Town; and is eminent in those Northern parts for the best White-bread.

Stockton, about three miles below Yorum (a considerable Market-Town) about thirty years ago, had no Houses Houses but of Clay, and thatch'd. Now, 'tis well built, is a Corporation, and drives a great Trade in Lade and Butter.

Ancient Places.

Tuesis or Téang in Ptolemy, is plainly the River Tees.

Vedra, mention'd by Ptolemy, does likewise belong to this County, and is undoubtedly the River Wère call'd by Bede, Wirus.

Vincivium in Antoninus, in Ptolemy Binotium, seems by the very Name to settle it self at Binchester, near the River Wère; where appear large Ruins of Walls: and Coins, with other marks of Antiquity, are dug up.

Condercum seems to be Chester on the Street, near the River Wère; especially, if the Saxon name of the place be Concester: All the Objection is, That the Noritia settles this Station at Lincoln Valli, so that Chester on the Street is perhaps too far remov'd from the Wall to lay claim to this piece of Antiquity. An Altar found at Benwell in Northumberland seems to give it to that place, against which there is not the same Objection.

Things Remarkable.

The Pits call'd Hell-kettles near Darlington, are much admir'd both by Travellers and the Inhabitants. There are three of them, full of Water to the brim possibly by a Communication with the Tees only: the Water in them is said to be of a different kind from that in the River. They look much like old-wrought Coal-pits that are drown'd.

L A N C A S H I R E.

THE County of Lancaster, call'd by the northern People Lancaster, where it is level yields good store of Barley and Wheat; and in the Valleys, Oats. The Mosses, tho' as to their produce they are of no real value, are yet of considerable advantage both by the Fuel above ground, and the old Trees underground. Its greatest Glory is, that 'tis a County-Palatine, as well as its neighbour Cheshire.

The more considerable
Towns are,

{ Lancaster, Manchester,
 Wiggin,
 Liverpool.

Lancaster, (so call'd from the River Lone upon which it stands) gives name to the whole County, and was, accordingly, the most flourishing Town in it. But now 'tis much out-grown by Manchester, having no advantage of Trade, or any other Employment besides that of Agriculture; to which indeed the nature and situation of the place may seem in some measure to have determin'd the Inhabitants. For the Grounds about it are very fit for Cultivation, and 'tis seated in an open free Tract.

Manchester, at the Confluence of the Irk and Irwell, is the most populous and thriving Town in this County. The Inhabitants may be estimat'd from the number of Communicants; who in the Town and Parish round it made no less than 20000, sixty years ago; since which time the Inhabitants have encreas'd proportionably to their incredible growth in Trade. They are most famous for the Fustian-Manufacture, commonly known by the name of Manchester-Cottons; tho' they deal also in many other Manufactures, all which are call'd by one general name, Manchester-Wares. They have more publick Buildings than are commonly to be met with in our County-towns. 1. The Collegiate Church is a very stately Edifice, the Quire whereof is particularly remarkable for its curious carv'd Work. 2. The College (consisting of a Warden, four Fellows, two Chaplains, four Singing-men, and four Choristers) is a noble Foundation. 3. The Hospital for the maintenance of sixty poor Boys, is much of the same Government and Constitution with that of Christ-Church in London. 4. The Library is furnish'd already with Books, to almost the number of 4000, and will daily encrease by an annual Salary of 11*l.* per Ann. sett'd upon it for that purpose, and for the maintenance of a Librarian. 5. The School has three Masters, who have plentiful Salaries.

Wiggin, near the rise of the River Dugless, is handsom, plentiful Town having the honour of a Mayor and Burgesses.

Liverpool (near the entrance of the River Mersey into the Sea) tho' it can boast of no great Antiquity is yet a place both of Name and Wealth. The first it derives from the convenience of a passage from hence over into Ireland, which of late years has been much us'd by reason of the Commotions in that Kingdom. The second is owing to its Trade with the West-Indies, and the Manufacture round it: By the advantage whereof the Buildings and Inhabitants are more than doubly increas'd, and the Customs augmented eight or ten-fold, within these 28 years last past. Of late, they have built a Town-house, plac'd upon Pillars; and under it, the Exchange.

Ancient Places.

Mancunium, is Manchester, which may seem to have taken part of its name from the Roman one.

Bellisama must be an Æstuary hereabouts: The latter Syllable of the name of Ribble would induce us to pitch upon the mouth of that River before any other.

Ribodunum (if we may change Ptolemy's Rigodunum into that) need not be sought in any other place but Ribble-chester, which produces a variety of Roman Remains; and however inconsiderable at present gave rise to Preston, a handsom, large and populous Town.

Bremetonacum cannot probably be more conveniently seated than at Oveiburrow (at the confluence of the Irk and Lone) which, tho' it has no remains of the old name, does yet carry Antiquity in the latter part of its present one, and has the Tradition of the Inhabitants on its side (who tell you of a spacious City that was formerly there) and the Evidence of Roman Coins, Inscriptions, &c.

Longovicum is plainly Lancaster, call'd by the Inhabitants and the northern part, Lancaster; besides which Analogy of Names, they meet now and then with Coins of the Roman Emperors.

Things Remarkable.

Lancashire-Oxen are famous throughout England for huge, bulky Bodies and large Horns.

Vvinwick, near the River Mersey, is reckon'd one of the best Parsonages in the Kingdom.

At Hey in this County, we see such a Plantation of Fir-trees (by the Industry and contrivance of its present Owner Thomas Brotherton, Esq;) as perhaps can hardly be met with elsewhere.

Lathom-spaw in this County, tho' not much frequented (by reason of the want of suitable Accommodation) has done considerable Cures.

Burning-well, near Wiggin, if a Candle be put to it, will presently take Fire and burn like Brandy; and in a calm quiet Season will continue for a whole day together, even to that degree, that by the heat of it they boil Eggs, Meat, &c.

W E S T M O R L A N D.

THE County of Westmorland is so call'd from its westerly situation; lying West of that great ridge of Mountains which divideth these Northern Counties. The out skirts of it on most sides are hilly and mountainous, which feed great Flocks of Sheep, and have a mixture of fruitful Vales; but the heart of it is an open, champain Country, which affords good store of Corn and Wood.

The more considerable { Apelby, Towns, are { Kendal.

Apelby claims the first place, both upon account of its Antiquity; and also because 'tis the County-town, where the yearly Affizes are held. Otherwise, 'tis neither rich nor beautiful; only the situation indeed makes it very agreeable, having the advantage of pleasant Fields round it, and being wash'd by the River Eden.

Kendal, call'd also Kirby Kendal, has its name from the River Can, and implies as much as a Dale or Vally upon that River. This is much beyond Apelby, whether we respect the Trade, Buildings, Number or Wealth of the Inhabitants. It has two good Streets, which cross each other, and is enrich'd by the Industry of the Towns-men and the Woollen Manufacture, for which they are very eminent, and drive a Trade with it throughout England.

Ancient places.

Amboylana, if we follow the Analogy of Names, cannot be plac'd more conveniently than at Amblefide, upon Windermere-water; which may be done with so much the less scruple, because it shews the Ruins of an old City, and other marks of Antiquity.

Ituna is undoubtedly the noble River of Eden, which marches through this County, towards the Sea.

Verteræ must be Brough under Stanemore, for several Reasons: The Name imports Antiquity; then it stands upon a Roman High-way; and lastly, the Distances from Levatæ and Brovonacum agree very exactly.

Aballaba is so visible in our present Apelby, and so well answers that situation, that there is no room for dispute.

Gallatum is probably Whelp-castle, near Kirby-Thore where are the Ruins of an old Town, and very considerable Remains of Antiquity.

Setantiorum Lacus may well enough be Windermere upon the edge of Lancashire; one of the largest Lakes in the Kingdom.

Things Remarkable.

King Arthur's round Table, in the North of this County, is much talk'd of by the Inhabitants and others: But we need go no farther for its original than the Ages wherein Tilting was in vogue; this being a round Entrenchment with a plain piece of Ground in the middle, and very convenient for that purpose.

Gold-sike, in the Parish of Orton, is a little Spring which continually casts up small thin pieces, of a substance shining and resembling Gold.

In Windermere-water there is a great store of the Fish call'd Charre, which is not to be met withal in the South, and only in very few places of the North. They are bak'd in Pots, and so sent up to London, and other parts, where they are an acceptable Present.

C U M B E R L A N D.

THE County of Cumberland is the fairest of our English Counties to the North-west, and borders upon Scotland. Whether it fetch the name from the old Britains, call'd Cambri and Cumbri; or, (as a modern Author imagins) from our Cumber, the Shire being encumber'd with Lakes and Mountains, and made very difficult to Travellers, I shall not determine. The former Conjecture has this advantage, that some of the Britains posted themselves for a long time in these parts, when the Saxon Conqueror drove them to the out-skirts of the Island, and made them seek for shelter among Hills and Mountains. The remains of British Names hereabouts concur to the establishment of the same Opinion.

More considerable { Carlisle, Towns, are { Penrith.

Carlisle is happy in its situation, standing between the Rivers of Eden, Peteril and the Caude; which, as they make it very agreeable, and furnish it with great plenty of Fish, so do they add considerably to its Strength; a circumstance that in these bordering Counties was very valuable. For before the union of the two Crowns, the Scots were continually making Incurfions upon the Frontiers; which put the Government under the Necessity of building Castles, Towers and fortify'd Places, for the defence of it self and of the Subject. The City is wall'd round, has a Castle, with a Citadel built by King Henry VIII. Its situation upon the Wall, with the marks of Antiquity dug up about it, put it beyond dispute, that it was a place of some note among the Romans. The Danes utterly destroy'd it, and it lay in desolation for about two hundred years; till William Rufus took it into his protection, built here a Castle, and planted it Affaults, upon the breaking out of War between the two Nations. By which means it was a sort of continual Garrison, one while in the Hands of the English, and then again in the possession of the Scots; till it was reduc'd to the obedience of Edward IV. and partly by the Union, partly by its great Strength, has ever since continu'd in subjection to our Kings. About a hundred years ago, it was reputed the strongest place in the whole Kingdom; but as the apprehensions of Danger from that Quarter have for many years ceas'd, and so put a stop to the Improvements which would otherwise have been made upon it; so Enemies from other Parts have oblig'd us to spend more Pains and Industry upon Hull, Portsmouth, Plimouth, &c. which at present much out-do it in Strength and Fortifications.

Hexam was a place of mighty note among the Saxons; and is much talk'd of in our Histories. For here, Egfrid settl'd a Bishop's See; which might have continu'd longer (to the honour and interest of the place) if the Danes had not given them such violent Disturbances, as put the Monks under a necessity of removing and seeking out for new Quarters. The Church which stands still entire (except the West-end) is a stately Fabrick.

Ancient Places.

Magna, mention'd by the Notitia, is probably Chester in the Wall; not only because it stands upon the Piſs-wall and takes its name from thence, but also because it has shewn us some Altars and Inscriptions, as Evidences of its Antiquity.

Hunnum, tho' it has left no Remains of its name, in any place in these parts, yet the Wing which resided at it, call'd by the Notitia, Sabiniana, may seem to have given some ground to the present Sevenshale, upon the Wall.

Gallana discovers it self in the present Walwick, which probably had this denomination from the old name.

Habitancum should seem to be Risingham upon the River Rhead, where are many Remains of Antiquity, and an Inscription was dug up which made express mention of the old name.

Cilurnum may very conveniently be plac'd at Cilcester near the Wall; which may seem to owe the first Syllable of its name to it.

Axelodunum is so manifest in our present Hexam, that the latter seems only to be a contraction of the former; especially, if we consider the various meltings and mouldings of this name under the Saxons. Add to this, that the termination Dunum does very well suit with the high situation of this place.

Protolitia seems to be our Prudhow-castle, upon the River Tine.

Pons Ælii can be no other, than that which at this day we call Pont-Eland, upon the River Pont.

Borcovicus does still preserve the Remains of its name in Berwick, which seems to be a Compound of a Roman Initial and a Saxon Termination.

Vindolana, where the fourth Cohort of the Galli kept Garrison, may very well be settl'd at Old-Winchester.

Gabrosentum is Gateshead, a sort of Suburbs to Newcastle, where the Wall pass'd.

Vindobala, as the Notitia; or, as Antoninus terms it, Vindomora, seems to imply as much as the Wall's end; and then we need not be at a loss for its situation, since we meet with a Village in these parts of the very same name.

Glanoventa (signifying as much as the bank of the River Went) must be plac'd somewhere upon the River call'd at this day Wentsbeck; tho' the Distances seem to hit well enough with Caer-vorran, near which there is a place still call'd Glen-welt.

Alaunus, mention'd by Ptolemy, discovers it self plainly in the present name Alne.

Tunnocellum is plainly Tinmouth; call'd formerly Tunnacester, from the old Roman name.

Segedunum needs no clearer Guide to its situation, than the affinity it has with our present Seghill, upon the Sea-coast near Tinmouth.

Alone may fairly enough be settl'd at Old-Town; not only because that place carries Antiquity in the name, but also from its situation upon the River Alon, and the proper Distances from the Stations on each Hand.

Corstopitum, is evidently Corbridge; and probably the same with Ptolemy's Curia Ottadinorum.

Things Remarkable.

At Chillingham-Castle, 'tis said a live Toad was found in the middle of a Stone at the sawing of it. One part of the Stone is now a Chimney-piece in the Castle, with a hollow in the middle; and the other also has the like mark, and is put to the same use at Horton-Castle.

The Improvement in Tillage at Rock by John Salkeld, Esq; and in Gardening and Fruiterie at Fal-ladon, by Samuel Salkeld, Gentleman; are Fineries hardly to be met with in these Parts; the latter is the more remarkable, because of an Opinion which has prevail'd in the World, That the coldness of the Climate in these Northern parts, will not allow Fruit to come to its proper perfection and ripeness.

Not far from Newcastle, there are some Coal-pits on fire, which have burnt several years: The Flames are visible enough by Night, and the burning may be trac'd on the day time by Brimstone, which lies on the Surface of the Ground.

W A L E S.

THAT the Inhabitants of W A L E S are the Off-spring of the ancient Britains, who were possess'd of the greatest part of this Island before the coming over of the Saxons, we have shewn in the general Account of the several Inhabitants. The Severn was their Boundary on this side, for a long time; till the prevailing power of the Saxons, and of the Kings of England after the Conquest, oblig'd them to retire further Westward, and to seek shelter among the Mountains. Notwithstanding which, they still enjoy'd their own Laws, liv'd under their own Princes, and maintain'd their own Liberties against all the Designs and Attempts of the English. Till at last, in the Year 1282, Llewellyn ap Gryffith, Prince of Wales, lost both his Life and Principality to King Edward I. who yet did not think himself safe, notwithstanding his Victory seem'd entire and absolute. For he observ'd the Humour of the Welch to be bitterly set against any Foreign Prince or Governor, and was very hard put to it to settle himself in the secure possession of his new Conquests, till he enter'd upon this lucky Expedient. His Queen was then big with Child; so he sent for her immediately to come to Carnarvon, and when she was deliver'd of a Son, he summon'd a Meeting of the Welch Lords, and proffer'd them the young Child (a Native of their own) for their Lord and Governour. To him they readily swore Obedience; and since that time, the eldest Sons of the King of England have commonly been created Princes of Wales.

As to the present condition of this Principality; it is divided into South-Wales and North-Wales; from the situation of the several Branches. The Counties of Hereford and Monmouth (which formerly belong'd to it) are now lopp'd off, and reckon'd among those of England. The former of these we have already survey'd: The latter (as being disjointed in a manner by the Estuary of Severn) we shall reserve to its proper place, in the Survey of these parts. Passing therefore by Herefordshire, the next County to the North-west, is

R A D N O R S H I R E.

THE County of Radnor, on the East and South-parts, is well cultivated and fruitful enough: The rest of it, tho' well water'd, is so very rugged and uneven, that the Plow can have no Employment there

The chief Town is

Radnor, from whence the whole County takes its name. Old Radnor (call'd from its high situation Pencreig) was laid in Ashes by Rhys ap Gruffydh in the Reign of King John. The new Town is well built, for those parts; and was formerly defended with Walls and a Castle. It might have been much more considerable, had it escap'd the Fury of the Rebellious Owen Glyndwr, who burnt it down. But a more immediate cause of its decay, seems to be the Encouragement that was afforded to its Neighbour Presean (about three Miles off) by Martin Lord Bishop of S. Davids; by whose favour it grew up to a considerable Market, and must by consequence draw off the Trade and resort from Radnor.

The ancient Place in this County is.

Magi, mention'd by Antoninus; which possibly we may soon find about the place we have been just now describing. I mean Old Radnor, call'd by the Britains Maesfœd ben; for the middle-Age Writers call the Inhabitants of those parts Magesetæ, as much as if one should say the Seat of the Magi; and the Distances on both sides will hit well enough.

The Thing most remarkable, is Offa's-dike, a mighty Work of it self, and much talk'd of by our Historians. The name it has from the Contriver of it, King Offa, who had it cast up as a Boundary between the English and Welch, and a Protection from the former against the Invasions of the latter. It runs through Herefordshire, so over a part of Shropshire into Montgomeryshire; then again into Shropshire, and so through Denbighshire into Flintshire; and ends a little below Holywell, where that Water empties it self into the Dee.

B R E C K N O C K S H I R E.

THE County of Brecknock, on the South of Radnorshire, is of great extent, but very mountainous; tho' the pleasant and fruitful Vales (whereof they have a good number) make amends for this unfightly appearance.

The chief Town is

Brecknock, upon the River Usk; which as it gives name to the whole County, so is it situated almost in the middle of it. The Roman Coins, which they discover hereabouts, are a Testimony, that it has been of some note among that People. I know not whether the Town began to flourish when Bernard Ne-march (who conquer'd this Country) built a stately Castle at it; which was afterwards repair'd by the Brecses and Bobuns. 'Tis certain, King Henry VIII. added much both to the honour and advantage of the place, when he constituted here a Collegiate Church of fourteen Prebendaries.

There are no Ancient Places that can probably be fix'd in this County; nor any Remarkables which properly fall under our Design.

M O N.

MONMOUTHSHIRE.

THE County of Monmouth, among other Advantages is abundantly supply'd with Water; being bounded (as it were) on all sides with Rivers, and parted in the middle by the noble River of Usk. The East part abounds with Pastures and Woods; the Western parts are a little Mountainous, but yet fruitful enough.

The chief Towns } Monmouth, are, } Chepstow.

Monmouth (situated between the Rivers Mynwy and Wye) is the chief Town of this County, and has been a place of note ever since the Conquest. For the Castle flourish'd in the Time of the Conqueror, and seems to have been of great account in the Civil Wars, which hapn'd afterwards in this Kingdom. Inasmuch, that the Town may seem in some measure to owe its growth to it; King Henry III. granting it large Privileges, after he had depriv'd John, Baron of Monmouth of his Inheritance, either for espousing himself the Interest of the Barons, or because his Heirs had closed with the Earl of Bretagne. It glories in the Birth of two Persons, very much talk'd of in our Histories; one for his martial Achievements, the other for his Learning and Knowledge in Antiquities. For here King Henry V. the Glory of England and Terror of France, had his first Breath; and here also was born the noted Jeffery (call'd from hence de Monmouth) Author of the famous British History. The latter I am the rather inclin'd to reckon an Ornament to the place of his Nativity, because the Britains seem to value themselves and their Nation upon the Original he has given them, and are inclin'd to give more Credit to his Relations, than their Neighbours are willing to allow them.

Chepstow, near the mouth of the River Wye, is of a pure Saxon original; which also intimates that it was a place of Trade and Commerce when that name was given it. The old Venta Silurum is about four miles from it; and some affirm, That it arose out of the Ruins of that ancient City: How truly, I know not. 'Tis at present, a Town of good note, secur'd by Walls of a considerable compass.

Ancient Places.

Venta Silurum, was the chief City of this People, and a large one it was for those Times, the Ruins shewing about a mile in compass. As the Remains of Antiquity point out the place, so is the memory of it preserv'd in the present name of Kaer-went, not far from Chepstow.

Gobannium is seated at the Confluence of the River Wysk and Gavenni; from which Confluence 'tis at this Day call'd Aber-Gavenni.

Isca is plainly the River Usk; and the Station call'd by Antoninus Isca and Legio secunda is undoubtedly Kaer Lheion, call'd also by the Britains, Kaer Lheon ar wysk, intimating as much as, The City of the Legion upon the River Usk; from the Legio secunda Augusta which quarter'd there.

Burrium is plac'd by Antoninus 12 miles from Gobannium: 'Tis call'd at this day Brynbiga for Buren-begi; (where the River Brydwin falls into the Usk) which name seems to retain something of the more ancient Denomination.

The Things most Remarkable in this County, are

The Chequer'd Pavements, which were discover'd about the ancient Venta Silurum or Kaer-went in the year 1689. Upon raking them up, the Cement was dissolv'd; so that nothing but the cubical Stones of which they were compos'd, do now remain. The Stones whereof these Pavements are made, are of several Colours; and by the Artifice of the Workman are form'd into several Shapes of Men, Beasts, Cups, &c. or whatever else he pleas'd.

GLAMORGANSHIRE.

Glamorganshire is by some suppos'd to take that name from a certain Prince call'd Morgan; which is a Conjecture probable enough, considering how common the name is in this Country. But if we respect the Situation of the Country, we must rather fetch it from its relation to the Sea, or the Estuary of the Severn upon which it is stretch'd out towards the South; for Mer in their Language signifies the Sea.

The chief Towns } Llandaffe, are, } Caerdiff.

Llandaffe is seated in a bottom upon the River Laf, from which and the Church there it takes the name: For Lhan in British signifies a Church. From this it derives its greatest Ornament and Reputation; being erected into a Bishop's See as early as the suppression of the Pelagian Heresie by Germanus and Lupus, the two Gallick Bishops.

Caerdiff, considering it lies nearer the mouth of the same River, has greater advantage by the Harbour; and is a pretty near Town.

Antient Places.

Ratostibius is a Corruption of the British Traeth Taw which signifying the sandy Frith of the River Taw, we need not give our selves any farther trouble in enquiring after the position of this ancient Place.

Bovium is Beverton, three miles from Combridge, a Market Town.

Nidum also points its situation by the present name Nedh, a Town of good Note.

Leucarum is Loghor.

The Thing most remarkable in this County, is Caerphilly-castle, the noblest Ruins of ancient Architecture that we have in this whole Island; being larger than any Castle in England, except only Windsor. This seems to have been the Bellaum Silurum; which being turn'd into British, is Caer-Vwl, and that must be express'd like Caer-Vyl, or Caer-Vyli.

CAERMARTHENSHIRE.

THE County of Caermarthen, in British Kaer-Vyrdbin, bears good store of Corn, and abounds pretty much with Cattel: Besides which Advantage of the Soil, it yields in several places good plenty of Corn.

The chief Place is,

Caermarthen, seated pleasantly upon the River Towy among Woods and Meadows, whither Ships of small Burden are carry'd up. But the Sea has been a little unkind to it, having well-nigh stopp'd up the mouth of the River with a Ridge of Sand. This Town has the honour of being the Birth place of the famous Merlin, the British Prophet, so much talk'd of in ancient Story.

Ancient Places.

Tobius is manifestly the River Towy, which crosses this County from North to South, and empties it self into the Ocean a little below Kidweli.

Maridunum is plainly Caermarthen, just now described; especially, if we take the British name of the place, Caer-mardkin.

PENBROKE SHIRE.

THE County of Penbroke (encompass'd with the Sea, except on the North and East-sides) is fertile enough in Corn; which is improv'd by the plenty of Marls and other fattening Materials they make use of to enrich the Ground. They are likewise well stock'd with Cattel, and have good store of Coal for Fuel.

The chief Towns } Penbroke, } Haverford-west, are, } S. David, } Tenbigh.

Penbroke (translated by Giraldus, The Cape or Sea-Promontory) is seated in the Eastern-bay of Milford-haven. Arnulph de Montgomery built a Castle here in the time of Henry I. At present, 'tis a Corporation, and receives great Advantages from the Sea.

S. David's (seated in the utmost Promontory to the Westward) has its name from Dewi or David, a very religious Bishop, who translated the Archiepiscopal See from Caer-Lewn to this place. This Honour it enjoy'd for a long time; till the Plague raging in those parts, the Dignity was translated to Dol in Little Britain, and never restor'd. Its nearness to the Sea has expos'd it very much to Pyrates; from whose barbarous Cruelties it has been a great Sufferer. So that, at present, 'tis an inconsiderable City; shewing no Buildings of note, besides the Cathedral, the Bishop's Palace, and the Houses belonging to the several Members of the Church.

Haverford-west, is a Town of good account and resort; being handsomly built and well peopled. The unevenness of the Ground upon which it stands is a great Enemy to the Beauty and Uniformity of the Streets. 'Tis however a Corporation, and a County of it self.

Tenbigh, on the South-coast, is a handfom Town and well fortify'd with strong Walls. 'Tis much noted for its plenty of Fish, and is accordingly call'd in British Dinbechy Pyskod: It is also a Corporation.

The ancient Place on this Coast, is Othopitarum Promentorium, which is that Neck of Land, where S. David's stands, call'd in English S. David's Land.

Things Remarkable.

Milford-haven, for largeness and security, is perhaps out-done by no Harbour in Europe. For it has 16 Creeks, 5 Bays, and 13 Roads.

In that little Tract, lying beyond Milford-haven the Flemings were settl'd in the Reign of Henry I. Whose Posterity to this day are manifestly distinguished from their Neighbour-Welsh, in Language and Customs, in both which they came so near the English that the Tract it self is call'd Little England or Wales.

CARDIGANSHIRE.

THE County of Cardigan, on the West and South-sides, is an even champain Country; but on the North and East is taken up with a continu'd ridge of Mountains, which yet afford good Pasture for Cattel, and have in the Vallies underneath several large Lakes.

The chief Towns; Cardigan, are, } Aber-ystrwyth.

Cardigan (seated near the mouth of the River Teivi, and therefore call'd by the Britains Aber-Teivi) is the chief Town in this County, from whence the whole is denominat'd. It was fortify'd by Gilbert, Son of Richard Clare, but being afterwards treason-ably surrender'd, was laid waste by Rhys ap Iorwerth.

Aber-ystrwyth is seated at the mouth of the River Ystrwyth, from which position it has the name. The same Gilbert Clare who fortify'd Cardigan, did also wall this Town; which by Mr. Camden is call'd the most populous Town in the whole County. Whether the condition of it be chang'd since his time, we know not.

Ancient Places

Tuerobius, mention'd by Ptolemy, can be no other than the River Teivi; the old name seeming to have been moulded from the British Dw Teivi, which as much as The Water of Teivi, Stutcia is another River in those Parts, to which Ystwyth seems to lay the best claim.

Lovantium or Lovantium may probably be Lhan-nia in the Parish of Lhan Dhevi Brevi, ; where they meet with Inscriptions, Coins and other indubitable Marks of Antiquity.

The most remarkable Thing in this County, is, The noble Lead-Mine discovered in the year 1690. in the Grounds of Sir Carbery Pryse, Baronet. 'Tis said, the Ore was so nigh the Surface of the Earth, that the Moss and Grass did but just cover it in some places.

MONTGOMERYSHIRE.

THE County of Montgomery is a mountainous Tract; notwithstanding which, by reason of an agreeable mixture of fruitful Vales, it affords both good Pasture and arable Lands. Giraldus has told us, That 'twas formerly eminent for Horses, stately and exceeding swift.

The Towns more con- } Montgomery, siderable are, } Lhan Vyllyn.

Montgomery is the chief Town of the County, so call'd from Roger Montgomery Earl of Shrewsbury, to whom it belong'd. In the same manner as the Welch call'd it Tre'Valdwin from that Baldwin (Lieutenant of the Marches in the Conqueror's time,) who built it. In the year 1095, it was destroy'd by the Welch, but rebuilt by Henry III. to whom they owe several Liberties and Immunities.

Lhan Vyllyn is a Market Town of considerable note, incorporated in the time of Edward II. It is at present govern'd by two Bayliffs, to whom King Charles II. (among other Privileges) granted the Honour and Authority of Justices of Peace within the Corporation, during the time of their Office, which lasts for one year.

Ancient Places.

Maglona seems to have some Remains in the present Machynlbeth, at the utmost Limit of this County Westward.

Mediolanum is, by Dr. Powel and a late judicious Author, suppos'd to be Meirol (about a Mile below Mathraval) where several remarkable Monuments have been discover'd.

MEIRIONYDSHIRE.

Meirionysshire, in Latin Mervinia, is so violently beat upon by the Sea, that some imagine part of it to have been wash'd away by the Violence of the Waves. 'Tis the most mountainous Country in all Wales; which is the reason why the Inhabitants apply themselves wholly to Grazing, and live upon Butter, Cheese, &c. And indeed, 'tis an incredible number of Sheep, &c. that graze upon the Mountains in these parts. This figure of the Country, and their way of Living, may possibly be the reason why they have so few Towns, and none of any great note; unless we may reckon

Dol Gelheu, a small Market-Town, and

Bala, the chief Market of the Mountaineers in the East-part of the County.

Things Remarkable.

Kader Idris is one of the highest Mountains in all Britain; and as an Argument of it, affords variety of Alpine Plants.

Near the Castle of Harlech, was dug up (An. 1692.) a golden Torques, being a wreath'd bar of Gold, or else 3 or 4 Rods jointly twisted, about four foot long. 'Tis now in the Hands of Sir Roger Mestlyn, Baronet.

In this County, they have been much troubled of late with an unaccountable sort of Exhalation, which has fir'd several Ricks of Hay, and has poyson'd the Grass to that degree as to cause a Mortality among most sorts of Cattle. A full description is given of it in Mr. Camden's Britannia, English, pag. 659, 660, &c.

CAERNARVONSHIRE.

THE County of Caernarvon, in the maritime parts is pretty fruitful and well-inhabited; but more inward, is so encumber'd with vast Mountains and dismal Rocks, that these (if any) may very well claim the name of the British Alps.

The chief Towns are, } Caernarvon, } Bangor, } Conwy.

Caernarvon, wash'd by the Sea on the North and West-sides tho' it gives name to the whole County is yet of no higher Antiquity than the times of King Edward I. For this Prince they own for their Founder; and value themselves highly upon giving Birth to his Son Edward II. call'd from thence Edward of Caernar- von, who was the first Prince of Wales of English Extraction. The buildings are decent enough, and the Inhabitants civil and courteous.

Bangor, seven miles from Caernarvon, was formerly a place so large and considerable, as to merit the name of Bangor vawr: But 'tis now only a small town, and derives all its Reputation from the Bishop's See, the Cathedral whereof is not very fine, having been burnt down by that profligate Rebel Owen Glendwr.

Aber-Conwy, i. e. the mouth of the River Conwy, was built out of the Ruins of the ancient Conovium by King Edward II. and by its advantageous situation and other conveniences, is grown into a handsome Town.

Ancient Places.

Canganum is the Promontory of Llyn (running out to the South-west) which would tempt one to imagine that Lengauum, as some of Ptolemy's Copies have it, is the true Reading.

Seguntium is the Mother of the present Caernarvon, and seems to have first taken its name from the River Seint, which runs that way into the Sea.

Conwy, is undoubtedly the River Conwy; as Conium (which had that name from the River) is Conwy.

Dilum is suppos'd to be the ancient City Diganwy, which took that name from the River Conwy; but was consumed by Lightning many Ages since.

Things Remarkable.

Snowdon-hills are the highest ridge of that range of Mountains which takes up the inner parts of the County. The name it has from Snow, which you commonly see here about the latter end of June, but not the year round, as some Authors have affirm'd.

Pen-maen-mawr, is a perpendicular Rock, through which the Road lies, not without great difficulty and terror to Travellers. For on one side, you would think the Rocks ready to crush you; on the other the Sea and the Precipice down to it, are so frightfull and dangerous withal, that one false Step endangers the life.

ANGLESEY.

THE Isle of Anglesey is separated from the Continent of Britain by the narrow Frith of Meneu, being about 24 miles in breadth, and in length some few more. By the Ancients it was call'd Mona the Seat of the Druids; and was first attempted by Suetonius Paulinus, but conquer'd by Julius Agricola; as we learn at large from Tacitus. Many Ages after, the English conquer'd it; whereupon it was call'd Anglesey, i. e. the Isle of the English, or the English Island.

The chief Town in it is Beaumaris, built on the East-side; which (among other Towns in these Parts) owns King Edward I. for its Founder. It is grown into a place of good Note and Wealth.

DENBIGHSHIRE.

THE County of Denbigh, according to the several Parts, has a different Soil: In the West 'tis somewhat barren; in the middle, an exceeding fruitful Vale; and in the East, not quite so fertile; tho' much better towards the River Dee.

The chief Town is Denbigh, which is remov'd from the place of its first Foundation. For it was seated upon a steep Rock: from whence the Inhabitants (either because the declivity of the place was inconvenient, or else for want of a due supply of Water) began in after-Ages to remove to the bottom of the Hill; where a handsome large Town is sprung up by degrees.

The ancient Town in this County, is Leonis Castrum (possibly from the Legio Vicesima Valeriana) call'd, as is suppos'd at this day, by the more modern name of Holt, upon the River Dee.

FLINTSHIRE.

FLINTSHIRE is so call'd from Flint-Castle, which was begun by Henry II. and finish'd by Edward I. The Form of the County is oblong, and but small. It consists of a mixture of gentle Hills and Plains, which produce Corn in great abundance.

The chief Town is

S. Asaph (at the confluence of Cluid and Elwy) so call'd from the Patron of the place, a holy and devout Person. It owes its reputation to Religion; having neither Neatness nor Wealth to recommend it. For about the year 560. Kentigern Bishop of Glasgow settl'd here a Bishop's Seat, and a Monastery consisting of 663 Monks. The Bishop of the Diocese has under his Jurisdiction, about 128 Parishes.

The ancient Place in this County, is

Varis, which Mr. Cambden has fixt in the Confines of Flintshire and Denbighshire, at a place call'd to this day Bod-Vari.

Things Remarkable.

Holly-well, near Basingwerk, derives its Sanctity from the Memory of S. Winefrid, a Christian Virgin: a fabulous Story, which Dr. Powel thinks is owing to the Forgery of the Monks of Basingwerk, who would probably magnifie the Vertues of it for their own advantage. A little Brook runs out of the Well with such a violent Course, as to be able, immediately almost, to turn a Mill.

In the Parish of Mold, upon the sinking new Coal pits, they have met with Leaves of Plants so exactly delineated in a sort of black Slat, that 'tis almost impossible for any Artist to represent them so completely, unless he take the Impression from the Life in some fine Paste or Clay. The Figure and Descriptions of them, are exhibited at large in the new Edition of Cambden's Britannia.

The ISLE of MAN.

Between Britain and Ireland, there is stretch'd out a considerable Island from North to South, about 30 Italian Miles in length ; but, where widest, not above 15 in breadth. The several ancient Writers have given it several names : By Cæsar 'tis call'd Mona ; by Ptolemy, Monoeda ; by Pliny, Monabia : And the same variety appears in such of our modern Authors, as make mention of it. It was first inhabited by the Britains, and then by the Scots. Many years after, the Norwegians got possession of it, and held it for a long time : Till at last, after several Revolutions, it fell into the Hands of the English about the latter end of Edward I. or the beginning of Edward II. and has ever since continu'd under their Jurisdiction. It has had several Lords ; such generally, as had the greatest Interest in our Princes : Till the Grant hereof, together with the Patronage of the Bishoprick, was made to Sir John Stanley and his Heirs by King Henry IV. in which Family it has ever since remain'd.

The Soil is very fruitful, and produces such store of Barley, Wheat, Rye and Oats, as does not only furnish the necessary uses of the Island, but likewise gives leave for the Exportation of good quantities. According to the distinction of North and South it is different : In the first, 'tis healthy and gravelly ; in the second they have good Meadow and Pasture-Ground. The Air is very wholsom (the Plague having never been known to be in the Island) so that Fourscore is a common Age there. The People are call'd Manks-men, and their Language Manks. The common People live in little Huts, and are very abstemious in their Diet. The Gentry are but few ; those they have, are very civil and courteous, and live in Houses of English fashion.

The Execution of Justice is manag'd with all the speed and easiness imaginable. 'Tis true, their Sheeding-Courts (the same with our Terms) meet but twice a year ; but they have a Court of Chancery (wherein the Governour is sole Judge) which he may hold once every Week, if there be occasion. Every Man pleads his own Cause ; without Lawyers, Proctors or Attornies : and they are dispatch'd (whether they be Matters Spiritual or Temporal) without the Expence of one Farthing.

The great Officers of the Island, are 1. the Governour, who under the Lord, has the entire Command of the Island. 2. The two Deemsters, who are their Judges in Matters Civil and Criminal. 3. The Comptroller, who calls the Receiver General to an account. And, 4. The Receiver General, who receives all the Rents (due to the Lord) from the inferiour Collectors.

Their way of Trading, is pretty peculiar. They chuse four Merchants to buy all their foreign Commodities, for the use of the whole Island ; and these are sworn to the true and faithful discharge of their Trust : Whatsoever Bargain they make with the Vessels that come in, the Island is bound to stand to ; and the Inhabitants, in exchange, bring in their Native Commodities, Wool, Hides, Tallow, &c. in lieu whereof they are to have a proportionable share of the Imported Wares. They had no Money before the late Civil Wars ; when several of the Royal Party flying thither, supply'd the Island so abundantly, that the Tenant was able to pay his Rent in Coin, which he us'd to do in Sheep, Hogs, &c.

As to the Ecclesiastical State : The Bishoprick is under the Jurisdiction of the Archbishop of York. The Bishop has no voice in the House of Lords ; but in the Lower House of Convocation is allow'd to sit uppermost. The Clergy are generally Natives, and have a very good allowance. The Parishes are seventeen ; every Church whereof bears the Name of some Saint or other, to whom it was formerly dedicated.

The principal Towns are { Castle-town,
 Duglas,
 Peel.

Castle-town, so call'd from a Castle and Garrison there, is seated on the North-side of the Island ; and is call'd otherwise, Ruffin. Here, within a little Isle, was erected a Bishop's See, which had formerly jurisdiction over the Hebrides, but is now limited to the Isle of Man. This is the Metropolis of the whole Island.

Duglas has the best Harbour, and is most frequented by the foreign Traders, who bring over their Bay-Salt, and carry back Leather, Wool, and Salt-beef. The Houses both here and at Castle-town, are very uniform ; and (which is of no great standing in this Island) three Stories high : They are cover'd also with Tiles instead of Thatch.

Peel is eminent for its Castle, being the second Fortress in the whole Island, and the common Prison for all Offenders. 'Tis strongly fortify'd both by the Sea, and also by Walls and Rampires.

SCOT.

NORTH-BRITAIN; or, SCOTLAND

HAVING survey'd England and Wales, we come next to Scotland; which, as it is a Branch of the same Continent, so it is united under the same Government and Legislature, and makes up a part of the Title of The King of Great Britain, Concerning the ancient Inhabitants and some other Heads relating to this I dom, we have treated in the General Account of England; and shall not here repeat them. Let sufficient to observe, That the two Kingdoms united into one Monarchy in the Person of James, the first of England, and sixth of Scot-

By which the English have been freed ever since from those Incursions and Plunderings, wherewith that Nation was us'd continually to harass and torment them. And now lately are entirely united into one for ever: The Legislation, which heretofore was vested in the King and Parliament of Scotland, independent of the Parliament of England, being now removed, and plac'd in the one general Parliament of Great-Britain; according to the Articles of Union, enacted by both Parliaments, Anno 5. Regni Reg. AN N Æ.

All that part of the Continent which lies beyond the Counties of Cumberland and Northumberland, belongs to Scotland, with great numbers of Islands on all the other sides, which are bounded by the Ocean. On the West it hath the Irish Sea, on the North the Deucalionian, and on the East the German Ocean. 'Tis in length about 250 miles, and 150 miles broad. In the most Southerly part 'tis 54 deg. 54. min. in Latitude, and in Longitude 15 deg. 40 min. but in the most Northerly, 'tis 58 deg. 32. (or 30 min.) in Latitude, and 17 deg. 50 min. in Longitude. The longest Day is about 18 hours and 2 minutes, and the shortest night 5 hours and 45 minutes.

The SOIL, take it in general, comes far short of England in fruitfulness, being much more fit for Pasture than Corn: Not, but in some of the In-land Country, they have good store of Grain; wherewith they Trade to Spain, Holland, and Norway. The Skirts of the Country abound with Timber; which is of a vast bigness, especially Fir-trees.

The AIR is very temperate, and not half so cold as might be imagin'd in so Northerly a Climate. Which (as in England) is owing to the warm Vapours and Breezes that come continually off the Sea; and likewise purify the Air, and keep it in such constant Motion, as generally frees them from all Epidemick Distempers. The nature of the Country is hilly and mountainous; the Plains being but very few, and those too but small. They have abundance of Cows and Sheep, tho' they are but little; for which defect, the fine taste of their Flesh makes amends.

Learning flourishes among them in 4 Universities, Saint Andrews, Glasgow, Aberdeen, and Edinburgh, wherein are Professors of most of the Liberal Arts, and those maintain'd with competent Salaries.

Christianity seems to have been planted here very early; especially, if those words of Tertullian, Britannorum inaccessa Romanis loca, Christo vero subdita, may be allowed to hint at these parts, as in all probability they do.

SCOTLAND, according to difference of Soil, Customs, Humours; as also of the Fancies and Imaginations of Men, has several Divisions.

1. The most eminent of them, is into the Highlanders and Lowlanders: The first are rude, barbarous and unciviliz'd, using the Irish Language; the second are civil and courteous, and use the Language and Customs of the English.

2. Into the Scots and Picts; this is the more ancient Division: The Scots had all the Western-Isles and the Skirts of the Country Westward; the Picts were possess'd of all that lay upon the German Ocean.

3. 'Tis divid'd by the Monts Grampius or Grantz-burghs, which run from West to East.

4. The Rivers divide it into three Peninsula's; one to the South, one in the middle, and one to the North. For the Rivers on each side run so far into the Country, as to be hindred from meeting by a small Isthmus only; and if that were remov'd, it would make the main Land of Scotland, three Islands.

5. The Romans branch'd it into several People, according to the following Scheme.

Gadeni ,	{ Teiſdale, Merch, Lauden,	{ Fife, Strathern, Argile, Cantire, Lorn, Braidalban, Perth-shire, Angus, Mernis.
Seigove ,	{ Annandale, Niddisdale,	{
Norantes ,	{ Galloway, Carriek, Kyle, Cunningham, Galloway,	{
Damii ,	{ Cluydesdale, Lennox, Sterling.	{

The Roman Wall.

6. 'Tis divided into so many Counties, which are again sub-divided into Sherifdoms, Stewarries, and Baileries, for the more easie Administration of Civil Government.

The Counties or Shires, with their particular Extent are as follows:

The Shire of	{	Contains	Edinburgh	Midlothian ,

	Bamf	A small part of Buchan, Strathdovern, Boyn, Einzie.

		The rest of Ross, with the Isles of Skey, Lewis, and Heris.
	Dornoch	Sutherland and Strathnaver, Wick.

Their publick COURTS for the administration of Justice, are,

1. The Parliament, which is the supreme Court, and has the same Authority as ours in England. They have 32 Persons (elected out of the several Orders) whom they call Lords of the Articles; and who seem to be much the same thing, as to their Office, with our Committees in England, appointed by the whole House to consider of Matters under Debate: Only theirs are fix'd and certain in all Matters, and are chosen at the beginning of their Meeting; ours are appointed pro re nata, upon any emergent Occasion; and when that's over, have nothing to do in other Matters, without a particular Appointment. The Parliament, which was the supreme Court, is now by the Act of UNION, united to the Parliament of England; and by Representatives of 15 Lords and 45 Commoners, is part of the Parliament of Great-Britain; as we have already said.

The next supreme Court was the Privy-Council, who perform'd all the Royal Part of the Administration, under, and with the King, or his High Commissioner. But this Court is put down by Act of Parliament, Anno 6. ANNÆ; and one Privy-Council only, for Great-Britain, permitted.

The Courts now in Use, are,

1. The College of Justice, wherein the particular Officers appointed for that purpose (consisting of the Clergy and Lay) administer Justice (according to the Rules of Equity, and not the Rigour of the Law) from the 1st of November to the 15th of March, and from Trinity-Sunday to the 1st of August, every Day except Sunday.

2. The Justice-Court, which is the Law-Court for Causes Criminal as well as Civil. It consists of a Justice-General, Justice-Clerk, and five other Judges, who are Lords of the Session: By these, being joyned with a Pannel of 15 out of 45 Cited (like our Jury), all Causes are judged. By Statute in K. Charles's Reign, this Court was order'd to hold Assizes all over the Kingdom once every Year; and now by Statute 6°. ANNÆ, the same Assizes are commanded to be held twice every Year.

3. The Court of Exchequer, which, by Statute 6°. ANNÆ, is reform'd, and made like to ours in England.

4. The Court of Chancery.

5. The Sheriff's Court in every County; where the Sheriff or his Deputy decides Controversies among the Inhabitants, relating to matters of inferiour Concernment. The Sheriffs are many of them Hereditary, others for Life, and others durante bene placito. And in some Districts the Officer of like kind is call'd Steward.

6. By the Statute 6°. ANNÆ, that takes away the Privy-Council, it is provided, That Justices of the Peace, shall be established in Scotland, in like manner, and with like Power as in England.

7. The Commissariat, wherein are pleaded Actions relating to Wills, Tythes, and other Ecclesiastical Affairs.

8. The Court of Admiralty.

The several Orders or Degrees, are,

1. The King; to whom the Constitution allows much the same Power and Authority, as ours here in England.

The Prince of Scotland, the King's eldest Son: The rest of the King's Children are styl'd simply Princes.

3. Dukes (who were brought into Scotland about the year 400.) Marquisses, Earls, Viscounts and Barons, as we have in England.

4. Their Knights also are the same; only, proclaim'd and created with much more Solemnity.

5. Lairds, which were anciently such only as held Lands of the King in Capite.

6. Gentlemen.

7. Citizens, Merchants, &c.

The RELIGION of the Kingdom by Law establish'd, is that which is contain'd in the Confession of Faith authoriz'd in the first Parliament of King James VI. For the more convenient Regulation of Church-affairs, they had 2 Archbishopricks; under which were contain'd 12 Bishopricks, according to the following Scheme.

The Archbishoprick of S. Andrews, under which were,	Edinburgh,	Brechen, Ross, Carhness, Orkney.
	Dunkel,
	Aberdeen,
	Murray,
	Dumblane.

The Archbishoprick of Glasgow, under which were,	Galloway, Lismore,
	The Isles.

The Bounds and Extent of the several Diocesses, were as follows:

Diocess of	S. Andrews	Glasgow	Edinburgh	Dunkeld	Aberdeen	Part of Perthshire, and part of Angus and Mernes.

The

Murray	The Shires of Elgin, Nairn, and part of Inverness and Banff-shire.
Brechin	Part of Angus and Mernes.
Dumfriesshire	Part of Perth and Striveling-shires.
Refs	The Shire of Tain, Cromertie, and the greatest part of Inverness-shire.
Cathness	Cathness and Sutherland.
Orkney	All the northern Isles of Orkney and Zetland.
Galloway	The Shire of Wigton, the Stewartie of Kircudbright, the Regality of Glentworth, and part of Dumfriesshire.
Argyle	Argyle, Lorn, Kintyre, and Lohaber, with some of the West Isles.
The Isles	Most of the West Isles.

Besides these, for the more close Inspection into the Affairs of the Church, they had a certain number of Presbyteries, viz.

Dumfries	Dumfriesshire	Kilmorye	Turres
Perth	Perthshire	Skey	Fordyce
Elgin	Elginshire	S. Andrews	Ellon
Strathbogie	Strathbogie	Kirkcaldy	Strathbogie
Elgin	Elginshire	Cowper	Abernethie
Elgin	Elginshire	Dumfermelin	Elgin
Dumfries	Dumfriesshire	Meegle	Forbes
Hadington	Hadington	Dundee	Aberlour
Dunfermline	Dunfermline	Arbroath	Charnie

Peebles	Peebles	Brechin	Dingwall
Linlithgow	Linlithgow	Mernes	Dornoch

Dumfries	Dumfriesshire	Kirkcaldy	Thurso
Elgin	Elginshire	Alford	Kirkwall
Strathbogie	Strathbogie	Gareloch	Scalway
Dumfries	Dumfriesshire	Deir	Colmkill.

Under this Constitution, they have

1. A Session in every Parish (consisting of the worshipful Persons therein) which took cognizance of some Scandals.

2. A Presbytery, wherein Cases too intricate for the Session are try'd; and particularly such as enter into orders are solemnly examin'd. This consists of a number of Ministers, between twelve and twenty.

3. The Provincial Synod, who meet twice every year.

4. The General Assembly or Convocation; which is the supreme.

And now Presbytery is introduc'd, they retain the same Courts and Governments; with some difference only in the exercise and manner of Proceeding.

At present therefore, instead of the Bishops, there are thirteen Provincial Synods, viz,

Provincial Synods, containing

	Presbyt.	Parish.
Lothian and Tweeddale	7	117
Moray and Tiviotdale	6	71

Having thus far given a short Account of the Soil and Air, the Degrees, Divisions, and Government of Scotland, we are next to take a particular Survey of this Kingdom. Which might have been done most conveniently by running through the several Counties, and observing the same method as we have done in England; but that the Towns here are very thin in many places, and some Counties afford none of any considerable note. I know not how to give a view of the Kingdom more distinct, and more agreeable to our Design, than by drawing up a List of the most eminent Cities and Towns, and of the Ancient Places, in an Alphabetical Order.

The most considerable Places are,	Aberdeen, Dundee, Hamilton, Ayr, Dumfries, Inverness, Alloa, Dunfermline, Linlithgow, S. Andrews, Duns, Paisley, Banff, Edinburgh, Peebles, Brechin, Glasgow, Perth, Carnoustie, Greenock, Selkirk, Dumfriesshire.

ABERDEEN, in the County of Marr, has its Name from the River Don, upon the Mouth whereof it stands; Aber in British signifying a Mouth, or place where a River empties itself. There are 2 Towns of the Name, the Old and New. Old Aberdeen is the Seat of the Bishop, having a large and stately Cathedral, commonly call'd St. Machar's. 'Tis, besides, adorn'd with King's College (so call'd from King James IV. who assum'd the Patronage) wherein is a Principal, with the several Professors of Divinity, Civil Law, Physick, Philosophy, and the Languages. In the Church before-mention'd, there is a most stately Monument erected to the Memory of Bishop Elphinstone, a great Benefactor to the place. Hard by the Church, they have a Library well furnish'd with good Books.

About a Mile from hence is New Aberdeen, built upon 3 Hills; but the greatest part of it upon the highest, to which there is an easy ascent from the Plain. 'Tis, by much, the most considerable place in the North of Scotland; whether we respect the Largeness, Trade or Beauty of the Buildings, both publick and private. Of the first sort, the chief is its College, built by George Keith, Earl Marthal, in the year, 1693. and from him call'd the Marshallian Academy. But since his time, the City of Aberdeen hath adorn'd and beautify'd it with several additional Buildings. They have a Principal, four Professors of Philosophy, one of Divinity, and one of Mathematicks. Add to this, the School, which has a Head-master and 3 Ushers; the Musick-School, for the more polite Education of the Gentry; S. Nicholas-Church, built of free Stone, and cover'd with Lead; an Alms-House, and three Hospitals. Nor must we forget the Library, which was founded at the charge of the City, and is supply'd with excellent Books from the Benefactions of several learned Persons; and also well furnish'd with Mathematical Instruments. The private Buildings are very beautiful, commonly four Stories high or more; behind which stand their Gardens and Orchards; so that the City at a distance looks like a Wood.

Ayr, in Kyle, upon a River of the same name, is the chief Market-Town in the West of Scotland. 'Tis situated situated in a sandy Plain; yet is furnish'd with pleasant fertile Fields, which afford a Prospect very diverting. It has the honour of being the Sheriff's Seat and contains within its Jurisdiction thirty two Miles. The more ancient Name was S. John's-Town; but that is now quite laid aside.

Allea, standing in the Shire of Clackmanan, is a pretty little Town, and very pleasant. It has a Haven, tho' but small. The greatest Ornament it boasts of, is the Castle, the chief Residence of the Earl of Moray. This (with its Neighbour Clackmanan, seated upon a Rising Ground, and adorn'd with a stately Castle) receives great Profit from the adjoining Coal-pits; which, together with the Salt, furnish out a foreign Trade.

S. ANDREW'S, above Fife in the Peninsula of Fife, is seated conveniently for a delicate Prospect into the Sea. It seems, the ancient Name of it, was Regimund; that is, Regulus's Mount: The present Name was given it in honour to S. Andrew, (whose Bones are said to have been brought out of Peloponnesus to this place, by Regulus a Monk, in the year, 368.) It is adorn'd with an Archbishop's See, who is styl'd Primate of All Scotland; with the New Church, wherein is a stately Monument of Archbishop Sharp; and with 3 Colleges. 1. S. Saviour, which has a Library well furnish'd. 2. S. Leonard's, wherein are several Professors, and a good Library. 3. New College, which, besides its two Professors of Divinity, has a Professor of Mathematicks, with an Observatory, and Mathematical Instruments.

Bamf is the chief Burgh in the Shire of Bamf, and is a Burgh-Royal, wherein the Sheriff holds his Courts. 'Tis seated in a very fertile Tract, and receives great advantages from the Salmon-fishing.

Brechin upon the River Esk, lies in the Shire of Angus, and is a Market-Town, considerable for Oxen, Sheep, Horses, and Salmon. The Ruins of the Bishop's Palace and the Canon's Houses, are an evidence of its ancient Magnificence. Here is a stately Bridge over the River Esk.

Chanery (at Ness-Mouth in Refs) has its Name from a rich College of Canons, that were there. They had a large Cathedral Church, part whereof still remains. Its greatest Ornament, at present, is a magnificent House of the Earl of Seaforth, who has considerable Revenues in this Country.

Dumblane (seated upon the Bank of the River Allan on the Stewarty of Strathern) is a pleasant Town, but not large. It still shews the Ruins of the Bishops's and Canon's Houses; and part of the Church (a Fabrick of admirable Workmanship) remains entire. Their great Benefactor was Re. Leighton Bishop of the place; a Person of strict Life and Conversation. At his death, he left all his Books to the use of the Diocese of Dumblane, with a certain Sum of Money for the erecting of a Library; and his Sister's Son settl'd an annual Salary upon the Library-Keeper.

Dundee (so call'd probably from its Situation upon the River Tay) stands in the Shire of Angus, in a pleasant Plain; and is beautify'd with very good Buildings, both publick and private. They have two Churches; and the Constable hereof, by a peculiar Privilege, is Standard-bearer to the Kings of Scotland. The Inhabitants are generally rich, by the great Profits which arise from the Harbour; and by their Trade with Strangers, which is very considerable. There is a large Hospital, wherein such as fall to decay by Misfortunes and Losses are provided for.

Dunfrise, in the Tract call'd Niddisdale, lies near the Mouth of Neth, between two Hills; and is a very flourishing Town. The Streets are large, and the Church and Castle stately. The Tide flows up to the Town, and makes a Harbour; and for the convenience of Trade, they have an Exchange for the Merchants. Here is a fine Bridge over the River, of nine Arches.

Dunkel, at the Foot of the Grainthain-Hills in the Shire of Perth, is conveniently situated in the midst of pleasant Woods, and upon the River Tay. It is the chief Market-Town of the High-lands; to the Ornaments whereof, the Buildings erected of late by the Marquess of Athol, have added very considerably. It still shews the Ruins of a Cathedral Church.

Duns in Mers or March, towards the German Ocean stands upon a rising Ground in the middle of the Shire. 'Tis a Burrow and Barony, and has every Wednesday a throng Market of Sheep, Horses and Cows. But that which makes it most talk'd of, is, its being urg'd for the Birth-place of Duns Scotus, by such as are willing to believe him a Scotchman.

EDINBURGH, the Metropolis of this Kingdom, built upon an ascent; the Buildings gradually descending from the top to the bottom of the Hill. The original of it seems to have been the erecting of a Fort or Castle (than which no place could be more convenient for the purpose) under the protection whereof, the Neighbours might be possibly encourag'd to fix. At present, 'tis a large beautiful City, a full Scotch Mile in length, and half a one in breadth. Two Streets run along the whole length of the Town; the High-street is built, of late, of hewn Stone; since an Act of the Town-Council pass'd, whereby it is not lawful to build any more of Timber, either in City or Suburbs, upon account of the many dreadful Fires that have hapn'd. The City has six Gates, the principal whereof lays to the East, and is adorn'd with Towers on both sides. They are supplied with Water from one of the best Springs in the Kingdom; which is about 3 Miles distant, and is brought in Leaden-Pipes to the several Fountains. This convenience was projected and carried on at the Expence of the City, about 20 Years ago. Their principal Publick Buildings, are

1. The Palace (whereof his Grace the Duke of Hamilton is Hereditary Keeper) bounded on all sides with lovely Gardens. It has four Courts: The Outer, which is as big as all the rest, has four principal Entries: The Inner has Piazza's all round, of hewn Stone. The Long Gallery is very entertaining; shewing the Pictures of all the Kings of Scotland, from Fergus 1.

2. The College of King James VI. founded in the Year 1580. is a large Building, divided into three Courts. They have their publick Schools, and a common Hall; with a well-stored Library, under which is the King's Printing-House. The Professors and Students are very well accommodated with Lodgings.

3. The Parliament-house stands in a large Court, which is enclos'd on one side with the Exchanges, and with a Set of very stately Buildings. There is a House (perhaps the highest in the World) which mounts seven Stories above the Parliament-Court; for from the bottom to the top, one Stair-case ascends 14 Stories high.

4. The Cathedral, dedicated to S. Giles, is built of hewn Stone, and is so large, as to be divided into 3 Churches, each whereof has its Parish.

5. Heriot's Hospital, so call'd from its Founder George Heriot, Jeweller to King James VI. is more like a Palace than an Hospital. All round the Houses are pleasant Gardens, adorn'd with large Walks and Greens. Here, the Children of the poorer Citizens have their Education, 'till they be fit for the publick Schools and Colleges.

Glasgow is situated upon the East-bank of the River Clyde; and is, next Edinburgh, the principal City in the Kingdom; whether we consider the Buildings, Trade or Wealth of the Inhabitants. It is, in a manner, four-square; the four principal Streets crossing each other in the very middle. The principal Publick Buildings, are

1. The Cathedral (in the upper part of it) the Pillars and Towers whereof are said to shew a very exact and curious Piece of Architecture. 'Tis, indeed, two Churches; one whereof stands over the other.

2. The Archbishop's Castle, surrounded with a Wall of hewn Stone.

3. The College, parted by an exceeding high Wall from the rest of the Town.

4. The Tolbooth (a stately Building of hewn Stone) which stands at the crossing of the Streets.

Glenock, in the Barony of Ranfrew, is a well-built Town, the most eminent upon all that Coast. 'Tis the chief Seat of the Herring-fishing; and the Royal Company of Fishers have built a publick House at it, for the better convenience of Trade.

Hamilton (in Clydsdale) is the Residence of the Dutchess of Hamilton, and the great Ornament of that part of the Kingdom. The Court is on all sides adorn'd with very noble Buildings, has a magnificent Avenue, and a Frontispiece of excellent Workmanship. The Park is 6 or 7 Miles round through which the Brook Aven has its course.

Inverness, the Head-Town of the Sheriffdom of that name, is the Sheriff's Seat, where he keeps his Court. The convenience of its Situation upon the River Ness, gives it a free and easie Commerce with the Neighbours. It has a Castle very pleasantly seated upon a Hill, which affords a noble Prospect into the Fields and Town. They have lately built a Bridge over the Ness of hewn Stone, and of 7 Arches.

Linlithgow, in the Shire of Linlithgow, is a Royal Borough, which glories chiefly in its Palace, built almost in the form of an Amphitheatre. In the midst of the Court there is a Fountain, adorn'd with several curious Statues, the Water whereof rises to a good height. The Town is well built, and has a stately Town-House, with a Harbour at Blackneffe.

Paslay, in the Barony of Ranfrew, is the most considerable in these parts for ancient grandeur and magnificence. It was formerly a famous Monastery, founded by Alexander II. High-Steward of Scotland. The Abbey and Church, with fine Gardens and Orchards, are all enclos'd with a Stone-Wall, about a Mile in Circuit.

Peebles, the Head-burgh of the Shire of that name, has a pleasant Situation, standing in a Plain on the side of the River. It has a noble Church, and a stately Bridge of 5 Arches over the Tweed.

Perth, in the Shire of that name, is call'd S. John's Town, a modern name, taken from a Church founded there in honour of S. John. Mr. Camden tells us, 'tis so divided, that almost every Street is inhabited by a several Trade apart. 'Tis pleasantly seated between two Greens, and the River Tay at every Tide, brings up Commodities from the Sea, in light Vessels.

Selkirk, in Teisidale, is a Burgh-Royal, has the advantage of a weekly Market and several Fairs, is the Head-Burgh of the Shire, and the Seat of the Sheriff and Commissary-Courts.

Ancient Places in the Kingdom of SCOTLAND.

Alauna seems to have some Remarks preserv'd in the River Alon in the Sheriffdom of Sterling.

Abravanus (for Aber-ruanus) is the mouth of the River in Galloway.

Alcedum seems to be the present Dundee, in the Shire of Angus.

Banatia, mention'd by Ptolemy, is very probably Bean-Castle (in Murra) which may be infer'd both from the analogy of Names, and the discovery of an engrav'd Marble Vessel, full of Roman Coins, in the year 1460.

Berubium, a Promontory, is thought to be Urdhead, in Strathnavern.

Bodotria (for so Tacitus calls it, but Ptolemy Boderia) is agreed on all hands to be Edinburgh-frith.

Caledonia is all that part of Britain, which lies Northward beyond Graham's-dike, or the Wall built by Antoninus Pius.

Cantæ, were a People who Inhabited the Parts about Refs.

Catini, mention'd by Ptolemy, (and sometimes written Carini) seems by the sound and other circumstances, to be Cathness.

Castra Alata is agreed upon by all to be Edinburgh, Celnus, a River, now Killian in Refs, upon the Eastern Ocean.

Cerones, a People who dwelt anciently where now Affenshire lies.

Corbantorium seems to be Caer-Laverock, anciently a very strong Fort in Nidisdale.

Corda, a Town that anciently stood upon the Lake Lough-cure, out of which the River Nid arises.

Coria Damnorum seems to be Camelot; where are some remains of an ancient City. It stands between the Duni Pacis and the Temple of the God Terminus, in the Sheriffdom of Sterling.

Cornabii, a People who dwelt in the utmost Coast of all Britain, towards the North, where now is Strathnavern. 'Tis probable they had that name from the River Rabeus, which Ptolemy places likewise in these parts.

Divæ (mention'd by Ptolemy) is the River Dee in the County of Mernes.

Epidiorum Promontorium (a name possibly taken from the Islands Ebudæ over-against it) is call'd at this day Cantyre, i. e. the Lands-Head.

Glotta is an Island mention'd by Antoninus in the Frith of the River Glotta or Clyde; 'tis call'd at this day Arran, from a Castle of the same name.

Grampius is a continu'd range of Hills, reaching as far as Murray; mention'd by Tacitus in his description of Agricola's Attempts upon those parts.

Horesti seems to imply no more than the High-landers in general.

Ila is a River in Cathness, possibly the same which they now call Wiffle.

Lelanonius, mention'd by Ptolemy, is the River Leven, which gives name to the Country of Lennox, call'd in Latin Levinia.

Leucopibia seems by the sense to be determin'd to Bede's Candida Casa and our Whiterne in Galloway; especially if we may believe that Ptolemy wrote it Λευκὴ κίβια, instead of which the Transcribers, by a blunder, have made it Leucopibia. The easiness of the mistake will readily be own'd by such as have opportunity of making their Observations upon the intolerable slips of ignorant Librarians.

Lindum is still manifest in our Linlithgow, describ'd among the more eminent Places.

Littus altum seems to be Tarbath in the County of Refs, where the River rises to a great height; enclos'd on one side with the River Killian, on the other with the Haven Cromer.

Longus, a River, retains manifest footsteps of the old name in our present Lough-Longas, in the County of Ros, which empties itself into the Western Ocean.

Lexa, by Ptolemy, is still evident in our present Lofse, in Murray.

Nabeus seems to be somewhere in the Country of Strathnavern, which the ancient Cornabii formerly inhabited; a People, that seem to have been originally call'd from the River.

Nedius (mention'd by Ptolemy, and written in some Copies Nobius) is evidently the River Nid; from which Nidisdale takes the Name.

Nevarum Chersonesus is well known at this day by the Name of Mull of Galloway.

Orcas (call'd also Tarvedrum and Tarvisium) is at this day nam'd Howburn; a Promontory over-against the Isles of the Orcades.

Randvara seems to be no other than Ranfrew, which gives name to the Barony of Ranfrew, and is the principal Town in it.

Reigionium is both a Creek and Town, mention'd by Ptolemy. Bargeny in the County of Carrick should be some direction to the old name; especially, considering that an ancient Copy of Ptolemy reads it Beiegonium.

Vaccinagi, a People that liv'd about Murray.

Væris sinus is, that Bay upon which Murray lies; whether that Country have any remains of the old name, I dare not determine.

Victoria perhaps is Bede's Cair Gwidi, and our Inchkeith-Island in Lothien.

Vidogara was in Ptolemy's time, a place of good note in the Country of Kyle. There is Aire, at present a Town pretty considerable, which possibly may have the best title to it.

Virædrum is look'd upon to be the farthest Promontory in all Britain: We call it at this day Duncans-bay, and by contraction Dumslay.

Upon the Coast of Scotland lie dispers'd here and there great numbers of Islands; some of them of considerable note and extent, but the greatest part very narrow and of little importance. The Western-Isles so call'd from their westerly situation, are suppos'd by those that have travell'd them, to be in number 300 or more. They belong to the Crown of Scotland; but the Inhabitants speak the Irish Language, and retain the Customs and Modes us'd by the ancient Scots, as the Highlanders in the Continent do.

Another cluster of Isles upon this Coast is call'd Orkney, consisting of 26 Islands that are inhabited; and of some more (which they name Holms) used only for Pasturage. Here, the length of the longest day, is 18 hours and some odd minutes. A Particular account of these Islands (with the Customs of the Inhabitants, the Produce of the Country, and other material Heads) is publish'd in the new Edition of Camden's Britannia, pag. 1073, &c.

Ancient names of Islands upon this Coast.

Dumna, possibly Fair-Isle, wherein they call the chief Town Dum, a Remain perhaps of the old name.

Epidium should seem by the name not to be far from the Promontory of the Epidii: The situation of Ila, a pretty large Island, agrees very well to that description.

Hebudes, call'd by a modern Author Hebrides, are the Western-Isles before mention'd.

Hebuda is two-fold, Eastern and Western. The first is thought to be Skie, which lies out in a great length; and the second, Lewes, a very craggy and mountainous Island.

Maleos, mention'd by Ptolemy, is manifestly the Isle of Mul.

Ocetis may be plac'd among the Islands of Orkney, in that we now call Hetby.

Orcades are the Isles of Orkney, just now describ'd.

Pomona (call'd by Solinus, Pomona Diutina) is Mainland, the chief of the Isles of Orkney, and the Bishop's See.

Recine, call'd by Antoninus, Riduna, possibly instead of Riclana; for there is one of the Western-Isles call'd at this day Racline, which seems to be the very place; and the change of (c) into (d) is very easie, and might be made by a Copyist, otherwise accurate enough.

Thule is a place mightily celebrated among the old Writers, and made use of to express the most remote parts of the habitable World; such, at least, as were then known, Sir Robert Sibbald has prov'd it to be the North-East part of Scotland; to whose Dissertation (publish'd in the new Edition of Camden's Britannia, pag. 1089, &c.) I refer the Reader, for the particular Reasons.

I R E L A N D.

LEaving the Continent, we come to a large Isle on the West-side of Britain, call'd by Ptolemy Britannia Parva, and by other ancient Writers Feræa, Fuæna, Iris, &c. but by the Inhabitants Erin, and by the English I R E L A N D. The length of it, according to the best computations, is about 300 miles, but the breadth scarce 120. The Irish Sea bounds it on the East, the Deucalædonian on the North, the Western Ocean on the West, and the Virgician on the South.

The SOIL is very moist and Wet, abounding with Bogs and Lakes: Which quality is much lessen'd by the encrease of Inhabitants, who have (with great Industry) drain'd the Low-lands and Marshes. This abundance of Water and Moisture, makes them very inclinable to Fluxes, Rheums, and such like Distempers, against which they find their Usquebab the best Remedy. It dries more, but enflames less than our English Brandy. And as the Husbandry of the Inhabitants is seen in these Drains; so is it also discover'd by the destruction they have made of the Woods, which abounded in this Country. Insomuch, that now they have great plenty of Corn.

Who the first INHABITANTS were, cannot be learnt from Records; but must only be trac'd by conjecture and probability. Things at such a distance can receive no light, but what they have by these helps; unless we suffer our selves to be drawn by more modern Writers, into a number of extravagant and foolish Fancies. In short then, That they were Britains, we are encourag'd to believe. 1. Because the ancient Writers, some of them, call it Britannia parva, and Insula Britannorum. 2. Tacitus has told us, That in his time, their Customs were much the same with with the Britains: And Strabo calls them expressly Britains. 3. At the first Plantation of the World, 'tis very natural to imagine that this Island was Peopled from Britain, from whence the passage into it is short and easie. 4. A great many Words, in the Irish Language, appear to be of British Extraction.

That it was ever conquer'd by the Romans, is an Opinion which some have endeavour'd to establish upon little hints they have met with in the old Authors, that seem to look that way. But after all, there's no just reason to believe it: Nor can we imagine, but the Panegyrist would have run out largely upon such a Conquest, if the Romans had ever got footing in the Island. Towards the decay of the Roman Empire, the Scots (a People that are thought to have come out of Scythia into this Island) began to make a mighty figure in these parts; so that the whole Country from them was call'd Scotia. Some of the Saxon Kings, and the Norwegians also, were very troublesome to them, but could not bring them under an absolute subjection. Nor were they conquer'd before Henry II. King of England invaded them with a powerful Army (in the year 1172.) brought the States of the Island to an entire Submission, and bestow'd the Sovereignty upon his Son John. But for all this the Kings of England were only Lords of Ireland; until the more ample Title of King was bestow'd upon Henry VIII. by the States in Parliament assembl'd.

They

They are said to have receiv'd CHRISTIANITY very early. What progress had been made in it before the time of S. Patrick, we have no certain account: Probably, not very much. But that Saint (who was a Disciple of S. German) carried the Work on with so much success and resolution, as to convert the greatest part of the Island; which gain'd him the Character of the Irish Apostle, and mighty Commendations from all the Irish Writers. In the next Age, their Reputation was so advanc'd upon the account of Religion, that it was term'd Sanctorum Patria; and sent out great numbers of pious and devout Men into other parts of the World. Nor was Religion their only Character; their Learning too is much celebrated by Authors both Ancient and Modern, who tell us, That the Saxons (particularly) very commonly sent over their Children hither, for a liberal Education.

Thus much of its ancient Condition. At present, the Inhabitants are in a great measure brought over to the Customs and Fashions of the English: Except in some parts, where they live at a loose, unciviliz'd rate; and are therefore term'd Wild-Irish.

They are govern'd by a Vice-Roy (sent over by the King of England) stil'd Lord-Deputy or Lord Lieutenant; whose Jurisdiction and Authority is very large and ample. As for their Orders or Degrees, Ireland has the same, that we have here in England: Their Courts of Justice too, and manner of proceeding, differ very little. The Parliament is call'd and dissolv'd, at the pleasure of the King of England. They have their four Terms; their Chancery also, King's Bench, Common-Pleas and Exchequer; with their Judges of Assize, and Justices of the Peace in each County.

Ireland is divided into five parts, arising from the number of its Governors heretofore. These, with their extent, will best be understood by the following Scheme.

The CHURCH is govern'd by four Archbishops; Armagh, Primate of all Ireland; Dublin, Cassil, Tuam. The particular extent of the Bishopricks has been so alter'd from time to time, that I had rather omit the List, than run the hazard of giving a false Catalogue. In the Survey of the Kingdom, we will use the method observ'd in Scotland; which (for the Reasons laid down, in the beginning of that Kingdom) is here also most convenient and easie.

The more considerable Towns are,	{ Armagh ,	Down ,	Limerick ,
	{ Athlone ,	DUBLIN ,	Lisnor ,
	{ Caricfergus ,	Galway ,	London-derry .
	{ Cassil ,	Kildare ,	Waterford ,
	{ Clare ,	Kilkenny ,	Wexford ,
	Cork ,	Kinsale ,	Youghal .

Armagh, in the County of Armagh, near the River Kalin, seems to be the same which Bede calls De-armach; where (as the same Author adds) S. Patrick built a very fine City; only, he subjoins a Roman circumstance, That he follow'd the Model which the Angels had drawn for him. But whoever was the Founder, 'tis certain, That in the year 1142. it was made an Archbishop's See, when Cardinal Papirio was sent over into Ireland to revive the decaying Discipline of the Church. Nor is it only an Archbishoprick, but the Metropolis of the whole Kingdom; the Archbishop hereof being stil'd Primate of all Ireland. The City was reduc'd under the power of the English by John de Curcy; but was afterwards utterly destroy'd by John O Neal; so that now nothing remains but a few Cottages, and the Ruins of the ancient Buildings.

Athlone, in the County of Rescammon, is a place of good strength, and has a fair Stone-bridge over the River. 'Tis much talk'd of in our Accounts of the late Wars in this Kingdom.

Caricfergus, in the County of Antrim, is the most considerable Town upon all the Coast; having a very commodious Haven. In the late Wars in Ireland, it was much spoken of.

Cassil, upon the River Swire in the County of Tipperary, is only eminent for being an Archbishop's See, establish'd there by Pope Eugenius III.

Clare is a Market-Town (in the County of that name) standing upon a Creek of the River Shanon.

Cork, the Metropolis of the County of that name, is encompass'd with the River on which it stands, and is of an oval Form. It has the Honour of being an Episcopal See, and is now mostly Inhabited by the English; who by their diligence and industry have improv'd to that degree, both in Estates, Trade and Buildings, as to exceed all the Cities in Ireland, except only Dublin.

Down (the principal City in the County of Down) is of very great Antiquity; being mention'd almost under the same name (Dunum) in Ptolemy. 'Tis at present a Bishop's See; and the Inhabitants would claim a farther Honour, by making it the Burial place of the great S. Patrick. But Armagh in Ireland, Glasfenbury in England, and Glasgow in Scotland, do envy them that Happiness, and endeavour to assert that Esteem to themselves upon several Authorities, which seem to countenance the several Opinions.

DUBLIN, the chief City in Ireland, has a very pleasant situation by reason of Hills to the South, Planes to the West, the Sea to the East, and the River Liffy to the North. The River here makes a safe Harbour; but the heaps of Sand thrown into its Mouth by the violence of the Winds, or else the ebbing and flowing of the Sea, hinders Ships of any great Burthen from coming up, but at high Water. The City is well Wall'd and neatly built: Within these hundred years, it is doubly increas'd in its buildings, Ornaments, &c. Formerly, it was govern'd by a Provost; but King Henry IV. granted them a Mayor and two Bailiffs: And the two latter were chang'd into Sheriffs by Edward VI. Its publick Buildings of greatest note, are,

1. The College (which is situated in the same place on which the Monastery of All-hallows stood) dedicated to the Holy Trinity, and endow'd with the Privileges of an University by Queen Elizabeth. In Edward the Second's time, there was a Foundation laid here for an University, by the Institution of publick Lectures; but the Disturbances which follow'd, broke that Design.

2. The Archbishop's Palace, in the Suburbs of S.

5. Patrick: with a stately Church dedicated to S. Patrick; eminent without for its high Steeple, and within for its Pavements and arch'd Roof. This consists of a Dean, a Chanter, a Chancellor, a Treasurer, 2 Archdeacons, and 22 Prebendaries.

3. The King's Castle, well fortify'd with Ditches and Towers, and furnish'd with a good Arsenal.

4. Christ's Church, in the heart of the City; carry'd on and finish'd by Lawrence Archbishop of Dublin, and others.

5. The Town-Hall, built of square Stone, and call'd Tegiale.

Galloway (the chief place in the County of that name) is a neat Town built of Stone. The convenience of a Harbour has made it well stor'd with Merchants; who, by the advantage of a full Trade both by Sea and Land, are very wealthy.

Killmore has the honour of giving name to the County wherein it stands; but yet Naas is the Shire Town. Its greatest honour is the Bishop's See, stil'd in ancient Writings Episcopatus Dariensis.

Kilkenny (the chief place in the County, and the best inland Town in the Kingdom) is fair built and very plentiful, standing upon the River Neure. 'Tis divided into the English-Town and the Irish-Town. The English-Town is the newer, said to be built by Ranulph III. Earl of Chester. The Irish-Town is like a Suburbs to the other; but yet has the honour of S. Canic's Church, who gave name to the City, which implies as much as the Cell of S. Canic; a Person very eminent in this Country for an extraordinary piety and strictness of Life. The Bishop of Offory has his Seat in this City.

Kingfale stands at the Mouth of the River Bandon, in a fruitful Soil; and receives its greatest interest and Reputation from the commodious Harbor it enjoys.

Limerick (the head City in the County) is encompass'd by the divided Channel of the famous River Shanon. 'Tis parted into the Upper and Lower: In the first stands the Cathedral and Castle; the second is guarded with a Wall and Castle. It is a Bishop's See, and a place strongly fortify'd both by Art and Nature; as we may easily guess from the long Defence it made, when belieg'd by his late Majesty in the Irish Wars. This is the great Emporium of the whole Province of Munster.

Lisnor (upon the River Broodwater in the County of Waterford) has a considerable name in the Histories and Records of Ireland, upon account of the Bishop's See. But the Revenues thereof being almost quite alienated, and lost, it came afterwards to be annex'd to the See of Waterford.

London-derry, formerly call'd Derry, is now annex'd to the County of that name; and is famous in our modern Histories and publick Papers, for resisting two memorable Sieges, one in the year, 1649. the other in the year, 1689.

Waterford, the chief City in the County of that name, can neither recommend it self by a good Air nor fruitful Soil. Notwithstanding which, by the convenience of the Harbour, it was look'd upon for Wealth and Populousness to be the second City in Ireland; till Cork (as we observ'd before) grew up, and ever-topp'd it. Upon account of its eminent Loyalty to the English, our Kings having granted it several Privileges: But in the Rebellion of 1641. it lost its old Character of Fidelity, by the Influence of the Popish Clergy, settl'd there probably to carry on that bloody Design.

Weisford, the chief Town of the County seems to be a place of some Antiquity; tho' that name be modern, and given it by the Germans who settl'd themselves here. The Town is remarkable, for being the first in this whole Island that surrender'd to the English, and that receiv'd a Colony of that Nation. Which is the cause why all the neighbouring Parts do so much abound with English Inhabitants.

Yoghall, near the entrance of the River Broodwater into the Sea, stands in the County of Cork, being of an oblong form, and wall'd round. The Town is divided into Upper and Lower. The convenience of the Harbour, with the fruitfulness of the Country round, have made it a place of considerable Resort.

Ancient Places in the Kingdom of IRELAND.

Argita is a Lake in these parts; perhaps that which empties it self at Swilly in the County of Tirconnel.

Ausuba, mention'd by Ptolemy, is a River about Lough-Corbes, in the County of Galloway.

Auten, a People in these parts, seem to have formerly inhabited that Tract where the County of Galloway is at present; Aterith may well enough be suppos'd to retain something of the old name.

Blani were a People, who (along with the Birgantes, Menapii and Cauci) inhabited the Province of Leinster.

Boreum Prora, now S. Helen's Head in Tirconnel-County.

Bovinda is the River Boyn, well known by reason of the late Wars.

Brigantes or Birgantes, have their name from the River Brigus (for so Ptolemy calls our Barrow) and inhabited Kilkenny, Offory and Caterlogh, which are all water'd by the Barrow.

Cauci seem by the circumstances to have inhabited the County of Wicklow; now full of English Inhabitants, and by them improv'd to that degree, as to make a figure among the best Shires in this Kingdom.

Concani, a People in those parts, inhabited the South-part of Conaught, viz. Clare, Galloway, the Territory of Clan-Richard, with the Barony of Aterith. 'Tis possible, our present Conaught may have something of the name of this People; especially, if a more suitable Original cannot be found out.

Coriondi, a People who dwelt about the County of Cork; to which perhaps it might have left a tincture of the name.

Darni (along with the Voluntii, Robogdi and Erdini) peopl'd the Province of Ulster.

Daurona, mention'd by Ptolemy, and by Giraldus, call'd Lauranus, is probably the River which runs along by Cork.

Dunum is undoubtedly Down; an account whereof we have given in the descriptions of the Towns.

Duris seems to be the River which runs by Trailey through the County of Kerry.

Etlana is agreed upon by all hands to be the City of Dublin.

Eblani were a People in those parts.

Erdini inhabited part of the Province of Ulster, along with the Voluntii and others.

Hieron Promontorium, may very probably be that Neck of Land which shoots out into the County of Weisford; where Benna, a Town's name, implies the same thing as Hieron, namely, sacred or holy.

Iberni (call'd in some Copies Uterini) seem to have inhabited part of the County of Desmond, along with the Velabri.

Fernus is a River settl'd by Ptolemy under the Promontory Notium, as emptying it self there into the Sea. Maire (which runs under Drunkeran) bids the fairest for it.

Isanium is a Promontory call'd at this day S. John's Foreland in the County of Down.

Laterus, mention'd by Ptolemy, seems to be the Castle Kil-lair, in the County of Meth; a name possibly deriv'd from Ptolemy's old one.

Libnius keeps something of its name to this day in the River Liffy, which runs by Dublin.

Logia is the Lake Lough-Foye, in the County of Tirconnel.

Luceni, a People who formerly inhabited West-Munster, along with the Verabri and Uterini.

Maelicum, is now Male, upon the River Shanon, in the County of Long-ford.

Menapii, mention'd in Ptolemy, inhabited the County of Weisford; the chief City whereof, of the same name, seems to be the old Menapia.

Madena is a River in these parts, at the mouth whereof stood the ancient Menapia. If the latter be Weisford, the former must of course be the River Sene.

Nagnata is plac'd by Ptolemy some where about the present County of Slego; the very spot is not yet discover'd, nor any remains of the old name.

Nagnata must have their Seat in the same Tract, whereof Nagnata may seem to have been the capital City.

Notium is our Missen head (a Promontory in the County of Desmond (under which he tells us the old River Fernus empties it self into the Sea.

Oveca seems to be that River which empties it self into the Sea, below Wicklow or Arcklow.

Ravius is the River Trebis, the Northern Bound of the County of Slego.

Rceba is still preserv'd entire in the old Rheba (near the River Barrow in Queen's-County) at present an inconsiderable place.

Regia may seem to have been seated about Patric Purgatory, in the County of Tirconnel; because a place, in the Life of S. Patrick, is call'd Reglis.

Regia has some Relicks of the old name, in a Lake we call Lough-Regith, in the County of Long-ford: Which is of more moment, because the situation agrees very well with the account left us of it in Ptolemy.

Robogdii inhabited all the northern Shore of Ireland, about Tirconnel, &c. Robogh still preserves manifest marks of the old name.

Robogdium Promontorium must also have been those parts.

Senus call'd also Sena, Sacana and Flumen Senen is the noble River of Shanon.

Velabri (so call'd from the Friths and Æstus among which they dwelt; for so much Aber implies inhabited part of the County of Desmond.

Vidua a River in Tirconnel, now Crodogh.

Vinderius is the Bay of Knock-fergus in the County of Antrim.

Vodia, a People, who, with the Coriendi, inhabited the Counties of Cork, Tipperary, Limerick and Wexford. The Territories Idou and Idouth seem to have something of the old name.

Vennicium Promont. now Ram's Head in Tirconnel. Voluntii, along with the Darni, Robogdii and Erdi inhabited the Province of Ulster.

JERSEY and GARNSEY.

BESIDES the Kingdom of Ireland, and the other Islands which lie round the Continent of Britain (the most considerable whereof are describ'd in the Counties upon which they border) there are two more which could not be conveniently drawn into the Body of the Survey, by reason of their distance from the Continent. And yet they are of so great importance to the Crown of England, that in a Description of the three Kingdoms, it will be a gross Error wholly to omit them. These are Jersey and Garnsey, JERSEY is that which Antoninus mentions under the name of Cæsarea, about 30 Miles in compass, and defended with Rocks and Quick-sands. The middle parts are mountainous, but the Vallies are delicately water'd with pleasant Brooks, and planted with Fruit-Trees; Apple-Trees more especially. The Villages are thick-set, and make 12 Parishes; out of which 12 Jurors are chosen by their respective Parishioners to assist the Bailiff (who is appointed by the Governour to administer Justice) in the management of Causes and Actions, both Civil and Capital. They have no Physicians, nor any Distempers but Fevers; which always come at a certain time of the Year. Instead of Fewel, they use a Sea-weed, which they name Uraic; and the Sea now and then furnishes them with a good prize of combustible matter. S. Hilary's on the South-side of the Island, is their chief Town, both on account of its Trade, and Court of Justice settl'd in it. The name, it has from Hilary (Bishop of Poictiers) suppos'd to have been ry'd here, in his Banishment.

GARNSEY (20 Miles to the North-west) is Antoninus call'd Sarnia; inferior to the other in some accounts: For it contains only 10 Parishes, is not so fruitful: But 'tis better fortify'd, being compals'd with a continu'd Ridge of steep Rocks. This whole Island is Enclosure; but the Inhabitants do not follow Agriculture so closely, as their Neighbours of Jersey. S. Peter's, a Town consisting of a long narrow Street, and seated upon a Bay in the form of a Half-Moon, is their capital Place, whether respect Trade or Strength. For it is well stor'd with Merchants; and has the Mouth of the Haven defended by a Castle on each side. The Governour of the Island keeps his Residence here, and a Garrison for the defence of the place.

The Government of these Islands, is much the same in both; the Customs of Normandy obtain in most cases. Their Drink is generally Cyder, by reason of the abundance of Apples; and Fish they have in great plenty. Their Language is the French; tho' they are generally of the same Extraction, they seem not fond of an Alliance to that People, had rather make out a Relation to the English.

FRANCE.

CHAP. I.

FRANCE, Gallia, in General.

FRANCE

THE Country of France is very advantageously situated, in the midst of the Northern temperate Zone, and extended from the 42d degree of Latitude to the 51st degree; and from the 13th degree of Longitude, to the 25th, degree, reckoning from Teneriffe [But according to Sanfon's Computation from the 15th degree to the 29th degree of Longitude:] So that it includes the space of 173 Leagues or,

The Longitude of France has been strangely confounded by the Ignorance or Vanity of their Geographers, who have in their Maps extended it East and West a hundred Miles or more above its real Length: But the Mesures de l'Academie des Sciences, have by exact Observations and Calculations corrected that Error, and by Monsieur du Fer's new Map it appears that the Length of the Kingdom from Conquet to Montbeliard is but 12 Degrees, tho' Sanfon makes it 14 and others much more.

520 Miles, from the Pyrenean Mountains in the South, to Calis in the North. And from the Point of Cenquet in Bretagne in the West to Alsatia in the East, about 500 Miles. On the North-east it is contiguous with the Spanish Netherlands, and on the North parted from England by the British Channell: On the East it is bounded by Germany, Switzerland, Savoy and Piedmont, from the last of which it is separated by the Alps; on the South by the Mediterranean-Sea; and the Pyrenean Mountains, which divide it from Spain; and on the West by the Ocean.

The AIR is very temperate, and not subject to the great Colds of Germany, Sweden, and Muscovy, nor to the excessive Heats of Spain and Italy; but it is more or less hot or cold, according to the different situation of the several Provinces.

The SOIL is every where fertile, and produces, besides abundance of Corn and divers sorts of Fruits, a vast quantity of Wine and abundance of Flax; and in Provence and Languedoc, Oil. The Pastures and Meadows feed great Herds of Cattle, and the Forests, which are spacious enough, but not so large as those of Germany, contain much variety of Game. Some Mines of Iron, Lead, Tin, Copperas, &c. are found in France, but of these not many nor very considerable. Great quantity of Salt is made in the Isle of Rhee, about Rocheford, and other parts of France, which yields the King a great Revenue.

The most noted MOUNTAINS here, besides the Pyrenean and the Alps, are those of Cevennes, Auvergne, Mont-jure or S. Claudetowards Switzerland, and Mont-dogesse, or des-Faucilles in the Diocess of Langres.

The Chief ISLANDS are, I. In the Mediterranean-Sea, those of Hieres, S. Margaret, St. Honoratus or of Lerins. &c. II. in the Ocean, Oleron and Ree on the Coast of Scutunge and Aunis; Noir-Monfrer, De-dieu, Bell-Isle, Ouessant, &c. off of Bretagne; and Aldernay near the Shoar of Normandy.

Its chiefest PORTS in the Ocean, are Calais, Ambletense, St. Valery, Diepe, Havre de Grace, S. Malo, Brest, Roche, Rochefort, Bordeaux, Bayonne, &c. And in the Mediterranean, Marseilles and Toulon.

The principal RIVERS of France are, 1. The Seine, which rises in Burgundy near Dijon, passeth through Champaign, the Isle of France and Normandy, watering by the way, Troy, Paris and Roen, and receiving in its Course the Tenne, the Oyse, and several smaller Rivers, empties it self into the Sea at Havre de Grace, and makes a very good Haven, whence this Town hath its Name. 2. The Loyre is the largest River in France, and springs in Languedoc, in the Mountains call'd les Cevennes, passeth by Nevers, Orleans, Tours, Angers and Nantes, receiving by the way the Aller, the Cher, the Indre, the Vienne, the Sarte, the Ardre and many others, and falls into the Sea about 40 Miles below Nantes, and over against Bell-Isle. 3. The Garonne riseth in the Pyrenean Mountains, runs to Toulouse, thence flows westward to Bordeaux, a little below which the Deurdonne joyns it, and both together make a very wide Haven, which is emptied into the Ocean near the Island of Oleron. 4. The Rhofne hath its Source in the Alps, passes through the Lake of Geneva, flows to Lyons, where it receives the Saone; at Valence the Isere falls into it, as doth the Durance at Avignon, and quickly after empties it self into the Mediterranean-Sea in Six Channels. Besides these there are a great number of smaller Rivers; which are mentioned in the following Description of the Country.

The particular COMMODITIES of France which they send abroad into foreign Countries, a Wine, Brandy, Canvas, and other Linen, Paper, Salt, wrought Silks, Druggets and other Stuffs; several wrought Goods, as Gloves, Lace, &c.

The PEOPLE of France are a mixture of the Posterity of the ancient Gauls, Romans, Franks, Vijgoths and Burgundians, but chiefly of the Gauls, who though the Romans and Franks successively subdued they did not however expel, those still remaining in body of the People, tho' these obtain'd the Government of them.

Of the TEMPER of the Gauls, Cesar say They were quick-witted, but rash and unsteady; and their Successors the French are of the same nature. They have generally quick and ready Apprehension but too often run away with a superficial Knowledge of things, without having Patience to dive to the bottom: But tho' this be their general Character, they have been abundance of Particulars that must be excepted: France having produced very learned and industrious Men in all Arts and Sciences, especially in our Age; wherein beside the vast improvement they have made to the Art of War, all the parts of Learning have been industriously studied and improv'd by the ingenious Virtuosi of France; and even a Woman of that Nation hath been found an excellent Critic in Philological Learning. They abound in Compliments, and are really very civil, especially to Strangers; and have a natural freedom in their Conversation, which would be very agreeable if it were not overacted and mixed with Levity. Both Men and Women are full of Talk, and as familiar at first sight, as if they had been long acquainted. In their Habit they are something fantastical, but have generally an Air of Gentility; especially the Women, who are well shaped and fair enough, except in the Southern Provinces, where they have very swarthy Complexions. The French are much addicted to Litigiousness; more Law-suits are tried there, than in any Nation in the World; nay some say than in all Europe besides; which encourages all sorts of People to breed up their Children to the Law; and if a Father can raise Money enough to purchase his Son an Office, he thinks him well settled: By which means here are swarms of Advocates, Procureurs, Registers, Notaries, and other Men of Law. The Gentry scorn Trade, so that the younger Brothers always apply themselves to the Gown or the Sword, which makes the French King's Armies so large and well Stockt with Officers. In War they have been always esteemed furious in attacking, but quick in retreating, not to be brought on a second time, if they obtained not their End at the first Onset. Sicut primus impetus eis major quam virorum est, ita sequens minor quam faminarum, says L. Forus of them.

But tho' this may still be part of their Character, yet, what by strict Discipline and careful Instruction, their Soldiers will now endure the Fatigues of a Camp and a Siege as well as any in Europe, and in Battles too, they have behaved themselves very bravely.

The Religion of the Gauls was Paganism in its highest degree, even to the offering of humane Sacrifices (saith Solinus); but as they became more civiliz'd this barbarity was laid aside; however, they still remained superstitious Idolaters, till the CHRISTIAN RELIGION was planted among them, by some of St. Peter's Disciples. St. Denys, the Areopagyte, is pretended to have been the Apostle of Paris, and many ridiculous Miracles are related of him in their Legends; particularly, that after he was beheaded his Body rose, took up his Head and walked with it a Mile: which is as true, as that this Denys was ever there*. However, it is certain, that Christianity was received here very early, and that the Learned and pious Father St. Irenæus came hither in the middle of the second Century, and succeeded Ponthinus (who was martyr'd An. Dom. 178.) in the Bishoprick of Lyons, But the Franks being Pagans, when they came, Christianity was again suppress'd, till Clovis the fifth King being converted, by the Persuasion of his Wife Croisida, and the instruction by St. Vaast, and St. Remigius the first Bishop of Rheims, it was restored.

Mile

But in the succeeding Ages of Ignorance and Superstition, the Errors that crept into the Church in most parts of Christendom, prevailed here also; and though the Gallican Church was never so servilely subject to the Court of Rome, as those of other Nations, yet the superstitious Doctrines were as generally received here as any where. But when the Reformation was set on foot, great numbers of the People of France were convinc'd of the falshood of that Religion, and Calvin's Doctrine was readily receiv'd upon the preaching of Zuinglius. And so numerous did the Protestants or Huguenots (as they were called by the Romanists) grow, that even so early as the year 1560. there are said to have been 1250 of their Churches in France. But they were always persecuted by the Romish party, and even massacred in most barbarous manner several times; particularly at Paris on Saint Bartholomew's day, in the year 1572. where in the middle of the Night, more than 10000 of them were murder'd at once, and in other Cities three times as many, though a Peace was just concluded, and for assurance the King of Navarre, the Head of the Protestant party, was that day married to the French King's Sister. King Henry IV. granted them Liberty of Conscience by an Edict made at Nantes, and confirm'd and registr'd in the Parliament of Paris: By which means they again grew very powerful, and no less than 300 walled Towns were inhabited almost only by them, of which Rochel was the chief. But Lewis XIII. deprived them of 'em all, even Rochel it self, after a long and famous Siege. By which their Strength being broken, and the Heads of the Party being brought over, or otherwise reduc'd, the present King Lewis XIV. resolv'd utterly to suppress them; which he began by the revocation of the Edict of Nants in the year 1685. notwithstanding it had been so firmly ratified, and made a standing Law of the Kingdom; and afterwards caus'd the Protestants to be most cruelly persecuted by his Soldiers, which continued for two or three years; at the end of which, all those that could not be brought to renounce their Religion, were banished the Kingdom, after they had been long imprisoned, and deprived of all their Goods and Estates. And at this time the Persecution is renewed with such Heat, that none dare own any other Religion, than that of the Romish Church.

The ancient LANGUAGE of the Gauls was the same with that of our ancient Britains, as the learned Mr. Camden has proved at large; but when the Romans conquer'd it, they introduc'd the Latin, and by means of the long time they were Masters of the Country, establish'd it so effectually, that the old Gaulish was quite lost; afterwards the Franks, being Germans, introduc'd their own Language, which was us'd at Court for some Ages; but the German being a more harsh indocile Tongue, and the Latin the contrary, this prevail'd above that; so that though the present French Tongue be compos'd of the German and Gothick, as well as of the Latin, the last has much the greater share.

It is voluble and elegant, and admir'd for its sweetness; it is true by means of the liberty they take in the pronounciation, (leaving out harsh terminations and Consonants) it is pliant enough, but not so sweet as the Italian. The Royal Academy at Paris have of late years much improv'd and refin'd it, however it is not yet copious nor at all heroick; so that though in their Translations they have express'd the sense of some ancient Authors aptly enough in Prose, none of their Ingenious have been able to produce Heroick Poems like those in English.

But notwithstanding that this Tongue hath nothing of signal Majesty or Manliness in it, and seems rather fit for the Conversation of Women than of Princes and Statesmen, yet what by the greatness of the present King, and their Obstinacy in using their own Language in the Businesses other Nations have had occasion to transact with them, together with the splendor of the Prince's Court which hath invited Strangers to visit it, the French Tongue is at present us'd in many Courts of Europe, and the most generally understood of any modern one in Christendom.

SECT. II.

Of the ancient State of France.

THE want of Literature in the earlier Ages of the World, hath made it extremely difficult to discover the Origin of Nations: The best that can be learnt of that of France, is, That it was peopled after the Flood, by the Posterity of Gomar the eldest Son of Japhet: These growing numerous, compos'd many Nations, to whom the Greeks and Romans gave the general name of Galli or Celta; for what reason, as it is uncertain, so it is not very material; however under that name they were known in the time of Tarquinius Priscus the fifth King of Rome, and possess'd a Country of very large extent, comprising not only all the present France, but part of Italy also, as far as the River Rubicon or Pisatello, which falls into the Adriatick Sea between Ravenna and Rimini; and all that part of Germany and Belgium, that lies within the River Rhine, the Division whereof according to the Roman Accounts, was thus, viz,

I. GALLIA CISALPINA or Citerior, with respect to the Romans, afterwards called LONGOBARDIA or LOMBARDY from the Bardi, a certain Gaulish People, and the Langons, so named by reason of their long Javelins.

II. GALLIA TRANSALPINA, or Uterior, which contained all the present France, and that part of Germany and Belgium westward of the Rhine.

The Gauls in general were a very vigorous and

* Dr. Cave in his Life of that Denys hath sufficiently proved that he was never in France, Lives Fath. Vol. 1. p. 71. as also their own Country-men, Launoy, Sirmondus and du Pin. V. du Pin's Hist. Eccles. Writ. Vol. 1. p. 31. of the Engl. Edit.

warlike People, these of the Cis-Alpina fought and defeated a large Army of Romans, march'd * A.M. 3562. up to the City, took and sack'd it *, U.C. 565. laid Siege to the Capitol, and had well nigh taken it: For having observed on one side of the Castle a place of more easie access than the rest, in the dead of the night some of them climb'd up the Rock there, and got to the top with that silence, that they escap'd the Centinels and the Dogs; but disturb'd certain Geese that were in the Capitol, which by gagling and clapping their Wings alarm'd the Soldiers; who presently running to their Arms, drove them back, and by that lucky Accident recover'd the Roman State, then reduc'd to its last gasp. At length the Siege was rais'd by Camillus the Dictator, and in time the Gauls were driven out of the Roman Provinces: But left so dreadful a Name behind them, that Cicero confesses the Romans were more afraid of them than any other Nation of the World. And Sallust says, It was not Honour but Life that was to be disputed with a Gaul. The Romans durst not attempt the Conquest of them, till they had subdued almost all the rest of the then known World. At length, Anno U.C. 628, Fulvius Flaccus the Consul made War upon them, and five years after Fabius Maximus reduced the Narbonensis into a Roman Province. About 70 years after this, Julius Caesar undertook the Conquest of Gaul, which, after a very bloody War he effected, and totally subjected the whole Country to the Power of Rome, A.M. 3900. U.C. 703. ante Christ. 48. Caesar at his arrival found the whole Country divided into three parts, whereof the Celte or Galli possessed the best and largest, being all the Country that is bounded by the Garonne on the South, the Ocean on the West, the Loire and the Rhine on the East, and by the Seine and Marne on the North; From the Confines of the Gallia Celtica to the British Sea, and along the lower part of the Rhine quite to the German Ocean was inhabited by the Belge; the other part, being all from the River Garonne to the Pyrenean Mountains, quite cross from the Ocean in the West to the Mediterranean in the East, belonging to the Aquitains. Of these the Celte were the most civiliz'd, because of their Neighbourhood and Converse with the Romans, and the Belge the most warlike by reason of the little Converse they had with other Nations, and the frequent Wars that the Germans made upon them. These great Nations were again subdivided into a multitude of smaller, whereof Caesar mentions no less than LXIV, that had different Appellations from the chief City, as the Rhemi of Rheims, the Suessiones of Soissons, Bellovaci of Beauvais, Sessui of Seerz, &c. But by him it was divided into these four great Parts. 1. Narbonensis, so called from the City Narbon, containing Languedoc, Provence, Dauphine, and some Part of Savoy; called also Bracaria, from a certain Habit worn by the People. 2. Aquitania, so named from the City of Aque-augusta, now d' Acqs in Guienne, comprehending the Provinces of Gascogn, Guienne, Quercu, Xaintoigne, Poitou, Perigord, Limousin, Auvergne, Bourbonnois, and Berry, extending from the Pyrenees to the River Loire. 3. Celtica, called so from the valiant Nation of the Celte, and Comata from the long Hair worn by them, and also Lugdunensis from the City Lyon, extending from the Loire to the British Sea, and comprehending the Province of Lycnois, the Dukedom of Burgundy, Nivernois, &c. part of Champaigne, the Isle of France, the Provinces of Normandy, Bretaigne, Maine, Perche, Beauce, Anjou, and Touraine. 4. Belgica, named from the Belge a potent Nation, comprised all the Eastern part of Gaul, viz. Picardy, the rest of Champaigne, the Netherlands, and so much of Germany and Belgium, as lyeth on this side the Rhine, with the County of Burgundy or Franche Comte.

Afterwards the Emperor Constantine the Great, divided it into seventeen Provinces or Governments; six of which were Consular and eleven under certain Presidents sent by the Emperor, who resided in these Cities, viz.

1. Narbonensis prima.	Narbonne in Languedoc .
2. ———— secunda.	Aix in Provence .
3. Viennensis .	Vienne in Dauphine .
4. Alpes, Graie and Pennina .	Monstriers en Tarantaise , in Savoy .
5. Alpes Maritimæ .	Ambrun in Dauphine .
6. Lugdunensis prima.	Lyon .
7. ———— secunda.	Roan in Normandy .
8. ———— tertia.	Tours .
9. ———— quarta.	Sens in Champaigne .
10. Sequania .	Besançon in Franche Comte .

12. ———— secunda.	Bordeaux in Guienne .
13. Novempopulania .	Aux in Gascogne ,
14. Germania prima.	Mentz .
15. ———— secunda.	Colen .
16. Belgica prima.	Triers .
17. ———— secunda.	Rheims .

He also placed Counts in the Cities, and Dukes in the Frontier Towns to administer Justice according to the Roman Laws; and A.D. 330. dividing the Office of Præfectus Prætorio, or Lieutenant-General of the Empire, among four Persons; appointed one of them to reside among the Gauls; and under him, three Vicars, who were dispersed in Britain, France, and Spain.

Afterwards the Goths got footing in Gaul, the Narbonensis being granted to them by the Emperor Honorius upon their quitting Italy; and afterwards for Service done the Empire. Aquitain also was given them. And the Burgundians, a great and populous Nation on the Rhine, (at first called in by Stilico Lieutenant of the same Honorius, to defend the Borders against the Franks) possessed themselves of all the South-east parts and both the Burgundies, from them so called.

This was the State of Gaul, when the Franks or French entred it.

The FRANKS were a warlike People of Germany, who possessed all the Country that lies between the Rhine and the Weser, and from the German Ocean in the North to the River Mayne in the South; and consisted of the Nations of Sicambri, Bucteri, Salijs, Cherusci, &c.

They also conquer'd the Country beyond the Mayne, and making the Banks of that River their chief Seat, gave the name of Franconia to the Country now called so.

The Sicambri, from whom some deduce the original of the French, are said to be of Scythian Extraction, and have come down into Germany A.M. 3519. ante J. Chr. 429, in a very great Body, under their Captain Marcomir, and settled themselves in those parts now called East-Friesland, Guelderland, and Holland. They were a rough unciviliz'd People, and often invaded and plundered their Neighbours. A.M. 3925. their King named Francus, was called by the Saxons to their assistance against the Goths, where he so signaliz'd himself by his Valour, that, as some Authors report, the Nation had from him the Name of

Franci;

Franci ; but this seems improbable, since neither Strabo, Ptolemy, Pliny, Cæsar, Tacitus, or any ancient Author have mentioned them under that Name : From whence it is concluded, That they had it not till long after, that they took it up to denote the Freedom they enjoy'd from the Roman Yoke, which the Neighbouring Nations were Subject to.

The first notice of them in History under this Denomination is in the Reigns of Valerian and Gallienus, about A. D. 260, after which they are frequently mentioned on account of the Pillage they made in Gaul, &c. Constantine the Great, took their Kings Ascaric and Rhadagaise Prisoners, and exposed them to wild Beasts, for having violated their Faith in warring against him.

About A. D. 412 the Armorici, who inhabited the Maritime Provinces of Gaul, as Flanders, Picardy, Normandy and Bretaign, revolted from the Romans, to whom the Franks joyned, and by that means possessed themselves of part of the German and Belgick Provinces of Gaul, which the Romans were forced to grant them. Soon after this it was, that Pharamond was chosen their King ; He reigned ten Years and had his Seat in Gaul, but about the time of his death the Romans beat the Franks out of Gaul again, and took from them the Lands they had given them, which Clodion the Successor of Pharamond endeavour'd to regain, but was beaten back. Meroveus succeeded Clodion, in whose time Attila King of the Huns invaded Gaul with a vast Army, and having plundred several other Cities, besieged Orleans ; for the relief whereof Meroveus joined his Forces with those of Aetius the Roman General, and Theodorick King of the Visigoths, who altogether set upon Attila, and in Battle killed 200000 of his Men (as Historians report) and drove him out of Gaul. Aetius, who was the great support of the Roman Power in Gaul, was soon after Massacred by Valentinian, and he himself kill'd by Maximus. This put the Roman Affairs into such disorder, that Meroveus had time to extend his Conquests, which he did over all Picardy, Normandy and part of the Isle of France ; and Childerick his Son took Paris, Orleans, and several other Cities, and established the French Monarchy. Clovis his Successor freed the French wholly from the Roman Power, and gave the Name of France to all the Country that reaches from the Rhine to the Loire. After the death of Clovis, the Dominion of the Franks was divided into two parts, viz. Osterrich, or the Eastern part called Austrasia, and Westerrich, or the Western part called Neustria : The former containing all the old France, and the Country beyond the Maine, which they had conquer'd, together with Reims, Chalons, Cambray and Loan ; which was from that time a separate Kingdom, the Seat whereof was Mets in Lorraine. The latter contained all the Country that lies between the Meuse and the Loire, which was again divided into three Kingdoms, viz. 1. Of France at Paris, 2. of Orleans, and 3. of Soissons : And afterwards, when the French had subdued the Visigoths and Burgundians ; two other Kingdoms were erected, viz. of Aquitain and Burgundy. These were several times united and divided, as the Royal Family happened to be more or less numerous. But the Title of Kings of France, the Historians have given to those only who have ruled in Paris ; who are these mentioned in the following Table.

Of the French Kings.

OF these Monarchs there are reckon'd three Races. The first is called Merovingian from Meroveus, who putting aside the Children of Clodion, caus'd himself to be chosen King ; and fixed the Regal Seat in Gaul, as hath been already shewn. This Race continued during the Reigns of XXI Kings, and ended in Childerick III. who being a weak man, was surnamed the Wicless, and was degraded by the Assembly of the Estates ; Pepin the Son of Charles Martel, Maire of the Palace, being advanced in his stead ; who began the second Race, called the Carlian or Carlovinian.

The Maire of the Palace was an Office of great Dignity and Power ; he was at first chosen by the Nobility and confirmed by the King ; and was entrusted with the Management of all Affairs of State : Their Power was very great, which by reason of the Weakness and Supineness of the Kings, they encreased as they pleased ; so that at last it became hereditary. Of these, Pepin and his Son Charles, surnamed Martel, were in a manner Kings themselves during the Reigns of Dagobert II. Chilperick, Clotaire and Thierry, and after the Death of the last, Charles made himself chief Governour, with the Title of Maire and Duke of the French, in which he was succeeded by his Sons Carloman and Pepin during an Interregnum of 6 or 7 Years ; and after the Expulsion of Childerick, Pepin obtained the Royal Dignity, as hath been already said. To Pepin succeeded his Son Charles, called le Magne or the Great ; An Epithet the Noble Actions he performed, very worthily deserv'd : For it was he that conquer'd the Barbarous Inhabitants of the most Northern Parts of Germany, and establish'd Christianity and Civil Government among them, after he had overcome Wittikind the last King of the Saxons whereof we shall have occasion to speak more particularly in our description of Germany. He also conquer'd the Boii or Bavarians, became King of Germany, and in the Pope's Quarrel carried his Arms into Italy against Desiderius King of Lombardy, who attempted to diminish the Papal Power and make himself King of all Italy ; Him Charles defeated, seized his Kingdom, and was crown'd King of Lombardy. He also conquered the Saracens in Spain, and the Huns, Danes, Normans, &c. that infested his own Countries : And finally, he was by the Romans chosen Emperor, to which he was crowned on Christmas-day, A. D. 800. thereby erecting anew the Western Empire, and making himself the greatest Prince of the Universe. But this mighty Monarchy was in a little time reduced to its former Limits ; for his Son Lewis the Godly parted his Estates among his four Sons, and erected the Kingdoms of Italy, Aquitain, Bavaria, and Francia ; and tho' some of his Posterity succeeded in the Empire, yet his Family degenerating, they not only lost that Title, but Charles surnamed the Simple, the great Grandson of Lewis the Godly, was for some time kept out of the Throne of France also, by Lewis and Carloman his Bastard-Brothers, and after them by Carolus Crassus Emperor, and Eudes Earl of Anjou ; and though he obtained it at last, he was much disturb'd and forc'd to resign it to Rodolph of Burgundy, who having enjoyed it two years, after his Death the Son of Charles the Simple was restor'd. But his Son

Son and Grandson were disturb'd by Hugh Capet, Earl of Paris and Anjou, and Maire of the Palace, descended from the Eudes above mention'd, who after the Death of Lewis the Slothful, got to be chosen King by the Assembly of the Estates at Noyon, in the Month of May, A. D. 987 : And began the Third or Capetine Race of the Kings of France.

SECT. IV.

Of the Government, Laws, Courts and Officers of Justice, and Taxes.

GAUL, as we have said, was anciently divided into many Nations, each of which was govern'd by a different King; whose Power was limited by Laws agreed between him and the People in a grand Council. But tho' these Nations were separate Governments, they all maintained a general Alliance, and upon extraordinary Occasions, a general Council of the Chiefs of each Nation was conven'd; as we find there Cæsar, de Bel. Gal. Lib. I. was to chuse Deputies to congratulate Cæsar upon his Victory over the Helvetians, and to crave his Assistance against Arminius King of the Germans.

And like the Gauls, the French also at the beginning of that Monarchy, establish'd a grand Council for making Laws, called the Assembly of the Estates; which was composed of Deputies sent from the Nobility, Clergy, the chief Cities of every Province, and from the common People. These being assembled before the King.

King, the Peoples Grievances were heard, the Necessities of the Kingdom considered and Laws were made for Imposing Taxes, Redressing Grievances, and what else was needful for the Publick Good: And the Laws there made obliged the King, as well as the People. The first Assembly of this Council, mentioned in History was A. D. 422, at Saliffon or Seitz in Alsatia, which was called (says du Tille) to interpret and Reform the Customs of France not yet written; and in this Council 'tis said the famous Salique Law was made. Mention is made many times that Childebert assembled the Estates. Charlemagne called them twenty times, To receive the Annual Gifts, and confirm the Privileges of the Nobility, says a late French Author of good Learning; by which it should seem that they had the same Power that our English Parliament hath. It is at least certain, that in those days this Assembly had great Authority: Davila says it was an ancient Question, Whether the Estates or the King were superior. But at length their Power was much restrained, and latterly they were not assembled in many years together. Lewis XIII. convoked the Assembly of the Estates to Sens, Sep. 10. 1614. thence adjourned them to Paris, where the Sessions began on the 27th of October, and on the 23d of February, 1615. the Result of their Deliberations being written down, were presented to the King, but whether passed into Laws or no I am not inform'd, the Historian leaving it there. Since that time they have never met; and the only Legislative Power in France at present is in the King, whose Edicts (with a Soit, car tel est notre plaisir; So be it, for such is our Pleasure) being registered in the Parliament of Paris (which too is composed of Persons that are at his Devotion) have the full force of Laws.

The Ancient Civil Law is used in France, besides which there are ancient Municipal Laws and Customs, and the Edicts of the Kings.

The Salique Law and that of Appenages are esteemed Fundamental and irrevocable: The first confines the Succession to the Crown in the Males, excluding the Females, and the Issue of them: What more it contained is not known. Many Conjectures have been made of the Reason of this Name Salique: some derive it from the Salii, one of the Nations of the Franks; others from the River Sala, on the Banks whereof it is pretended to be made, &c. But that which seems to be much the most Natural and Probable is the Judgment of a most ingenious Antiquary of our own Nation, who derives it from the Word SAHL or ZAL, as it is now written, which in the High-Dutch (the Language of the Franks) signifies a Hall or Court, so that it is the Law Salique, q. d. the Court-Law, or the Law of the Court, by which the King and the Royal Family were assur'd of their Honour and Prerogative. That of Appenage was made by Charles the Great, and is to hinder the King's younger Sons from having any part of the Kingdom with their Elder Brother; before which France was frequently parcelled out into several Kingdoms.

For maintaining the Publick Peace, and the better Administration of Justice, the King appoints one of the prime of the Nobility Governor in every one of the Twelve Governments, and under him Lieutenants and Governours of Towns, whose Officers are the same with the ancient Dukes and Counts, first established by the Romans, viz. to keep in Obedience the Provinces and Places given them in Custody, to maintain them in Peace and Tranquility, to have Power and command over their Armies, to defend them against Enemies and Seditious Attempts, to keep the Places well fortified and provided with what is needful, and to assist the Execution of Justice.

The Administration of Justice, both Civil and Criminal belongs to the Parliaments. Anciently the Kings administred Justice themselves, but it being troublesome to them, this Court was establish'd by King Pepin, Anno Dom. 757. composed of certain Noblemen, whom the King appointed to hear the Complaints, and do Justice to his Subjects. At first it was held where the King resided, and follow'd him in his Journeys: But for the Convenience of the People, Philip the Fair made it sedentary, and gave a Part of his Palace at Paris to be the fixt Seat of the Parliament; and because of the multiplicity of Business, and the large extent of the Country, succeeding Kings erected new ones in several Parts of the Kingdom, so that at present there are Fourteen Parliaments in France, and its Conquests, viz.

| 2 Toulouse . | 10 Besancon . |

These Parliaments are composed of certain Presidents, Councillors, Advocates, &c. and divided into several Chambers, according to the respective Businesses. That of Paris is called the Court of Peers, because the Dukes and Peers of France, and several great Officers of State are sworn before it, and are there tryed, when accused of any Crime. It is divided into Ten Chambers, viz.

The Grand Chamber, which tries great Causes, and judges Noblemen.

The Tournelle (so called, because the Councillors of the Grand Chamber attend in it by Turns;) Civile, judges of Civil Causes to the Value of 1000 Livres or 50 Livres per Annum.

The Tournelle Criminelle, which judges all Appeals of Criminal Matters from the Subordinate Courts, not made by Noblemen.

Five Chambers of Inquest, Wherein the Depositions of Witnesses are written down, and Causes judged thereupon, in the Nature of our Bill and Answer in Chancery.

Two Chambers of Request, which judge the Causes of those that are privileged.

For the Service of these Chambers, there are one Chief President, and seven Presidents au Mortier (so called from a Cap they wear in form like a Mortar) who are all Persons of Quality: Twenty nine Councillors, Clerks, among which the Archbishop of Paris, and the Abbot of S. Denys have place; One hundred eighty and five Councillors, Laicks; Fourteen Presidents of the Inquest and Requests; Two Advocates General; one Procureur General, and Twenty Substitutes to him; Three Registers; with Greffiers, Notaries, Ushers, &c. and Four hundred Procureurs or Attorneys.

Besides the Parliaments, there are two other sorts of supreme Courts in France, which are the Chambers of Accounts, and the Courts of Aides.

The Chambers of Accounts are Twelve in Number, and held at these Cities. viz. 1. Paris, 2. Roan, 3. Dijon, 4. Nantes, 5. Montpelier, 6. Grenoble, 7. Aix, 8. Pau, 9. Blois, 10. Lisle, 11. Aire, and 12. Dole. This Court administers the Oath of Fidelity to the Arch-

Archbishops, Bishops, Abbots, &c. They Examine the Accounts of the Treasury, receive the Homage and Vassalage due from the Royal Fiefs, &c. and Register the Treaties of Peace, and all other Contracts, Grants and Gifts of the King whatsoever.

The Courts of Aids are Eight, and held at these Cities, viz. 1. Paris, 2. Montpellier, 3. Rean, 4. Clermont Mont-ferrand, 5. Bordeaux, 6. Aix, 7. Grenoble, and 8 of Burgundy at Dijon. This Court Judges without Appeal all Causes relating to the Tailles, Aides, Gabels, and all other the King's Revenues.

Under these Supreme Courts there are other for smaller Matters establish'd in all the Cities, and considerable Towns in the Kingdom, viz.

Presidial. A Court composed of several Judges who Try Civil Causes (and Appeals from Subaltern Justices in Villages) of Matters of smaller Importance. Each Presidial is divided under two Chiefs; The first judges definitively, and without Appeal, to the Sum of 250 Livres or 10 Livres per Annum; The second to the Sum of 500 Livres, or 20 Livres per Annum.

Generalities. Which are the Treasurers General of France; Of these there are Twenty three, conveniently disposed in several Parts of the Kingdom: Each Generality is composed of Twenty three Persons, who have the care of Assessing the Taxes, and Receiving the King's Revenue, in their respective Districts, which for their ease are divided into several Parts, called Elections. When the King in his Council, hath determined what extraordinary Sum must be levied upon the Subjects that Year, the Resolution is sent to the Generalities, who compute the Proportion of it that each of their Districts must raise: And then send their Orders to every Election, to raise so much as their Proportion amounts to, upon the Parishes within their respective Elections; and the Money being Collected, is returned with the accounts to the Generalities, who remit it to the Exchequer, The same Method is used in levying the Tailles, and all Money raised for the King.

This is a Court also for judging Matters relating to the Crown-Lands and the Kings Revenue. They have the Inspection of all publick Works, and give out Orders concerning the building and repairing the Royal Houses (except Versailles and the Louvre) publick Bridges, Causeys, &c. They are Surveyors General of the High-ways, and Judge of the Nuisances without appeal. All Letters of Ennobling, Legitimation and Donation from the King must be registered in their Office. The Places that these Generalities are held in, will be seen in the following Description of the Country.

The Election is a subordinate Court to the Generality. It is composed of several Persons who compute the Proportion that every Parish in their Division must raise of the Sum demanded by the Generality, and send out their Orders to the Parishes accordingly, where the Inhabitants chuse one, who proportions it exactly among them, and collects it. This Court judges small Causes relating to the Imposts and Taxes.

For administering Justice and punishing Criminals, there are certain Officers and Magistrates in every considerable Town (who are commonly Lawyers) appointed by the King; they have different Titles, being in some places called Bailiffs, in others Provosts, and in others Seneschals. but their Power and Duty is much the same. The pursuing and seizing of Criminal belongs to them: They have Power also to punish them, as the Law directs, which they did formerly definitively, but since so many Parliaments have been instituted, Appeals are admitted to the Parliament from their Sentence, The District over which they have the Care is called a Bailliage, Provostie or Seneschausee.

There are also in some Places Officers call'd Intendants; these are men of the Law, whom the King sends into the Provinces or Generalities to give Orders in extraordinary Affairs. There are Intendants de la Justice, Police and Finance. They are also called Commissioners of Paris for executing the King's Orders in such or such a Generality.

There are a multitude of other Courts and Officers in France, too many to describe here; what is said is enough to give the Reader a general Idea of the Government, and to explain the Terms of Generality, Election, &c. which often occur in the ensuing Description of the Kingdom.

The TAXES paid by the Common People of France are very large. Those that are constant, besides the extraordinary ones in time of War, are of Six sorts, viz. 1. Tailles, a Sum yearly paid by every Householder, according to his Substance, and Family; granted by the Three Estates. 2. Taillons, paid by the same Persons as the Taille, and amounts to about one third of that; this was first imposed by Henry II. 1549. 3. Subsistence-Money, a Duty imposed by this present King for the Subsistence of the Soldiers in Winter, for which the Subject is excused from Free Quarter: It is paid in the same manner as the other two. These Taxes are paid by the Third Estate only, the Nobility and Clergy being exempt. 4. The Customs upon merchandise imported and exported. The Gabel, or Excise upon Salt, which is very high, and the People forc'd to take a certain quantity yearly, proportionate to their Family, and pay the Duty whether they can consume it or no. 6. Smaller Excises, Farms and other Demesns of the Crown, to the number of 26; all which raise a vast Sum.

The whole Revenue of the King of France in time of Peace hath been computed to amount to more than 150 Millions of Livres, or 11 Millions and 375 thousand Pounds Sterling per Annum.

The Accounts in France are kept in Crowns, Livres, Solz and Deniers; 12 Deniers make a Sol or Sou, 20 Solz a Livre or Florin, 3 Livres or 60 Solz make a Crown. A French Crown is of equal Value with Four Shillings and six Pence English; an English Crown yields in France 65 Solz; a Pound Sterling yields 13 Livres, and an English Guinea piece of Gold 14 Livres. The other Monies of France are a Double, which is two Deniers; a Liard, the fourth part of a Sol, Pieces of $3\frac{1}{2}$ and 5 Solz, the quarter and the half Crown. the two Livre piece. And of Gold, the Crown, value 5 Livres 14 Solz, Lys de Or value 7 Livres 10 Solz, the half Louis, the whole Louis d' Or, value 11 Livres, double Louis, &c.

S E C T. VI.

Of the Extents of the French Dominions, and the Acquisitions of the present King.

Great part of the present Dominions of this Monarchy, were formerly divided among many Princes. Normandy, Acquitain and Anjou, were for some time subject to the Kings of England. Bretagne was subject to its own Dukes, till A. D. 1484. The Dukes of Burgundy were powerful Princes for many Ages, and Lords of great part of the Netherlands, besides the Burgundies, till A. D. 1476, Charles the warlike, being kill'd in Battel by the Switzers, Lewis XI. seized the Dutchy of Burgundy: But that Family enjoyed the Earldom till the present King took it from the King of Spain, A. D. 1668. but being obliged to restore it at the Treaty of Aix la Chapelle, he retook it, A. D. 1674. and both the Burgundies are now reckoned part of France.

Many little Principalities and Lordships were made Hereditary to certain Families, by Hugh Capet, which in time fell again to the Crown, as will be seen in the ensuing Description; and when the present King came to the Crown, he was in a manner the only Sovereign, very few of those Princes then remaining, and those that were, in time he found means to deprive of their Royalties, and render himself absolute, and sole Monarch of France.

Besides which, he hath encroached upon his Neighbours on every side, and hath made himself Master of the Province of Artois, great part of the Provinces of Flanders, Hainault, and Alsacia, the County of Burgundy abovementioned, &c. except what are restored by the late Treaty at Riswick.

But the Reader may be better informed herein by the following Accounts of the Treaties of the Pyrenees, Aix la Chapelle; Nimeguen and Riswick, viz.

By the Peace concluded in the Island of Pheasants, near the Pyrenean Mountains, A. D. 1659, these Towns were granted to the French King, viz. In Artois, Arras, Hesden, Bapaume, Bethune, Lilars, Lens County of St. Pol, Terouane, and all the Bailiwicks and Castleries of Artois, except St. Omer, Aire, and their Dependencies; also Renty, if in the dependance of Aire, else not. In Flanders; Graveline, Pas, Fort St. Philip, with the Sluce, Hannuin, Bourburg, St. Venant. In Hainault; Landrecy and Quefnoy, with all their Bailiwicks and dependencies, Marienburg and Philipville, in Exchange for la Bassée and St. Winoburgh, Avenne. In Luxemburg; Thionville, Montmidi, and Damvilliers the Provostships of Ivoy, Chavancy, Morville, Recroy le Chatelet, and Linchamp: So much of the Counties of Roussillon, Conflent, and Cataluna, as lie on this Side the Pyrenees; all the rest of those Counties, together with the Principality of Cataluna, being restored to the Spaniards. The Upper and Lower Alsacia; Sunsgau, the County of Ferret and Brisac, with its Dependencies, were also granted to the French.

The Duke of Lorraine by this Treaty was restored to his Dominions, except Mionize. But the French King prevail'd upon him to make a Donation of them to him at his Death; by the Pretence whereof, when that Duke died, A. 1675. the French entered upon them, and kept out his Nephew the late Duke of Lorraine. Afterwards at the Treaty of Nimeguen, at the Instance of the Emperor, the Dutchy of Lorraine was offer'd to be restor'd to him, but with Condition, That the French King still keep the City of Nancy and its Jurisdiction, and also have four Roads cross his Country, of half a League in breadth from Nancy, viz. Into Alsace; to Vesout in the Franche Comte, to Metz, and to St. Dizier in Champagne, together with the Sovereignty of all the Boroughs and Villages which lie in the said Roads of half a League's breadth; as also the Provostship of Lengui, and its Dependencies, for which he was to exchange another Provostship of like Value; by which means the French retain'd half Lorraine, besides all the Dutchy of Bar, the County of Clermont, and other Dominions of that Prince. But these Conditions were look'd upon by the young Duke as too hard, especially since the French King had promis'd him his whole Country; so that after much time in endeavouring to obtain better Terms, the Peace was concluded without including him; and the French possessed the whole Country, till the late Treaty of Ryswick, whereby the present Duke was restor'd to the Royalty of his Ancestors: As is more particularly express'd here-under in the Account of that Treaty.

By the Peace of Aix la Chapelle, or Aken, in the Dutchy of Fuliers in Germany, A. D. 1668, it was agreed,

That the French King should enjoy the Fortresses of Charleroy, the Towns of Binch, Aeth, Doway, Tournay, Oudenard, Lisle, Armentiers, Courtray, Bergues and Furnes, and the whole Extent of their Territories, with the entire Sovereignty thereof.

By the Peace concluded at Nimeguen with the King of Spain, A. 1678, the Franche Comte, or County of Burgundy, with all the Towns and Places thereon depending, was granted to the French King; as also the Towns of Valencienres and Bouchain, with their Dependencies; the Town and County of Cambrai, Air, St. Omer, Menin, Comde, and Ypres, and their Dependencies; Werwick and Werneton on the Lys; Peperingben, Basilleul, Mont Cassel, Bavay, and Meuleux, with their Dependencies; And also the Town of Dinant.

And by the same Treaty the French restored these Towns, viz.

Charleroy, Ghent, Oudenard, Courtray, Binch, Aeth, St. Ghislain, Lewe, Limburgh, and its Dutchy; the County of Waes, and all the Dependencies of every of them in the Netherlands; and Puicerda in Cerdaigne, on the Frontiers of Catalonia, to the Spaniards. And to the Dutch, Mastricht.

And by the Treaty with the Emperor at the same Place, A. 1679,

The Town and Citadel of Friburgh in Brissgau, with the Villages of Lehn, Marhausen, and Kirkzart, and their Liberties, as also a Passage from Brisac to Friburgh, were granted to the French; and in return, Philipsburgh was restored to the Bishop of Spiers.

Soon after this Peace, viz. A. 1680, the French took Strasbourg, which they still hold, together with the greatest part of its Bishoprick.

And A. 1684, they took the City of Luxembourg, and a great part of that Dutchy.

And once more this Monarch for his Glory, kindled the Flame of War in Europe, which he began by the Siege of Philipsburgh in the Month of September, 1688, and took it on the first of November following. And afterwards his Armies ravag'd and destroy'd the Palatinate, took and destroy'd the Cities of Heidelberg, Spiers and Wormes. And in the Netherlands they took the Cities of Mons and Namur, and the Fortresses of Charleroy: And in Savoy, Nissa, Suse, Montmellian, and Villa Franca. In Catalonia, Barcelona, &c. But Namur was retaken by the Confederate Army, under the Conduct of his Majesty King William, and all the rest were restored, together with many other Cities and Places of Consequence, by the Peace concluded at Ryswick in Holland, September 10, 1697; wherein it was agreed,

That to the Empire shall be restored all Places possessed by the French in Germany, out of Alsacia, without Demolition, and with the Artillery in them when taken: Particularly, Triers and Spiers with all their Dependencies. The Palatinate to be restored, and the Dutchess of Orleans to receive two hundred thousand French Livres per annum till her Pretensions be adjusted. Friburgh, Brisac, Philipsburgh, to be restored with all their Dependencies, Fortifications, and Artillery. Dinant to be restored, as when taken, to the Bishop of Liege. Sponheim, Veldents, and Deux-Ponts, with the Artillery, to the King of Sweden. Montbeliard to the Family of Wirtemburgh. The Fort of Kiel restored, and those of Pille, Hummingen with the Bridge, Montroyal, Kembourgh, and Ebernbourgh demolished. Trarbach restored, but dismantled.

On the other side, Strasbourg was absolutely surrendered to France.

To the Duke of Lorraine was restored all the Estates which his Uncle was possessed of in the Year 1670, with these Exceptions, Sar Louis with half a League round it to remain to France, as also the City Longui with its Dependencies. Nancy and the Castles of Bischo and Hombourg, to be dismantled: And a Passage permitted to the King of France's Soldiers thro' Lorraine, in the common Road, paying for what they take, and observing strict Discipline.

To Spain was restored Barcelona, Gironne, Roses, Belver, and every Place taken by the French in Catalonia. Luxembourg with its Fortifications, together with the whole Dutchy, and the County of Chiny. Charleroy and Mons with the Fortifications. Aeth with all its Dependencies, except some few Boroughs. Courtray with all its Dependencies and Artillery. And in general all Places taken by the French since the Treaty of Nimeguen in all the Provinces of the Netherlands are restored.

The French have also Dominions in America; as, Canada, or New-France, upon the Continent; also Colonies in New-found-land, Martinico, St. Christopher's, and other Islands, &c.

CHAP. II.

NORMANDY, Normania.

THIS Province was under the Romans, part of the Lugdunensis in Gallia Cæsarica; and when reduc'd by the French, was part of their Kingdom called Neustria; to which also Picardy, Champagne, and part of the Belgium belonged. But this part was ravish'd from them by some of those Northern People, that for many years infested all the Coasts hereabouts, and in the Reign of Charles the Simple, forced him to grant it to them: After which it was called NORMANDY, and Govern'd by its own Dukes descending from Rollo, who were powerful Princes, and often maintained Wars with the King of France. Of these William, surnamed the Bastard, invaded England, upon a right he pretended to that Crown after the Death of Edward the Confessor; and by his Valour defeated Harold who had Usurped the Crown; and by his prudent Management obtained the Government, and Reigned Twenty years King of England. Afterwards this Province was part of the English Dominions for several Ages, the History whereof is too long for this place. At present it is one of the most important Governments of France, affording a large Revenue to the Prince by reason of its situation on the Sea-coasts, and the fruitfulness of its Soil.

It is bounded on the North and West by the British Chænel, on the East by the Isle of France, and on the South by Perche and Maine, being extended from East to West for the space of about 160 Miles, viz. from Aumale to the Coasts of Constantin; and about 70 Miles from South to North. The Country abounds in good Pastures, and is extremely fertile in Corn and Flax and divers sorts of Fruits, affording great Quantities of Canvass, Cyder, and Beer, but little Wine. There are also Mines of Iron, together with some of Copper and other Metals. Moreover, a considerable Traffick is established in these parts, for Corn, Timber, Coal, Hay, Cattle, and Herbs proper for Dying, as Madder, Woad, &c. Within the Territories of this Government are contained 100 Cities and Towns, 150 large Burghs, and 120 Forests; as also, one Archbishoprick, 6 Suffragan Bishopricks, one University, and one Court of Parliament. It is water'd with 12 principal Rivers, viz. the Seine, Eure, Bresle, Toque, Dive, Orne, Vire, Selune, See, Soule, Ozre, and Eu.

Normandy is usually divided into the Upper and Lower, the former comprehending four Bailliages, viz. those of Rouen, Eureux, Caux, Gisors. And the Lower Three, namely those of Caen, Alençon, and Contance. But we shall distinguish this Province into the Seven Diocesses, which are of Rouen, Lysieux, Bayeux, Contance, Auranches, Seez, and Eureux. The four first are situated on the Coasts of the English Chænel, in passing from East to West; the three other lie to the South of these, and are seen in returning from West to East; according to the order of the ensuing Table.

ROUEN or ROAN, Rotomagus or Rothomagus the Metropolis of the Province, and Seat of an Archbishop, as also of a Court of Parliament, is seated on the North-side of the River Seine, in a valley environ'd with Hills and covered with Woods. It is a very considerable City, both on the Account of the Wealth of its Inhabitants and its Largeness, being extended for the space of seven Miles in compass. The Eastern-side is water'd with divers Rivulets, which passing through the Town cleanse the Streets, and after having turn'd a great Number of Water-mills fall into the Seine: Over that River was erected a most stately Stone-bridge consisting of 13 Arches, but it is now ruined, and another of Boats of very artificial Structure, built near it, reaching 270 Paces in length; it rises with the Tide, and is paved like a Street. The City is defended with an old Castle on the Seine but that which stood on the adjacent Hill of St. Catharine, is now utterly ruin'd. It hath also good Walls, (in which are 16 Gates) large Ditches, Bulwarks, and Ramparts; It is enlarged with six very fair Suburbs, and hath in it 13 Marker-places, 136 Fountains, and 35 Parish-Churches, and adorn'd with many noble Piles of Building; and among others the Cathedral Church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, the Quire whereof is lined round about with Copper: It hath Three Towers of a vast height, particularly that of Reuce, and that of the Pyramid; the Spire of which Steeple only (being made of Wood and cover'd with gilt Lead) hath 200 Steps, and the whole Edifice above 600. The great Bell in it, called George d'Amboise, is 13 Foot high, and weighs 40000 pound: On the great Gate is a Triumphal Arch in Honour of King Henry IV. with Emblems of his Conquest over the Holy League: The Body of the Church is supported by 21 Pillars, in which, and in the Chapels, are to be seen the magnificent Tombs of Cardinal d'Amboise, and of the Ancient Dukes and Archbishops; as also, the Monument of John Duke of Bedford, who was Regent of France under our King Henry VI. The other remarkable Buildings are, the Convent of the Cordeliers, the Church of the Jesuits, the old Palace or Castle, the Church and Abbey of St. Ouen, and the Palace of the Parliament, which are very beautiful Structures. Also, the Archbishop's Palace, called Gaillon, is a fair Building, adorn'd with fine Paintings and pleasant Gardens.

Rouen hath suffered many Calamities and Revolutions, it hath been almost entirely burnt at 13 or 14 several times; was taken by the Normans, A. C. 841. the English made themselves Masters thereof in 1418 and in 1449. it was surrender'd to the French King Charles VII. Afterwards it was storm'd and taken by the French Protestants, and retaken and pillaged under Charles IX. Anno 1562. Anthony of Bourbon, King

King of Navarre, received a mortal Wound before it, but his Son Henry IV. took it in 1594, King William I. surnamed the Conqueror died here. It is distant 30 Miles from Eureux, to the North; 30 from Diepe to the South; near 40 from Beauvais to the West; 55 from Amiens to the South-west, 64 from Paris to the North-west, and 52 from Havre de Grace.

Pont de L'arche, Pons Arcis, or Pons Arcuensis, is a strong place seated a little below the confluence of the Rivers Seine and the Eure, and 10 Miles above Rouen to the South toward Eureux. It is strengthen'd with a Castle, and hath a fair Stone-bridge over the Seine built by King Charles the Bald. This was the first Town that surrender'd it self to Henry IV. after his Accession to the Crown, in 1589. It is a place of Importance, and hath a particular Governour.

Gisors, Gisrium, Casfortium, aut Casfortium, stands on the Banks of the River Esle, which divides Normandy from the Isle of France, and is fenced with a Fort now half ruin'd; it is the Capital of a Bailliage, and is distant 40 Miles from Paris to the North-west, 30 from Rouen to the East.

In the Territory of the ROU MOIS are situated some small Towns and Villages, particularly Quiellebeuf, at the Mouth of the River Seine, and 30 Miles from Rouen to the West, and Montfort; but neither of these are places very considerable.

The Country of CAUX lies to the North part of the Vexin Normand, taking up the North East part of Normandy on the North side of the Seine, and including a Bailliage of Parliament, together with these principal Towns, viz.

Diepe.
Havre de Grace.
Caudebec.

} St. Valery.

Diepe, Deppa, and Depa, is a noted Sea-port Town on the Shore of the British Sea, at the distance of 30 Miles from Rouen to the North, and 42 from Havre de Grace to the North East. It is seated at the foot of the Mountains, and at the Mouth of the River Arques, which falling into the Sea makes the Haven; it is fortified with Bulwarks to the Sea, with a Fortrefs at the Suburb called Pollet, and a Castle; which, together with the craggy Mountains that lie on the South make it a place of good strength; and as such it was chosen by King Henry IV. for his Head Quarters when he was opposed by the League at his Accession to the Crown. The Town is reasonably large and well built, and is inhabited by Sea-faring Men, who are reckon'd very expert in Maritime-Affairs: Mechanics, that make curious Works in Ivory, and Merchants, who make considerable Traffick to foreign Parts, especially Newfoundland in America. Its Inhabitants were mostly Protestants till the late Persecution. The Haven is narrow but very long, and will receive Ships of great Burthen; but by reason of its straits, is of difficult Access. This Town hath been often taken and retaken in the Wars between the French and English. And in the year 1694. was almost totally destroyed by the Bombs that were shot into it from the English Fleet commanded by the Lord Berkely.

Havre de Grace, Portus Gratia, is a strong Scaport Town at the Mouth of the Seine, 40 Miles from Rouen to the West, 40 from Caen to the North East, and 20 from Lisieux to the North. It is a pleasant and well-built Town, and a place of good Trade, several Merchants inhabiting here that Trade to Newfound- land and other places. Francis I. and Henry II. fortified this Town to defend it from the Incursions of the English; to which Lewis XIII. added a Citadel, which is flanked with Four Royal Bastions. In the Reign of Charles IX. it was seized by the Protestants, and by them delivered over to Queen Elizabeth in 1562. for the Assistance she gave them. But the next Year it was vigorously besieged by the French, and as courageously defended by the English under the Earl of Warwick; but by reason of a Pestilence in the Town, they were forced to surrender on the 17th of July 1563. and returned home. This Town also was almost wholly destroyed by the Fire of the English Bombs the same year, 1694.

Havfleur, a small Sea-port Town, stands also at the Mouth of the Seine, five Miles from Havre de Grace to the East. It was once a considerable Port, but Havre de Grace being found more convenient, that is now neglected.

E. 20 from Abbeville to the South, and 23 from Beauvais to the North.

Near Caudebec stands the Village Tvetot, which hath the Title of a Principality, and as some say, formerly a Kingdom. Longueville 10 Miles South from Diepe, and Estourville 15 Miles from Longueville gave the Titles of Duke to two Peers of France, but otherwise not considerable.

The County of BRAY lies also on the right side of the River Seine, and contains these Towns, viz.

of 15 Miles from the Coasts of the British Chanel to the South, 46 from Rouen to the West, and 35 from Caen to the East. The Cathedral Church is dedicated to St. Peter. D.* 511. as did also Theobald at the Third Council of Orleans in 538.

It is a very ancient City, dignified with the Title of a County, Bailliage, and Episcopal See; and its Bishop presides in the General Assemblies of the Clergy of the Province, during the Absence of the Archbishop of Rouen. The Cathedral Church Dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is extremely Magnificent, and Beautified with two high Spire-Steeple, besides a stately Tower. The City is divided into the Upper, and the Lower, or the Suburbs of St. John; whereto are joyned those of St. George and St. Patrick. It hath been often Pillag'd and Ruin'd in the X and XI Centuries, by the Incurfions of the Normans, and other barbarous Nations.

CAEN, Cadmus, or Cadomum, is a large and well built City in the lower Normandy, having received its Name (according to the Opinion of some Authors) from Caius Cesar, as the Latin word Cadomus, Caii Domus, seems to import, in regard this Emperor resided here for some time, whilst he made preparations to pass into Britain. It is situated on the River Orne, and divided by its streams into the upper and lower Towns, between which there is a Communication, by the means of the Bridges of St. James and St. Peter, on the latter whereof is erected a stately Town-House, adorn'd with four large Towers. Granville. } Valogne.
Carentain.

Coutance, or Constance, Castra Constantia, or Consedia, the Metropolis of the Country called from thence Le Coutantin, is a Bailliage, a Presidial, and the See of a Bishop Suffragan to Rouen, seated on the River Burd, at the distance of 7 miles from the Sea over against the Isle of Jersey to the East; and 52 miles from Caen to the West. The Aqueducts found in the Adjacent Territories of this City are a sufficient Mark of its Antiquity; and the pleasant Meadows watered with a great number of Brooks, with which it is encompassed, render its Situation very delightful. It is pretty large and populous, and adorn'd with many stately Edifices, particularly the Cathedral Church, the Churches of St. Peter and St. Nicholas, divers Monasteries, and a College Founded by John Michael, a Canon of this Diocess. King Lewis XI. caused the Walls of Coutance to be demolish'd, because the Inhabitants had declared in favour of Prince Charles his Brother; and under the same Reign it was exposed to the Incurfions of the Britons. It suffered much likewise during the English Wars; and was taken by the French Protestants, A. D. 1562.

Granville, Grandivilla, or Magnavilla, a good Seaport, stands partly on a Rock, partly in a plain, on the Sea-Coasts, 6 Leagues from the Island of Jersey; as also 16 miles from Coutance, to the South.

Carentan, Carentenium, is built in a Marshy Ground on the side of the River Ourve, where it receives the Carentan or Carente, being distant 25 miles from Bayeux, to the W. 20 from Coutance to the N. and only 3 from the Sea; insomuch, that the Vessels of the largest size arrive there at high Tides. It hath large Suburbs, a strong Castle, and firm Walls, and environed with Ditches full of Water. This Town bears the Title of a County, and hath been Subject to divers Revolutions in the preceeding Age.

Cherbourg, Caroburgus, or Cesaris Burgus, is seated on the Sea-coasts between the Cape La Hogue and Barfleur, and hath a very capacious Harbour, at the distance of 32 miles from Coutance to the N. and 24 from Carentan to the N. W. In this place was formerly made admirable Glass, which for clearness and beauty even excell'd that of Venice; but the Work-houses have been lately remov'd for certain reasons of State, to Auxerre in Burgundy, and these Glasses are polish'd in the Fauxbourg St. Antoine at Paris. The Town of Cherbourg was the last of the Province Province that remained to the English, and fell into the Hands of the French under Charles VII. in 1453. It is very strong by reason of its Situation, (the Sea flowing almost round it every Tide) and its Fortifications lately erected.

Valognes, Valonia, olim Alaune, is a small Town on the River Oue, in the Country of Contantin, being distant 10 miles from the Coasts of the British Sea, 14 from Ch. burgh, to the East, and 30 from Contance to the North.

Barfleur, a small Town on the Sea-shoar, 10 miles from Valognes to the North. It was formerly the Landing place of our Kings that were masters of that Province. And hath of late been made known by a very signal Victory the English Fleet, commanded by Admiral Ruffel, obtained over that of France commanded by Tourville, May, 1692.

La Hogue, a small Sea Town on the Northwest point of Normandy, thence called Cape la Hogue, hath been made notable to Posterity by the bravery of the English Seamen, who after the above mentioned Victory in 1692, attack'd and burnt the French Admiral, call'd the Royal Sun, (a very glorious and large Ship) and twelve more of their best and largest Men of War; which had been run aground here to avoid the English Fleet, and the Cannon carried ashore and planted upon the Plat-forms for their defence; notwithstanding which the English under Sir Ralph Delaval, did in their Boats burn them all as abovesaid. This Cape is about 15 miles North-West from Cherbourg.

The Diocess of AURANCHES lies between those of Contance, Bayeux and Seez in the South west parts of the lower Normandy. Its most remarkable Towns are these.

Auranches Bish. } } Mortain.
Mont St. Michael. } } Pont Orson.

Auranches, Abriuncæ, olim Legedia and Ingena Abriuncaturum, stands upon a hill on the side of the River See, which a little below falls into the Sea, being distant 22 miles from Contance to the South, and 50 from Bayeux to the S. W. It is a place of very great Antiquity, and (as 'tis supposed) was inhabited by the Ambialites, a People mentioned by Cæsar in his Commentaries. Its extent is not very large, but it is however a Bailiwick and Vicounty, and hath in it besides the Cathedral, several Parish Churches, and Monasteries. It is well fortified with a strong Castle and other Bulwarks, Theodia and Albert, Cardinals and Legats of the See of Rome, held a Council or Assembly in this City by the special Order of Pope Alexander III. to take information concerning the Murderers of Thomas a Becket Archbishop of Canterbury; and Henry II. King of England was thereupon oblig'd to clear himself by an Oath from the Accusations laid to his charge. The Bishoprick was erected by Clovis the Great.

Mont St. Michael, Mons Sancti Michaelis in periculo Maris, is a Town, together with a famous Abby, defended by a strong Castle, built at the foot of a Rock, the Seat of certain Hermits. This Rock stands a League from the main Land in the midst of a large sandy Shoar, or Strand, which is covered with the Sea-water at high tide. There goes a fabulous Story that St. Michael the Arch-Angel appeared A. D. 708 to Albert Bishop of Auranche, admonishing him to cause a Church to be erected on the top of this Rock, and consecrated to his Name, whose Orders were soon put in execution by the Reverend Prelate, and Augustin Bishop of the same Diocess in the beginning of the VIII. Century, constituted Canons to Officers therein; afterwards, viz. in 966 Richard I. Duke of Normandy, founded an Abby of the Benedictine Order; and his Son Richard the II. surnamed the Undaunted, finished the Church in 1026. This place is famous for the frequent resort of Pilgrims, and on the account of the great quantities of Salt extracted out of the Sands that are impregnated with Sea-water.

Mortain, Moritanium is seated near the River Aidee, on the Frontiers of the Province of Mayne, being about 7 miles distant from thence, and 20 from Auranches to the East. This Town is the Seat of a Bailiff, and enjoys the Title of a County or Earldom which Henry I. King of England and Duke of Normandy, granted to his Nephew Stephen of Blois, who obtain'd also that of Bolen, by his Marriage with Maud the Daughter of Eustace Earl of Bolen, and was afterwards King of England.

Pont-Orson, Pons Ursonis, stands on the Frontiers of Britaigne, near the mouth of the River Covesnon, which a little below dischargeth it self into the Sea, 16 miles from Auranches to the South-west.

The Diocess of SEEZ is extended between those of Auranches, Bayeux and Lysieux, toward the Southern part of Normandy, and contains these principal Towns, viz.

Seez Bish. } } Falaize,
Alencon, } } Argentan.

Seez, Sagium, olim Sessui and Vagoricum Sessuorum, seated on the River Orne, near its Source, is but an ordinary built City, although dignified with the Title of an Episcopal See, which (as some Authors say) was translated hither from Oximum or Hiesmes, an adjacent Town of great Antiquity, Seez is distant 64 miles from Rhoan to the S. W. 37 from Lysieux to the S. 70 from Auranches to the E. and 12 from the Frontiers of Mayne.

Alencon, Alenconium, or Alentia, is pleasantly seated on the River Sarte, in a fruitful Plain between the Forests of Escours and Perseigne, at the distance of 13 miles from Seez to the S. W. and 66 from Auranches to the E. It is a very fair and large City, having long since enjoy'd the Title of an Earldom, which was erected into a Dutchy by Charles VI. 1414. and hath been often conferr'd on the Royal Progeny of France: In the principal Church dedicated to the Virgin Mary, are to be seen the Tombs of the Dukes of Alencon, and not far from thence a stately Bridge erected over the Sarte, where it intermixeth its Waters with those of the Briane and forms a small Island in the Town, whereon stands the Convent of St. Claire. This City hath been often taken by different Parties, and suffered much damage during the Civil Wars of France.

Falaize, Falesia, or Falefa, a small Town of the Lower Normandy, took its name from the Rocks that environ it, and is situated on the little River Anne, at the distance of 18 miles from Caen to the South, and 34 from Seez to the North West. The first Dukes of Normandy chose it for their Palace in the time of Peace, and Fortrefs during the Wars. Here is a strong Castle built upon a Rock. It was the last place which the English subdued in this Province and was by them exceeding well fortified; and the last in like manner that surrendred to Charles VII. in 1430. The Suburbs called La Guibray, are famous for the Fairs that have been held there in the Month of August, ever since the Reign of William the Conqueror. The Town is encompassed with large Moats Moats and two Ponds, one of which can never be dried up; and not far from thence stands Mount Aricen, whence Birds of Prey are often taken, and sometimes Eagles.

Argentum, Argentum, Argentum, Argentum, Argentum, is a very near Town on the River Orne, distant about 10 miles from Falaise to the S. E. 12 from Serz to N. W. and 20 from Alencon to the North.

The Diocels of EURÉUX lies between those of Serz, Roan, and Lysieux, and is to the South East part of Normandy. The most considerable Towns whereof are these, viz.

Eureux, Bish. } Bugles.
Beaumont le Roger. } Vernon.
Brezeuil.

Eureux, Ebroicum, olim Ebroica, and Mediolanum Ebroicisum, is seated in a very fertile Plain in the upper Normandy, and on the side of the Rivulet Iton, which a little below falls into the Eure, being distant 30 miles from Roan to the S. 48 from Serz to the E. and 54 from Paris to the W. It is a very ancient City; and an Episcopal See hath been long since establish'd therein; besides a Bailiage and a Court Presidial. It contains a great number of Churches and Monasteries, more especially the Cathedral, adorn'd with twelve large Towers, and the Abbies of S. Thurin and S. Saviour. This City hath been formerly subject to the Jurisdiction of its own Counts or Earls, Princes of the Royal Blood, and other Potent Lords, from whom were descended Walter and Robert D' Eureux, Earls of Essex in England, &c.

Beaumont le Roger, Bellmontium Rogerij, stands on a rising ground, 15 miles from Eureux to the N. W. towards Lysieux, and is water'd by the River Rille. This Town bears the Title of a County or Earldom, and hath been govern'd by very noble Lords, of whom Earl Roger gave his a name to it, and caus'd it to be enlarged and beautified with a great many fair Buildings; since when it has been well fortified.

Brezeuil, Bretolium and Britolium, stands near the River Iton, about 12 miles from Eureux to the West. Henry II. King of England and Duke of Normandy, gave this Town to Robert de Montford; and his Sister Amicia sold it to the French King Philip the August, A. D. 1210. Afterward it devolv'd as an Inheritance on Charles King of Navarre, who exchange'd it for some other Possessions with Charles VII. in 1416.

Vernon, Vernonium, and Verno, is seated on the River Seyne, over which is erected a Stone-bridge, now half demolish'd; distant 26 miles from Roan to the South, and 16 from Eureux to the North-east.

For the Government of this Province the King appoints a Governour or Commander in general, and under him, two Lieutenant-Generals; besides which he hath a Lieutenant in every one of the seven Bailiwicks, and particular Governours in all the chief Towns, viz. In Roan, Pont de l'Arche, Diep and the Fort of Pollet, Fecan, Honfleur, Pont-Eveque, Caen, Cherbourg, Carentan and the Bridge Pouvre, Contance, Granville, Mont St. Michael, Falaise, Argentan, Alencon, Havre de Grace, Monticivillers and Honfleur.

C H A P. III.

P I C A R D Y, Picardia.

PICARDY was part of the ancient Gallia Belgica, and inhabited by Suessiones, &c. But the Original of its present Name, although Modern, is difficult to find out; there is little Reason to believe that it was deriv'd from certain Picards of Bohemia, who were declared Hereticks; nor from a Greek Word, the Signification whereof is conformable to the hasty and pettish Humour of the Inhabitants.

This Province is the most Northern of all France, and is extended along the Banks of the British Channel from Calais in a narrow Tract of Land to the River Brele, which separates it from Normandy; from thence being much wider, it goes directly West for near 110 Miles, where it is bounded by the Northern Part of Champagne. Its whole Length may be reckon'd 140 Miles, for from Calais to Abbeville is about 54 Miles, and from thence to the Borders of Champagne is about 90 Miles; but then the Breadth is not answerable, for in the broadest Part it is not above 35 Miles, and in the Bolonnois not above 15 Miles broad. On the South is bounded by the Isle of France, and on the North by Artois and Hainault.

Picardy is esteem'd one of the most considerable Provinces of the Kingdom, and is remarkable on account of the most ancient Nobility of the Realm, who derive their Original from thence, besides a great Number of valiant Soldiers and experienc'd Commanders; the People are very Generous, Courteous, Civil, and Courageous, yet somewhat too much enclined to Anger and Voluptuousness. The Soil is extremely fertil in Corn and diverse sorts of Fruits, which hath given Occasion to a Saying among the French, That Picardy is the Granary and Magazine of Paris; but this Country affords very little Wine. Its principal River is the Oise, which receives into its Chanel the Streams of the Serre, the Somme, the Authie and Canche. The two former of these flow towards the East, and the three others towards the West, until they discharge themselves into the British Chanel, near the Territories of Calais. It is observed, That the Waters of the Somme never freeze nor diminish, as do those of the other neighbouring Rivers.

For the Administration of Justice, here are many Bailiages, Presidials, and other Courts of Judicature that depend on the Jurisdiction of the Parliament of Paris. The Towns are govern'd by Mayors and Sheriffs; besides the General Governor, there are Eighteen particular Ones. The Bishopricks in Picardy are Four, which are subject to the Metropolitane See of Rheims. This Province was never alienated from the Demesnes of the Crown, and is usually divided into three Parts, viz. The Upper Picardy, the Middle, and the Lower, according to the following Table.

Picardy is divided into three Parts.	The Upper on the Oise in 3 Parts,	The Dutchy of Tierache , Laonnois, Soissonnois.	These two last are annex'd to the Isle of France .
	The Middle on the Somme , in 3	Vermandois , The Country of Santerre or Sangters , Amiennois .
	The Lower on the Sea- coasts, in 3	Ponthieu , Beaulonnois , The recover'd Countries.

The Dutchy of TIERACHE, Tieracheia, is the most Eastern Part of Picardy, and lies between Hainault, Champagne, Vermandois, and Laonnois, and includes within its Precincts these remarkable Towns, viz.

Guise,	}	La Chapelle,
La Fere,		Ribermont,
Vervins,		Moncornet,
Marle,		Aubenton.

Guise, Guisia, and Guisium Castrum, seated on the River Oise, towards the Confines of Hainault, is well fortified with a Castle and other strong Ramparts, and was strong enough to oppose the Spaniards, who besieged it in the Year 1650. It is distant 80 Miles from Paris, to the North-east, 48 from Amiens to the East, and 25 from Cambrai to the South-east. This Town at first bore the Title of an Earldom only, enjoy'd by the younger House of Lorraine; till A. D. 528, Claude, the younger Son of Rene, Duke of Lorraine, was created Duke of Guise, by Francis I. whose Grandson, Henry Duke of Guise, made himself Head of the Holy League, which under the Pretence of Religion and Extirpation of Heresie, as they call'd Protestantcy, fomented Sedition, and at length took up Arms, and maintain'd a Rebellion against Henry III. and Henry IV. making France a Scene of War and Bloodshed for many Years; till at last Henry IV. by his victorious Arms, brought them to Submission, and restored the Peace of his Country.

La Fere, Fara, is situated also on the Oise, near the Borders of the Isle of France, at the Distance of 20 Miles from Guise to the South, and 15 from Laon to the West. It is a strong Place, seated in a marshy Ground, and defended by a strong Castle, which stands between the two Suburbs of St. Firmin and the Virgin Mary, and deep Trenches full of Water, which renders the Place almost inaccessible; by which means it hath been able to resist diverse Sieges. However, the Spaniards made themselves Masters of it during the civil Wars of France, in the end of the XVIth Century. But Henry IV. regained it in the Month of May, 1597.

Vervins, Vervineum, stands on the Banks of the Rivulet Serre, in the midst between Chapelle to the North, and Marle to the South, at the Distance of 8 Miles from both these Towns; as many from the Frontiers of Compagne to the West, and 15 Miles from Guise to the East. This Town is more especially Famous for a Treaty of Peace concluded therein between Henry IV. King of France, and Philip II. King of Spain, on the 2d Day of May, 1598.

La Chapelle, is a Fortrefs near the Confines of Hainault, and is distant about 3 Miles from the Oise, 15 Miles from Landreches to the South-east, and 15 from Guise to the North-east. It was built in the last Age, on purpose to restrain the Incursions of the Flemings, and hath been often taken and re-taken by the contending Parties.

The Countries of Laonnois and Soiffonnois, being taken from Picardy, and made part of the Isle of France, an Account shall be given of them in the Description of that Province.

The Country of VERMANDOIS, Ager Vermanduensis, lies between that of Tierache to the East, Santerre to the West, Cambresis to the North, and the Isle of France to the South, containing these chief Towns, viz.

St. Quintin,	}	Beaurevoir,
Ham,
La Caslelet,		Bechain.

St. Quintin, Quintinopolis, or Fanum Quintini, is seated on the rising Ground near the Source of the Somme, having the River on one side, and a steep Valley on the other, 15 Miles from Guise to the West, and 15 from la Fere to the North. It sprang up out of the Ruins of Augusta Vermanduorum, or Vermand, a small Village near it, and is now a considerable City, being very populous, and hath diverse sorts of Manufactures, especially Linen Cloth, made in it. The Collegiate Church of St. Quintin, is a noble Pile of Building; there are also other fair and well-built Churches, and a great Number of Monasteries. This Town being besieged by the Spaniards, in 1557, the Constable Montmorancy came to its Relief, and fought a fatal Battle with the Spaniards, wherein the Constable was taken Prisoner, together with the Dukes of Montpensier and Longueville, the Marechal de St. Andre, 10 Knights of the Order, and 300 Gentlemen; besides 600 Gentlemen and 3000 private Soldiers killed. Upon which the City was taken, but restored two Years after at the Peace concluded at Chateau Cambresis, a Town near the Frontiers of Hainault.

Ham, Hamum, is situated in a Plain, having the River on one side of it, and a Marsh on the other, and stands 12 Miles from St. Quintin to the West. Here is a Citadel which was built by Order of Lewis of Luxemburgh, or Constable de St. Paul, A. D. 1470. This Town was taken by the Spaniards, in 1595, after the Battle of St. Quintin; but the French took it again by Storm, and put the whole Garrison to the Sword.

SANTERRE, or Sangers, Ager Sancterriensis, or Sanguiterfa, is extended between Amienois on the West, and Vermandois on the East. The most considerable Towns of this Country are these, viz.

Peronne,	}	Nesle,
Mont-Didier,		Breteil,
Roye,		Chaumes,
Mercuil,		St. Just.

Peronne, Perona, seated on the River Somme, is a very strong Hold, and one of the Keys of the Kingdom of France: The Spaniards have often endeavoured to surprize it, but the Marshes that encompass it, and the Ramparts that defend it, rendering it exceeding strong, they have always been repulsed. It is distant 15 Miles from St. Quintin to the West, 20 from Cambrai to the South, and 75 from Paris to the North, on the Road to Dowry.

Mont-Didier, Mons Desiderii, or Mondiderium, is a large Town, built on a Hill in the midst between Amiens and Compeigne, at the Distance of 20 Miles from both, 24 Miles from Peronne to the South-west upon a small River which falls into the Aurenge, that falls into the Somme at Amiens. It is a strong Town, and has often resisted the Spaniards.

Nesle, Nizelle, is water'd with the Brook Ignen, which falls into the Somme. It stands upon the Road 15 Miles South from Peronne. It is a small Town that bears the Title of one of the most ancient Marquises of the Kingdom. Charles the Warlike, Duke of Burgundy, took this Place by Storm, in 1472, when it suffer'd all sorts of Outrages, by reason that the Inhabitants had killed a Herald at Arms, who had been sent to summon it and two of his Men, during a Truce which had been granted to them, insomuch that the Altars were not able to protect the miserable People that fled for Refuge into the Churches; and they that escaped the Fury of the Soldiers, were either hang'd, or had their Hands cut off.

Roye, stands on the River Aurenge, 10 Miles South from Nesle, more considerable for its Antiquity than present State.

Chaumes, Celviacum, situated in the midway between Amiens and St. Quintin, and 7 Miles from Peronne to the South-west, is a small Town, nevertheless dignified with the Title of a Duchy, &c.

AMIENOIS, Ager Ambianensis, lies between Artois to the North, Santerre to the East, Beauvaisis to the South, and the Country of Caux to the West. The Towns of chiefest Note are these, viz.

Amiens, Bish.	}	Pequigne,
Corbie,
Dourlans,		Centi.

Amiens, Ambienum, or Amviani, and Samarobrina, the Metropolis of Picardy, and the See of a Prelate Suffragan to the Archbishop of Rheims, is situated on the River Somme, forming a Triangle with Paris and Roan, being distant 66 Miles from Paris, and 55 from Roan, as also 30 from Arras to the South, and 24 from Peronne to the West. It is a Place of very great Antiquity, the Inhabitants having fought most resolutely against Julius Caesar, and even took up Arms against those of Rheims, only because they had too easily yielded to the Conqueror. Afterward Caesar erected a Magazine for his Army, and caused a general Assembly of the Gaulish People to be conven'd there. The Emperor Antoninus Pius enlarg'd it, as also did his Son Marcus Aurelius. The Emperors Constantine, Constant, Julian, Valentinian, Valens, Gratian, and Theodosius, chose Amiens for their Royal Seat in Gaul. However it suffered much Damage by the Incursions of the Alans, Vandals, and Normans, A. C. 925, and was almost entirely burnt, but soon after re-built. The City affords a very pleasant Prospect, by reason of the Largeness of the Streets, the Beauty of the Houses, and the Extent of the publick Places, of which there are two, where seven fair Streets meet; the Ramparts have two Rows of Trees planted on them, which form a delightful Walk. The River Somme enters into the City in three different Cannels thro' as many Bridges, and after having water'd several Parts of of the City, they are united at the other end of the Town, near St. Michael's Bridge. The Cathedral Church dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is one of the rarest and best adorn'd in France: The Pillars, Quire, Chapels, Tombs and Paintings are admirable, and more-especially the Gate flanked with two high Towers, on which are placed many Statues. King Philip VI. of Valois first fortified this City, which Lewis XI. much improv'd by additional Works, and Henry IV. built a strong Citadel after he had retaken it from the Spaniards, who had seized it by Stratagem in 1597. Queen Isabel of Bavaria establish'd a Parliament there, but that was afterwards remov'd. At present it has a Bailiwick, Presidial, Generality, and the Bishop, Vidame, and Bailly, are after the King, the three chief Lords.

Corbie, Corbie, is likewise seated on the River Somme, which there intermixeth its waters with those of the Omme, 7 miles above Amiens to the North-east, and 20 from Peronne to the West. It is a strong Place, but was however surpriz'd by the Spaniards in 1636. and recover'd by the French a little while after. This Town grew up out of an Abby which St. Berthilde Queen of France, the Wife of Clevis II. found-ed together with her Son Clovis III. A.C. 660. It is called O'l Corbie, to distinguish it from Corbie or Cerwey, a small Town of Westphalia in Germany.

Doulens, Duldium, is a very strong Town divided into the Upper and Lower, and Water'd by the River Aubie on the Frontiers of Artois, being distant 20 miles from Arras to the S. West, and 18 from Amiens to the North. It heretofore belong'd to the Counts of Ponthieu, but was annex'd to the Crown in 1559.

Conty, Contiacum, is a small Burg on the Rivulet of Celle, about 10 miles from Amiens to the South: dignified with the Title of a Principality, which hath given name to a Branch of the illustrious House of Bouillon. It was at first subject to the Dominion of its own Lords, afterwards transferr'd to the Family of Mailly, and at length devolv'd on that of the Prince of Bourbon.

The County and Earldom of PONTHEU, Comitatus Ponthienensis, was formerly an Inheritance of the younger Sons of France, and is extended along the Banks of the River Somme, which renders the Ground every where marshy. The principal Towns are these, viz.

Abbeville.	} Rue.
St. Riquier.		} Montcuil.
Pont de Remi,
Le Croitot,

Abbeville, Abbatia Vilia, or Abbevilla, is seated on the River Somme at the distance of 83 miles from Paris to the North, near 40 from Boulogn to the South, 25 from Amiens to the N. West, and 15 from the Coasts of the British Sea to the South East. It is sup-posed to have been founded by S. Riquier, or some of the Abbots his Successors, and that Hugh Duke of France built the Castle. It is at present the Capital City of the County of Ponthieu, and one of the strong-est and most important places of the Kingdom; it hath always enjoyed certain peculiar Privileges. Here is a Presidial Court, a Canonship, 12 Parishes, and many Religious Houses, among which that of S. Ulfran is most considerable. This City hath produc'd many great Men, and in this Age it hath given the World those Learned Geographers, Nich. Sanson, Will. Sanson his Son, Peter Duval, and Philippus Briccius.

S. Riquier, Centula, now S. Richarius, took its name from a certain Saint who was a Native of this Place; it is near the River Cardon, and is distant 5 miles from Abbeville to the East toward Deuons.

Montreuil, Montreuilon, or Montreuilham, stands on an Hill the Foot whereof is washed by the River Canche 8 miles from the Coasts of the British Sea, (from whence Boats of good burden come up to the Town,) 24 from Arras to the North, on the Road to Calis. Its name is derived from two ancient Abbeys of the Benedictin Order, viz. one called S. Savion for Monks, and the other S. Aspreverte for Nuns. The Town is distinguish'd into the Lower, built along the Banks of the River, and the Upper, which is separated from the former by a Wall. It is the Seat of a Bailly, and was united to the Crown with the County of Ponthieu; and is defended by strong Works and a good Citadel.

Cressy, Cressiacum, is a small Town or Burgh on the River Aubie on the Frontiers of Artois, and the Baili-ge of Abbeville, from whence it is distant 12 miles to the North, famous in our Annals on Account of the memorable Battle fought between the English and French in the time of Philip of Valois, on the 26 of August, 1346. wherein the English, under the Conduct of their Valiant King Edward III. and his heroick Son the black Prince, defeated the French with a very great slaughter, and obtain'd a most signal Victory; for 30000 of the French Infantry, and 1200 Horse were slain in the Field, among whom were John King of Bohemia, Charles Count of Alencon, the French King's Brother, and Lewis Count of Flanders, together with 12 other illustrious Counts and Earls, and even the whole Flower of the Nobles of France. There is also another Town of Cressy in the same Province of Picardy, on the River Somme in the County of Tierache, 8 miles from Laon to the North, and as many from Fere to the East, besides a third in Champaign, within three Leagues of Meaux, called Crecy or Cressy in Brie, &c.

BOULONNOIS. Comitatus Boloniensis, is extended between Artois, the County of Ponthieu, the recovered Country, and the strait of Calis, including these principal Towns, &c. viz,

Bolon, Cap. Bish.	} {	Estaples,
Moni-Hulin,		Ambleteuse.

Boulogn, or Bolen, Bolonia, Gessariacum, is situated on the Sea shore at the distance of 20 miles from the Town of Calais to the South, 10 Leagues from the nearest Coasts of England, 15 miles from Montreuil, and 36 from Abbeville to the North. It is divided into the Upper and Lower Town, the former being well fortified with a strong Citadel, and adorned with divers publick Places and Fountains, as also a Palace wherein Justice is administred; a Cathedral Church dedicated to the Virgin Mary, a Parochial Church of S. Joseph, an Abby of S. Vilemar, and some other Monasteries. The lower Town is not inhabited by so many Persons of Quality as the other, but is larger and more considerable for its Traffick, and extends along the Port at the mouth of the River Liane. The Harbour is not very commodious; in it formerly stood a Watch-Tower, called La Tour de Oudre, and by the English, The Old Man, said to be built by Julius Caesar, and repair'd by the Emperor Charles the Great; but being neglected, is now fallen down. The Episcopal See, under the Metropolitan of Rheims, was establish'd here by Pope Paul IV. after the destruction of Treouant. This City, together with the adjacent Territories, was formerly subject to the Dominion of its own Counts of great Reputation, from whom were descended Godfrey of Boulogn, and his Brother Baldwin, Kings of Jerusalem, but it was united to the Crown of France by King Philip II. the August, A. D. 1209. Belen was taken by King Henry VIII. King of England, in 1544. and afterward restor'd to the French King Henry II. by Treaty of Peace in the year 1550.

Mont Hulin, Mons-Hulini, is a Fortress standing on a Hill near the River Liane on the borders of Artois; it has a Citadel which was built against the Spaniards, and is distant 9 miles from Belen to the East.

Estaples, Staples, a large Burgh, is fence'd with an old Castle, and stands near the Sea a little above the mouth of the River Canche, 6 miles from Monstreuil, and 14 from Belen to the South.

Ambleuse, Ambleuse, is a Village having a small Port on the Coasts of the British Channel heretofore called Amstet; it is distant only 7 miles from Belen to the North, and about 12 from Calis to the South.

THE RECOVER'D COUNTRIES, Recuperata Ditio, is a small Tract not above 15 miles over, and lies to the North of Belen, containing these Towns, viz.

Calais, Guines. Ardres, Principality.

CALAIS or CALIS, Caletum, is seated in a marshy Plain on the Coasts of the British narrow Sea, called from thence the strait of Calais, at the distance of 9 miles from Gravelin, and the confines of Flanders to the West, 20 from Belen to the North, and about 8 leagues from Dover, and the nearest shoar of England to the South-west. It is reported that Baldwin IV. surnamed the bearded Count of Flanders, first built the Port, and that Philip Count of Belen caus'd the Town to be encompass'd with Walls, which before was only a simple Burgh. However, it is at present a considerable Mart and a place of strength, its Fortifications consisting of 9 Royal Bastions, besides those of the Citadel, and many other Out works, all lined with Stone; being also encompass'd with a very large and deep Ditch, into which falls the River Hames, as well as a great number of other Brooks, after having pass'd through the adjacent Fens, with which it is surrounded, there being only one passage to the Town over a Causey, commonly called the Bridge of Nieuilly, and none can enter without the Permission of the Garrison of the Ricelank into the Port, which is divided into two parts; one whereof is named Cap de Grey, the other is larger and shut up between two Moles built of Stone. The Town is extended in form of a Triangle, with a Castle: The most remarkable things in it are two stately Towers; the Altar of the Grand Church is all of wrought Marble, and its Dome extremely magnificent. In the Marshes are to be seen floating Islands; and Sluces, by which the Country may be overflow'd within a little space of time. Edward III. King of England took the Town of Calais from the French, A. D. 1347. but they at length recover'd it under the Conduct of the Duke of Guise in 1558. after the English had possess'd it above 210 years. Afterwards Albert Archduke of Austria and Viceroy of the Low-Countries, made himself master of it in 1596. and it was restor'd two years after to the French King Henry IV. by the Articles of the Peace of Vervins.

Guines, Guise, is a small Town, yet the chief of a County of the same name, formerly subject to its own Earls, who are celebrated in History: It is seated in a marshy Ground, and is distant 6 miles from the Sea, as many from Calais to the South, and somewhat less from Ardres.

Ardres, Ardre, and Arda, is a well fortified Town, and bears the Title of a Principality, altho' of a very small extent; It stands on the Frontiers of Artois, about 8 miles from Calais to the South, and somewhat more from Gravelin. A famous Interview was celebrated near this place, between Henry VIII. King of England, and Francis I. King of France, in the Month of June, 1520. for the ratifying of a Treaty of Peace. The Attendants of these two Princes were most richly cleath'd, and their Court appear'd so splendid that it was termed the Camp of Cloth of Gold. Cardinal Albert of Austria took Ardres in 1596. but was oblig'd to resign it to the French within a little while after.

The Governor-General of Picardy is also Governor of Artois, and under him are three Lieutenant Generals. There are also particular Governors in these Towns, viz. Amiens, Abbeville, Boulogn, and the Boulleinois, the Town and Castle of Calais, with the Fort Nieuilly and the recover'd Country. Dourlans, S. Valery upon the Somme, Guise, S. Quintin, the Bailiage of Vermandois, la Fere, Peronne and Roye, Montdidier, the Town and Citadel of Ham, and the Town and Citadel of Monstreuil.

CHAP. IV.

CHAMPAGNE, Campania.

CHAMPAGNE is one of the twelve principal Governments of France, and the Province that best furnishes the Granaries and Cellars of Paris. It is so called (says Gregory of Tours) from the spacious and pleasant Plains which are found therein, more especially near Rheims and Chaalons. This name is Modern, and the first that hath mention'd it, is the Author of the Continuation of the Chronicle of Marcellinus, who is follow'd by the said Gregory of Tours, and other Writers. The Country of Champagne and Brie according to the division of Julius Caesar, lies partly in Celtick and partly in Belgick Gaul, being situated between the 47 degree 30 Minutes, and the 50 degree of Lat-tude, and extends from Raviers in Senonnois in the South to Recroy in Rhetelois in the North, about 150 miles. From West to South-east, that is to say, from Cressy in Brie near Meaux, as far as Bombon les Bains, near the Head of the River Meuse, about 120 miles: but in some places its breadth is not above 60 miles from East to West. It is bounded on the North by Picardy, Hainault and Luxemburgh; on the South by Burgundy; on the East by Lorraine, and on the West by the Isle of France.

This Province was heretofore famous for the Grandeur of its Counts or Earls, who possess'd it as absolute Sovereigns, and were so potent that they maintained rained fierce Wars against the Kings of France and Burgundy: They were also so illustrious by reason of their noble Descent, that those Princes have not disdain'd to make Leagues with them, and even to contract Marriages with their Family. In the Division of Inheritances among the Sons of Covis I. and Cletaire I. Champagne, constituted a part of the Kingdom of Messia Augusta: And in the time of Segebert King of Messia, A. C. 570. there was a certain Duke of these Territories, named Lupus, who shewed much fidelity in preserving the States of the young King Childebert, against Ursion and Be-fey; Guintrio or Vintrio, whom Baucant caus'd to be assassinated, was afterwards Duke. But this Title denoted then only a kind of Government, and not a perpetual Dignity. The first Hereditary Count was Robert of Vermandois, who made himself Master of the City of Troyes in 953. and left the possession thereof to his Brother Herbert. But in the year 1284. the whole Province was inseparably united to the Crown of France; which Act was confirmed by the Treaty of Laon, in 1317. and by another ratified on the 14 of May, 1335.

Among the principal Rivers are reckon'd the Seine, which receives into its Channel the Waters of the Jenny and the Aube, the Marne, the Aisne and the Veste, besides a great number of other small Rivulets that are very full of Fish. The River Meuse or Maes hath its Source in this Province, but it quickly runs out of it into the County of Barr, which it croseth from South to North, and then returns into this Province and passes by Sedan and Charleville, from whence it runs through the County of Namur, Bishoprick of Liege, and Dutchy of Guelderland into Holland, where it falls into the Sea near the Biel.

The Soil, although white and chalky, brings forth many sorts of Grains in abundance, particularly Rye. The vast Plains are extremely fertile in Corn and excellent Grapes, and yield good Pasture for Cattle. On the Northern side also are large Forests, affording variety of Game, together with Mines of Iron and other Metals.

For a more particular description of this Province we will divide it into eight Parts, according to the method of most modern Geographers.

Champagne in 8 Parts.	Champagne prop.	Troyes Bish.

In the District of CHAMPAGNE, properly so called, are comprehended these most remarkable Towns, viz.

Troyes , Bishop.	{	Chaalons , Bish.
Pont sur Seine.		Espernay.
Mei.		Ai.
Rameru , or Rameru.		Dormans.
Pianci.

Troyes, Treca, anciently Augusta-bona and Ticassis, is seated on the River Seine, at the distance of 80 miles from Paris to the South-east, 64 from Rheims to the South, and 60 from the source of the Meuse to the West. It is a City of very great Antiquity, and is reckon'd among the most considerable of the Kingdom for Trade, which consists chiefly in Linen Cloth. It hath been long since dignified with the Title of an Episcopal See, the Jurisdiction whereof is extended over 510 Parishes, and depends on the Metropolitan of Sens. Nine or Ten of its Prelates have been canoniz'd for Saints; of these St. Amatie was the first, and S. Lupus the eighth, who hindred Attila from ruining the City; which was nevertheless afterward done by the Normans. But Count Robert caus'd it to be rebuilt, and it is at present a fair well built City, and adorned with a fine Palace; the Cathedral dedicated to S. Peter, is a very stately Structure, in which 40 Canons Officiate. There are also two Collegiate and ten Parochial Churches, besides the Abby of S. Lupus, a College of the Fathers of the Oratory, and many other Religious Houses. The City is defended with strong Walls, and the Inhabitants are reckon'd Courageous, and are train'd up in Arms. Here is a fine Palace, and a Bailiage and Presidial.

Pont-sur Seine, Pons ad Sequanam, a small Town so called from its Situation and Bridge over the River Seine. It stands 22 miles from Troyes to the North-West, and 57 from Paris. Rameru, Ramerucum, stands on the Banks of the Aube, 20 Miles North E. from Troyes. Pianci is in like manner water'd by the same River, and stands 15 miles West from Rameru.

Chaalons, Catalaunum, is seated in a most pleasant Plain on the River Marne, over which here are many Bridges, distant 50 miles from Troyes to the North, and 80 miles from Paris to the East. It is a very ancient, large and well fortified City, and was esteem'd one of the Principal of Gallia Belgica in the time of Julian the Apostate. It is encompassed with firm Walls and deep Ditches full of Water. The whole City is divided into three Parts, viz. The City it self; the Island formed in it by the River Marne; and the Burrough. The Houses appear very white, being built of chalky Stone, and the Streets are large, the publick Places are fair and spacious, more especially those in which stand the Town-house and Collegiate Church, consecrated to the Virgin Mary. This City is the Seat of a Bishop. The Cathedral Church is dedicated to St. Stephen, and is remarkable on the account of its Tower extremely high and large. There are also 12 Parochial Churches, 3 Abbeys, and many other Convents. A considerable Traffick is maintained here, in Linens, Cloth and Corn; which by means of the River are conveniently transported to Paris. Here is a Court of Justice and a Generality. This City was sometime govern'd by its own Counts, till they resigned their Right to the Bishop, who is dignified with the Title of Count and Peer of France. The Plains about Chaalons are judg'd to be the Campi Catalaunici, wherein the famous Battle was fought by Merouee King of the Franks, Theodorick King of the Goths, and Aetius the Roman General, against Attila King of the Huns, whom they defeated with the slaughter of near 200000 of his Men, as the French Historians relate. But others say it was at Sologne near Orleans, in the Campis Cecalaunicis that this mighty Battel was fought. And again, others say, it was near Toulouse in Languedoc.

Espernay, Epernacum, is distant 16 miles from Chaalons to the West as well as Ai; the former of these Towns standing on the South-side of the River, and the other on the North, over against one another.

Dormans, Dormanum, stands likewise on the Banks of the Marne; 19 miles from Espernay, and 36 from Chaalons to the West. This Town hath imparted its name to the noble Family of Dormans.

REMOIS, Ager Remensis lies between Châlons, S. Jean, Reims, &c. Its principal Towns are these, viz.

Reims, Archb. Fines, Mézières.

RHEIMS, Remum, anciently Durocolum and Remorum Castra, is situate in the midst of a Plain, where the River Yèze waines part of its Walls, which are extended in compass above an Hour's Journey, and enclose a great number of spacious Courts, large Streets, well built Houses, and magnificent Churches; more especially the Cathedral dedicated to the Virgin Mary, which is a vast pile of Building, the Gate thereof being esteem'd the most stately throughout the whole Kingdom on account of its admirable Architecture, Images and other curious Ornaments. In this Church the Kings of France are usually Crowned, and anointed by the Archbishop of Rheims, with a sacred Oil preserv'd in a small Vessel commonly call'd la Sainte Ampoule, or the Holy Bottle, which as they say, was sent from Heaven at the Inauguration of Charl. I. and is kept here in the Abby of S. Remi. In this City are established, besides a Metropolitan See, a Prædial Court, another of the Bailage, and an University founded by Charles of Lorraine Cardinal of Guise, with the permission of King Henry II. The Archbishops of Rheims are styled the first Dukes and Peers of France; twelve or thirteen of these Prelates have been canonized for Saints; and four of them have been Popes, viz. Syngeser II. Calan II. Adrian IV. Adrian V. six Princes have possess'd the See, viz. Arnold the Son of King Lotharius, and Henry the Son of Lewis the Gros, and four others of the Royal Blood. Here are to be seen some Monuments of Antiquity, as a Fort of Julius Cesar's, and a Roman Triumphal Arch that is quite entire; It is compos'd of three Arches, adorned with many Figures and Trophies; suppos'd to have been formerly the North Gate of the Town, and call'd Porta Martia, but had been covered with Earth for many Ages, and not discover'd till the year 1677. The City of Rheims is distant 74 miles from Paris to the North-East; 66 from Troyes to the North; and 24 from Châlons to the North-West.

Fimes, Fima, Fisma, is a Burgh on the River Yèze in the confines of the Ile of France 15 miles from Rheims to the West. It is more-especially remarkable on the account of two Councils held there in the Church of S. Meire the Martyr, Finibus apud sanctam Mairem, and for a certain Stone fixed not far from thence, which serves as a Boundary between the Bishopricks of Rheims, Laon and Soissons.

Charleville, }

Rhetel, Reteium or Reitefle, is situated near the River Ajus, 24 miles from Rheims to the North; 20 from Sedan to the S. W. and as many from Rheims to the S. in the adjacent Territories of this Town which bear the Title of a Dutchy, the French obtain'd a great Victory over the Spanish Troops, and the Prince of Conde, commanded by the Marshal of Turenne, A. D. 1650.

Mézières, or Mesieres, Maderiacum or Macerie, is a strong Town, and stands in a Peninsula made by the River Meuse, partly on a rising Ground and partly in the Valley, the Citadel being fortified with a double Rampart. D.* 1609, and gave it his Name. Sedan, Sedunum, stands on the East side of the River Meuse near the Frontiers of Luxembourg, at the distance of 15 miles from Charleville to the East, and 25 from Rhetel to the North-East. This Town was formerly subject to the Archbishop of Rheims; by whom it was afterwards granted to the King instead of Cermei. In process of time the Braquemonts and Marcans became Lords of it, and at length it devolved on the Princes of the Family of La Tour: But in the Year 1642 it was united to the Crown by a Compact made with Prince Friederick Maurice de la Tour d'Auvergne, Duke of Bouillon and Lord of Sedan. It is a strong place, being defended with a good Castle and Walls, &c. It was chiefly inhabited by Protestants, who had a famous University here before the late Persecutions.

D. 1552, in Favour of Francis of Lorraine, Duke of Guise, to serve as an Inheritance for the younger Sons of that noble Family, and hath been the Burial-place of diverse of these Dukes. The Bishop of Langres, who takes place among the six Ecclesiastical Peers of France, bears the Title of Duke, Marquis and Baron, as being both Spiritual and Temporal Lord of these Territories, wherein he constitutes Bailiffs, Judges and other Officers of Justice. SENS, Senones, or Agendicum Senonum, is seated in a verdant Plain on the Confluence of the Seine and the Yonne, over which it hath a Stone-bridge; and is distant 55 Miles from Paris to the South, and 30 from Troyes to the West. It is a very fair City, and without doubt one of the most ancient throughout the whole Kingdom of France. For the Galli Senonenses heretofore extended their Conquests very far into Italy and Greece, took Rome, and (as it is generally believ'd) founded Sienna, Senigallia, and some other Towns, which still bear their Name. These Territories, during the second Race of the French Monarchs, were subject to the Jurisdiction of certain particular Counts, until King Robert made himself Master of Sens, A. D. 1005. The City is large and well-built, and water'd with a great Number of Brooks, which run thro' all its Parts, and serve for the Convenience of the Inhabitants. It is the See of an Archbishop, who was formerly Metropolitan of Paris, Orleans, and four other Diocesses; but since Paris hath been erected into an Archbishoprick, he hath only Troyes, Auxerre, and Nevers for his Suffragans. The Cathedral Church of St. Stephen is admired for its stately Front, adorned with diverse Figures and two lofty Towers; as also on the account of its large Body, rich Chapels, ancient Tombs, and the costly Basis of the High Altar, where is to be seen a Table of Gold enrich'd with many curious Stones, representing in Bas-relief the Images of the 4 Evangelists and S. Stephen. The whole Diocess comprehends above 900 parochial Churches, and 25 Abbies, 5 of these being included within the City and Suburbs. Diverse Council have been celebrated here, the first of which was held by Archbishop Sevin, A. C. 980.

Pont-sur-Yonne, Pons ad Icaunam, or Pons Syriacus, stands on the Frontiers of Champagne, and the Banks of the River Yonne, about 8 Miles from Sens to the North toward Paris.

Joigni, Jogniacum, or Juniacum, a small Town, at the Distance of 15 Miles from Sens to the South, and as many from Auxerre to the North.

Tonnerre, Tornodorum, and Ternodorum ad Hermon-tionem, is a considerable Town bearing the Title of a County, and built on the side of the River Armançon in the Confines of Burgundy, about 35 Miles from Sens to the South-east.

Chabli, Cablicum, stands about 10 Miles W. from Tonnerre. It is a small Town, but remarkable on the account of the excellent Wines that are made therein, and for the bloody Battle which was fought in the adjacent Plain, between the Sons of the Emperor Lewis the Debonnaire, A. D. 841.

The County of BRIE is divided into two Parts and made part of two Provinces; the Isle of France and Champagne. BRIE CHAMPENOISE, Bri-giensis Saltus, or Bria, lies between the Rivers Seine and Marne, on the North of Senonnois, abounding in Pasture, and is very Fruitfull in Corn, Fruits, &c. The most considerable Towns in it are these, viz.

Meaux, Bish.	}} Colomiers,
Provins,		Sezanne,
Chateau-Thierry,		Montereau-faut-Yonne.

Meaux, Meldæ, Patinum Meldarum, the Capital City of Brie, and the See of a Prelate Suffragan to the Archbishop of Paris, is situated on the Marne, at the the Distance of 25 Miles from Paris to the East ; 50 from Rheims to the South-west, 60 from Chaalons to the West, and 50 from Sens to the North. It is divided by the River into two Parts, viz. one called the Town, and the other the Market, and surrounded with three Suburbs. The Cathedral is dedicated to St. Stephen, and the Diocess contains 410 Parishes. There is also a Collegiate Church bearing the Name of St. Sinctin first Bishop of Meaux ; and some others that are Parochial, and besides the Abbey of St. Faron, appertaining to the Benedictine Monks of the Congregation of St. Maur, a great Number of Monasteries. This City was for sometime subject to its own Lord, before it was united to the Crown of France : It suffered very much in the Year 1358, John King of France being at that time the Prisoner of our King Edward III. For the Dauphine having posses'd himself of this Place, in his Absence, the Citizens had plotted with those of Paris to take it from him, but were not able to effect it, for tho' they let in the Parisians into the Town, the Garrison kept the Market, overcame them, cut them to pieces, and fired and pillag'd the City. It was afterwards taken by the Forces of our valiant King Henry V. after a Siege of three Months. This was the first City of France wherein the Protestants preach'd against the Errors of the Church of Rome, for which many of them suffer'd Martyrdom. In the Civil War, the Protestants got the Possession of this Place, but it was taken from them by Surprize by Claud Gouffier, Duke of Retz for King Charles IX. It is now a well-built, flourishing, and populous City, and is the Seat of a Bailly and an Election.

Provins, Provincum, aut Prucinum, stands at the Foot of an Hill and the Banks of the Rivulet Vouzie, being distant 10 Miles from the Seine to the North ; 25 from Meaux to the South ; 36 from Troyes to North-west, and 38 from Paris to the South-east. The small Town is famous for an excellent sort of Roses which grow in the adjacent Fields, and bear the same Name.

Chastieau Thierry, Castrum Theodoricum, is a very fair Town, with a Castle, enjoying the Title of a Duchy, and seated on the South-side of the Maine about 20 Miles from Meaux to the East ; 30 from Rheims to the South-west ; 40 from Chaalons to the West, and 45 from Paris to the East.

Comiers, Colomeria, or Columbaria, is adorned with the Palace of Longueville, and water'd with the little River of Morin, 12 Miles from Meaux to the South towards Provins, and 30 from Paris to the East.

Montreuil-Faut-Yonne, Monasterium ad Icaunam or Mons Regalis, takes its Name from a Place where the Yonne falls into the Siene. Being founded on the Confluence of these two Rivers, and defended with an old Castle, distant 16 Miles from Provins to the South-west. The Town it self properly belongs to the Jurisdiction of Gastinois, and the Suburbs on the other side of the River to that of Brie. It was heretofore a Royal Seat, and is beautified with a fair Stone Bridge, on which John Duke of Burgundy was slain, on the 10th Day of September, 1419.

The Governor General of the Province of Champagne, hath under him four Lieutenant-Generals and two Bailiffs, all Noblemen. And in these following Towns there are particular Governors, viz. Troyes, Chaalons, Langres, Chaumont, Retel, Chateau-Portien, Rocroy, Maxiers, Charleville, Sedan, St. Menchault, St. Dizier, Vitri, Bar-sur-Aube, Epenay, Fismes, and Brie-Comte-Robert.

The ISLE of FRANCE, Insula Franciæ.

THE Government of the Isle of France, though it be one of the least of Extent, is however the most considerable of the whole Kingdom, on account of its Fertility and pleasant Situation, the great Number of stately Palaces, and the Capital City which stands therein ; but more especially by being honoured with the Presence of the King in his splendid Palaces of Versailles and the Louvre, S. Germain, Fountainbleau, and S. Cloud ; all which are seated within the Limits of this Government. The Isle of France, properly so called, lies between the River Seine, Marn, Oise, and Aisne ; for which Reason the Name of a Island hath been given it. But to make it a Government, some Parts of the neighbouring Provinces have been added to it ; so that at present it is bounded on the East by Champagne, on the West by Normandy, on the North by Picardy, and on the South by Beauvais and Gastinois, extending it self between the 48th Degree 20 Min. and the 49th Deg. 40 Min. of Latitude ; and includes from West to East, that is to say from from Dreux to Lieffe, near 120 miles, and from North to South, viz. from Noyon as far as Tourtenay in Gatinois 100 Miles.

The Soil is very fertile in excellent Wheat, Grapes, and other Fruits: There are also divers verdant Plains and spacious Forests, affording abundance of all sorts of Games. The principal Rivers are the Seine, the Marne and the Oise. The last of these is enlarged with the Waters of the Aisne, that passeth to Soissons, and those of Terrain, which conveys its Streams along the Walls of Beauvais, &c. This Government is usually divided into ten small Countries, nine of which are taken out of the Provinces of Champagne, Beauce, Normandy, and Picardy.

PARIS, Parisi, or Lutetia Parisiorum, so called from Lutum Dirt, and Parisi the ancient Inhabitants of the Neighbouring Country. To omit the several fabulous Accounts of its Origin, it is certain that it is very ancient: Julius Caesar mentions it in his Commentaries; and Eusebius says, It was older than Rome. The Island in the Seine called la Cite, now the middle of Paris, was the first City, built in that place by the Parisi, as some say, to avoid the Ravage of War and Pestilence that rag'd among them.

It is the Metropolis of the whole Kingdom of France, and at present one of the largest, most populous and flourishing Cities of Europe. The River Seine which passeth through it from East to West, is broad, but not deep enough to bring up Ships of Burden, whereof none come higher than Roan, and from whence the Goods are brought hither in Lighters: Its Stream is divided by two or three Islands, whereof that call'd la Cite above-mentioned is the chief, and is the Center, round which the Additions from time to time have been made of that great number of Houses and Palaces whereof Paris now consists. On the North-lies that part called la Ville the Town; and on the South the University, with the Fauxbourg or Suburbs of S. Germain, and S. Marcel. The Houses of Paris are mostly built of Stone and Brick, very high, and fill'd with People, every Floor often containing a Family, especially in the Old City, where the Streets are narrow, but those later built are spacious and neat, especially les Rues Richelieu, and S. Martin, which are very long, strait and broad.

The whole City, University, and Suburbs of Paris make an Oval of three English Miles long, and two and an half broad, and consequently take up five and an half square Miles of Ground. Concerning the number of Houses and Inhabitants herein contained, Frenchmen talk very largely; but this Matter having been judiciously handled by the ingenious Sir William Petty, his Computation will be the best account we can give the Reader, which is as follows: The number of Houses are, 23223, together with 32 Palaces, and 38 Colleges, in which do live 81280 Families, and allowing to each Family 6 Persons, the number will be 487680. To prove this Account, he argues from the number of Burials in Paris, which according to a reasonable Medium, are, 19887 per Annum, whereof 3506 in the Hotel-Dieu unnecessarily, which being deducted, the number of Burials of the Inhabitants, is communibus annis, 16381, and then allowing one of thirty to die yearly, the number of Souls in Paris will be 491430. The Medium of these two Accounts is 488055. Whereas in London the same Author proves the number of Inhabitants to be 695718, and the number of Houses 105315, and that London contains above 100 thousand Inhabitants more than Paris and Rouen together. But to proceed,

The Places in Paris that most deserve a Stranger's Notice, are the Louvre, the Tuilleries, the Church of Notre-Dame, the University, the Old-Palace, the Town-House, the Place-Royal, the Bastille, Pont-neuf, many stately Palaces of the Nobility, the Hotel-Dieu, and other Hospitals.

The King's Palace, nam'd the Louvre, is a noble and stately Pile of Building: It is one large Square with a Court in the middle, the Fronts of Stone finely adorned with Pillars and Carvings. It was first built by King Philip the August, A. D. 1214, and began to be rebuilt of larger Extent by K. Charles V. in the Year 1364. Francis I. began the Switzer's Hall and the South Porch, which his Son Henry II. finished, and built two Stories over it; he also added an Order of Corinthian Architecture to the inner Front, and adorn'd it with a noble Cornice and curious Carvings. King Henry IV. built a Gallery along by the side of the River quite to the Tuilleries, which is very long, and esteem'd the finest in Europe: Under it is the Royal Printing-house, and the Lodgings of many curious Artists in Painting, Carving, Graving, &c. who have Pensions from the King. Lewis XIII. finished the Front to the West, and built a large Pavillion, in form of a Dome, in the middle, over the Gate, which is supported by two Ranks of very large Pillars of the Ionick Order; and also adorn'd the Architrave of the Front to the Court with fine Sculptures. The present King hath bestow'd great cost upon the East-Front; in the middle whereof is the chief Gate of the Palace. Here are forty Columns of the Corinthian Order detached, which sustain a large Terrace, that is to be rail'd with a stately Ballustrade. The Building is not finished, nor the Lodgings furnish'd, no Body dwelling in it but some few Officers, except the French Academy, who have a Hall here to hold their Assemblies in. Behind the Louvre is a large piece of Ground design'd for a Garden; but the King never coming here, some Persons have been permitted to build upon it, so that at present it is full of Houses, which are to be all pull'd down when the Building is finished, and the King fancies to Reside here.

Behind the Louvre at some distance, stands the Palace called les Tuilleries, built by Queen Catherine de Medicis, A. D. 1654. and much improv'd by the present King. It is one Range of Building, with a Pavillion at each end, and a Dome in the middle; before it is a handsome large Space which is divided into three Courts; and behind are exceeding pleasant Gardens, the Walks whereof are every Evening fill'd with People of Fashion that come hither to take the Air. When the King lies at Paris, which is very seldom, he lodges in the Tuilleries. These two Palaces are seated in the West-part of the Town by the River-side; the Garden of the Tuilleries reaching quite beyond the Houses, and is open to the Fields.

The Cathedral-Church of Notre-Dame or the Virgin Mary, stands near the middle of the City in the Island which thence hath its name: It is a Majestick venerable Building of the Gothick Order of Architecture. The Foundation was laid A. D. 522. by King Childerick; and the Building was afterwards much beautified and enlarged by King Robert and his Successors, till Philip the August finished it as it now appears. It is in the Form of a Cross, having a small Spire in the middle, and at the West end two large square Towers of 389 Steps high, flat at top, with Balustrades round, which make the Front very spacious and noble. Over the three West Gates is a Row of Niches, in which stand the Statues of 28 Kings of France, Predecessors to Philip. The length of this Church is accounted 66 Fathoms, its breadth 24, and its height 17 Fathoms. The Roof is supported by 120 great Pillars, and the whole Building adorn'd with the Ornaments usual to this Order of Architecture, besides several Statues, curious Paintings, rich Tapestries, Silver-Candlesticks, &c. that make the inside appear very Glorious. The Prelate of this See was formerly Suffragan to the Archbishop of Sens, till A. 1622. when Lewis XIII. by permission of the Pope, erected it into an Archbishoprick; and the present King hath added to it the Title of Duke and Peer, (A. 1674.) in favour of the present Archbishop.

The University of Paris was first founded (as 'tis said) by Charlemaign, A. D. 791, at the desire of Alcuin an Englishman, his Tutor, who was made the first Professor. It is situate on the South-side of the River, and hath been much encreased by Lewis VII. Philip the August, and several other Persons of lower Rank, particularly Robert Serben, who (in the time of St. Lewis, A. 1252) founded the College called by his Name; which being decayed, was rebuilt by Cardinal Richelieu, and made a very beautiful Place. It is esteem'd the strictest College in Europe, the Degree of Doctor in it being only given to those who hold the Sorbonique Act, which is to answer all Disputants from Sun-rise to Sun-set. Wherefore the Title of Sorbon Doctor is of great Repute. The College of Navarre, founded by Jane Queen of Navarre, is also a very noble Building; and that of the four Nations, founded by Cardinal Mazcrine, is very handsome, spacious, and well adorned. The Buildings of the other Colleges, near 30 in number, are not very stately. The Professors have settled Revenues, but the Colleges are not endowed, except with Privileges and Collation to several Benefices.

It will not be amiss to mention here the Academies for Arts, established in Paris by the Favour and Encouragement of the present King and his Predecessors. And first, the Academy Francoise, is a Society of ingenious Men, the most polite and curious Criticks of the Nation; first begun in the Year 1620, by Messrs Godeau, Gombaud, Chapelain, Comrad, and several more, who agreed to meet weekly at one of their Lodgings for Conversation; these being encouraged by Cardinal Richelieu, set themselves at work to correct and polish the French Tongue, and in 1635. the Academy was establish'd by the King's Edict, and hath been much honour'd by the present King, who hath given them a Chamber in the Louvre to hold their Assemblies in. These ingenious Persons have very much improv'd the French Language, and publish'd a Dictionary of it; and several Members of the Society have publish'd Books that have been very acceptable to the learned World. The number of them at present is forty. They give yearly two Golden Medals to the best Performers in Eloquence and Poetry.

The Royal Academy of Sciences, was established by Monsieur Colbert, A. D. 1666, and is composed of the best Philosophers and Mathematicians in the Nation for whose use the King built the Royal Observaton the Fauxbourg St. Jacques, where they daily make Experiments, and labour in new Discoveries for the improvement of Knowledge.

The Royal Academy for Painting and Sculpture was established by Lewis XIII. and that for Architecture, by the present King in the Year 1671.

The Gobelins, which is the King's Work-House for curious Mechanick Arts, such as Tapestry, Plat Mosaic Work, neat Iron, Copper, and Brasses Work, Statuary, Sculpture, Embroidery, and the like, also one of the Remarkables of Paris. Its Name taken from one Gobelin, a curious Scarlet Dyer, who long since exercis'd his Art at that House.

But to pass on to the other remarkable Things in Paris. The Palace is the place where the Court of Parliament is held. It was at first the King's Palace, but was made the Seat of this Court by King Philip the Fair. The Hall is arched with Stone, and supported by Pillars: In it are many Shops for Tradesmen and beyond it are several Chambers for the respective Courts.

The Hotel de Ville, or Guild-Hall, is a fair Structure; the old one being decayed, this was begun to be built A. D. 1533, but by reason of the Civil War was not finished till 1610. It is built of Stone, the Front reasonably handsome, but somewhat Gothick in the middle over the Door there is a Spire, and two Pavillions at the ends; within-side is a spacious Hall and several Chambers.

The Palais Cardinal, or Palace Royal, as it is now called, is a handsome Building, composed of two square Courts and fine Gardens; the Apartments in it are beautiful and convenient. This Palace was built by Cardinal Richelieu, and at his Death bequeathed to the King: The Duke of Orleans dwells in it, altho' he hath another very stately one that bears his Name which was built by the Widow of Henry IV.

The Place Royal is a Noble large Square, surrounded with Piazza's and very fine Houses.

Paris lying on both sides the Water, there is need of many Bridges, of which here are nine of Stone and two of Timber; that named Pont-neuf, or the New Bridge, is the most considerable, being the finest built and the longest; it is all of Stone, begun to be built in 1578, and finished in 1604, by King Henry IV whose Statue on Horseback of curious Workmanship stands in the middle.

Pont au Change was built of Stone in 1629, and hath two Rows of Houses on it; this being near the Palace, hath the most Passengers of any. Pont-Neuf hath Houses on it also. The other Bridges are less considerable.

Pont-Royal, a strong and plain Stone-Bridge, crossing the Saine to the Truilleries, built by the present King and finished about the year, 1700.

The Hotel-Dieu is a large Hospital for poor sick People, whereof here are commonly no less than 4000 who are serv'd by the Nuns of St. Augustin: The Building is old, and not very fine, but the Revenue is very great. There are many other Hospitals, but that which makes the greatest Figure, and is most talk'd of is,

The Invalids, built by this King for the Reception and Maintenance of old crippled and disabled Soldiers. It is a very noble Building, exactly square, with five Courts in the middle. It stands in the West end of the Fauxbourg St. Germain.

The

The Bastile is a Castle built in the Year 1360, for defence of the City, but at present serves for a Prison for State-Criminals. It stands at the East-end of the Town in the Fauxbourg St. Antoine. There are also two smaller Castles, which were anciently Fortresses, and without doubt stood at the Limits of the Town, but are now in the middle of it, and serve to hold the Prevost's and other Courts in.

The Suburbs of Paris are large and well built; that of St. Germain hath been taken into the City, and enjoys the same Privileges.

Finally, The Place des Victoires, where stands a Massy Statue of Braſs of the present King Crown'd by Victory. The Triumphal Arches and Gates, of Modern Structure, in several parts of the City, and several Palaces of the Nobility, are places of such Magnificence and Beauty as are hardly to be parallel'd.

For the Civil Government Paris hath a Magistrate call'd the Preſor des Merchants, not unlike our Lord-Mayor, and 4 Echevins or Aldermen, 26 Counsellors, 10 Serjeants and under Officers; and is divided into 16 Wards. And for administering Justice, there is a Prevost, 3 Lieutenants, and the Judge and Consul of Merchants.

In the City and Suburbs are 10 Collegiate and 44 Parochial Churches, 4 principal Abbeys, besides many other Religious Houses, 30 Hospitals, great number of publick Fountains, and 17 Gates.

This City hath undergone the Fate of most Great Ones, viz. hath been two or three times besieged, twice burn'd, and once much damaged by an Inundation of the Seine. Our King Henry V. took it, was crown'd here, and kept his Court at the Louvre in great State and Splendor, A. D. 1422. In the Civil War, Paris took part with the Leaguers, and was therefore besieged in the Year 1589. by King Henry III. who there lost his Life, being murdered by Jacques Clement a Friar. The next Year it was block'd up by Henry IV. and reduc'd to extream Misery, and to that want of Victuals, that the People made Bread of dead Mens Bones; yet would they not yield, but held out till the Dukes of Palma and Mayenne came to their Relief, and forced the King to raise the Siege.

Paris is situate in the Latitude of 48 Degrees 50 Minutes, and Longitude of 20 Degrees 15 Minutes, reckoning from Teneriff; but according to Sauſon, 23 Degrees, 30 Minutes; and is distant 130 English Miles from Calais to the South, 60 from Roan to the S. E. 300 from Brest to the E. 220 from Lyons to the N. W. 130 from Verdun on the River Meuse, and 230 from Strasbourg on the Rhine to the W. 180 from Triers, 155 from Luxemburg, and 140 from Namur to the S. W.

The most remarkable Place in the Neighbourhood is the Bois de Vincennes, situated at the very Gates of Paris, where the Citizens often walk to take the Air, and divert themselves with divers kinds of Sports and Exercises.

VERSAILLES is a small, but neat Burrough, situate upon a rising Ground in the midst of a Champaign Country, fit for Hunting, and abounding with Game, at the distance of about 12 Miles from Paris to the W. Lewis XIII. built a small Castle here, to serve for a Hunting Seat; but the present King fancying the Place, in the Year 1661. began to enlarge it, by the addition of several new Buildings, which he hath increased from time to time, and hath been at prodigious Expence in adorning it and making the greatest variety of Water-Works, and most delightful Gardens that probably are any where to be seen. This beautiful Palace deserves a more particular Description than we have room to make; what follows will be sufficient to give the Reader a general Idea of it.

The Passage to it is through four long Rows of tall Elm-trees which make three Alleys; the middle one of twenty Fathoms, and the side ones of ten Fathoms wide; at the end of these, on each side, fronting the House, are the Stables which for Symmetry and Convenience are thought the finest in Europe; in them are kept near five hundred Horses of the King's. Between this and the Court is a large void space, from whence is a fair view of the whole, all the three Courts being open to the Front, and only divided by Iron Ballustres. The first Court is named the Place-Royal; it is very spacious, being eighty Fathoms square: In the Front is only a low Wall and Iron Ballustres, which are carried out in a Half-Moon, and on the Wings are a very handſom Range of Buildings, which are the Lodgings of some of the Nobility that attend the Court. From hence you pass through one large Gate (very finely adorn'd with Trophies in Iron-work gilt) in the middle of a large and high Ballustre of Iron, gilt, into the first or great Court of the Palace, which consists also of two Wings of Building, on each side of a large Court, but so much smaller than the Place-Royal, as that that does not hinder the full sight of this; in the middle is a very large Fountain: The Buildings are of Brick and Stone, very stately, and adorn'd with very fine Carvings, and Pillars of the Corinthian Order, which support Balconies at the top, that go quite round each Wing; on the Ballustre whereof stand several Statues of Stone, representing the four Elements; these are the Lodgings of the Officers of the Household: Behind them are square Courts and other Buildings for Offices. Next is the second or smaller Court of the Palace, which is also open to the Front; the Ground is raised three Steps, and paved with black and white Marble: This Court is still smaller than the former, for the same Reason; and here the Sight is terminated by the Building at the end of the Court, which with the two Wings make the Royal Apartment. These Buildings are very magnificent, without side as well as within: The Entrance is by three Doors of Iron, richly wrought and gilt: In the Wings are two very noble Stair-Cases that lead to the Lodgings, in which appear all the Pomp and Beauty that the most curious Sculptures and Paintings by the greatest Masters of the Age, together with excessive rich Furniture, can make: Behind this, and fronting the Garden, is a noble Range of Building, adorned with Statues and Carvings, and a Piazza of 100 Yards in length. The Gardens are extreamly delightful, and surpass all other for pleasant Walks and great number of Fountains, in which the Water is diversified a thousand ways, through a multitude of Marble and Copper Statues, that represent abundance of curious Devices, as the Triumphal Arch, the Water Mountain, the Theatre, the Pyramid, the Basin of Ceres, the Basin of Fiora, the Basin of Apollo, the Basin of Saturn, the Basins of the Crown, Mermaid, Dragon, the Water-Bower, the Water-Alley, many of the Fables of Aesop represented by Figures, which spout Water; together with abundance more too long to mention. Besides these Fountains here is a very large Canal, in which Yachts and Gallies sail and row to and again. At the bottom of this Canal on one side stands a fine Summer-house called Trianon; and on the other side is the Menagerie, where are kept all the Outlandish Beasts of greatest Rarity. Every part of this House and Garden is perfectly beautiful, and gives satisfaction to the most curious Spectators. Marli, Melun, a pleasant Summer Seat, and a new built Palace of the Kings, more gay than magnificent, being less and more, but enjoying a very good Prospect, stands at a small distance from Paris. From the Seine that runs near it the Water is forced up by an Engine-Mill through strong Iron Pipes of 6 Inches bore, over two or three Hills into Basins, and from thence by the like Mechanism, to the top of the highest of them, where it forms a Lake, and feeds the Waterworks of Paris.

St. Germain en Laye, is a very fair Town pleasantly seated on an Hill near the River Seine, and the Wood of Laye, at the distance of 15 Miles from Paris to the West, and 4 from Poissy. It is adorned with two stately Palaces, the Old and the New, in which the French Kings have often resided; but since some Alterations have been made, these are little regarded. In these Palaces were born Henry II. Charles IX. and Louis XIV. A Peace was concluded here between King Louis XIV. the King of Sweden and the Elector of Brandenburgh on the 29th. Day of June, 1679.

About a League from St. Germain, toward Paris, stands the Wood of Trefson, le Bois de la Trabisson, so called from a Plot there contrived by one Garcion, against the House of Ardenne, the Peers of France, and the chief Generals of the Emperor Charlemagne, which was afterward put in execution at the Battle of Rancoux near the Pyrenean Mountains. This Wood is divided by a large Road or High-way. There are also divers other considerable Towns not far from Paris, particularly those of Ruel, S. Maure, S. C. 636. in Honour of S. Denis, the Patron or Tutelar Saint of France, whose Body was interred therein. But this Church being in time fallen to decay, Abbot Suger caused it to be rebuilt in a larger Form, as it now appears, in three Years and three Months time, under the Reign of Louis VII. as it is recorded in the Acts of the said Suger. It was finished A. D. 1144. and hath been since very remarkable for its Treasure, and the sumptuous Tombs of the French Monarchs, it being the Place of Sepulture of the Royal Family, among whom the Tombs of Francis I. and Louis XI. seem the most sumptuous. Noblemen of high Family or great Descent, are also here buried, among whom Marschal de Turenne has a very Magnificent Monument. The Town was formerly of larger extent than at present. It is a little way distant from the Seine to the East, and eight Miles from Paris to the North.

Afterward King Henry II. erected it into a Duchy, A. 1551. in favour of Anne de Montmorency Constable of France; and when this Family was extinct, Louis XIII. bestowed the same Title on Henry of Bourbon, Prince of Conde, in 1633. This Town was burnt by the English in 1559.

This is called the Maiden City, having been always faithful and not suffer'd it self to be taken. Our English Forces attempted to surprize it in 1433. but did not effect it. Nor did Charles the warlike Duke of Burgundy, prove more successful, when he besieged it in 1472, being forced to raise the Siege 26 days after his Trenches were opened. However, violent Commotions often arose in it, on account of Religion, during the Civil Wars of France in the last Age. It was at first only a Castle built at the top of a high Hill, and called Laudunum, from a Name commonly attributed by the Gauls to all places of such situation, but in time grew to be a pretty good Town which King Clovis the Great enlarged and made a City, and S. Remigius or Remi of Rheims erected the Bishoprick and founded a Cathedral Church, on which at present depend 84 Canons, of which four are dignitaries. CHAP. VI.

BRETAGNE, Armorica, or Britannia Minor.

THE Province of Bretagne, or the lesser Britain, apparently took its modern Name from those People of Great Britain, who having escaped the Fury of the Saxons, arriv'd on these Coasts, where they were courteously entertain'd by the Inhabitants, and incorporated with them into one Body. They still retain a different Language from the rest of France. This Country was heretofore called Armorica, i. e. ad mare sita, from its situation on the Sea-shoar, and afterward Llydaw, in the British Tongue in the same sense; as also Letavia in Latin, by the English Writers of the middle Age. It is bounded on the East by the Provinces of Anjou, Maine, and part of Normandy, advancing it self in Form of a Peninsula to the West into the Ocean, with which it is encompassed on the three other sides. Its utmost extent from East to West, consists of about 170 English miles; that is to say, from Vitrey to the point of Conquet, and about 100 miles from North to South, viz. From S. Malo to the Borders of Poitou, but in other Places it is not above 70 miles broad. It is situated between the 47th Degree, and almost the 49th of Latitude.

Julius Caesar first made himself Master of this Province, and it remained under the Dominion of the Romans till Maximus having caused himself to be proclaimed Emperor in England, A. C. 382, granted to one of his Lieutenant-Generals named Conan Meriadec, the Title of King of Armorica or Bretagne, which Sovereignty continued to the time of Clovis and Chilperick, who oblig'd these Princes to be content with the stile of Counts. But they often revolted, until Dagobert II. rendred them Tributary; and Charlemagne entirely subdued them A. 787. However they took up Arms against Lewis the Debonnaire and Charles the Bald, and their last King Solomon was slain in Battle. Afterwards the Country was Govern'd by divers Princes until the Year 1213. at which time Aix, the Heiress of Bretagne, Married Peter of Dreux Maucier, whose Successors to the number of Ten retained the Possession thereof under the Title of a Dutchy, until the Year 1491, when Ann of Bretagne the only Daughter of Francis II. the last Duke, was espoused to King Charles VIII. and afterwards to Lewis XII. who inseparably united this Dutchy to the Crown of France.

The Soil of this Province yields Pasture, Hemp, Wood, Minerals, some Corn, but no Wine; and about Nantes great quantity of Salt is made. The Meadows feed abundance of Cattel, especially Horses, of which a very good Race are bred here. Hemp and Flax grows in great plenty, so that abundance of Canvas and Linnen is made here. The Forests are many and large, and contain great variety of Game. Between Chateau-Briant and Martignes, are found Mines of Iron and Lead, and in other places some of Copper and Tin. This Province is happy in Havens, having more good Sea-Ports than any other part of France, and many Islands all round it. The Inhabitants are good Fisher-men, which they are encouraged to by the great variety of delicate Fish daily taken on their Coasts; particularly Salmons, Herrings, Sardines, and a certain Fish of a most delicious taste, called Imperador, or Emperor at Marseille, and Gracieux Seigneur, or Gracious Lord in in Bretagne; besides Tunnies, Porpesses, Dolphins, Sturgeon, and some others appropriated to the Royal Fishery. Travellers admire the Jewels of Amber at Belle-Isle, the Aqueducts at Dol, the Vaults between Rieux and Rhedon, the Subterranean Torrent in the Forest of St. Aubin du Cormier, the singular Properties of the River Ardre, and the Lake of Grand-lieu near Nantes, from whence are taken many Toad-stones, and Serpent-Tongues of extraordinary Virtue.

The most considerable Rivers of this Province are the Loire, the Vilaine, Rance, Blavet, Aufen, Trieux, Laita, Oder, Arguenon and Couesnon.

Bretagne is divided into nine Diocesses.

It is the Capital of Bretagne, and was heretofore the Place of Residence of the Counts or Earls of Bretagne, and was for some time the Seat of the Parliament of the whole Province, which was establish'd there by King Henry II. but has been in this Age remov'd to Vannes. It is an Episcopal See under the Metropolitan of Tours. The Diocess contains 450 Parishes, besides two notable Abbys, viz. Of St. Magdalen and St. George, within the City, a College of Jesuits, and divers other Houses for Religious Persons. The Cathedral Church is dedicated to St. Peter, besides which there are several Parochial Churches. The Palace where the Parliament used to Sit, is a fair Building. The Clock of it is admired, as being one of the largest in France. This City is pleasantly seated in a fruitful Country, being environ'd with Pastures and Forests, and hath a good Trade by means of the River.

This City is a great Mart for Trade; vast quantities of all sorts of Merchandizes are brought in by the River Loire, which flows up to its Walls, and brings up very large Boats, and Ships of small Burden; and from hence, by the same River Foreign Goods are sent to Anjou, Blois, Orleans, &c. and Native Commodities brought down; an excellent sort of Brandy is exported hence to Foreign Countries. By reason of this convenience of Traffick, the City has from time to time been largely increased, and there are now 4 Suburbs round it, which are well filled with Inhabitants. A famous Edict in Favour of the Protestants was made here by King Henry IV. in the Year 1598, which was registred in the Parliament of Paris, and confirmed and sworn to by his Successor Lewis XIII. Notwithstanding which the present King hath repealed it in the Year 1685. and severely persecuted the Protestants.

Maro*, and joined to the Continent by the means of a long Causey of not above 30 Fathoms broad, the entrance whereof is defended by a strong Castle, flanked with large Towers, and the Town surrounded with Walls, deep Ditches, and always guarded with a sufficient Garrison; besides which to the Sea it is secured by a shoal of Sand that encompasses it, and several Rocks and small Islands, that make a Haven of difficult access, insomuch that it is reputed one of the Keys of France. It is considerable for its Traffick and Strength, and the skill of its Inhabitants in Maritime Affairs, by which means great numbers of Privateers are in time of War from hence fitted out, and much disturb the Trade of these Seas. city) Linen-Cloth and other Commodities that are exported hence to England, Holland, and other parts. This hath so increased the number of the Inhabitants, that two Suburbs have been added to the Town, which are named Venice and S. Matthew. Here are many beautiful Buildings, among which the Palace called L'Hospital is one of the stateliest in the Province, and magnificent Churches, whereof that of the Virgin Mary is the most noted. S. Paul, or Pol de Leon, or Leonoul, Leona & Fanum Sancti Pauli Leonini, or also Stravlocarus Portus, & Civitas Osismium, was a considerable Town even in the time of Julius Caesar, who in his Commentaries makes mention of Osismii, whose Capital City (according to Ptolemy) was Vorganicum, which is called Vorgium in the Roman Itinerary, and Osismii in the Nectitia Imperii; it hath been ruined long since, and of its ancient Diocess have been formed these three of S. Pol de Leon. S. Brieux and Treguier. This City is situated on the Sea-Coasts between Lantriguet or Treguier and Brest, and is distant about 30 miles from each, and 100 from Rennes to the West. It hath a safe Harbour, and is defended with a Fortress, wherein some of the Dukes of Bretagne have formerly resided. It is also at present an Episcopal See under the Metropolitan of Tours, and the Capital City of a small Territory called Leonnois; it had been possessed by its own proper Princes, until about the Year 1254, when John I. Duke of Bretagne purchased this Principality. Its first Bishop was named Paul, who died Anno 600, was canonized, and from him the City had its Name. The Chapter is composed of a Chanter, 3 Archdeacons, 16 Canons, 7 Prebendaries styled Vicars, &c. The Inhabitants speak the Low British Language more purely and elegantly than the other of the same Country.

Landerneau, stands on the Banks of the little River Elerne, which falls into the Bay of Brest; and is distant 24 miles from S. Pol de Leon to the South-West. It is noted for the Richness of the Soil of its Neighbouring Country.

Brest, Briates Portus, anciently Gescribale and Gesbriacte, is a famous Sea-Port Town, seated on the North-side of a large commodious Bay or Harbour, which opens to the Ocean in the most extreme Western part of the Continent of France. The Entrance of this Harbour called the Goulet, is exceeding difficult by reason of certain Rocks, known by the Names of Minons, Filets, and Mingans, that lie under Water at high Tide, and is therefore the more secure Retreat for the French King's Ships of War, for which this is the only Port he has on this side the Mediterranean. Wherefore this Town is one of the Grand Magazines of the Admiralty of France; Toulon in the Mediterranean being the other; and in this Harbour the greatest number of the French Navy, as in that the Ships of greatest Burthen Winter, and are fitted out. The Naval Stores and Provisions for 70 Sail of Men of War are laid up in this Town, and Ships of 80 and 90 Guns are built here, which makes Brest a populous and rich Place. It is well fortified after the modern manner, with strong Walls and a Castle well sustained with Ourworks and Batteries. It is distant 35 miles from S. Pol de Leon to the South-West, and 15 from the Promontory of Conquet.

The Island of OUESSANT or USHANT, Uxentius, Uxantis, and Uxentissena, called Axantos by Pliny, and Uxantissena by Antonius, lies at the distance of 30 Miles Westward from Brest, and is not above 20 Miles in compass; nevertheless it hath obtained the Title of a Marquisate. It is fortified with a Castle, and contains some rich Towns of Note.

Quimper-Corentin , B.	}	Dourvarenes ,
Concorneau ,		Chatee-Lin ,
Quimperlay ,		Guirene , &c.

Quimper-Corentin, Corisopitum, anciently Curiosotiva, is the Metropolis of a small Territory in the Lower Bretagne, named Cornouaille from the County of Cornwall in England, whence the City it self is also sometimes, tho' improperly, called Cornouaille. Its ancient Name is Kemper or Quimper, whereto Corentin was added from that of its first Bishop, who is supposed to have been ordained by S. Martin of Tours, its Episcopal See being as yet subject to that Metropolitan. This City was heretofore possessed by its own Counts or Earls; it is of a large extent, well built, and very considerable for its Traffick, and situated on the Oder, into which a small River falls that surrounds the Town, and makes it a kind of an Island. The Oder is so deep, that Barks of a large size are convey'd at high Tide to the Port, at the confluence of the two Rivers, where stands the Suburbs term'd, The Duke's Land, inhabited by many rich Merchants. The Cathedral is a stately Edifice, and of much Antiquity, adorn'd with two large Towers: There are also divers other Churches, and Monasteries, and the Bishops Palace, which is a very magnificent Pile of Building. This City stands about 12 Miles from the Southern Shore of Bretagne, and 30 from Brest to the South, and from Rennes about 120 to the West.

Concorneau, Conquerneau, Concorneum, is a well fortified Town and Castle on the Sea-Coast, lying between Blavet and Penmark, 15 Miles from Quimper-Corentin to the South-East.

Quimperlay, Quimperlaum, is a reasonable good Town seated at the confluence of the two little Rivers Ifetta and Laitta, about 8 Miles from the Sea-Coasts, and 30 from Quimper-Corentin to the East.

Dourvarenes, a small Town about 10 Miles N. W. from Quimper-Corentin, gives name to a large Bay, adjoining to that of Brest.

The Bishoprick or Diocess of VANNES, is bounded on the South by the Ocean, on the E. by the Diocess of Nantes, on the N. by that of S. Brieux, and the Capital City of the Lower Bretagne, stands on an accommodious Bay, being fill'd with little Islands, through which the Sea flows through a Chancel named Montau, and is distant 55 miles from Rennes to the

S. W. somewhat less from Nantes to the West, and less from Quimper-Corentin to the East. It is defended with an old Castle called l' Hermire, which was formerly a Palace of the Dukes of Bretagne. The Cathedral dedicated to S. Peter, hath a considerable Chapter, and divers other fair Churches contribute each to render it a splendid City; but the Fury of the Civil Wars hath diminish'd part of its ancient Lustre.

Port Louis, or Blavet, Portus Ludovici or Blavetum, is a small but well Fortified Town on the Mouth of the River Blavet, that takes its rise near the Burgh or Village of Grace in the Diocess of S. Brieux, and discharges it self into the Sea at the Port of Blavet; which is a capacious and safe Harbour, and distant 25 Miles from Vannes to the W. and near 40 from Quimper-Corentin to the E.

Hannebon, Hannebontum, stands on the Banks of the same River Blavet, about 8 Miles from Blavet to the North, and 26 from Vannes to the W.

Isle-Isle, Calenefus, a considerable Island on the Southern Coasts of the Province of Bretagne, lies at the distance of about 3 or 4 Leagues from the Continent of France, and is almost encompassed with small Isles or Rocks. Its extent from W. to E. is about 10 Miles, and its greatest breadth about 5 Miles. It hath a fair Haven and some strong Forts over-against Vannes and May. The whole Island is at present divided into 4 Parishes, and tho' of a small compass, yet affords much good Pasture-Ground for Cattle. It is also remarkable for its Salt-Pits, and on the account of the frequent Passage of Vessels along the adjacent Coasts, but especially because it is the usual Rendezvous of the French Fleet, when they put to Sea. Belle-Isle was heretofore possessed by the Monks of the Abby of S. Coix of Quimper, till King Charles IX. erected it into a Marquisate, and bestow'd it on the Count of Raie, A. D. 1573. The Abby hath been also endow'd for sometime with so plentiful a Revenue, that it was esteem'd a competent Preferment for Antony of Bourbon, base Brother to King Henry IV. to be created Lord Abbot thereof. The Principal Place bearing the Name of the Town, is adorn'd with a very stately Cittadel or Castle, called the Palace, and so well fenced of late with Ramparts and other Works, according to the modern Method of Fortification, that it seems to be almost impregnable.

The Governor-General of Bretagne hath under him two Lieutenants-General, whereof one hath the Inspection of all the Province except the County of Nantes, under whom are two Lieutenants. The other hath the care of that County only. There are also particular Governours in these Places, viz. Nantes, Vannes, S. Malo, Dinant, Vitre, Brest, Quimper, Blavet, and Belle-Isle.

CHAP. VII.

L'ORLEANNOIS, or, The Government of Orleans.

THE Government of ORLEANNOIS is one of the most Fruitful and Pleasant Countries of France, and its Jurisdiction is one of the largest extent, as comprehending 14 or 15 small Provinces, every one of which hath its particular Governor. This Government takes its Name from Orleans, its chief City, but Appeals lie from thence to the Parliament of Paris. It is extended from East to West, that is to say, from the Castle of Chinon in Nivernois, as far as the Coasts of the Ocean, the space of about 270 miles; and 190 Miles from South to North, viz, from Moubrun in Angoumois to Nonancourt in Normandy; It is bounded on the North by the Ile of France and Normandy; on the East by Champagne and Burgundy; on the South by Saintonge, Perigot, la Marche, and Bourbonnois, and on the West by Bretagne and the Sea: and it lies from South to North between the 45th degree 40 minutes, and the 48th degree 50 Minutes of Latitude; and also from West to East, between the 15th to the 21 degree of Longitude, which ought to be understood of its greatest length and breadth.

The Soil is extremely rich, plentifully bringing forth Corn, Fruits, Wine, and every thing necessary for the support of human Life, abounding likewise in Verdant Meadows, Arable Land and Woods. The great Delta of Orleans is especially remarkable, containing 70,000 Acres of Land, and double that in the time of Flood. The principal Rivers are the Loire, into which the Indre, the Cher, and the Nienne, enlarged with the Streams of the Creuse, discharge themselves between Montereau and Langeft in Touraine: The Maine in like manner being joined to the Sartes a little above Angers, falls into the same River Loire about a League below that City. The Aller also falls into the Loire a little below Nevers. Lastly, the Charante takes its rise in Angoumois, paffeth through Xaintonge, and runs into the Sea over againft the Ifland of Oleron.

ORLEANNOIS, properly so call'd, lies between Berry, Gersinois, Beauce and Brie. The most considerable Towns of this Country are these, viz.

Orleans, Bish.	} {	Sully.
Bourges,		Gergeau.
La Ferté Seneterre.		Phalsbourg, Sec.
or S. Ailin.

ORLEANS, Arelia, Aurelianensis Urbs, anciently Ormalum, is one of the principal Cities of France; it is situate on the River Loire, on the side of a Hill, and in Form of a Bow. It's a very ancient City, and by some said to have been built by the Druids; or according to others by the Emperor Marcus Aurelius, A. D. 162. who gave it the name. The Buildings are but not beautiful, though old: The Fortifications are a Terrace and strong Wall, with 40 Towers on it.

In the middle of the City there is a Bridge over the Loire, built of Stone upon 16 Arches, which leads to one of the Suburbs. On this Bridge stands a Statue of the Virgin Mary, and on her right, at some distance a statue of King Charles VII. and on her left one of the Famous Virago, Jean d'Arc, all three of Copper. This City was the Capital of a separate Kingdom in the first Ages of the French Monarch: At present it bears the Title of a Duchy, which is appropriated to the second Sons of the Kings of France. It is also the See of a Bishop, who is Suffragan to the Archbishop of Paris, and adorn'd with a Famous University, Founded by King Philip the Fair.

The Cathedral is a venerable and sumptuous building; its Chapter consists of 59 Canons, and 12 Dignitaries: Besides the Cathedral, here are 4 Collegiate and 22 Parochial Churches. A Generality is establish'd here (to which 12 Elections, containing 1148 Parishes resort) and also a Bailiage and Presidial. The Country round it is very Fruitful and Pleasant, and the River furnishes them with the Commodities of Foreign Nations from Nantes, as well as the Product of their own from the more Southern Provinces. Orleans hath sustain'd divers Sieges; Artile King of the Huns invested it A. D. 450. but it was reliev'd, and the Huns totally routed by Aetius the Roman General, assisted by Merovaeus the French King, and Tudoric the Gal. In the year 1423. our English Forces under the command of Thomas Marmont, Earl of Salisbury besieged this City, and reduc'd it to great distress, but a certain Maid of 18 years old, call'd Jean of Arc, came to the King of France, and pretending her assistance from God, put on Man's Habit and Armour, and having got into Orleans, did so animate the besieged, that by their frequent Sallies, in which Jean was always the foremost, they forc'd the English to raise the Siege, having lost the Earl of Salisbury, the Lord Arden, the Lord Pynings, and many Soldiers. This Woman was for some time the Director of the French Armies, in which she had great success, till at length being taken by the English, she was burnt for a Witch. In the Civil War the Protestants made themselves Masters of this City; and being besieged by the Duke of Guise, he was treacherously slain by John Perce, Feb. 14. 1563. and a Month after a Peace was concluded and the City surrendered: But in 1567. the Protestants again seiz'd it, and for a long time it was their Head Quarters. Orleans is situate as hath been said, on the River Loire, and is distant 100 Miles from Paris to the S. 100 from Bourges to the East, 22 from Bourdeaux to the N. E. 100 from Loire to the N. W. 130 from the Loire to the S. 100 to the W. 60 from Tours, and 30 from Blois to the E. 55 from Bourges to the N. and 70 from Sens to the W.]

Sully, Sulliacum, and La Ferté-Seneterre, or S. Ailin, are two Towns of good Note, both bearing the Title of Duchies; the former is seated on the Loire, 2 miles above Orleans to the E. and the other 10 miles from the same City to the South-East.

Gergeau, or Gergeau, Gergonium, stands in like manner on the Banks of the Loire, 10 miles above Orleans to the East. Our English Forces gain'd this Town from the French, A. D. 1420. but John II. Duke of Alençon, retook it by Storm in the year ensuing.

BLIASOIS, Blesensis Ager, is extended between Berry, Orleannois proper, whereof it is a part, Beauce, Perche, Vendomois, and Touraine, the chief Towns of this Country are,

Blois, Blesæ, and Blesense Castrum, the chief Town of a Territory of the same Name, is seated on the side of an Hill near the South Banks of the River Loire over which is built a fair stone Bridge at the distance of 30 Miles from Orleans to the West, and as many from Tours. It is honoured with the Title of a County, and beautified with a most magnificent Castle, not long since repair'd by Gaston Duke of Orleans, who (by reason of the pleasantness of the Place, and who somnells of the Air) hath often afforded a Royal Seat to the Kings of France, and wherein one of them viz. Lewis XII. was born. Besides that, it hath heretofore afforded Nurture to many young Princes of the Royal Family; not to mention that the first Counts of Blois were descended from Hugh Capet. Moreover the spacious Park and adjacent Garden are much admir'd by Travellers; it may perhaps not be amiss to observe that divers Queens of France have died at Blois, particularly Ann the Wife of Charles VIII. and Lewis XII. A. D. 1514. Maud the Wife of Francis I. in 1524, and Catherine of Medicis the Wife of Henry II. in 1589. In the year 1562. this City being possessed by the Protestants, was taken and sack'd by the King's Forces under the Duke of Guise. In 1576. the Assembly of the Estates of the Kingdom were convok'd hither by King Henry III. to accommodate the Differences between the Hugonots and the Papists, but broke up in a little time without effecting it. Again, in the Year 1588. they met here upon occasion of the great Disorder the Kingdom was brought into by the Holy League, and the Duke of Guise, the Head of it, was here slain in the Castle by the King's command.

It is a very ancient City, but hath been much more considerable than it is at present: For Aimoin assures us, that under Charlemagne it was one of the most flourishing of Gallia Belgica; since which time, the Incursions of the Normans, the Wars of the English, and the frequent Conflagrations it hath suffer'd, have so far defac'd its Beauty, that it hath often chang'd its Form. However, a Presidial Court is held therein, and it is as yet the See of a Prelate Suffragan to the Archbishop of Tours. The Cathedral Church was at first dedicated to the Virgin Mary, afterward to S. Grevaee, and at length to S. Julian, who was the first Bishop of this Diocess.

This Province was given by Charles the Bald to Robert of Strong, A. D. 870, with the Title of Earl of Anjou, whole whole Son of the King of France, and his Great Grandson B. of Cognac, began the third Race of those Monarchs. Charle the Great, Father of *Engl. The DUTCHY of Burgundy is bounded on the East by the County of Burgundy, on the North by Champagne, on the West by Bourbonnois and Nivernois, and on the South by Dauphine and Lyonnois. Its largest extent from South to North consists of about 110 English miles, that is to say, from below Macon as far as Chateau Vilain in Champagne, and of 90 miles from East to West, viz. from beyond Auxonne to the Frontiers of Gatinois, lying between the 46th and 48th Degree of Latitude, &c. This Province is very considerable on the account of its Largeness, Situation and Fertility, being commonly call'd, the Magazine of Corn, Wine, Hay, Wood, &c. affording also many Iron, Mines, and Springs of Mineral Waters. And indeed, it contributes very much to the subsistence of the City of Paris, and almost entirely maintains that of Lyons. It is water'd with a great number of Rivers; the Seine takes its rise here near a Village named Sainte Seine; the Saone passeth through the Eastern part, and receives into its Chanel the Streams of the Debune, augmented with those of the Bisfure, the Ouche, and the Tille, besides divers other lesser Rivulets and Brooks. On the Western the Loire divides Burgundy from Bourbonnois, and receives into it the Reccne, the Brevine, the Arroux, &c. The Yonne is there joined to the Cousni or Avalon, the Sezin or Serin, and the Amensin, into which flow the Brenne, the Oscain, and the Oze, all which Rivers have their Source in this Province.

The County of DIJONNOIS, Ager Divionensis, contains these more remarkable Towns, viz.

Dijon , Cap.	}} S. Jean de-Laune ,
Beaune ,
Ausconne ,

Dijon, Dicic and Dicidunum, is seated on the Rivers Ouche, and Suzon, in the Diocess of Langres, from which City it is distant 32 miles to the South, 85 from Sens, and 140 from Paris to the South-East, 105 from Lyons to the North, 80 from Nevers to the East, 45 from Bezancon, and 15 from the Saone to the West. This Town is suppos'd to have been first Founded about A. C. 220. It is well built, the Seat of a Bailiage, and the Capital of a small Territory, thence called the Country of Beaune, which is very Fruitful, especially in an excellent sort of Wine.

S. Jean de Laune, Fanum S. Joannis Laudonensis, or Laudona, is a small Town on the Saone near the Abby of Cisterciens, 15 miles from Dijon to the South East. D.* 1636.

Citeau, Cistercium or Cislertium, is distant about six miles from S. Jean de Laune to the West, and 12 from Dijon to the South. 'Tis believed that this Village took its name from the great number of Cisterns which were dug there under ground, and hath acquired much reputation by its Abby of Cistercian Monks, which Order was first instituted here; and this Abby built A. D. 1098. by Robert Abbot of Molefine, assisted by Orto I. Duke of Burgundy, Walter, Bishop of Chalons, and Hugh, Bishop of Lyons. It is a Branch of the Benedictine, and hath its name from this Town. The Abbot of this House is a Counsellor of the Parliament of Burgundy, and general of the whole Order, whereof are said to be near 3000 Convents and Nunneries in the World.

This City is divided into two parts, viz.

the Upper Town cover'd by Mount Conis, at the Foot whereof stands a Castle, and the Lower, called Marchent, which is water'd by the River Arroux, discharging it self into the Loire, and affording abundance of good Fish. BRESSE, Sebastianus Ager, lies S. E. from Burgundy, and is bounded on the E. by Burgundy and Beaujalois, on the W. by the River Dain, which divides it from Bugey, on the N. by Challonnais, and on the S. by the River Rhofne, which divides it from Lyonnois and Dauphine, and is in extent from North to South about 40 Miles, and from E. to W. 30 Miles. It is a Fruitful Country, but by reason of some Lakes of standing Water in it, not very wholsom in some Parts. It is divided into the Upper, being the Parts about Bourg; and the Lower, lying towards the Lyonnois. The chief Towns are,

Bourg , Cap.	} from Bourg .
Montluel , a small Town on the S. Borders of the Province.
Coligny , 15 Miles North	} Pont des Vaux , near the
	} Saone , and 15 Miles
	} from Coligny to the } West.

Bourg, Burgus, or Forum Sebastianorum, call'd for distinction Bourg en Bresse, is situate in a Marshy Ground on the Rivulet of Reissouffe, at the distance of 15 miles from Mascon to the E. and 30 from Lyon to the N. being environ'd on the E. by Mount S. Claude and the Hills of Vignoble, and on the W. by a spacious Plain extended as far as the River Saone. This Town, together with the whole Province, hath been subject to the Dominion of the French Kings ever since the Year 1601. whereas before it belonged to the Duke of Savoy, who had built a strong Citadel in it in the Year 1569. which was demolished in 1611. However, it is as yet govern'd as it were in Form of a Republick, the Administration of all Civil Affairs being committed to the care of two Syndicks or Sheriffs. Pope Leo X. erected an Episcopal See at Bourg, A. 1515. which was suppressed the Year ensuing. It was also re-established in 1521. but Pope Paul III. thought fit to suppress it again by his Bull publish'd in 1534. This Town hath a Bailiage, a Court of Election and a Presidial.

BUGEY, Beugesia, Bengia, Bugia, lies between Besse to the W. and Savoy to the E. from which it is separated by the River Rhofne, including these chief Towns, viz.

Bellay , Bish.	} } Seissel :
Laniou ,
	} } S. Rambert , &c.

Bellay, Bellicum, stands upon a Hill about 2 miles from the River Rhofne, 36 from Bourg to the S. E. and 40 from Grenoble to the N. It is a City of but small compass, nevertheless dignified with the Title of an Episcopal See under the Metropolitan of Bezancon. It was ruin'd by Fire in the Year 1385, but Amedes VIII. Duke of Savoy, caused it to be rebuilt and enclosed with Walls. The Chapter of the Cathedral Church of S. John Baptist, which had been before regular under the Rule of S. Augustin, was seculariz'd in 1579. The Bishop is both Spiritual and Temporal Lord of the City, which was resigned, together with the adjacent Territories, by the Savoyards to the French, A. D. 1601.

Seissel, Seisselium and Siffum, is a large Town where a Bridge of Boats is laid over the River Rhofne, which divides it into two Parts, and there begins to be navigable. It stands on the Foot of the Hills, and the very Frontiers of Savoy, being distant 20 Miles from Bellay to the N. and 15 from Annecy in Savoy to the W.

The Bailiage of GEX, Gega or Gaium, is a small Territory that lies between the County of Burgundy to the North, and the City of Geneva to the South, the Country of Vaud in Suisse to the East, and Bugey to the West. But it doth not comprehend any very considerable place, except the Town of Gex, Gesium, the Capital and Seat of the Bailiff, which was also granted by the Duke of Savoy to the French King, by the Peace concluded at Lyons, A. D. 1601.

The Principality of DOMBES, Dumbensis Principatus, is a small, but very pleasant Country, lying South-west of Bresse, along the Banks of the Saone, between Masconnois and Lyonnois, and contains 11 Castellannies, whereof that of Trevoux is the chief; the others are Beauvillard, Montmerle, Toissey, Lans, Chatamon, Cheteler, S. Trivier, Velleneuve, Ambrica, and Lignieu.

Trevoux, Trivoltium, a small Town, but the Capital of this Principality and a Bailiage, is seated at the Foot of a Hill on the Banks of the River Saone, 10 Miles above Lyons to the North, and near 30 from Mascon to the South.

The County of BURGUNDY, or the UPPER BURGUNDY, also call'd the FRANCHE COMTE, is the Country of the ancient Sequani, and part of the ancient Burgundia Cisjurana. It is bounded on the E. by Switzerland, on the S. by Bresse, Bugey, and the Bailiage of Gex, on the N. by Lorraine, and on the W. by the Dutchy of Burgundy and part of Champagne; and is extended from the 46th Deg. 10 Min. to the 48th Deg. including the space of about 110 Miles; and from the 23d Deg. 15 Min. to the 25th. Deg. of Longitude, which amounts to 72 Miles from the Frontiers of the Bishoprick of Basil as far as beyond Gray. This Province affords abundance of Corn, Wine, Timber and Cattel, especially Horses. There are also a great number of Salt-Pits, and many Quarries of black Marble, Jasper of divers Colours, and very fair Alabaster, together with some Mines of Iron. The Principal Rivers are the Saone, the Doux, the Lougnon and the Louve, which are full of several sorts of Fish. Moreover, the Wines of Arbois, Poligny and Vesoul, are esteemed beyond those of the other Provinces of France.

This County was quietly possessed by the Kings of Spain, as Heirs of the Family of Burgundy, till the time of this present King of France, who in the Year 1668. by his Army made himself Master of it, but was obliged to surrender it the same Year by the Treaty of Aix la Chapelle: Notwithstanding which, he again invaded and took it in the Year 1674. and forced the Spaniards to grant it to him in the following Peace of Nimeguen, as we have already elsewhere shewn; It is divided into three Parts.

I. The Bailiage of VESOUL or AMONT; or the Upper Bailiage of the County of Burgundy, which is extended toward the Northern part of this Province, and comprehends these considerable Towns, viz.

Vesoul ,	} } Lure , Abb.
Gray ,
	} } Mont-beliard County.

Vesoul, Vesulum, is seated on a small River that runs into the Saone, at the distance of 28 Miles from Bezancon to the N. 20 from the Borders of Lorraine to the S. and 60 from Dijon to the North-east. This Town of late hath been often taken and restored, but was at length resigned to the French King by the Treaty of Nimeguen A. D. 1678.

Gray, Graium, Grcium, and Graiicum, stands on the Banks

Towns of the Saône, 30 Miles from Vesoul to the S. W. It is a fair Town, tho' of small extent, and formerly well Fortified with a Castle, &c. but it was taken by the French in 1668, and also in 1674, and not long after all its Bulwarks, together with the Fort, were entirely demolished.

Lure, Luccia, Lurenſis Monest. a small Town and Famous Monastery, whose Abbot was Lord of the Town, is seated on the River Lognon, 18 Miles from Vesoul to the E.

Mont-beliard, Mons-belligardus, gives name to a County on the N. E. of the Franche Compté, and bounded on the N. with Lorraine, and on the E. by Suntgau: It was formerly part of Germany, and belong'd to the Dukes of Wittemburg, but hath been made part of France by present King. The Town is seated at the Foot of a Rock, on the top whereof stands the Castle, which was the Seat of a Count of the Family of Wittemburg: It had besides a strong Cittadel, now destroy'd. It is but a small place, having not above two or three Streets; and is water'd by the small River Hel, or Aine, which a little below falls into the Doux. This Town is distant 35 miles from Vesoul to the E, 40 Miles from Besancon to the N. E. and 30 from Basil to the W. and not far from the Foot of Mount Vaage.

II. The middle Bailiage, or that of DOLE, Dolenſis Tractus, lies in the midst of this Province, from the Frontiers of the Dutchy of Burgundy to those of Switzerland, containing these principal Towns, viz.

Besancon, Arch. } } Ornans,
Dole, } } Quirzy.

BESANCON, Vesontic, Vesontium and Bisuntie, is a very ancient City, and the Capital of Franche Comté, the See of an Archbishop, the Seat of the Parliament, and a considerable University. It is seated on the River Doux, which almost encompasses it; and is defended with a good Cittadel lately built. This City was formerly Imperial and Free, under the Protection of the Count of Burgundy, but exempted in the Year 1651, and given to the Spaniards, from whom it was taken by the French, and by the Treaty of Nimeguen granted to them with the rest of the Country. It is distant 30 miles from Vesoul to the South, 45 from Dijon to the East, 30 from the Frontiers of Switzerland to the West, and 65 from Geneva to the North.

Dole, Dola, is in like manner seated on the Doux, in a Pleasant and Fertile Country, about 30 miles from Besancon to the S. W. and as many from Dijon to the N. E. It was the Capital of the Province, before Besancon obtain'd that Honour. Philip the Good Duke of Burgundy, Founded an University here in the year 1426, which the Dutchess Margaret augmented in 1484, and is now in a flourishing State. Here is a Chamber of Accounts and a Bailiage. This City was heretofore well Fortified, but the present French King made himself Master of it in the Month of February 1668, and dismantled it before he restored it to the Spaniards, as he was forced to do by the Treaty of Aix la Chapelle; by which means he the easier retook it in 1674, and hath ever since possessed it. The other Towns contain nothing very considerable.

III. The Bailiage of POLIGNY, or AVAL, or the Lower Bailiage of the County of Burgundy, is situated between Switzerland on the East, Bresse on the South, the Dutchy of Burgundy on the W. and the middle Bailiage, or that of Dole on the North. The chief Towns in it are.

Poligny, } } Orgeler,
Salins, } } Arbois,
S. Claude, Abb. } } Neseroy, Batrans, } } Jougne.

Poligny, Polichnium, Polenium, and Poliniacum, stands near a small River that runs into the Doux, and was formerly well Fortified, and more considerable than at present. Its Suburbs are large, encompass'd with Gardens, Hills, and Forests, and the Wines made here are highly esteemed. It is distant 20 miles from Dole to the S. E. 30 from Besancon, 25 from the Frontiers of Switzerland, and 35 from Geneva to the N. W.

Salins, Salinae, and Salierſe Castrum, is pleasantly seated in a Valley between two Mountains, on the Rivulet of Forica, at the distance of 12 miles from Poligny to the N. E. and 20 from Besancon to the S. taking its name from an admirable Spring of Salt-waters, whereof are made vast quantities of pure white Salt, that afford a large Revenue to the Prince. This Town is extended very far in length, and well Fortified, its Walls being flanked with high Towers, besides two Castles that defend it on all sides, and the Cittadel on the top of a steep Rock, rendering it almost impregnable. The Hall or Store-house, commonly call'd La Grand Saulnerie, (wherein the Salt is boiled and preserved, and the Officers employed in this Operation have their Lodgings) is a stately Building.

S. Claude, Fanum S. Claudii, is a strong Hold on the Frontiers of Beugey, and the Country of Gex, about 3 Leagues from the River Rhosne, and 5 from Geneva to the West. It was formerly call'd St. Oyen de Joux, Fanum Sancti Eugendi; and is now chiefly remarkable for its Famous Monastery, in which is preserved the Body of St. Claude, Archbishop of Besancon, in the VII Century, whose name is communicated to this Town and part of Mount Jura in the adjacent Territory.

On the East side of the Franche Comté, stands the ridge of Mountains, call'd Mont Jura, which extends from near Basil on the Rhine in the N. quite as far as the River Rhosne, and the Province of Beugey in the S. being the whole length of this Country, and divides it from Switzerland; but in several places they bear different Names: At the South end it divides into two Branches, whereof one extends to the Rhosne, about 12 or 15 miles below Geneva, and is call'd the Credo; the other divides the Franche Comté from Beugey, and is named Mont St. Claude from a little Town near it; about the Head of the River Doux, it is call'd Mont de Joux; in the Neighbourhood of Basil, Pierrepont, and Botzberg, and a little more Southward, Schaffmas, and by the Swissers Leenberg.

This Government is divided between two Governours-General, whereof one hath the Dutchy of Burgundy, Bresse, Beugey, Valromey, and Gex, under his Care; Subordinate to whom the Count d' Armagnac is Hereditary Grand Seneschal, and under him are five Lieutenants Generals, twelve Bailiffs, and thirteen Governors of Places, viz. of Dijon, Auxois, Challan, Bellegarde, Taland, Semur in Auxois, the Bridge of Mascon, Ausun, Beaune, Bourbon, Lancy, Avalon and Charillon.

In the County of Burgundy, is a Governor General, and under him one Lieutenant-General, and eleven Gover-

Governors of Places in these Towns, viz. Besancon, the Citadel of Besancon; also the Fort of S. Stephen, and the Fort Grisin, in the same City have different Governors; Dole, Salins, the two Forts of S. Andrew and Blim, the Castle of Joug, and Town of Pontarlier, the Castle of B'amount, and the Castle of Mentheliard.

The Burgundians, who gave name to this Country, were once a very powerful Nation, possessing not only this Dutchy and County of Burgundy, but also Astoria, Switzerland, Wallisland and Savoy, and afterwards Dauphine, Lyonnois and Nivernois also; which great Tract of Country was divided by the Romans into Burgundy Trans, and Cis Jura, with respect to Mount Jura. They were originally a Tribe of the Vandals, and came from the Parts about Mecklenburg and Pomerania, and like the rest of those Northern Nations, a rough unciviliz'd People, living in Tents clap'd up for their present Occasions, which in their Language were called Burghs, and thence the Men Burgundians: Thus saith Agathias and other Historians. But Isidore derives their Name from Ognius, under which name they worshipp'd Hercules: But this, as all Etymologies, is very uncertain; the former seems much the more Natural, and is therefore generally followed. About the beginning of the fifth Century they received Christianity, and began to inhabit the Towns along the Banks of the Rhine, and by their valiant resistance of the Huns, obtained great Reputation, and for that reason were called into Gaul by Stilico the Roman General, to assist him against the Franks, and for their Service had the two Burgundies assigned them; to which they afterward added Lyonnois, Nivernois and Dauphine, and erected a Kingdom, which continued for 120 years in an uninterrupted Succession; at the end of which, Childebert and Clotaire, the French Kings of Paris and Soissons, defeated and slew Gundomer, the last Burgundian King, by which that Kingdom being broken, the Eastern Parts were seized by others, and the Western made Parts of the French Kingdoms, and remained so for some Ages, till at length Lewis the Godly, Son of Charles the Great, in the Partition that he made of the Kingdom Charlemaign left him (already mentioned) erected Burgundy again into a Kingdom; the chief Seat whereof being Arles it was sometimes called the Kingdom of Arles. In this State it continued for near 200 years, till the death of Redolph III. 1032, who leaving no Issue, bequeathed his Estate to Comale the Emperor, who had married his Sister; or Niece, as others say: After which it was again divided among several Princes; this now called the Dutchy of Burgundy, the Ancestors of Hugh Capet enjoy'd, and by his Son King Robert it was annexed to the Crown; but by his Successor Henry I. given in appenage to his Brother Robert, whose Posterity continued Dukes of Burgundy till 1361. when Eudes IV. leaving only one Son, who died young, the Dutchy was claimed by John King of France, Charles King of Navarre, and Edward Count of Barr, all three Descended from the Sisters of Eudes; of these John got the better, and gave it to his younger Son, Philip, who by Marriage obtained also the Counties of Burgundy and Flanders, and his Successors added almost all the Netherlands; insomuch, that Philip the Good, and Charles the Warlike, the two last Kings of Burgundy, were as powerful Princes as any in Europe: But the latter being kill'd in his Wars against the Swissers, A. 1476. and leaving no Male Issue, Lewis XI. seized the Dutchy as an Escheat to the Crown; and it hath ever since been retained by the Kings of France; but the County of Burgundy with the other Estates of that Prince, descended to Mary, Daughter of Charles, who marrying Maximilian of Austria, afterwards Emperor, brought the Netherlands into that Family, and Philip the Son of Mary and Maximilian, married Joan, Queen of Castile, and begat Charles V. who was Emperor of Germany, King of Spain and the Indies, Duke of Burgundy, and Lord of the Netherlands; as will be seen more particularly in our account of Belgium.

C H A P. IX.

The Government of LYONNOIS, Lugdunensis Provincia.

THE Government call'd LYONNOIS, comprehends the ancient Gallia Celtica, or at least the greatest part thereof, being bounded on the North by Berry, Nivernois and Burgundy; on the South by the Mountains of Cevennes, and the Country of Rouergue; on the East by Bresse and Dauphine, and on the West by Quercy, Limousin, Angoumois and Poitou. It lies between the 44th degree 26 min. and the 46th deg: 46 min. Latitude, in its greatest breadth from South to North, consisting of about 140 English miles, that is to say, from the Frontiers of Rouergue to Dun-le-ros, on the Frontiers of Berry; as also between the 13th degree, and 23d degree of Longitude. And in its greatest length from W. to E. includes the space of 110 miles, viz. from beyond the Town of Availle on the River Vienne near the Confines of Poitou, as far as Lyons. The Soil here is not so Fertile as in other Parts, by reason of the many Mountains that rise up in some of its Parts. The principal Rivers are the Loire, the Rhone, the Saone, and the Allier.

In this Government are com-priz'd six different Countries, viz.

Lyonnois , Proper	Lyons , Archbish.
Forets ,	Montbrison ,
Beaujolais ,	Beaujeu ,
Bombonnois ,	Moulins ,
Auvergne ,	Clermont ,
Maiche ,	Gueret .

LYONNOIS, properly so call'd, Lugdunensis Ager, is of but small extent, it lies along the Banks of the River Rhone and Saone, and is from North to South about 45 miles, and from East to West not above 12 or 15 miles, and is bounded by Dauphine; from whence it is separated by the Rhone and Bresse and Beaujolais on the North. Forets on the West, and Vivarets on the South. The Country round about Lyons produces more Grapes than Corn, and the rest is Fertile enough in both, and yields excellent Fruits. Its most considerable Towns are these, viz.

Lyons,

Lyon, Archbish. }
S. Chamaent, }
 } Coadjutor, } Anse, } Bresse.

LYONS, Lugdunum, is a large, populous and flourishing, and next Paris may be reckon'd the richest, largest, and most trading City of all France, except Rouen be prefer'd, which she claims; however it is, Lyon is very considerable on account of its great Traffick, which its convenient Situation on the Rivers Rhone and Saone, and on the Road to Italy doth much assist. It is the See of an Archbishop, who hath the Title of Primate of Gaul; also a Generality, Election, Seneſchalcy, Presidial, and a particular Court for Merchants, call'd the Tribunal of Commerce, and hath also a Famous University, and an Exchange or Course of Money. The Origin of this City is much disputed; some Authors report it to have been built by one Lugdus, a King of the Celts: Strabo makes Memor a Gaulish Prince its Founder, which is also disputed by others; and concerning its Name, there is the same difference, some deducing it from Lugdus abovementioned, and the old Gaulish Word Dunum, a Mountain or rising Ground, such a one being near it; others from an old Gaulish Word, imitating a Hill of Crows, from a lucky Omen of these Birds at its Foundation. There are many others too long and trivial to mention here. It is seated at the Foot of the Mountains on the Frontiers of the Provinces of Bresse and Dauphine, being separated from the latter only by the River Rhone, which passing by the City, hath a long Stone-Bridge over it, and a little below receives the Saone, over which in like manner are three fair Bridges. The Town is divided into two Parts, the Greater whereof lying between the Rhone and the Saone, is the Quarter of St. Nizier, and the lesser that of St. John. These two Quarters are sub-divided into 32 Wards or Precincts, call'd Paroisses, and every one of them hath its particular chief Sub-ordinate Officers. The City is likewise surrounded with very large Suburbs, and fenced with an old Castle built on an adjacent Rock, named Pierre-Scize, and it is adorn'd with many stately Edifices, among which the Guild-Hall or Town-House is chiefly conspicuous, and esteem'd as a Master-piece of Architecture. Here are likewise to be seen the Remains of some Ancient Roman Works, particularly of an Amphitheatre, divers Aqueducts, publick Baths, &c.

The City of Lyon having been burnt by Lightning in the time of Nero, A. C. 59 was re-built by the Liberality of that Emperor, according to Tacitus; which Conflagration is also mention'd by Seneca, in one of his Epistles to Lucilius. Afterwards Severus pillag'd and burnt it in 195, in Revenge, because the Inhabitants had entertain'd Arminius his Enemy. It also suffered often by the Incursions of the Germani, Goths and Saracens. The Emperor Claudius was born in this City; and the Emperor Gratian slain in it by Andragathus, A. D. 383. And two General Councils were assembled here in the Years 1245 and 1274. Lyon is distant 120 miles from Paris to the S. E. 150 from the Banks of the Mediterranean Sea to the N. 250 from Bordeaux to the E. 70 from Genoa to the S. W. 110 from Nancy to the S. E. 105 from Dijon to the South, and 40 from the Frontiers of Savoie to the West.

FORETIZ, Forajis Provincialis, is usually divided into two Parts, viz. the Upper and Lower, bounded on the E. by Lyonnois, and Brachetis, on the N. by Brachetis and Dauphine, on the S. by Vallay, and Vi- lars, and on the W. by the Mountains of Auvergne, comprehending these principal Towns, viz.

Montbrison, }
S. Etienne, }
 } Rouanne, } Feneux,

Montbrison, Montbrisonum, and Mont-Brison, is situated on the Rivulet of Pecize, at the distance of 6 miles from the River Loire, and 30 from Lyon to the W. 30 from the Borders of Beaugogne to the S. and 20 from the Borders of Velay. It was at first only a Castle, but encreased to a Town and enclosed with Walls in the year 1428. It is adorned with a Collegiate Church dedicated to the Virgin Mary, divers Monasteries, a Court of Election and a Provostship.

S. Etienne, or S. Steven de Furens, Furanium or Forum Sancti Stephani, is seated on the foot of a Hill on the Banks of the Brook Furens, about two Leagues from the River Loire to the E. and 20 from Montbrison to the S. E. The adjacent Country affords good store of Pit-coal, and the Waters of the Brook Furens are very proper for the tempering of Iron and Steel, which advantage hath induced the Inhabitants to make vast quantities of small Iron ware, maintaining a very great Trade in these sorts of Merchandizes, which are transported by them into almost all the Countries of Europe. The Town of St. Stephen suffer'd much damage during the Civil Wars, and was twice taken by the Protestant Party, viz. in 1563. and 1570.

Rouanne, or Rouanne, Rhodunna, is a large Town, but destitute of Walls, and Founded on the Banks of the River Loire, where it begins to be capable of admitting small Boats at the distance of 20 miles from Montbrison to the N. The adjacent Country is call'd from thence Rouannois, and was erected into a Duchy by King Charles IX. The Town it self being beautified with a fair College of Jesuits, and divers other Monasteries.

Feuers, Forum Segusianorum, the chief Town of the Upper Foretz, from whence the whole Country takes its name, stands on the East-side of the Loire, near its Confluence with the Lignon, 10 miles N. E. from Montbrison, and 20 from Rouanne to the South, and 20 from Lyon to the W.

BEAUGOIS, is extended from E. to W. from beyond the River Saone to the Loire, on the N. of Lyonnois, having the principality of Dombes, and part of Majestatis on the E. Charolois on the N. and Forez on the W. This Country affords abundance of Corn, Wine and Flax, and hath these considerable Towns, viz.

Beaune, Ville Franche, Belle-ville, &c.

Beaune, Baujevinum, Ballejevinum and Behijocum, is a small Town together with a Castle, (on the Rivulet Ardiere,) which hath imparted its name to the Territory of Beaune, and the Lords of the ancient and Illustrious Family of Beaune; being distant 25 miles from Lyon to the N. and 5 or 6 from the River Saone. Over the Gate of the principal Church of this Burgh is to be seen a very old piece of Work-manship in Basso-Relievo, representing a Roman Sacrifice of a Hog, a Sheep, and an Ox.

Ville Franche, Francopolis or Villa Franca, is water'd by the Brook Morgon, which a little below falls into the Saone, and stands upon the Road in the Mid-way between Lyon and Beaune, 20 miles from Majestatis to the S. It is at present the chief Town of Beaugogne, and remarkable for its Collegiate Church, Academy, Court of Election, Bailiage, and Granary of Salt.

BOURBONNOIS, Borbonensis Provincia, is divided into the Upper and Lower, and bounded on the E. by the River Loire, which divides it from the Duchy of Burgundy, on the W. by Berry, on the S. by Auvergne and Forets, and on the N. by Nivernais, and part of Berry. It is extended from W. to E. for the space of about 70 Miles, and 45 from S. to N. The Ancient Inhabitants of Bourbonnois, who were a part of the Boii, sent many Colonies into Germany and Italy, under Ambigatul Prince of the Bituriges, and often maintain'd furious Wars against the Romans. This Province hath also acquired Reputation by its Lords, Barons, Counts and Dukes, from whom the present King of France is descended. The Mineral Waters of Bourbon have been mentioned in speaking of Bourbon-Lancy, in Burgundy. The most remarkable Towns of Bourbonnois are these, viz.

Moulins,	} Vichy,
Bourbon l'Archamb-		S. Geran,
baut,		Gannet.
Monluffon,

Moulins, Moulinae, is seated near the River Allier, in a large Fruitful Plain, at the distance of 140 miles from Paris, and 20 from Nevers to the S. about 50 from Clermont to the N. and 70 from Challou to the W. It is a Town of very large extent, and was formerly the usual Place of Residence of the Princes of Bourbon, who built the Castle, which hath often been the Royal Seat of the French Kings. This Town is also Famous on the account of the singular Virtue of the Medicinal Waters, and the Inhabitants for their Skill in making divers sorts of Knives, &c. Moulins is usually divided into 4 Quarters, viz. The Old Town, the New, the Suburbs of the Carmelites, and those of the Allier. CHAP. X.

GUIENNE, Aquitania or, Aremorica.

THE Government of GUIENNE, which is dignified with the Title of a Duchy, was heretofore call'd the Kingdom of Aquitaine ab Aquis; that is to say, from the great number of Springs of hot Water found therein, and was then of larger extent than at present: That part of it which lies on the North-side of the Garonne is termed Guienne, and the other on the farther side of the same River to the South, bears the Name of Gascony.

The whole Country in General is bounded on the North by Poitou, Angoumois and Marche; on the East, by Auvergne and Languedoc, on the South by the Pyrenean Mountains, that separate it from Spain, and on the West by the Ocean; lying between the 42d Degree 25 Minutes, and 46th Degree of Latitude; as also between the 14th Degree 20 Minutes, and the 20th Degree and 50 minutes of Longitude; which extent comprehends the space of 230 English miles from South to North; that is to say from Vic de Sos on the Pyrenean Mountains to that of S. Jean de Angely on the Borders of Poitou, and about 250 miles from West to East, viz. from S. Jean de Luz, beyond Bayonne as far as beyond S. Genier in Rouergue, near Geracudan.

The Air is gentle and every where very healthful, and the Soil Fertile in Corn, Grapes and other Fruits, excepting in the Sandy Grounds on the Sea-coasts and the Pyrenean Mountains, where there are only Heaths and some Pastures. This Province is water'd with a great many considerable Rivers, viz. the Garonne or Gironde, the Lot, the Dordogne, the Adour, the Charente, &c. But the Garonne more especially facilitates the Traffick of the Inhabitants, which consists in Corn, Wine, Oil, Prunes, Wool, &c.

Aquitaine, in the Roman Division of Gaul, by Augustus, was divided into the Prima and Secunda, and compriz'd all the Country between the Loire and the Pyrenees: Which was by Valentinian III. given to the Goths, as we have elsewhere already said: These were in time conquer'd by the French, and Aquitaine made a part of their Kingdom, till Lewis, the Godly made it a distinct one, and gave it to his Son Pepin; but Charles the Bald dispossest the Sons of Pepin, and bestow'd it on Arnulph of Burgundy, A. 844. whose Nephew William Earl of Auvergne, that succeeded him, bequeath'd his Estates to Ebles III. Earl of Poitou, from whom descended Eleanor Wife of our King Henry II. in whose right he succeeded in the Duchy of Aquitaine, and his Sons Richard and John successively enjoy'd it after him; but in the time of the latter it was seiz'd by the French King Lewis VIII. A. 1202. which causing great Wars between the two Nations, it was at length agreed between Henry III. King of England, and Lewis IX. King of France, That the English should quietly possess Guienne, bounded on the N. by the River Charante, and on the S. by the Pyrenean Mountains, and quit Normandy, Anjou, Touraine and Maine, which they before possess'd. And from this time our Kings were stiled only Dukes of Guienne; which Dignity and Country they enjoy'd till the time of Henry VI. in whose unfortunate Reign the English lost all their Possessions in France; since when all Aquitaine hath been part of the Kingdom of France.

AIRE, Alura, Atura, Aurum, & Aurum, formerly Vico-Julius & Atusatum, is seated on the River Adour, 45 Miles from Auch to the West, 60 from Bordeaux to the South, and 70 from Bayonne to the East. The Kings of the Visigoths were wont to keep their Courts in this City, and on the Bank of the River are still to be seen the Ruins of the Palace of Alarie: Since which, the City of Aire hath been often ruin'd by the Saracens, Normans, and other Nations, and suffer'd much Damage during the late Civil Wars of France. It is an Episcopal See subject to the Metropolitan of Auch, and the Civil Government depends on the Courts of Judicature of Bazas, from whence Appeals lie to the Parliament of Bordeaux. The most remarkable publick Buildings are, the Abbey of St. Quiterne, and the Cathedral of the Virgin Mary. Two Arch-deaconries appertain to the Chapter, and the whole Diocesis is divided into six Arch-Priest-hoods.

Condom, Bish. Mont de Marsan.

Condom, Condomum & Condomus, is seated on the River Blaise, and distant 20 Miles from Auch to the North, 40 from Bazas to the South-East, and 15 from Agen to the South. It is but a small City, however an Episcopal See, erected in the Year 1327. by Pope John XII. who gave it to the Revenue of an Abbey of the Benedictine Order, which is now the Cathedral Church. Reimond Goulard the last Abbot, was the first Bishop of Condom, and the Canons were seculariz'd in 1549. Here are also many other Churches and Monasteries. This City was taken by Sebriel de Monmorancy, chief of the Protestant Party, in 1569.

Mont de Marsan, Mons Martiani, stands on the Banks of the River Adour, 46 Miles from Condom to the the West, and 15 from Aire to the North toward Bordeaux. It is the chief Town of a Territory of the same Name, and was built by Peter Count of Bigorre, A. D. 1141.

The LANDES or LANNES, Landaarum Tractus, or Lande Burdigalensis, is a sandy and barren Country, lies West from Condomois to the Seacoast between Baïques on the South, Guienne on the North, and the Ocean on the West, being divided into the Greater Landes between Bordeaux and Bayonne, and the Lesser between Bazès and Mont-Marsen; its principal Towns are these, viz.

Dax, Bish. Abret, &c.

Dax or D'acq, Aquæ Augustæ or Tarbellicæ, is situated on the Adour, 40 miles below Aire, and 25 above Bayonne, about 70 miles South from Bordeaux. It is a fair well built City, and drives a good Trade by means of the River, (which falls into the Ocean but 30 miles below it) and its Neighbourhood to Spain. It hath a Castle for its defence, which is flank'd with many large round Towers, wherein a sufficient Garrison is maintain'd. It is also famous for its Baths of hot Water, that were much esteemed even in the time of the Romans. On which account it acquir'd the Name of Aquæ, from whence also proceeded that of the whole Province of Aquitaine. This City is the See of a Bishop, Suffragan to the Archbishop of Auch; and a Seneschalcy.

Abret, Lebretum or Lebreti Vicus & Abbretum, is built in the midst of a Forest of the same Name, 40 miles from Dax to the North-east, 30 from Bordeaux to the South, and 25 from Bazès to the South-west. The Town and adjacent Country which it gives name to, was dignified with the Title of a Duchy by Henry II. King of France. From the noble Family of Albert were descended two Kings of Navarre.

The County of LABOURD or BASQUE, borders on the Frontiers of Spain, lying between the Landes and the Pyrenean Mountains, having Bearn on the East, and the Sea on the West. The places of chief Note are, Bayonne, Bish. S. Jean de Luz.

Bayonne, Lapurdum, or Bayona, is a large, rich and well fortified City, at the Mouth of the River Adour, near its confluence with the Nive; 15 miles from the Confines of Spain to the South, 25 from d'Acqs to the South-west, 100 from Bordeaux, and 390 from Paris. Some Authors are of opinion, That it was the Aquæ Tarbellicæ of the Romans; but it is certain, that its ancient Name was Lapurdum, on which account its Episcopal See (which depends on the Metropolitan of Auch) was stiled, Episcopatus Lapurdensis, or of Labourd, until about the Year 1150. when it began to be call'd Bayonnensis of Bayonne. Also the whole Territory lying between S. Sebastian and Fontarabia, was part of the Vicounty of Bayonne, and possessed by the Vicount, A. D. 1177. according to the Report of Roger Hoveden and Peter de Marca, who also with others, affirm, That the Country belong'd to the Diocess of Bayonne, till the time of Philip II. King of Spain, who first obtained for it a Vicar-General during the Civil Wars of France, notwithstanding the Remonstrance of its proper Diocesan the Bishop of Bayonne. The City of Bayonne is one of the Keys of the Kingdom of France on the side of Spain; and hath a very capacious safe and deep Harbour, (a great number of Vessels passing even into the midst of the Town) and a strong Castle with a good Garrison. The Cathedral bearing the Names of the Virgin Mary and S. Leger is surrounded with many other Churches, and diverse Monasteries. Not far from this City stands a high Mountain, from the top whereof one may take a prospect of the Three Kingdoms of France, Spain, and Navarre, &c.

Joannis Lucii & Luifium*, is seated on the Mouth of the Rivulet Urdacuris, not 10 miles from the Frontiers of Spain and Fontarabia to the East, and about 10 from Bayonne to the South-west. Near this Town in an Island made by the River Bidasson, which parts France and Spain call'd The Isle of Conference, were celebrated the Matrimonial Solemnities between the present French King Lewis XIV. and Maria Theresa of Austria, Infanta of Spain, A. D. 1660.

The Lower NAVARRE, Navarra Inferior, is join'd to the Country of Labourd on the West, and that of Bearn on the East, and the Pyrenees on the South. It is a mountainous and barren Country, and except Fruit which is delicate here, and some Pasturage, produces but little. In it are these Towns,

S. Palais, S. Jean de Pied de Port, &c.

S. Palais, Fanum Sancti Palatii, situated in the Territory of Mixe on the little River of Ridouze, 30 miles South-east from Bayonne, 8 from the Confines of Bearn to the West, and about 20 from the Pyrenean Mountains to the North. In this Town were held the Sovereign Courts of Justice, and Chancery for the whole Country before it was united to the Parliament of Pau, A. D. 1620.

S. Jean de Pied de Port, Fanum S. Joannis Pedepertuensis, anciently Imum Pyreneum, is a well fortified Town, built amidst the Mountains on the Banks of the River Nive at the distance scarcely of 3 miles from the Confines of the Upper Navarre and the Pyrenean Mountains, 20 from S. Palais to the South-west, and 30 from Bayonne to the South-east.

The Vicounty of SOULE is a small Territory extended along the side of the River Gave de Susen, between Bearn to the East, and the Lower Navarre on the West. It comprehends 50 Parishes and only one considerable Town, viz. That of Mauléon de Soule, which gave Birth to that Learned Prelate Henricus Spondanus, or Henry Sponde Bishop of Pamiers, &c.

Its utmost extent from South to North consists of about 50 miles. This Province is dignified with the Title of a Principality, and was at first possessed by its own Princes. Afterward it became subject to the Dominion of the Kings of Navarre, and was at length annexed to the Demesns of the Crown under Henry IV. The chief Towns are,

Pau, Oleron, Bish. L'Escau, Bish.

Pau, Palum, is seated on the River Gave de Pau, 30 miles from Aire to the South, as many from the Frontiers of Spain, 40 from S. Palais, and 60 from Bayonne to the East. It is a large Town, and the Seat of one of the Parliaments of France, and hath a Castle for at its distance, wherein on the 13th day of December, 1457. was born Henry IV. surnamed the Great, King of France and Navarre.

Oleron, Oleronensis Urbis, Elorona and Iluro, stands on the Foot of the Pyrenean Mountains, 12 miles from Pau to the West, 20 from the Frontiers of Navarre, and about as many from those of Arragon to the North. This City is the See of a Bishop subject to the Metropolitan of Auch. It was formerly destroy'd by the Normans, and rebuilt by Count Centullus, A. D. 1080. The Gave, a River, separates it from the Suburbs of St. Mary, in which stands the Cathedral Church and some other fair Buildings. The Protestants made themselves Masters thereof in the Civil War time, and Gerard le Roux or Roussel, was install'd Bishop, by Margaret Queen of Navarre.

Lescar or Lascar, Lascaris, derives its Name (says Peter de Marca) from the Winding reaches of the Brooks (called in the Basque Language Lascouries) with which it is water'd: It is distant 4 or 5 miles from Pau to the East, and 12 from Oleron to the North, and is also an Episcopal See. This City was Founded A. D. 1000, by the Duke of Gascony on the Ruins of the ancient Benearnum, which had been utterly raz'd by the Normans in 845. In the Cathedral Church of the Virgin Mary were the Tombs of the Kings of Navarre, but they were demolished by the Fury of the Civil Wars.

The County of BIGORRE, is bounded on the West by Bear, on the East by Cominges and Conserans, on the North by Armagnac, and on the South by the Pyrenean Mountains. Its extent from South to North includes about 40 or 50 miles, and from West to East about 20 or 25. This Province is divided into three parts, viz. the Mountains, the Plain and the Territory of Rustan. The Mountains are said to have Mines of Copper, &c. but they are not open. Eneco Arista possessed this Country A. C. 828. before the Kingdom of Navarre was Founded, and after many Revolutions King Henry IV. united it to the Crown of France. The Principal Towns, &c. of it are these, viz.

Tarbe, Bish. } Lourde.
Vic de Bigorie. } Campen.
The Baths of Baretge.

Tarbe or Tarbes, Tarba, is seated on the Banks of the River Adour in a Fertile Country, at the distance of 30 miles from Aux to the South-west, and 25 from Pau to the East. It is a well-built City, but hath only one Street, together with a Castle called Bigorne, whence (de Marca says) the whole Province hath its name. The See of a Prelate, Suffragan to the Archbishop of Auch, hath been long since establish'd here: as also, a Seneschal Court. The Cathedral Church is dedicated to the Virgin Mary.

COMINGES, Comenensis Ager, lies between Languedoc on the East, Armagnac on the North, the County of Bigorre on the West; and Conserans, on the South. This Country was possessed by certain particular Counts, until it escheated to the Crown of France; It is reasonable Fruitful in Wine, Fruits and Pasturage. And is divided into the Upper or Cominges, and the Lower or Lombes. Wherein are contained these Towns of chiefest note, viz.

S. Bertran de Cominge, Bish. Lombes Bish.

St. Bertrande de Cominges, Convena or Lugdunum Convenarum, and Lugdunum Aquitanice, is situated on a Hill near the Banks of the River Garonne and the Confines of Conserans, 16 miles from Aque Convenarum or Bugneres, according to the Itinerary of Antoninus, 50 miles from Thoulouse, to the South-west, 40 from Auch to the South, and 30 from Tarbe to the South-East. The ancient City of Convena was raz'd by the French, A. C. 584. and another built out of its Ruins in 1100 by S. Bertrand, from whom its modern Name is deriv'd. It is an Episcopal See subject to the Metropolitan of Auch, and its Royal Court of Justice depends on the Parliament of Thoulouse. The Bishop hath a Seat in the Assembly of the States of Languedoc.

Lombes, Lombardia and Lambarium, is a small City on the Rivulet of Save, distant 30 miles from S. Bertrand, to the North; 20 from Auch to the South-East, 25 from Thoulouse to the South-west. Its Episcopal See under the Metropolitan of Thoulouse, was erected out of an ancient Abby of Augustin Monks, A. D. 1317. by Pope John XXII. who nominated one Arnold Roger of Cominges to be the first Bishop of this Diocess.

CONSERANS or COSERANS, is a Vicountry lying to the South of Cominges proper, between Languedoc and the Pyrenean Mountains. It was first possessed (as it is generally believed) by Arnold of Spain, under the Title of a County, then pass'd into the Family of the Counts of Carcassone, and from thence was translated to the House of Navarre, &c.

Lizierii, the Capital of Conserans, is a small City seated on the River Salur, which about 10 miles from hence falls into the Garonne, and is distant 30 miles from Thoulouse to the South-W. 46 from Auch to the South-East, and 18 from S. Bertrand to the East. It is the See of a Bishop, and hath a Royal Court of Justice dependant on the Parliament of Thoulouse. The City is divided into two Parts, viz. The City and the Town; the former, properly called Coserans, is adorned with a Cathedral dedicated to the Virgin Mary, and in the other, named S. Lizier, stands another Cathedral.

The PYRENEAN Mountains which serve as a Boundary between the two Kingdoms of Spain and France, begin near the Town of S. Jean de Luz on the Ocean, and continue Eastward quite cross the Isthmus that joins Spain to the Continent of Europe, as far as Perpignan on the Mediterranean; the highest of them is that named Mont-Carrigo, between Roussillon and Catalonia, towards the Country of Conflent on which Snow lies unmelted the greatest part of the Year.

Guienne hath a Governor-General, a Commandant; two Lieutenant-Generals, a Seneschal, and 12 particular Governors of Places. Saintonge and Angoumois have a Governor-General, a Lieutenant-General, two Seneschals, and three particular Governours of Places. CHAP. XI.

LANGUEDOC, Occivania, or Volcarum Regio.

THE Province of LANGUEDOC, including the Countries of Cerennes and Roussillon, is bounded on the East by the River Rhose, which divides it from Provence and Dauphine; on the North by Lyonnais, Auvergne, Rouergue and Quercy; on the West by A magnac and Cominges; and on the S. by the Mediterranean Sea and the Pyrenean Mountains. It is situated between the 41 Deg. 50 Min. and the 44 Deg. 54 Min. of Latitude; and between the 18 Deg. 5 Min. and the 22 Deg. 40 Min. of Longitude. Its extent from South to North is about 120 miles, and from W. to E, viz. from Rieux to Ville-Neuf-les-Avignon, 180 miles. In the Roman Division of Gaul, Languedoc went by the Name of the Gallia Narbonensis, and in the declining of the Empire it was possessed by the Goths, who here Founded the Kingdom of the Visigoths, which hath been extinct ever since the time of Charles Martel.

This Province is esteem'd the most Pleasant and Fruitful of any in the whole Kingdom of France, the Air being very Temperate and Healthful, and the Soil bringing forth abundance of Corn and excellent Fruits; its chief Commodities are Wine, Oil, Honey, Wax, Saffron, Silk and Salt. The Upper Languedoc affords good Pasture to many Herds of Oxen and Cows. Some Mines of rich Metals and Minerals are found here, and Quarries of Marble and Alabaster. Moreover all sorts of Fish are caught in the Rivers and on the Sea-coasts, and there are divers Springs of Mineral Waters very efficacious in curing Diseases.

But the Country of Cerennes hath not the same advantages, as being Mountainous, not so much cultivated, and less delightful in many places. However, it affords Millet, Chestnuts, and some other Fruits. The principal Rivers are the Rhose, the Garonne, the Tarn, the Vistre, the Vidale, the Barange, the Eraut, the Salazen, the Berre, the Pallas, the Agout, and the Aude, intermixing its Waters with those of the Fresquel, which is joined by a Canal with the Lesser Lers, that runs into the Garonne. This is that Famous Canal of Languedoc, which hath been lately cut with so vast Expence to make a Communication between the two Seas, viz. the Ocean and Mediterranean, and not yet altogether brought to Perfection. This Country, which hath been subject to a great number of Dukes, Vicounts, and divers other Lords, after many Revolutions, was united to the Crown by King John, A. D. 1361.

The States of Languedoc are very considerable, and their Assemblies are held every three Years by the three Orders, viz. the Clergy, the Nobles, and the third Estate; the first of these is composed of the three Archbishops; the Second of 22 Barons taken out of every Diocese; and the Third of 22 Consuls of the Capital Cities of every Diocese, &c. The whole Province of Languedoc is usually divided into the Upper to the West, and the Lower to the East, and these subdivided as in this Table.

TOULOUSAN, Tolosanus Ager, takes up the more Western part of the Upper Languedoc, along the Banks of the River Garonne, lying between Gascogne on the West, Albigensis on the East, and the Country of Feix on the South. It comprehends these principal Cities and Towns, viz.

Telouse, Archb. Lavaur, Bish.

TOULOUSE, THOULOUSE, or TOLOSE, Tolosa, is seated on the River Garonne, over which it hath a stately Stone-Bridge, call'd Pont-neuf. It is distant 330 miles from Paris, 140 from Limoges, and 55 from Cabors to the South, 60 from the Pyrenees to the North, 150 from Bayon, and 40 from Auch to the East, 170 from the River Rhose, and 100 from the Mediterranean to the West. It was heretofore the Seat of the ancient Tectosages, (who gain'd so many Conquests in Asia and Greece) and then a Roman Colony: In process of time it became the Metropolis of the Visigoths, afterward of Aquitain, and at length one of the most considerable Provinces, or Governments of France: Its Episcopal See, which before depended on the Jurisdiction of the Archbishop of Narbonne, was erected into a Metropolitan by Pope John XXII. A. D. 1317. Telouse is Famous for its Traffick, and since a Communication hath been made between the Western Ocean and the Mediterranean, may justly be stild the Mart of both Seas. The City is divided into 8 Parts, call'd Capitulares, to which a lesser Quarter, nam'd the Burgh, on the other side of the Garonne, was added in the Year 1346. The Magnificent Cathedral of St. Stephen, is built on a spacious Ground-plat, adorn'd with a Fountain, over which is erected an Obelisk wrought with curious Workmanship. Another Church dedicated to S. Sernim or Saturnin, the first Bishop of Tolouse, is remarkable for its Treasury of Relicks, as also is that of the Jacobins for the Shrine of Thomas Aquinas. Here are also to be seen many Monuments of Antiquity, particularly a Capitol and an Amphitheatre, together with divers Aqueducts, old Temples, &c. The University of Tolouse, is reputed to be the Second of the Kingdom, and consists of several Colleges, among which, that of Feix is the most Illustrious; and indeed this place hath been long since the Seat of the Muses, on which account it is call'd Palladis, or the City of Pallas by Martial, Ausinius.

Aquinus, and Sidonius Apollinaris. The Town-house is a stately Pile of Building, and hath acquir'd the name of the Capitol; neither perhaps will it be improper to mention the Mills of the Basade and Castle, every one of which hath 16 or 17 Mill-Stones for the grinding of Corn, and a great number of Engines for the currying of Leather. A Sovereign Court of Parliament was begun here in the time of King Philip the Fair, and established by Charles VII. Here is also a Seneschalcy and Generality. The City of Toulouse after divers Revolutions, remained long in the hands of its own Counts, till Philip the Hardy seiz'd on it, together with the whole County, A. D. 1271; and King John united it to the Crown in 1361.

About this City lie those spacious pleasant Fields, call'd by ancient Writers, Campi Catalaunici, in which that Famous Battle was Fought by Aetius the Roman General, assisted by the Franks, Burgundians and Goths, against Attila King of the Huns, whom they utterly defeated and kill'd near 200 Thousand of the 500 Thousand, 'tis said, he brought into the Field. Others place the Campi Catalaunici about Chaulons, in Champagne, tho' with less reason, this place agreeing best with the accounts given of them by the Ancients.

Lavaur, L'Avaur, or La Vaur, Vaurum, or Vaurium, stands on the Banks of the River Agour in the Upper Languedoc, and on the very confines of Albigensis, at the distance of 15 miles from Toulouse to the East. Isarn Bishop of Toulouse, gave the Town of Lavaur, in the year 1098, to Florady Abbot of S. Pons de Thomieses, on condition that he should Found a Priory in it; where afterward in 1318, Pope John XXII. established an Episcopal See.

ALBIGEOIS, Albigensis Tractus, lies between the Diocesis of Toulouse, Vabres, Lavaur and Rhodes, being the Country of the ancient Helufesi, mentioned by Cæsar. It is divided into two almost equal Parts by the River Tarn, and comprehends these chief Cities and Towns, viç.

Albi, Archbish. Castres, Bish. Realmont.

ALBI, Albigena, is situated on the River Tarn, in a very Fertile Country, about 35 miles from Toulouse to the North East, and 30 from Ville Franche, in Rouergue to the South. It's Bishop's See was formerly Suffragan to the Metropolitan of Bourges, but Pope Innocent XI. erected it into an Archbishoprick in the Year 1678. The Prelate of this City is also its Temporal Lord, and the King only maintains a Magistrate there, call'd the Viguier for holding the Royal Courts of Judicature. The Cathedral of St. Cécile hath one of the fairest Quires of France.

Castres, Castrum, or Castrum Albienſium, is a fair City on the River Agout, distant 20 miles from Albi to the South, and 40 from Toulouse. Its Episcopal See was Founded by Pope John XXII. in 1317, under the Metropolitan of Bourges, but it hath depended on that of Albi ever since the year 1678.

The Inhabitants of this Country have been Famous in Ecclesiastical History, by the name of Albigenses, for their early dissention from the Errors of the Church of Rome. They were a Branch of the Waldenses, who proceeded from Peter Waldo, a rich Merchant of Lyons, a very Pious and Charitable Man, who touched with the sudden Death of a Friend at a Feast, set himself seriously to Contemplate upon Eternity, and study the Holy Scripture, which led him to the discovery of the Errors of the Roman Church: And being exceeding Charitable in relieving the wants of the Poor, and doing other good Offices that lay in his Power, obtained great Respect, and Attention when he argued against the Supremacy of the Pope, Adoration of Images, Invocation of Saints, &c. His Followers grew numerous, and were call'd in Derision by the Papists, The poor men of Lyons, and afterwards Waldenses from this Waldo. The first mention of them in History is about the middle of the twelfth Century, when they began to be Persecuted by the Papists, and were forced to fly into Piedmont, where they incorporated with the Vaudi, (who were ancient Christians that had never been subject to the Pope's Authority) and were afterwards indifferently call'd Vaudois and Waldenses. Another part of them retiring into Languedoc, settled in this Province of Albigensis, and increased exceedingly. At first the Popes endeavoured to convert them by Preaching; to which purpose the Dominican order of Monks was instituted about the beginning of the thirteenth Century: But these not prevailing, and the Albigenses being grown strong by the Patronage of the Counts of Toulouse, whom they Converted, the Pope raised a Crusade against them, stirred up the Dukes of Austria against the Waldenses, and made our Simon Mountfort Earl of Leicester, Captain against the Albigenses, A. C. 1213, who with the Popes Legate, the Duke of Burgundy, and a great Army which was raised for (as they call'd it) this Holy War, were too strong for those poor People, took and plundered their Cities, and barbarously tormented and murdered their Persons, which caus'd them to fly into Provence and other Parts, and in time settled themselves at Merindol, Chabriers, and thereabouts; where in the year 1545, they were most barbarously massacred and cruelly tormented by the French Papists. Those that escaped, sent to Zuinglius for Teachers, and incorporated with the Calvinists, who altogether in time grew very numerous and powerful, as we have already shewn in the account of the Religion of France.

LAURAGAIS, Lauracus and Lauriacensis Ager; taking its name from the Town of Laureac, is extended between the Banks of the River Ariege and Agout. It is divided into two Parts, viç. The Upper and Lower. The chief Cities whereof are, Castlenaudary, S. Papoul, Bish.

Castlenaudary, Castellum Arianorum, or Castolavium Arianum, and Castellum Novum Arri, stands on a Hill on the Upper Lauragais, 20 miles from Castres to the South, and 30 from Toulouse to the South-East: A Seneschalcy Court and Presidial have been held in this Town ever since the Year 1553. The Marshal de Schomberg gain'd a memorable Battle not far from hence, over the Duke of Orleans, in which the Count d' Moret was Slain, and the Duke Montmorency Wounded and taken Prisoner, A. D. 1632. The new Canal passes through this Town, and by reason of a steep Hill which would cause too precipitate a flux of Water, here are five several Locks, with great Sluces one above another, and large Basins between each, whereby the Water is retained and the Navigation continued. These Sluces are Stupendious Works for Art and Strength.

S. Papoul, Fanum S. papuli or Papulepolis, is a small City on the Foot of Mount Noire, near the Rivulets of Rotoure and Lampi, about a League distant from Castlenaudary, and 15 from Carcassonne, to the N. W. A certain Monastery was built here about the end of the VIIIth Century which Pope John XXII. changed into a Cathedral Church, allotting 43 Parishes for its Diocesis, A. D. 1317.

The County of FOIX lies on the South-West of Languedoc, and is bounded on the S. by the Pyrenean Mountains and Roussillon, on the W. by Gascony, on the N. by Toulousan and Lauragais, and on the E. by Narbonne. It contains 16 Castellanies or small Governments, and many considerable Towns. It was subject to its own Counts, from whom descended Henry IV. King of France, and so it was added to the Crown, and made part of the Government of Languedoc. The chief Towns are,

The County of ROUSILLON, Ruscionensis Comitatus, and CONFLENT, lies on the other side of the Pyrenean, bounded on the North by Languedoc, on the South by Catalonia, and on the East by the Mediterranean Sea; its extent from West to East is about 60 miles, and 35 from South to North. This County was formerly part of Spain, but the French King Lewis XIII. took it, and it was granted to France by the Pyrenean Treaty, A. D. 1659. The most considerable Rivers are the Ter, the Tech, and the Egly; and the principal Towns are these, viz.

Perpignan, Bish. } Ville Franche de Con-

It was built in the year 1480. by Count Isnard, out of the Ruins of old Roussillon, as yet to be seen about half a League from thence, and at first belong'd to the Kings of Spain, till the French made themselves Masters of it in 1642. ever since which time it hath remained in their possession. This City is adorned with an University Founded by Perre King of Arragon, is dignified with the Title of an Episcopal See, under the Metropolitan of Narbonne, and hath a very strong Citadel for its defence.

It was an Episcopal See, but that was translated to Perpignan by Pope Clement VIII. A. D. 1604. The Town of Elne was subject to the King of Spain till 1640. at which time it fell into the hands of the French: A little below it are still to be seen the Ruins of a Castle, wherein Constant the Son of the Emperor Constantine was slain, during the Commotions raised by the Tyrant Magnentius.

Ville-Franche de Conflent, Villa Franca Confluentum, the chief Town of the Territory call'd Conflent, which lies among the Mountains, is seated at the Foot of the Pyrenean Mountains, about 25 miles from Perpignan to the S. W.

Narbonne, Archb. } Alet, Bish.
Carcassonne, Bish. } S. Pons de Tormiers, Bish.

Narbonne, Narbo, Narbon, and Dencamavorum Colonia, is commodiously seated in a low Country on an Arm of the River Aude, commonly called la Robine, which was cut by the Romans, and serves to convey Barks laden with Merchandizes from the Mediterranean Sea, from which it is distant but 2 Leagues. It is a large well fortified City, and one of the most ancient of the Kingdom, for the Romans establish'd their Colonies therein, as the Capital of one of their Divisions of Gaul, which from this City was called Gallia Narbonnensis; and it was the usual place of Residence of their Pro-consuls, who adorned it with a Capitol, and an Amphitheatre, together with divers Baths, Aqueducts, Municipal Schools, and granted great Privileges to the City, insomuch that the Inhabitants in gratitude for these Favours erected an Altar in honour of Augustus, as appears from an Inscription found here in the XVIth Century. The City of Narbonne hath been long since the See of an Archbishop, ever since the time of Constantine the Great, if we may give credit to some Writers, who also averr, that the Pro-consul Paulus Sergius, whom S. Paul had Converted, was its first Apostle and Prelate. The Archbishop is President of the States of Languedoc. The Cathedral bears the name of S. Justus and S. Pastor, and is remarkable for its admirable Organs and curious Paintings, wherein are represented the raising of Lazarus from the Dead, the last Judgment, &c. There are also 5 other Parochial Churches, the chief of which is the Collegiate Church of S. Paul, a College of the Fathers of the Doctrine, and divers Monasteries for Religious Persons of both Sexes. This City belonged to its own Dukes and Lords, till Gaston de Foix exchanged it with Lewis XIIth King of France, for other Lands in the year 1507. It is distant 80 miles from Toulouse to the East, 35 from Perpignan to the N. 100 from the River Rhodes to the West, and about 80 from Rodez to Rouvenne to the S. Carcass.

It is the Capital City of the Territory called from thence Carcaffez, or the Country of Carcaffonne, and is the See of a Bishop, Suffragan to the Archbishop of Narbonne. It is divided into three Parts, the Upper Town, the Lower where the Burgh formerly stood, and the Castle Precinct, and is especially noted for its woollen Manufactures, &c.

Alet, Alella, or Elella, stands in like manner on the Banks of the River Aude, at the Foot of the Pyrenean Mountains, 20 miles from Carcaffonne to the South, 20 from Minerps to the East, and 25 from Perpignan to the North-West. This City, together with the adjacent Country, was at first included within the Diocels of Narbonne, but was erected into an Episcopal See by Pope John XII.

S. Pons de Tomiers, Fanum S. Pontii Tomeriarum, Tomeria, and Pontropolis, was at first only an Abby of the Benedictine Order, Founded A. C. 936. by Raimond Count of Toulouse, in honour of S. Pons, Bishop of Cimble, of Nice, and Martyr; afterward it grew up into a Town, and Pope John XII. established an Episcopal See there, in 1318, but the Monks were not seculariz'd until A. 1625. The Bishop is Lord of this small City, which stands amidst the Mountains, about 25 miles from Narbonne to the North, as many from Castres to the East, and 25 from Abi to the South-West.

The Quarter of BESIERS, Bliterensis Tractus, is extended between that of Narbonne on the West, Revergue on the North, the Quarter of Nismes on the East, and the Sea on the South, comprehending these chief Cities and Towns, viz.

Besiers, Bish. } Lodeve, Bish.
Agde, Bish. } Pezenas.

Besiers or Beziers, Biteria, Bliteria, or Biterrensis Civitas, is a very ancient City seated upon a Hill, the Avenues whereof are of difficult access; near the small River Orb, which a little below falls into the Mediterranean. It was a considerable place in the time of the Romans, who built there two Temples in honour of Julius and Augustus; it was in a very flourishing state in the fourth Century, when the Goths took and ruined it: And when afterwards it had recovered it self, the Saracens pillaged it about the year 736. And to prevent its being again a Seat for those Infidels, Charles Martel quite destroy'd it. However, in time it was again rebuilt, and became flourishing and populous as it is. It was formerly a Vicounty under the Dukes of Septimania, but at length united to the Crown of France. This City is the See of a Bishop, hath still the Title of a Vicounty, Bailiage and Presidial, and is distant 2 Leagues from the Coast of the Mediterranean, 15 miles from Narbonne to the North-East, and 45 from Montpelier to the West.

Agde, Agatha, stands on the Bay of Lyons, a little above the Mouth of the River Erant, distant one League from the little Island Brescon to the North, 15 miles from Narbonne, and 12 from Besiers to the East, and about 40 from Montpelier to the West. This City is remarkable for its Trade, the beauty of its Buildings, and is an Episcopal See under the Metropolitan of Narbonne.

Lodeva, Luteva and Lutava, otherwise Glanum, stands at the Foot of the Mountains of Cevennes, on the Frontiers of Revergue, near the Rivulet of Lergue, which falls into the Erant, and is distant about 30 miles from Agde and Beziers to the North. It was dignified with an Episcopal See, under the Metropolitan of Narbonne by the favour of Pope John XXII. And the Bishop is its Spiritual and Temporal Lord, having a right to determine all Causes, Criminal and Civil, except High Treason, and assumes the Title of Count of Montbrun, which is an adjacent Castle: 800 Gentlemen formerly held Tenures in Fee of these Prelates, and the Bishoprick on that account was stiled the Noble. This City was exposed to great Calamities during the Wars of the Goths and Albigens; the French Protestants surpriz'd it in the Year 1573. and it was retaken by the Duke of Montmercy, A. D. 1583.

Pezenas, Piscena, is a fair neat Town, seated on a Hill, on the River Peyne, near the Erant, 12 or 14 Miles North from Agde, and 20 South from Lodeve; in which the States of the Province commonly assemble.

The Quarter of NISMES, Nemausensis Tractus, lies between that of Besiers on the West, the Mediterranean Sea on the South, Provence on the East, and Cevennes on the North; and contains the ensuing considerable Cities and Towns, viz.

Nismes, Bish. } Aigues-Mortes, Montpelier, Bish. } Lunel, Beaucaire, } Sommieres, &c.

Nismes, Nemausus, is most pleasantly seated, near the Spring-head of the River Vistre, as being surrounded on one side with Hills, on which grows abundance of Vines, and all sorts of Fruit-Trees, and on the other with a spacious Fertile Plain. But it is more especially Famous for its Antiquity, whereof as yet remain many illustrious Monuments: The chief of those is an Amphitheatre, built of Free-stone, of an extraordinary length and breadth, the out-side being adorn'd with Columns and their Cornishes, on which are to be seen the Roman Eagles, and the Figures of Remulus and Remus sucking a Wolf; besides the Temple of Diana, without the Town; an admirable Spring, expatiating in Form of a Pond, mentioned by Ausonius. And in this City was plac'd a Colony, which the Emperor Augustus brought out of Egypt, after the conquest of that Province, as appeareth from divers ancient Medals. Neither is its present Grandeur less considerable, for it is the Seat of a Bishop, subject to the Metropolitan of Narbonne, of a Seneschals Jurisdiction, called of Beaucaire and Nismes; of a Presidial Court; and of an University lately established. It is also a place of very good Trade, which consists chiefly in Woollen Stuffs made here. The City of Nismes was possessed by the Goths, till the time of Charles Martel; and by the Protestants during the Civil Wars of France: It is distant not above 10 miles from the River Rhosne to the East, 30 from Montpelier to the North-East, and 30 from the Mediterranean to the North.

Montpelier, Mons-Pessulanus, Mont-Pessulus, and Mons Luellarum, the Capital City of the Lower Languedoc, the largest and most flourishing of all the Province except Toulouse, is pleasantly seated on the top of a Hill, near the Rivulet of Lez, at the distance scarcely of one League from the Pool of Maguelonne, 2 from the Coasts of the Mediterranean Sea, and 60 miles from Narbonne to the East. The Episcopal See of Maguelonne, depending on the Metropolitan of Narbonne, was translated hither under the Popedom of Paul III. in the Year 1536. An University for the study of Physick, one of the most Famous throughout Europe, was found-founded here, as they say, by the Disciples of Averroes and Avicenna, A. D. 1196. and re-establish'd in 1220. Besides a Law Academy, a College of Jesuits, a Court of Aids, a Chamber of Aids, a Chamber of Accounts, a Generality and a Chamber of the Treasures of France, a Seneschals Court, a Presidial, a Chamber of the lesser Seal, and a Royal Court of ordinary Justice. This City is also adorn'd with divers stately Edifices, viz. The Hall of Justice or Sessions-house, the Churches of S. Peter and the Virgin Mary; and a strong Citadel flanked with 4 Royal Bastions; The King's Physick Garden, without the Town, and other Curiosities, that deserve well to be view'd by Travellers. The Inhabitants are employ'd in making of Treacle, Verdegrease, white Wax, Silk, and other sorts of Manufactures. James III. the Son of Sanchez, King of Majorca, sold the City of Montpellier to King Philip of Valois, A. D. 1349. for the Sum of 26000 Crowns of Gold. The French Protestants made themselves Masters of it in 1561. but Lewis XIII. took it from them after a vigorous Defence in 1622.

GEVAUDAN or GIVAUDAN, Gabalensis Ager, lies on the North of Beziers, and hath Vivarais and Velay for its Eastern bounds; the Diocess of Lodeve on the South, Rovergue on the West, and the Upper Auvergne on the North. This Country hath been some time possessed by certain particular Counts, and is very Fruitful, though encompassed with Mountains. The chief City is, Mende, Mimatium, or Mimate Gebalorum, is situated in a Valley surrounded with the Mountains of Cevennes, near the Source of the River Lot, 70 miles North from Montpellier, 20 from the Borders of Auvergne, and 50 from the River Rhodane. Some Authors make this the ancient Anderitum or Gabalum, but the Village Jevoux, 4 Leagues hence, seems rather to have been that, and that this grew out of its Ruins, having been at first only a Village or Hamlet. It is now a good City, the See of a Prelate, Suffragan to the Archbishop of Alby: The Bishop hath the Title of a Count, possesses the Lordship of the Mannor together with the King, having also enjoy'd in time past a Privilege of Coining Money. This City is beautified with divers fair Churches, a stately Episcopal Palace, &c.

VIVARAIS, Vivariensis Provincia, was the Country of the ancient Helvii, and is now part of Cevennes, lying between Languedoc proper on the South, Givaudan on the West, Forets and Velay on the North, and the River Rhodane on the East. Montpellier, and 70 miles South from Lyons. It was at first only a Village, and in process of time grew up into a large City, out of the Ruins of Abs or Abbe Helvicorum, which was destroy'd by Croesus King of the Germans; and that Episcopal See was remov'd thither about A. C. 430. The Bishop is stiled Count of Viviers and Prince of Donfere, Chateau-Neuf, &c.

Uzes, Ucesia, is the Capital City of a Country, thence so called, and dignified with the Title of a Dutchy, and an Episcopal See, depending on the Metropolitan of Narbonne. It is distant 12 miles from Nismes to the North, 30 from Viviers to the South, and 20 from Avignon to the West. On the Road between this City and that of Nismes, is to be seen the stately Bridge of Gard, built over the River Gardon between two Mountains; that are thereby join'd together; and indeed its Structure is admirable, as consisting in three Stories of Arches one above another, the last of which was an Aqueduct.

Pont S. Esprit, a small City with a good Castle, and a Stone-Bridge over the Rhodane, is seated on the borders of the Vivarais, and at the confluence of the Ardoche with the Rhodane, 20 miles from Uzes to the N. and 15 from Viviers to the South.

It is a fair, large, well-built City, and an Episcopal See, which depends immediately on that of Rome, not being subject to the Jurisdiction of any Metropolitan. The Cathedral dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is an ancient and Noble Pile of Building, but more especially Famous for the concourse of Pilgrims and other devout Persons, frequently resorting thereto. Here are also divers Parochial Churches and a great number of Monasteries. The Bishop is Count of Velay, and formerly had a Privilege to Coin Money: He administers Justice together with the King's Seneschal, who hath his Seat here.

THIS Province which bears the Title of a County, is bounded on the East by Piedmont and the River Var; on the South by the Mediterranean Sea, on the West by the River Rhone, that separates it from Languedoc, and on the North by Dauphine, being extended between the 42d Degree 30 Minutes, and the 44th Degree 6 Minutes of Latitude, as also between the 22d Degree 30 Minutes, and the 25th Degree 40 Minutes of Longitude, comprehending 180 English Miles from S. to N. and 130 from West to East.

PROVENCE was the first part of Gaul that the Romans got footing in, and was therefore call'd the Province of the Romans. In the Division by Augustus, this was the Gallia Narbonensis secunda. It was afterwards possess'd by the Goths: And under the French it was part of the Kingdom of Arles or Burgundy. Afterwards cut off from that, and govern'd by its own Counts for about 400 Years, till the Year 1481, when Charles, the last Earl of Provence bequeathed it to Lewis XI. King of France.

The Air is somewhat cold in the Upper Provence by reason of the Mountains, but the Country affords Corn, Wine, Almonds, and Fruit, as also very good Pasture for Cattle, &c. In the Lower Provence, along the Sea-Coasts it is hot, and hath little Winter except when the North Winds blow. The Soil there is very Fertile, and produces abundance of Corn, Grapes, Olives, Figs, Oranges, Limons, Citrons, Pomegranats, Apricocks, Plums, Almonds, Apples, Pears, &c. Divers sorts of excellent Fish are taken out of the Sea, especially Tunnies. The principal Rivers are the Rhone, the Durance, the Verdon, the Hubny, the Argens, the Var, the Arc, &c. It is a Maritime Province and hath these considerable Bays in the Mediterranean Sea, viz. Marseille, Toulon, Hieres, Grimaut and Lerins.

Provence is usually divided into the Upper, Middle and Lower; however, its several Parts may be better distinguish'd by the Diocesses, as they are placed in the ensuing Table.

AIX, Aque-sextia, the Metropolis of Provence, is seated in a Plain at the Foot of the Hill of S. Eutropius, and near the Rivulet of Arc, 20 miles from Marseille to the North, 50 from the Confines of Dauphine to the South, 80 from Montpellier, and about 40 from Arles to the East, and 90 from Nice to the West. It is a large, well-built and very ancient City, as deriving its Name from the Bagnio's that were erected by Caius Sextus, who brought hither a Roman Colony. It was formerly the usual Place of Residence of the Counts of Provence, and at present the See of an Archbishop, being also honoured with a Parliament, a Chamber of Accounts, a Court of Aids, a Generality, a Treasury-Chamber, the principal Seat of the Grand Seneschal of Provence, and that of the ordinary Judge, and another Magistrate appointed by the King, called the Viguier. This City was heretofore sacked by the Lombards, and afterwards by the Saracens; but it hath been since well repaired and much enlarged, so that it may be justly esteemed as one of the Noblest of the Kingdom. The Cathedral bears the Name of S. Saviour, and is adorned with a high Tower, a Hexagon Form: The Baptistery is an admirable Structure, being adorned with Pillars standing round about the Fonts, which support a Dome over them; and the Chapel of Nostre Dame de Grace is extremely rich. Here are also two Parochial Churches, viz. of S. Magdalen and the Holy Ghost, several Monasteries, a College of Jesuits, &c.

The Diocess of RIEZ, Reiensis Episcopatus, lies on the East of that of Aix, and hath these Towns, Riez, Bish. Valensole. Oreson.

Riez, Reii, Reii Apollinari and Regium, is situated in a Fruitful Country on the Rivulet of Auvertre, about 35 miles from Aix to the N. E. 45 from Toulon to the North, and as many from the Frontier of Dauphine to the South. It is a small City but well-built, and hath been very considerable in the Time of the Romans, as appears from divers Inscriptions and other Monuments of Antiquity found here. The Bishop is also temporal Lord of the Mannor and Suffragan to the Archbishop of Aix.

The Diocess of SENEZ, Saniciensis Diocesis, lies along along the Banks of the Verdun, on the North-East of Riez. Its chief Towns are, Senez, Bish. Castelaine, Colmars.

Senez, Sanitium or Sanecium, is a City below the Mountains, of very small compass, not much inhabited, and now almost reduc'd to a Village; nevertheless it retains the Title of an Episcopal See, under the Metropolitan of Ambrun, although its Bishop generally resides at Castelaine, a fair Town on the River Verdun, from whence it is distant 10 miles to the North, 20 from Riez to the N. E. and about 40 from Ambrun to the S. The Cathedral Church bears the Name of the Assumption of the Virgin Mary; and the Chapter which had been formerly of the Augustin Order, was seculariz'd by Pope Innocent X.

Colmars, Colmartium, or Collis Martii, stands on the Banks of the Verdun, near the Alps and the Confines of the County of Nice, and 20 miles N. E. from Senez. It is a well Fortified Town, but sustain'd much damage by a great Fire, which happen'd there, A. D. 1672.

The Diocess of DIGNE lies on the North of Senez.

It was heretofore the Capital City of the Sentii, and is at present the Seat of a Prelate, Suffragan to the Archbishop of Ambrun. The Cathedral Church is dedicated to the Virgin Mary, and the Chapter was sometime Regular of the Augustin Order.

Arles, Archb. Salon.

ARLES, Arelate, and Arelatum, is situated on the Eastern Bank of the River Rhofne, over which it hath a Bridge of Timber, 40 miles from Aix to the West, and as many from Montpelier, and in the mid-way between Avignon to the South and the Mediterranean Sea. The Romans established their sixth Colony in this City, and caused the General Assemblies of the six neighbouring Provinces to be held annually here. Many Marks of its ancient Grandeur have been discover'd, as the Remains of an Amphitheatre, several Statues and Tombs, but especially a Roman Obelisk of Oriental Granate Stone (a piece much admired by the Curious.) It is 52 Foot high, and 7 Foot Diameter at the Base, and yet but one Stone. It hath been erected not many years since, and makes a very agreeable shew to Travellers. This was the Capital of the Kingdom of Burgundy, and is at present a very fair and large City, dignified with a Metropolitan See, and a Royal Academy for Languages lately established. The Emperors at several times granted large Privileges to it; which though it hath been deprived of by its Princes, yet still hath a Territory of 30 Miles extent, depending on it; which is the Islands made by the three Branches of the Rhofne, called Camargue; and the Crau or Campi Lapidari of Strabo and

The Diocess of MARSEILLE, lies along the Sea-Coasts, on the East of Arles, and hath these considerable Towns, viz.

Marseille, Bish. Aubagne.

Marseille, Maffilia, is seated on a little Hill, and hath a very capacious and safe Harbour on the Coasts of the Mediterranean Sea, at the distance of 20 miles from Aix to the South, and 40 from Arles to the South-East. This City was built, as 'tis suppos'd, by the Phanicians, and flourish'd in the time of Julius Caesar; when it was govern'd in Form of a Republick, and had a Famous Academy much frequented by the young Gentlemen of France, and even of Rome it self. The Inhabitants acquir'd much Reputation in former times on the account of their Learning and Courteousness, according to the Testimony of Cicero, but now they excel chiefly in the Knowledge of Maritime Affairs; for the Capital Gallies of France are laid up here, and it is the usual place of Rendezvous of their Levantine Ships. The Port, which is defended on one side by a Fortress and the Abby of S. Victor, is flank'd on the other with a Wall above 1300 Paces long; its Mouth being shut up with a Chain lying at a certain distance on three Pillars of Stone, leaving a space open for the Passage only of one large Vessel. The City it self at present enjoys great Privileges, and is one of the largest, fairest, and most populous of the Kingdom, especially since it hath been enlarg'd by the present King. So that its Cittadels, new Streets, publick Places, stately Edifices, magnificent Churches, Monasteries, Colleges, Seminaries, Hospitals, Courts of Judicature, Haven, Arsenal, Gallies, &c. are well worth a Strangers particular observation.

The Episcopal See of Marseille, formerly subject to the Metropolitan of Vienne, now depends on that of Arles. The Inhabitants heretofore often maintain'd Wars against the Gauls, Ligurians, Carthaginians, and divers other Nations, but their City was taken by Julius Caesar, afterward became a Prey to the Goths and other barbarous People, and was likewise surpriz'd by Alfonsus King of Arragon, in the year 1423. However having been afterwards well repaired, it resisted the Forces of Charles of Bourbon, in 1524. and those of the Emperor Charles V. in 1536. It was for some time subject to the Jurisdiction of certain particular Viscounts, as also to that of the Counts of Provence, Anno 1243. and at length was united to the Crown of France, together with the whole Country, in 1481.

Aubagne, Aubanca, is a fair Town, wherein the Assemblies of the States of the Province are often convened. It is distant only 10 miles from Marseille to the East, and 15 from Aix to the South.

The Diocess of TOULON, Tolonensis Diocess.

Toulon, Bish. Hieres.

T O U L O N, Telo, or Telo Martius, Tolonium and Tolonium, is situated in a plain Fruitful Country, and on a Bay which makes a very safe, large and commodious Harbour on the Coasts of the Mediterranean Sea, at the distance of 30 miles East from Marseille by Land, 75 miles from Nice to the West, 90 from the Borders of Dauphine to the South, and 400 miles from Paris. It is a very fair, strong and well built City, being adorn'd with many stately Churches, Monasteries, and other publick Edifices. King Henry IV. Fortified it with strong Walls, and built two large Moles, each whereof is 700 Paces long, enclosing almost the whole Port; near them is also erected an Arsenal furnished with all sorts of Naval Stores, whence the largest Ships of the Royal Fleet of France are usually sent out. And for their Security the Fortifications have been much encreased by the present King.

On two sides of the City, viz. the N. E. and S. E. at a very near distance, lie very steep and inaccessible Hills; that of S. Ann's on the N. E. perfectly commands the Town, and sinks with a Declivity on that side; but on the Country side 'tis a Perpendicular Rock; as this commands the Town, so the Possession of it secures it, and therefore the Mareschal Tesse having march'd his Army expeditiously, and taken Possession of this Hill before the Duke of Savoy and Prince Eugene could get up, frustrated that Famous Siege of this City in the Summer of 1707. The Hill of S. Catherine's, which the Allies at that time possessed, lies more to the E. and on the S. E. lies the Hill of Malgue, between which and the Town lies a Marsh. On the Sea-side it is extremely well defended by Batteries of Cannon, flanking all the Avenues. In the Mouth of the Haven lies a Stockade or Boom, between which, and a little Neck of Land, there is a pass of good deep Water; but that is secur'd by a great Tower, whereon are mounted 30 Guns which carry twenty four Pound Ball. 'Twas this Tower our Fleet, under Sir Cloudfly Shovel endeavour'd to gain, and had in effect done it, if an unlucky Shot had not blown up the Magazine of Gunpowder in Fort Laurence, which they had already taken, but being thereby depriv'd of the shelter they had got, could not possibly carry on their attacks on the Tower. The Army on the Land-side finding it impossible to gain St. Ann's Hill, and the Fleet on the Sea-side being hereby disappointed, and notice being brought of the near approach of Armies of French detach'd from all Parts, the Duke of Savoy found it necessary to raise the Siege, and accordingly drew off the August, and Retreated in perfect good Order, without any loss.

Hieres, Hierum, Area and Olbia, is a small Town on the Coasts, about 10 miles from Toulon to the E. and over against the Islands Stechades, to which it hath given their modern Name, on which account only this Town is mentioned, being not otherwise considerable.

The Diocess of FREJUS lies to the E. of that of Toulon, and contains these chief Towns, &c. viz.

Frejus, Bish. S. Tropez, &c.

Frejus, Foro-Julium or Forum Julii, is seated in a Valley amidst the Marshes, near the Mouth of the River Agens, and distant only half a League from the Sea-coasts, 40 miles from Toulon to the N. E. and 60 from Aix to the E. This City was heretofore very considerable, and there yet remain divers Monuments of Antiquity. It hath also at present a capacious Harbour, and is dignified with an Episcopal See under the Metropolitan of Aix.

S. Tropez, Favum S. Tropetis, is a small but strong Town on the South-side of the Gulph of Grimet, and hath in like manner a large Haven, 5 Leagues from Frejus to the South, and 35 miles from Toulon to the East.

The Diocess of GRASSE is situated on the Coasts to the N. E. of Frejus, comprehending these Towns, &c. viz.

Grasse, Bish. Antibes, Lanes, &c.

Grasse or Grace, Grassa, is a very populous and rich City, seated on a Hill 2 Leagues from the Sea, 20 Miles from Frejus to the N. and 20 from Nice to the E. The Episcopal See of Antibes under the Metropolitan of Ambrun, was remov'd hither by Pope Innocent IV. by reason of the unwholesomeness of the Air of that Place, and the Incursions of Pirates. Besides the Cathedral, there are divers other Churches, and a great number of Monasteries, &c.

Antibes, Antipolis or Antipolis Julia Augusta, was formerly the Seat of a Prelate, and is at present well Fortified with a Castle, and hath a convenient Harbour, about 3 Leagues from Nice to the West, and 20 miles from Frejus to the North-East.

The Diocess of VENCE lies to the North-East of that of Grasse, and hath these Towns, &c. viz.

Vence, Bish. S. Paul, &c.

Vence, Vincium, Vintium, Venciensis Urbs and Vencium, is situated on the Maritime Alps at the distance of 5 or 6 miles from the River Var, about 12 miles from Grasse to the N. E. and as many from Nice to the N. W. This City is very ancient, as having been a Roman Colony, but not large; and its Episcopal See depending on the Metropolitan of Ambrun, was formerly united to that of Grasse, but hath been separated from it. The Cathedral is dedicated to the Virgin Mary, and St. Eusebius was its first Prelate. The Civil Jurisdiction of the City and Lordship of the Mannor, is divided between the Bishop and the Baron of Vence.

The Diocess of GLANDEVE is extended along the Banks of the River Var, to the North-West of Vence. Considerable Towns in it are, Glandeve, Bish. Entrevaux, &c.

Glandeve, Glandata, Glandate and Glanateve Capillatorum, stands near the Banks of the Var, and formerly bore the Title of a County, as also of an Episcopal See under the Metropolitan of Ambrun; but at present there remains only a Fortrefs erected on an Hill, the City it self being ruin'd: For about 800 years ago, the continual overflowing of the River obliged the Inhabitants to settle elsewhere, especially at the Town of Entrevaux, where the Bishop now resides. This City hath imparted its name to the Family of the Glandeves, one of the most Illustrious of Provence, which in the X Century re-established the Bishoprick, after it had been abolish'd by the Saracens.

Entrevaux, Intervallium and Intervalles, is seated on the River Var, at the Foot of the Mountains, on the very Limits of the Dutchy of Savoy and County of Nice, at the distance only of one mile from the Ruins of the City of Glandeve, 16 from Vence to the N. W. and 30 from Digne to the E.

The Diocess of SISTERON, Segusterensis Diocesis, lies to the N. and beyond Digne to the W. The chief Towns are, Sisteron, Bish. Forca'quier, County. Monsieue.

Sisteron,

Sisteron, Segustere, Segustororum Urbs, and Sistarica, is water'd by the River Durance, which there receives the Brook Buech; and stands near the Borders of Dauphine, 50 miles N. from Aix, and 45 N. W. from Glandevre. It was formerly dignified with the Title of a County, and is still a large well-built City, and the See of a Prelate, Suffragan to the Metropolitan of Aix. A Seneschal's Court hath been established here ever since the year 1635.

Forcalquier, Forcalquerium, anciently Forum Neronis, the chief Town of a County of the same name stands on a Hill, and the side of the Rivulet Laye, in the midst between Sisteron to the N. E. and Apt to the S. W. about 2 Leagues from the River Durance.

Mansque, Manufca, is a small but fair Town on the River Durance, subject to the Jurisdiction of the Knights of Malta, and distant 20 miles from Riez to the W. 25 from Aix to the N. and about 12 from Forcalquier to the S.

The Diocesis of A P T, Aptensis Diocesis, is situated on the Frontiers of the County of Venaissin, the chief City.

Apt, Aptæ, or Aptæ Julia Vaugentium, is a small City situate on the River Coulen near the Mountains, at the distance of 25 miles from Aix to the N. as many from Avignon to the E. and 40 from Sisteron to the S. W. This City was anciently one of the largest and most illustrious of the Celte, and was the Capital of the Vulgentes in the time of the Romans. It was likewise enlarged by Julius Cæsar, who made it a Colony, and caused it to bear his own Name. The most ancient Prelate of this Diocesis was S. Auspicius Marto, and the Bishop at present is the first Suffragan to the Metropolitan of Aix, and styled Prince of Apt, and his Predecessors have had a Privilege to Coin Money. In the Cathedral of S. Anne, and the Church of the Cerdeliers, are preserved a great number of Relicks. Westward from hence lies

The Country of VENAISSIN, Vindascinus or Vindascensis Comitatus, which is bounded on the E. by Provence, on the N. by Dauphine, on the S. by the River Durance, and on the West by the River Rhône, which divides it from Languedoc, being extended from S. to N. about 35 miles, and 30 from W. to E. This Country took its Name (as 'tis believed) from Venaesque, formerly its Capital City, and was granted by Joanna Queen of Naples and Countess of Provence, to Pope Clement VI. in 1348. since which time it hath been possessed by his Successors, together with the City of Avignon, comprehending an Archbishoprick, 3 Bishopricks, 4 Baronies, and 78 Towns and Villages; the chief whereof are these, viz.

Avignon, Arch. } Cavaillon, Bish.
Carpentras, Bish. } Vaison, Bish.

AVIGNON, Avenio, is situated on the River Rhône, over which stands a Stone Bridge, now half ruin'd at the distance of 25 miles from S. Esprit to the S. 20 from Arles to the N. and 45 from Aix to the N. W. It is a large and flourishing City, a Place of good Trade, which consists chiefly in Silks manufactur'd here; Erected into a Metropolitan See under the Pontificate of Sixtus V. in the Year 1475. having been before subject to that of Arles. It is also adorned with an University, and a Mint-house for the Coining of Money with the Arms of the Popes, of whom seven successively resided here for the space of 70 years; that is to say, from A. D. 1307, to 1377. viz.

Clement V. John XXII. Clement VI. who purchased Avignon of Q. Joanna, Innocent VI. Urban V. and Gregory XI. who through the Persuasion of S. Catherine of Sienna, brought back the Papal See to Rome. Here are divers stately Palaces, and magnificent public Buildings. The Walls are strong, the Churches stately, and the Avenues of the City very pleasant. The Canons of the Cathedral dedicated to the Virgin Mary, wear Scarlet Robes, and the Chaplains others of Violet Colour. As for the Civil Government, it is administered by Consuls, and their Assister, who is as it were chief Justice of the City. The Viguier, an Officer like the Provost of the Merchants of Paris, judges Causes that do not exceed the Value of 4 Ducats of Gold without Appeal. In greater Causes Appeals lie to the Vice-Legate, who commits the Affair to the Court of the Rota, where there are 5 Auditors; and from thence an Appeal lies to Rome.

Carpentras, Carpentoracæ, is watered by the River Russe, and seated in a very Fertile Country about 12 miles from Avignon to the N. E. as many from Vaison to the S. and somewhat more from Orange. It is an Episcopal See subject to Avignon. It grew up out of the Ruins of Vindausca or Venasque, and is now the Capital City of the Country of Venaissin in its Room. It is enclosed with strong Walls, and stands on the Foot of Mount Ventoux, which riseth up from thence 4 Leagues in height. In this City is established a Court of Justice, a Treasury-Office, &c.

Cavaillon, Cabellio or Caballio, is a City of a small compass now seated in a Plain near the River Durance, although it formerly stood on an adjacent Hill, where its Ruins are as yet to be seen. The Prelate of Cavaillon is Suffragan to the Archbishop of Avignon, from whence it is distant 15 miles to the S. E. and 30 from Aix to the N. W.

Vaison, Vasio, Vasion and Vassionensis Urbs, is built on the side of a Hill on the Banks of the River Leuveze, at the distance of 12 miles from Carpentras to the N. as many from Orange to the E. and 24 from Avignon to the N. E. This City was heretofore more considerable than at present, having been ruin'd by the Gerbs, Vandals and Saracens. The Church of the Virgin Mary, reported to have been formerly the Cathedral, stands without the City on the Plain, and the other within the Walls, hath a Chapter of Canons, among whom are 4 Dignitaries. The Episcopal See of Vaison is subject to the Metropolitan of Avignon.

The Principality of ORANGE, Arauscanus Principatus, is enclosed within the Country of Venaissin on the E. and the River Rhône to the W. being extended for the space of 20 miles in length. This small Territory of right appertains to the illustrious House of Nassau, but was usurp'd by the present French King Lewis XIV. on the Pretensions of the Family of Longueville, till by the late Treaty at Ryswick, it was restor'd to his late Majesty King William. It comprehends the Capital City of Orange, together with about 15 other Towns and Villages, the chief of which are these, viz.

Orange, Bish. } Jonquieres, Courcieux, } Bigondas.

ORANGE, Aurasio, is situated near the Rivulet of Egues, distant 3 or 4 miles from the River, Rhône to the E. 12 from S. Esprit to the S. and 15 from Avignon to the N. It is called Colonia Secundaniæ by Pliny, in regard that the Triumviri, caused the second Roman Legion to be brought hither. This City hath been much larger in time past than at present, as having

having suffer'd great damage by the Inroads of divers barbarous Nations : Of which former Grandeur, there are evident marks in the Remains of a Cirque, very artificially built, an Amphitheatre and a Triumphant Arch almost entire, which Caius Marius and Lutatius Catulus had erected after the Victory obtained over the Cimbrians and Teutones, besides part of a large Tower, which some suppose to have been a Temple of Diana, and divers other remarkable Monuments of Antiquity. The Fortrefs which Maurice of Nassau, Prince of Orange made so regular in the year 1622. stood on a Hill, and render'd this place one of the strongest Holds of Europe; but it was raz'd together with the other Fortifications in 1660. The City of Orange is the See of a Prelate, Suffragan to the Archbishop of Arles, and is also adorned with an University, which Raymond V. founded, A. D. 1365. and a Parliament established by William of Aralon, 1470. but the French King suppress'd the latter in 1687: and changed it into a Viguerie, under the Jurisdiction of the Parliament of Aix.

The Principality of Orange was convey'd by Marriage to John de Chaalons of the Illustrious Family of Burgundy, who in the year 1475. became absolute Prince of Orange, and was succeeded in it by William, John, and Philibert his Descendants, the last of whom left an only Sister, married to Henry Earl of Nassau, A. 1515, and had issue Rene of Nassau, who was Adopted by Philibert, and succeeded him in this Estate, from whom descended his late Majesty of Great Britain.

The Island of MARTEGUES, or Martigues, Martima Colonia, lies a little to the West of Marseille, and is dignified with the Title of a Principality, and called by some the Venice of France. It is divided into three Parts, viz. Fonquiers, L'Isle, and Forriers, having a capacious and safe Harbour at the Mouth of the Gulph, named the Bay of Martigues, the Town being situate on the Lake of Berre, from whence divers deep Channels have been cut to make a Communication with the Sea at the distance of a large quarter of a League. Barks of the largest size pass through these Ditches, to the great advantage of Merchants; and the Towns are joined together by Bridges. The Inhabitants are very expert in sailing on the Mediterranean, and admirable Fishermen, for they take vast quantities of all sorts of Fish in certain Huts made for that purpose of Reeds, or Sea-rushes, and termed Bourdigous. This Town hath been possessed by different Lords, especially the Viscounts of Marseille, and Counts of Provence; but at length Francesca Lorrain, Dutches of Merceux, Estampes, and Ponthieu, as also Princess of Martigues, brought it to the House of Vendosme, by her Marriage with Cesar Duke of Vendosme, the Natural Son of King Henry IV. &c.

The Islands of STOCHAES, or of HIERES, are so called as lying over against the Town of this name, between the Gulph of Grimeur to the E. and Toulon to the W. Among these there are three principal, viz. The Island of Levant, or of Titan in Latin Hypica, toward the East; that of Porteros in the midst; and that of Portquerolles to the West: Near to the former are also situated two other small Islands, viz. Ribaudon and Ribaudas, by the Ancients called Stirium and Phenice on the Coasts between the Promontory or Cape of Hieres to the North, and the Isle of Porteros to the South, besides those of Tele de Can, Langoussier, &c. In the time of Cassianus, these Islands were inhabited only by Monks; and there were some of the Cistercian Order under the Popedom of Innocent III.

The Islands of LERINS, Insule Lerinenses, are two in number, and lie over-against Cannes near Antibes. The former called in Latin Lero, and commonly S. Margaret, from a Chapel dedicated to this Saint, is three quarters of a League long, and one broad, being defended with five Forts and a Citadel, lately Fortified. The other of S. Honoratus Lerina, or Planatic, is distant about two Leagues from Antibes to the South, and five from Frejus to the East, taking its name from that Saint, who Founded a Famous Monastery therein, A. C. 375. and was afterward ordained Archbishop of Arles. This Solitary Place hath been for many Ages the Seminary of the Prelates of Provence, and the neighbouring Churches, having brought forth 12 Archbishops, as many Bishops, 10 Abbots, 4 Monks reckon'd among the Confessors, and 105 Martyrs, together with a great number of other Illustrious Personages. The Spaniards surpriz'd these Islands in the Month of September, A. D. 1635. and cut down the Forest of Pine-Trees that afforded a delightful shade during the excessive heat of the Sun, and stood in rows, at the end whereof were certain Oratories in honour of Abbots and Monks, who had been canoniz'd for Saints. But those Spanish Forces were entirely expell'd in the Month of May, 1637.

CHATEAU-D'IF, Castrum Iphium, is a small Island or rather Rock, encompassed on all sides with the Sea, and defended by a strong Fortrefs, distant about a quarter of a League from Marseilles, where the very large Vessels ride at Anchor, that cannot sail into the Port for want of a sufficient depth of Water at its entrance. There are also some other Islands at the mouth of the River Rhofne, but nothing very considerable is to be found in them.

The Governor-General of Provence hath under him one Lieutenant-General, three Grand Seneschals, of Aix, Marseille, and of Arles; and particular Governours in Toulon, Marseilles, in the Island of Chateau-d'if. In the Islands of St. Margaret and Honoratus; in Antibe, &c.

CHAP. XIII.

DAUPHINE, Delphinatus.

THIS Province is bounded on the North by Bresse and *Savo*y, on the East by *Piemon*t and the Aps, on the South by *Proven*ce, and on the West by the *Rhe*ne, which separates it from *Lyonn*ois. It is situated between the 44 deg. and the 45 deg. 30 min. of Latitude; as also between the 22 deg. 40 min. and the 26 deg. of Longitude, comprehending from South to North in the broadest part, about 100 miles, but in other Parts, not above half so much, and 103 from West to East.

Dauphine, was conquer'd by the Romans, under whom it was at first part of Narbonnensis, and afterwards upon the Division of Gaul by Constantine, it compos'd the Viennensis. In the declension of the Roman Empire the Burgundians got possession of it, who were again beaten out by the French, and by them it was made part of the Kingdom of Arles; and at length became subject to the Emperors of Germany; but during the Differences between the Pope and the Emperor Henry IV. it was usurped by Guigne the Fer, Earl of Graisivauden, A. 1100. whose Successor gave it the name of Dauphine, either as some say, from the name of his Wife, or as others, from the Delphin born in his Arms. In this Family the Sovereignty of this Province continued till the time of Imbert, or Flambert II. Count Dauphin of *Vienn*ois, who having lost one Son in the Battle of Crecy, and unfortunately let fall his youngest out of a Window, whereof he died; perceiving also that Amedeo, Count of *Savo*y, his irreconcilable Enemy, insulted over his Calamity, sold his Country to Philip of Valois, King of France, for the Sum of 100000 Florins of Gold, on condition that the eldest Son of the French Monarchs should bear the Name of the Dauphin, and that his Arms should be quarter'd with those of Dauphine; which Contract was ratified at Bois de Vincennes, near Paris, on the 23d Day of April, 1343. and Charles V. the Grandson of the said Philip was first stiled the Dauphin, in 1330. and the same Custom hath been ever since observed, and Dauphine continued part of the Kingdom of France.

Tho' this Province be full of Mountains and Hills, it is nevertheless very Fruitful in Wheat, Rye, Oats, and Barley, affording also good Pastures for the feeding of all sorts of Cattle, and the Forests yield good store of Game, as Stags, Fallow-Deer, Roe-Bucks, Wild-Boars, Wild Goats, and Hares, together with Partridges, Pheasants, Heathcocks, Plovers, &c. Some Mines of Iron, Lead, and other Metals are found here. In this Province are to be seen three notable Abbies, being the chief of so many different Orders, namely that of S. Antony, that of S. Ruf, and the great Charter-house, as also four Wonders, viz. The inaccessible Mountain, the Tower without Pillon, the Pit of Sassenage, which foretells the Plenty or Dearth of the Year, by a quantity of Water found therein at certain times; and the Fountain or Quick-Spring near Grenoble, that appears covered with Stones and boiling up in great Bubbles, yet never hot: There is also a certain Hole or Cavern near Nions, from whence riseth up a Wind, which can scarcely be felt by those Persons that come near it, and yet blows violently when one stands at the distance of 20 or 30 paces. The Principal Rivers of Dauphine, are the Isere, which receives the Drac below Grenoble; the Durance that takes its rise and runs into *Proven*ce; the Drore, the Stream whereof is extremely rapid and dangerous; the Buelch, the *Roman*ce, the Dia, &c. The whole Province is usually divided into the Upper to the East, and the Lower to the West, which are again subdivided according to the following Table.

Dauphine divided into 2 Parts.	The Upper in 6.	Graisivauden.	Grenoble , Bish.

GRAISIVAUDEN, Gratianopolitanus Ager, is a Valley which was heretofore inhabited by the Tricollores, and lies between the Rivers Isere and Drac; bounded on the North by *Savo*y, properly so called, on the East by the Valley of Maurienne and Brianconnois, on the South by Gapennois, and on the West by Diois and *Vienn*ois. The places of Note are these, viz.

Grenoble, Bish. La Grande Chartreuse.

Grenoble, Gratianopolis, anciently Accusio and Cular, is situated on the Confluence of Isere and Drac, and on the Foot of the Mountains, being distant 55 miles from Lyon to the South-East, about 80 from Geneva to the South, 110 from Aix, and 60 from the Frontiers of Languedoc to the North, and 40 from the River *Rhe*ne to the East. Maximian who was sent into France by Dioclesian, fortified this Place; and being afterward enlarged by the Emperor Gratian, it took the name of Gratianopolis, which in time melted into that of Grenoble. It is a large well-built City, and adorn'd with divers fair Churches. The Episcopal See depends on the Metropolitan of *Vienn*e, and its most ancient Bishop was S. Dominus, who assisted in the Council of Aquitain, A. C. 381. His Successors at present assume the Title of Princes of Grenoble, by reason of the Donations which the Lords of the Country have made to them at several times. King Lewis XI. erected the Dauphinal Council of this Province into a Parliament, in the year 1453: Moreover an University was formerly established here, but Valence now enjoys that Honour at present: Besides the Parliament above-mentioned.

mentioned, here is a Chamber of Accompts, a Treasury-Office, a Court of Generality, and a Bailiage. The Grand Charter-house, chief of the Carthusian Order, stands three Leagues from this City on one side; and the boiling Spring is at the like distance on the other.

DIOIS, lies on the South of Graisvaudan between Valentinois on the West, Provence on the South, and Gapençois on the East. The chief City DIE, Dia, Dea Vocontiorum, or Dea Augusta of the Ancients, is seated on the Foot of the Mountains and the Banks of the Rivulet Drome, at the distance of 30 miles from Grenoble to the South, 26 from Valence to the East, and 40 from Gap to the West. It was formerly a considerable City, with the Title of an Earldom, and had five fine Churches, and a good Citadel, but through the Wars of the Lombards formerly, and the Civil Wars lately, they have been almost destroyed; however, it is still the See of a Bishop.

The BARONIES or Baronie, lie on the Frontiers of Provence; whereof the chief Towns are,

Le Buys, Nions.

Buz or Buz, Buxium, is a small Town standing upon the River Louvez, on the Frontiers of Provence, 30 miles from Die to the South.

Nions, Neomagus, stands on the Frontiers of Provence and the side of the River Eygues, about 28 miles from Die to the South, five or six from the Frontiers of Provence, and 20 from the River Rhône to the East. It had a Castle, but it is destroy'd, and the Town is not very considerable.

GAPENCOIS, is extended toward the River Isère, between Graisvaudan on the North, Diois on the West, and Ambrunois on the East, comprehending the chief Town Gap, Vapincum, Vapingum, and Vapinquum, is a large City and well Fortified with a strong Citadel, besides the Fort of Puymore, very near it on a rising Ground, scarcely two Leagues from the River Isère, 35 miles from Die, and 65 from the Rhône to the E. not above 10 from the Frontiers of Provence, and 45 from Grenoble to the S. E. Its Episcopal See depends on the Metropolitan of Aix. The Cathedral Church is dedicated to the Virgin Mary. The Bishop assumes the Title of a Count, and bears in his Coat of Arms a Sword and Cross in Pail. The City of Gap hath been often Taken and Recovered by the Popish and Protestant Parties during the Civil Wars of France.

AMBRUNOIS, is bounded on the North by Brianconnois, on the West by Gapençois, on the East by Piement, and on the South by part of Piement and Provence. The chief City

AMBRUN or EMBRUN, Ebrodunum, and Ebo-rudunum, is seated on a steep Rock in the Confines of Provence, near the River Durance and the Mountains, 15 Miles from Gap to the East, 20 from Briancon, and 30 from the Frontiers of Savoy to the West, 55 from Grenoble, and 110 from Lyons to the S. E. It is a City of small compass, nevertheless well Fortified and honour'd with the Title of a Metropolitan See and a Bailiage, the Archbishop sharing its Jurisdiction with the King. The Judges of the Bailiage are alternative. This City was honour'd with great Privileges by the Romans; for sometime subject to the Counts of Ferchalquier, and hath since sustained many Revolutions. The Protestants took it in 1583, and found vast wealth there. In the late War, viz. A. 1672, the Duke of Savoy besieged, and in 10 days took it: But quitted it soon after.

BRIANCONNOIS, lies near the Spring-head of the River Durance, between Piedmont on the East, the Valley of Maurienne in Savoy on the North Graisvaudan on the West, and Ambrunois on the South.

Briancon, Brigantium, is remarkable for its situation on the highest Ground (as it is supposed) of Europe being the side of a steep Rock, on which stands, a Castle near the Alps, almost in the midst between Susa, a Town of Piement and Ambrun, at the distance of eight Leagues from the former, and seven from the other. It gives name to this Country, and is the Seat of a Bailiage. A little below this City two Brooks intermix, one of which springs out of Mount Genevre, and is called Dure, the other comes from the Valley of Menetrier and Chantemerle, and is named Ance. These two Rivulets are the Sources of the River Durance, and Form its Name. About two Leagues from this Town there is a Passage cut through the middle of a Rock, which as it was a stupendious Labour, gives occasion to many Conjectures concerning the performance of it. Some impute it to Julius, others to Hannibal, &c.

Perouse, Perusa, stands on the River Cluso, and is defended by a Fortrefs, near the Frontiers of Piement. This Town hath impos'd its Name on the adjacent Valley, and formerly belonged to the Duke of Savoy, but was granted to the French by Treaty A. 1631.

Chateau-Dauphine, Castrum Delphini, is a Town built at the Foot of the Alps, on the very confines of Piement, 30 miles from Ambrun to the West. It formerly bore the name of Eusebio, Fanum S. Eusebii, and constituted a part of the Marquisate of Saluces, but was granted to the French Kings, in 1375. Which finishes our Account of the Upper or Eastern part of Dauphine; what remains are the three small Provinces that lie in the West on the River Rhône.

VIENNOIS, Viennensis Tractus, is the Northwest part of Dauphine, and lying between the Rivers Rhône and Isère, was anciently call'd the Island of the Allobroges; it is bounded on the East by Graisvaudan, on the South by Valentinois, on the West by the Rhône, which divides it from Bugey. This Country was sometime govern'd by its own Princes, under the name of Dauphines of Viennois, but came to the Crown of France with the rest of Dauphine. The chief City

VIENNE, Vienna or Vienna Allobrogum, is situated at the Foot of a Mountain, on the River Rhône, which there receives the Gere, at the distance of 40 miles from Grenoble to the West, 20 from Lyons to the South, and 35 from Valence to the North. It hath been a very large and famous City, but at present is not above the fourth Part of its former extent, and both its ancient Fortresses, namely Pipet and Bejezes, are now destroy'd. It was founded (as it is generally believ'd, by the Allobroges, and afterward became a Colony of the Romans, who adorn'd it with a Palace, and Amphitheatre, and divers other magnificent Works, the Ruins whereof are still to be seen. After the Decay of their Empire, this City was sometime the Capital of the Kingdom of Burgundy, and the Place of Residence of those Princes; and since hath been subject to many Masters, and suffer'd much by the Wars. However it is the See of an Archbishop, who hath the Title of the Grand Primate of the Primates of France and, as they say, S. Crescens, the Disciple of S. Paul, was its first Prelate. The Cathedral of S. Maurice is a stately Pile of Building, as also are some other Churches and publick Edifices. The Inhabitants are very expert in making divers sorts of Manufactures, particularly Plates of Iron and Steel, Paper, &c. by means of certain Mills and Engines upon the River Gere.

VALENTINOIS, lies between Viennois on the North, the River Rhofne on the West, Tricastin on the South, and Dicis on the East. This Country at present bears the Title of a Duchy, and was granted, together with Dicis to Charles VII. then only Dauphin of France by Lewis of Poitou, its last Count or Earl, on the 22d. of June, 1419. The Principal Towns are,

Valence, Bish. Montelimar.

Valence, Valentia, is seated on the River Rhofne, a little below its confluence with the Isere, over-against the Province of Vivarais, about 30 miles from Vienne to the South, 60 from Avignon to North, 25 from Die to the West, and 40 from Grenoble to the South-west. It is a Place of great Antiquity, having been some time a Roman Colony; and is at present a fair reasonable large and well-built City, divided into the City and Town, defended by a strong Citadel, and dignified with the Title of an Episcopal See under the Metropolitan of Vienne, the Bishop bearing the Title of a Count. The Cathedral Church or Agglutin, one of its Prelates, was at first dedicated to S. Stephen. There is also another Collegiate Church, and the Abby of S. Ruf the chief of that Order, together with a great number of other Monasteries and Convents; besides a Famous University, in which are four Professors of the Civil and Canon Law. It was first Founded by King Lewis XI. A. D. 1452. and afterward that of Grenoble was incorporated into it under the Reign of Charles IX. Here is also a Presidial Court.

Montelimar, Aemacorum Mons, Mons Adomari, or Montilium Ademari, a Town formerly well fortified, and sustained divers Sieges during the Civil War; stands on a Hill at the distance of half a League from the River Rhofne, 25 miles from Valence.

TRICASTIN, Tricastinus Ager, is extended between Valentinois on the North, and the County of Avignon on the South. The chief City whereof is

S. Paul-Trois-Chateaux, Augusta Tricastinorum and Forum S. Pauli Tricastinorum, anciently Senomagus, or Neomagus. The Capital City of the small Territory of Tricastin, took its modern Name from S. Paul one of its Prelates, and is situated on a rising Ground in the Confines of Provence, scarcely one League from the River Rhofne, 12 miles from Montelimar to the South, and as many from Orange to the North. Its Episcopal See was formerly subject to the Metropolitan of Vienne, but now depends on that of Arles, and the Bishop is also styled a Count, sharing the Civil Jurisdiction with the King; so that the respective Judges keep their Courts alternately in the Bailiages. The Protestant Party made themselves Masters of this City during the Civil Wars, and retain'd it in their Power near 50 years.

Dauphine hath a Governour-General, a Lieutenant-General, a Seneschal, and a Commandant in the Province, three Bailiffs; and particular Governors in Grenoble, Vienne, Ambrun, Valence, Montelimar, the Castle of Briancon, Pignerol, &c.

CHAP. XIV.

LORRAINE, Lotharingia.

BESIDES the 12 Principal Provinces or Governments of France, already described, there are other Provinces and Towns lying on the Frontiers of Italy, Germany and Flanders, made subject to, and reckon'd part of this Kingdom; an account whereof is given in the Description of every particular Country where they are situated, excepting Lorrain, which although it be not compriz'd within the aforesaid 12 large Governments, nevertheless constituted a Portion of that Country which is commonly called France, till by the late Treaty of Ryswick it was restored to the present Duke.

The Duchy of LORRAINE and BAR is bounded on the North by Luxemburg and the Palatinate, on the East by Alsacia, on the South by the County of Burgundy, and on the West by Champagne, being extended from the 48th Degree to the 49th Degree 50

Minutes of Latitude, and from the 23d Degree to the 25th Degree 50 Minutes of Longitude; extending from North to South 100 miles, and about the same from East to West. The whole Country is divided into three principal Parts, viz.

The Duchy of Lorrain, properly so called, in 3 Bailiages, viz. The Bailiage of Nancy, Chief Town, Idem. The Bail. of Vange, Mirou. The Bailiage of Vaudreange, Idem.

The Duchy of Bar-le-duc.

Three Bishopricks not properly within Lorrain. Bishoprick of Metz, Bishoprick of Toul, Bishoprick of Vesuduc. The

from the Frontiers of the Franche Comte, and 30 from Mirceburg, and 50 from Nancy to the South-East.

Fontenay or Fontenay, Fontenayum, a small Village, seated on the Frontiers of the Franche Comte, about 25 miles South from Mirecourt; Famous on account of a fierce Battle Fought near it, with a very great Slaughter on all sides, between the Emperor Lotharius, Lewis King of Germany, and Charles the Bald, King of France, all three Brothers, A. C. 841.

The Bailiage of VAUDREVANGE, Bellicivicius Valdesinga, takes up the North-East part of Lorraine, and contains these Places of chief note, viz.

Sarre-Louis, Saravum Ludovici, is a very strong Fortrefs, lately built on the River Sarre, about 2 or 3 miles above Vaudrevange, and so called in Honour of the present French King Lewis XIV. who built it, and established therein a Presidial Court of a large Jurisdiction. It is distant 12 Leagues from Triers, 4 from Sarbruck, and 7 from Homburg, &c.

Vauclerange, Valderfinga, the Chief Town of the Bailiage of the same Name, is likewise seated on the Saie, 30 miles from Metz to the North-East, as many from Thionville, and somewhat more from Deux-Ponts. It was almost ruin'd during the last German War, but hath been since well repaired.

Sirk or Sircques, Sirca and Sericum, is watered with the Streams of the River Moselle, and defended by a strong Fort built near it on a Hill, and the very borders of the Duchy of Luxemburg, about 20 miles from Mets to the North, 15 from Triers, and as many from Luxemburg to the East. This Town hath been in the Possession of the French King ever since the year 1643.

S. Nicolas, Fanum S. Nicolai, is a Burrough very pleasantly seated on the River Meurte, two Leagues above Nancy to the South, and Famous for the Concourse of People resorting thither to pay their Devotions at the Shrine of S. Nicholas, sometime Bishop of Myra in Lycia, who vigorously opposed the Errors of Arius, and assisted in the General Council of Nice, A. C. 325.

Valdemont, Vadanus Mons and Valdemontiam, stands on a Hill between the Meuse and Moselle, 20 miles from Nancy to the South. It is a small Town, nevertheless dignified with the Title of a Principality, and fenced with a strong Castle, &c.

Marſel, Marſellum, is a ſmall but well Fortified Town, built on the Banks of the Brook Selle, amidſt the Marſhes, at the diſtance of about 20 miles from Nancy to the Eaſt.

The Bailliage of VAUGE, is extended on the South side of the Province of Lorrain, and comprehends these Principal Towns, viz.

Mirecourt, Cap. Remiremont, Fontenay:

Mirecourt, Mirecourtium, a small Town, but the chief of the Bailliage; is situated near Mount Vauge, from whence the Bailliage hath its Name, on the Rivulet of Maiden, which falls into the Moselle at Chaligny: It is distant 25 miles from Nancy to the South, about as many from Toul, and 15 from the Confines of Champagne to the East.

Remiremont, Remaricus Mons, Remarici Mons, and Remaricum Castrum, anciently Avendi Castrum, is situated on the River Moselle, at the Foot of Mount Tange, and remarkable on the account of a Famous Abby of Nuns there. It is distant only one League

The Dutchy of BAR or BARRAIS, Barrensis Ducatus, is extended on both sides of the River Meuse, from the Country of Burgundy to the Dutchy of Luxemburg, between Lorraine and Champagne. This Country is divided into 5 Bailliages, 217.

The Bailiage of Bay-	}	The Bailiage of S. M-le-duc,		chel or Miche.
The Bailiage of Grand-		The Bailiage of Pent-a

The Bailiage of Bassig-		The Bailiage of Argonne, ne or de-la-Mothe,		or Clermont, &c.

Bar-le-Duc, Baroducum, stands on a rising Ground, near the Banks of the River Ornain, and hath a strong Castle for its Defence, at the distance of about 46 miles from Nancy to the West, and 5 or 6 from the Borders of Champagne: This Town being the Capital of the Dutchy of Bar, is fair and well-built, and is subject to the Duke of Lorraine.

S. Michael, Fanum S. Michaelis is situated on the East side of the River Mense, almost in the middle between Toul to the South, and Verdun to the North, and 20 miles from Bar-le-duc to the East. It hath been for some time a very considerable Town, and is at present the Seat of a Parliament of Burgundy. It was taken by Lewis XIII. in the month of June, A. D. 1632. and afterward resigned to the Duke

Duke of Lorraine, the Treaty of 1678, never took effect. The King's title in the Matter of it is a Declaration in 1633, when the Lorrainers revolted against his Garrison. But were at length constrained to surrender on Discretion. But now with the rest of the Dutchy returned to the Duke.

Pont-a-Mousson, Moussonum, is seated on both sides of the River Moselle, near the Ruins of the Castle of Mousson, from whence it took its Name, at the distance of 17 or 18 miles from Nancy to the N. toward Metz, and a little is many from S. Mihiel to the East. It is a very fair Town, but destitute of Walls, dignified with the Title of a Marquisate, and adorn'd with two Abbies, divers itate Church's; and a University Founded in the year 1573, by Charles Cardinal of Lorraine, who gave it to the Jesuits for Teaching : Divinity, Philosophy, and the Learned Languages : Afterward the Duke of Lorraine sent thither certain Professors of Law and Physick, and Pope Gregory XIII. added a Seminary for the Sacred Nation.

The THREE BISHOPRICKS, Tres Episcopatus, form, as it were, an equilateral Triangle in the Northern and Western part of Lorraine: The chief Cities

METS, Metz and Metropolis Uls, anciently Dietrichum and Mediomatrica, is seated on the confluence of the Rivers Seille and Moselle, in a very fruitful Country at the distance of 30 miles from Nancy to the North, 20 from Toul to the South, 30 from Verdun to the East, and 150 East from Paris. It was heretofore the Metropolis of the ancient People named Mediomatrica, as also afterward of the Kingdom of Austrasia, under the first Race of the French Monarchs ; and is at present the Capital City of the Country of Mosin, dignified with an Episcopal See, under the Metropolitan of Trier. The Bishop is styled Prince of the Empire, and the Cathedral dedicated to S. Stephen, is an ancient and noble Pile of Building, wherein are to be seen many Curiosities, particularly a Font, made of one entire piece of Porphyry, 10 Foot long. The whole Diocesis is extendeth into 2 Arcs, and comprehendeth 62 Parishes, whereof 16 are included within the Walls of Metz. There are 207 Monks, 800 Nuns, and other Religious Houses, a College of Jesuits, &c. This City had been for a long time Imperial and Free, until it was taken in 1552 by the Constable Marmigny, General under the French King Henry II. who caused it to be Fortified with a Citadel and other Bulwarks ; by which it was made so strong, that the Emperor Charles V. having invested it in the same year, was compell'd to raise the Siege. This City was the Seat of a Bailiage, and of a Court of Parliament, established by Lewis XIII.

T O U L, Tullum, or Tallum Juco um, is seated on the River Moselle, in a Fertile Soil, as are all the Towns of this Province, at the distance of 30 miles from Metz to the South, 12 from Nancy to the West, and 27 from Baileuse to the East. It was constructed an Imperial and Free City by the Emperor Henry I. but fell into the Possession of the French Kings in 1552. It is the Capital of the Country of the same Name, the See of a Prelate, Suffragan to the Archbishop of Toul, and the Seat of a Bailiwick : Its Diocesis is very large, and contains a great number of Abbies, &c.

VERDUN, Verodunum and Virodunum, is a very ancient City, and one of the largest of Lorraine, is seated upon the River Moselle, which there dividing its Stream, forms divers small Islands, which do not a little contribute to its Advantage: It is Fortified with a Citadel and other Regular Works, and honour'd with an Episcopal See, depending on the Metropolitan of Trier. The Cathedral Church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, hath a considerable Chapter, from whence have proceeded divers illustrious Prelates, who are usually styled Counts of Verdun, and Princes of the Sacred Empire. This City hath been also formerly Imperial and Free, but was taken by the French, together with some others, under Henry II. A. D. 1552, and is at present the Capital of a Bailiage.

THE Low-Countries : Or, Netherlands.

Of the NETHERLANDS in General.

LANDERS or the SPANISH NETHERLANDS with the Archbishoprick of CAMBRESIS and Bishoprick of LYEGE &c By H. Moll.

THE ancient Name of these Countries was Belgium, whether from the old Dutch word Balgen to Fight, or from the City Belgium, which some say was Bavy in Hainault, others Beauvais in Picardy, is left undecided; several Writers pleading for both. It was also reckon'd part of Germany, and call'd Inferior, for the same reason as now Low Countries and Netherlands, viz. from their low situation situation : and indeed so very low are the Maritime Provinces, that the Grounds are in many Places even lower than the Surface of the Neighbouring Sea, which the Inhabitants confine and secure their Lands from, by strong Banks, made with great Labour and Ingenuity, and maintained at as great Expence. It was also called Flanders, because that Province formerly was the great Mart of Europe, and resorted to by all Nations for Traffick ; and therefore because all these Provinces were subject to the same Lord, the particular name of this chief One, was, by Strangers made to intimate the Whole ; and for the same reason, since the Erection of the Republick of the Confederate Provinces, Holland being the principal of them, its name serves to denote, in general, the Countries of the Confederate States.

Its ancient Bounds were very large, for not only all the present Netherlands, but the Parts of France next them, as Picardy, Champagn, &c. and (according to some Authors) Lorrain, Berg, Fuliers, Cleeve, together with the Bishopricks of Mentz, Cologne, and Triers, were all included in the general name of Belgium. The present Limits are the British Ocean on the North, the same Ocean and Picardy on the West, the rest of Picardy with Champagn and Lorrain on the South, and the Bishoprick of Triers, the Dutchies of Fuliers and Cleeve, the Bishoprick of Munster and the County of Emden or East Frizeland on the East : The whole Country, according to Guicciardine, is one Thousand Italian miles in Circumference.

It is situated between the 49 Deg. 20 Min. and the 53 Deg. 30 Min. of Latitude, and between the 20 Deg. and 24 Deg. 30 Min. of Longitude.

The chief RIVERS are these, 1. The Rhine, which rises in the Country of the Grisons, and after it hath passed through Germany, entereth into these Countries at Schenkschans, on the Borders of Guelderland ; at which place it is divided into two Channels, whereof that which retains its name runs by Arnheim and Wageningen in Guelderland, and Rbeenen in Utrecht to Dufter de Wyck, where it meets and mixes with the Leck, a small Chanel only that runs toward Utrecht, bearing the name of the Rhine, which passing on from Utrecht runs by Warden and Leyden, not far from which last place it is lost in the Sandhills, which choak up the mouth whereby it formerly run into the Sea. 2. The Leck, which receives the Waters of the Rhine at Dufter de Wyck, runs by Culenborch, Vianen, Schoonhoven, and at the Village Crimpen falls into the Meruwe, which falls into the Maes not far above Rotterdam. 3. The Waal, which is the other Branch of the Rhine, beginning at Schenkschans, flows by Nimeguen, Tiel, and Bemmel, to Worcum, where it is joyn'd with the Maes, and passing by Gorcum receives the Lingre, and takes the name of Meruwe, otherwise called the new Maes, which passing by Dort receives the Leck above-mentioned, and the smaller Yffel, and flows in a broad Stream to Rotterdam, where it loses all other names and is called the Maes. 4. The Maes, called also Mise and Meuse, rises in Mount Vogesus in Burgundy, and passing by Verdun and Charleville, flows to Namur, where it receives the Sambre ; thence passes by Liege, Maestricht, Venlo, and Grave, to Worcum, mixes with the Waal, as above-said, and both together run to Dort, where the Stream is divided and makes an Island ; but are again united a little below Vlaerdigen, and falls into the Ocean at the Briel. 5. The Schelde, called in French l'Escaut, hath its source in Picardy and runs by Cambray, Va- lenciennes and Oudenarde, to Ghent, whence turning Eastward it passes by Oudenarde, and at Rupelmonde receives the Demer, besides many other smaller Rivers in its Passage, and then flows Northward to Antwerp, where it makes a very capacious Harbour ; and a few Leagues below divides it self into two large Branches, one whereof call'd the Wester Schelde or the Hout, passes betwixt Flanders and Zealand, and falls into the Sea at Flushing ; the other is called Ooster Schelde, and runs out of the main Stream at Santvliet, passing by Bergen op Zoom, and between Tien and South Beveland, and thence by the Shoar of the Island Schouwen falls into the Sea with a violent Current. 6. The Yffel, from whence the Province lying beyond it is called Overyssel, springs in Westphalia, and running through Zutphen passes to Doesburgh, where it is exceedingly augmented by a Chanel cut from the Rhine, by the order of Drusus Nero, and thence in a great Stream flows by Deventer to Campen, parting the Provinces of Guelderland and Overyssel, and falls into the Zuyder Sea.

There is another small River nam'd the Yffel, which comes out of the Leck near Vianen, and running towards Rotterdam falls into the Maes. Many other Rivers water these Countries, as the Sambre, Lys, Aa, Demer, Scarp, Nethe, Dele, Sinne, Dendre, Rce, &c. the course whereof the Reader will discover in the following Description of the Country.

There can be very little said of the MOUNTAINS of these Countries ; for except some few rising Grounds in those Parts lying towards Germany, there is no Hill to be seen : On the contrary, all those Provinces towards the Sea lie so very low, that large Parts of them have been many times overflow'd by the Eruptions of the Sea, notwithstanding the strong Banks that the Inhabitants maintain almost all along the Coasts of Groningen, Friesland, North Holland, Zealand, &c.

These Countries were formerly very desolate, and for want of cultivating, the Grounds were either turn'd to Marshes or over-run with FOREST ; of which last that of Ardenne is mention'd by Casar as the largest in Belgium, and was indeed of vast Extent ; for according to Cluverius, it reached from Coblentz in the Bishoprick of Trier, as far as the farthest Borders of Artois, which is 220 miles ; and in breadth, to the Sea-shoar and the River Waal, near 150 miles. There are still large Remains of it on the Borders of Luxemburgh, and in the Bishoprick of Liege, as also about Mentz, Triers, Worms, &c. Many other large Forests are found here, as the Forests and Woods of Soign, and Meerdale in Brabant ; Niep in Flanders ; Podsberg, Faigne, Mormant, and S. Amand in Hainault ; with many others which are mentioned by Guicciardine to be very large, but have been retrench'd since his time by the consumption of the Wood for Fuel, and the Industry of the Inhabitants in cultivating the Land.

The AIR is reckon'd wholesom enough, but is subject to very thick Fogs in Winter, through the moistness of the Country, which would be very Noxious if it were not for the dry Easterly Winds which blowing off a long Continent for two or three Months every Year clear the Air, and cause very sharp Frosts during the Months of January, February, and March, by which means the Ports, Rivers, and Canals, are almost always shut up with Ice during those Months.

The SOIL is generally Fertile ; but because different in the several Parts, the Reader is referr'd to the particular Accounts of the Productions of each of each Province, in the following Description of them.

The COMMODITIES of these Countries are their Manufactures; for their Productions are very few: Of these, from the Spanish Netherlands comes Linen-Cloth, Tapettries, Worsted-Stuffs, Chamlets, Wrought Silks, Lace, &c. and from Holland (besides most of the same Manufactures) they export all sorts of East-India Goods, Fish, and the Commodities of Germany, as Rhenish Wines, &c.

Concerning the INHABITANTS, Cæsar, in the beginning of his Commentaries, says, — Horum omnium fortissimi sunt Belgæ, &c. "That they were the most Valiant of all the Gauls partly because they were far distant and unacquainted with the Civility of the Roman Provinces, and very little visited by Merchants, who import such things as serve to effeminate the minds of Men; but chiefly, because by their Neighbourhood to the Germans, they were at continual Wars with them. Many other Authors speak of the Martial Temper of these People, which their long and obstinate War with the Spaniards in the last Age, is a sufficient proof of. But their Industry is more conspicuous by the vast Traffick they have for many Ages past maintain'd with all Nations of Europe, and more remote parts of the World: Their Ingenuity hath also appear'd in the Invention of many useful Arts; such as the making of Tapettry, call'd Arias, from that City where it was invented; the making of Cloth and Worsted-Stuffs, which we learn'd of the Flemings; and the Perfection, if not Invention, of the Mariner's Compass, is by many Authors attributed to them: Many other ingenious and curious Arts acknowledge the Netherlands for their Inventers; to omit that of Printing, which Haerlem puts in a good Claim to, but is oppos'd in it by Mentz in Germany. But notwithstanding these Inventions and the Ingenuity of many particular Men among them, it must be allow'd in general. That they are Industrious rather than Ingenious. They will persevere and plod on in a Road through many Difficulties, but their Apprehensions are dull, and they are not easily perswaded to leave their old way, tho' a new one be apparently more convenient. They are much addicted to Drunkenness, but are not very delicate in their Food. Their Habits and Houses are exceeding Neat and Cleanly, especially the latter, to Superstition.

The Dutch TONGUE is a Dialect of the German, but with many French and Latin words intermix'd: It is a harsh, clownish and unpleasant Speech, and hath nothing that can recommend it to Strangers. In the French Flanders, Hainault and Luxemburgh, the French Language is generally understood, and that call'd Walloon, which is a corruption of French with Dutch, is usually spoken there. Persons of the best Rank all over the Netherlands, understand and speak French, as do also many of the common People.

The RELIGION of these Countries in general was that of the Roman Church, before the Reformation, but the Protestant Religion prevailing here, the King of Spain, about the year 1566. set up the Inquisition, and gave Orders for the punishing, even to Death, all those whom the Church of Rome declar'd Hereticks, which gave great discontent to the People, and was the first occasion of the Disturbance and bloody War, which ended in the total alienation of Seven of the Provinces. At present the Romish Religion only is profess'd in the Spanish Provinces; and in Holland that of Calvin is predominant, but with Toleration of all sects.

The convenient situation of Flanders in the mid-way between France, Spain and Portugal on one side, and Denmark, Sweden and the Hanse Towns on the other, together with Germany behind and England before it, may be esteem'd the chief reason of the vast TRADE that was some Ages since establish'd there; which was so great, that this Province might be accounted the grand Market-place of Europe: For in its City of Bruges the Merchants of all Nations had their Factories, and great Magazines to lodge the native products of their respective Countries, which they here sold and exchange'd for those of other places. Of these Houses or Colleges there were no less than 17 belonging to these several Nations, viz. England, Scotland, France, Castile, Portugal, Navarre, Aragon, Catalonia, Biscay, the Hanse Towns, the Cities of Venice, Florence, Genoa, Lucca, Milan, &c. In which State the Trade continued at Bruges for many years, till about 1480. it began to decline and remove to Antwerp, partly because the Port of Sluys and the River from thence, was narrow and inconvenient; and partly because of a War that disturb'd the Country thereabouts; whereas on the contrary the River Schelde, which leads to Antwerp, was large and commodious, and many Gentlemen upon occasion of the Wars between the King of France and the Emperor Charles V. having quitted the Villages and smaller Towns, retir'd with their Effects to Antwerp, built fine Houses there, and by their constant Residence, very much improv'd that City; but chiefly, because at Antwerp in 1503. the Portuguese fixed their Staple for the Spices and other Commodities of the East-Indies, which they brought from their new Conquest of Calicut; These and other Causes, drew the Merchants thither, and made it a Place of the greatest Trade of Europe, of which the Reader will find a more particular Account in our description of that City. But it lasted not there above 50 years; for the Civil War causing great Disorders, Antwerp was twice Plunder'd, and almost quite burnt down; and the Dutch Commonwealth, being Masters of Zeeland, were able to stop the Passage of the Schelde, and impose what Duties they pleased upon the Ships passing to Antwerp, by which they made them put into their Ports; and besides, the English and Dutch having found the way to the East-Indies, supplanted the Portuguese, and furnish'd Europe with the Commodities of those Countries: By all which means the Current of Trade was quite alter'd, and translated to London and Amsterdam, which are at present, the two great Empories of Europe. And the Traffick of Flanders is now not considerable, except for their own Manufactures, which we have already mention'd.

Of the ancient State of the Netherlands in General.

THE greatest part of Belgium was Conquered by the Romans, and that part of it that lies toward Gaul, continu'd under their Subjection till the declination of that Empire; after which the Franks were Masters of it, and in the French Monarchy it was part of their Kingdom of Metz, or Austrasia. The Division of it into so many States, is deriv'd from the Earls of Ardenne, the Origin of whom was from the Sons of Clodion King of France, who being kept out of the Succession to that Kingdom, by Mercoveus (as we have already shewn in our Account of the Kings of France) were forc'd, for their Safety to betake themselves to the most defensible places of the Forest of Ardenne, and the Countries on the Banks of the Meuse, where they founded the two great Earldoms from thence denominated. That of Meuse belongs to Germany, and therefore shall not be treated on here : This of Ardenne comprehended part of Flanders and Brabant, all Hainault, Namur, Limburg and Luxemburg, together with the Dukedom of Bouillon, (formerly a very large Country, containing the Bishoprick of Liege, &c.) These large Estates continu'd peaceably under the Earls of Ardenne for sometime, till being grown powerful and great, they became the Envy of their Neighbours, and were therefore set upon by Dagobert King of Metz, and Son to Clotaire II. King of France, who in Battle overcame and slew Brunulphe Earl of Ardenne, and seized his Country, giving only Hainault to Albert his Son : Dagobert succeeding his Father in the Kingdom of France, A. 628. gave away part of this Country ; but the gross of it still bore the Title, and remain'd for a long time a very considerable Estate.

About 940. Luxemburg and Limburg were rased off, and given to two of the younger Sons of Ricinus Earl of Ardenne, and about 950 Namur was created into an Earldom. The rest was afterwards carried into the House of Lorraine by a Marriage, and remain'd there for a long time. Thus we have shewn the Origin of the Earldoms of Hainault and Namur, and the Duchies of Luxemburg and Limburg.

Part of Brabant, as we have said, was included in the Earldom of Ardenne; the other part, being that toward the Sea, was very much infested, and even almost depopulated by the Depredations of the Danes and Normans; wherefore, to guard the Coast and protect the Inhabitants, a certain Officer was appointed, call'd Lord Warden of the Marches; which Title they continu'd till Utile, Nephew of Aldigarius, King of the Boiariens, having shewn great Courage against those Pirates, was honour'd with the Title of Lord Marquis of Antwerp, whose Descendant Ansegistus, was Mayor of the Palace in France, and made Duke of Brabant, and his great Grandson Pepin obtaining the Crown of France, this Duchy was made a Province of that Kingdom, and afterwards a Member of the Kingdom of Lorraine. About 980. the Cities and Territories of Brussels, Louvain, Antwerp and Nivelle, were taken out of it and made a new Estate, with the Title of The Marquisate of the Holy Empire, by the Emperor Otho II. and bestowed upon his Aunt, whose Grand-daughter Gertrude succeeding her, convey'd it by Marriage to Lambert Son of Reyner Earl of Hainault, who had the Title of Earl of Lorraine, and was succeeded in it by his Family, of whom Godfrey VII. Earl of Lorraine, Conquer'd the rest of the Country, and was created Duke of Brabant.

Flanders was a wild, waste Country, the Sea-coasts infested by the Danish Pirates, and the other parts but meanly Cultivated, till it was Conquer'd by the French Kings, who soon after the Establishment of the Monarchy, appointed a certain Officer with the Title of Forester of Flanders, to suppress the Robbers that infested the woody Parts and Sea-Coasts, and by Government and Protection civilize the People and encourage them to Industry. This Office continued for several Descents, and was at length changed into the title of a Count or Earl, about the year 864. by Charles the Bald, Emperor and King of France, in favour of Baldwin the seventh Forester who had Married his Sister.

Artois was included in the Earldom of Flanders till 1234. when Robert the Grandson of Philip Augustus King of France, and Husband to Isabel Daughter to Baldwin VIII. Earl of Flanders, was made Earl of it.

Guelderland was part of the French Kingdom of Austrasia, and with that became part of the Empire of Germany; and, as such, was govern'd by certain Guardians or Protectors, (first instituted in the Reign of Charles the Bald) of whom Otho of Nassau was the first free Prince, and created Earl by the Emperor Henry V. A. D. 1079. whose Descendant Rainold II. was in 1339. made Duke of Guelderland.

Zurphou was a separate Earldom for many years till united to Guelderland by the Marriage of Sophie Daughter of Wickman the last Earl, to Otho of Nassau above-mention'd.

Holland and Zealand, a rude unpeopled Country being much disturb'd by the Norman Pyracies, was first made an Earldom by the Emperor Lewis II. about the year 863. and given to Thierry, in whose Line the Succession continu'd till the Death of John about the year 1300. who leaving no Issue, was succeeded by John of Avesnes Earl of Hainault, Son of Alcide, the Daughter of Florence IV. Earl of Holland.

Friseland is but part of the Country of the ancient Frisii, some part of Utrecht and Overijssel, as well as East-Friseland in Germany, being Inhabited by that People, who were Govern'd by their own Kings, till the Emperor Charlemagne Conquer'd them; and this part, now one of the Provinces, became part of the Duchy of Guelderland, and afterwards a distinct Barony.

Overijssel and Groninghen, was part of the Episcopate of Utrecht, first Founded by Dagobert King of France, in favour of Willibald an Englishman, the Converter of these parts to Christianity, whose Successors were Temporal as well as Spiritual Lords, for 900 years, and were very powerful Princes, but often attack'd by the Earls of Holland and Dukes of Guelderland; which last got from them the Lordship of Groninghen, and in the end so distressed Henry Bishop of Utrecht, that by reason of that and civil Differences, he chose to surrender his Temporalties to the Emperor Charles V. A. D. 1527. who divided it into the two Provinces of Utrecht and Overijssel.

How these Provinces became United in the House of Burgundy, will be seen by this Table

BRABANT, The Marquisate of the Empire or Territory of Antwerp and Lordship of Machlin, together with the Dutchy of Limburg being fallen into this House, upon the Death of Philip II. without Issue, it descended to Philip the Good, 1430.

LUXEMBURG, Elizabeth the Niece of Sigismund the last Duke, having no Issue, sold this Dutchy to Philip the Good.

NAMUR. John VI. sold it to Philip the Good, who was also next Heir to Theodorick, Successor to John, who died without Issue, about 1430.

GUELDERLAND, with ZUTPHEN and GRONINGEN. Arnold the Duke, being inhumanly treated by his Son, sold his Estates to Charles the Warlike; notwithstanding which, his Son Adolph got possession of them after the Death of Charles the Warlike, A. 1473. and left them to his Son Charles, who maintain'd long War with the Duke of Burgundy to defend his Right, but was at length forced to surrender it to Charles V. to be enjoy'd by him after his Decease, which happen'd 1538. and Charles accordingly succeeded.

UTRECHT with OVERYSSEL. Henry of Bavaria being distressed through War with the Duke of Guelderland, and Rebellion of his own Subjects, surrendred his Temporalties to Charles V. A. 1527. which was confirm'd by the Pope and the Estates of the Country.

Anthony the Proud, his Son, A. 1404. also made Duke of Brabant by his Mother.

Philip the Good, their Brother, succeeded John in 1419. and Anthony 1430. and was, in his time, Duke and Earl of Burgundy, Duke of Brabant, Limburg and Luxemburg, Marquis of the Holy Empire, and Earl of Flanders, Haynault, Holland, Zeeland, Artois and Namur.

Charles the Warlike, his Son, succeeded Anno 1467. and added the Dutchy of Guelderland and Zutphen. He was killed in War against the Switzers, 1475. leaving Issue only one Daughter.

Mary Heir to Charles, married Maximilian of Austria, Son to the Emperor Frederick III. and afterwards Emperor himself, Succeeded Anno 1482. by Philip their Son, who married Joan the Daughter and Heir of Ferdinand and Isabel King and Queen, and first Monarchs of all Spain.

Charles, the Son of Philip and Joan, succeeded in the Estates of Burgundy in the Right of his Father, A. 1506. to which he added Overysfel and Utrecht; and in the Kingdom of Spain in the Right of his Mother, A. 1516, and was also elected Emperor, being the 5th of that Name, A. D. 1519.

Charles V. made these Countries a Circle of the Empire, and resign'd them, with the Kingdom of Spain, A. 1558. to his Son

Philip IV. of Burgundy and II. of Spain, in whose time happen'd the defection of the Seven Provinces, whereof an Account shall be given when we come to speak of those Estates.

1599. Philip III. surrendered these Countries to his Daughter

Isabella Clara Eugenia, married to Albert Arch-Duke of Austria. After whose death, A. 1621. succeeded Philip IV. King of Spain; whose Successors will be seen in our Description of Spain.

The Present State of the Spanish Netherlands.

The Supream Lord, as hath been said, is the King of Spain, who governs them by a Substitute with the Title of Governor General of the Netherlands.

The Governour General is assisted by three Councils, viz.

The Council of State; wherein the most weighty Affairs, as Peace and War, Leagues and Alliances, Treaties with Foreign Ambassadors, &c. are transacted.

The Privy Council; which judges Matters of Right brought before it by Appeal from the other Courts of Judicature; makes Laws and Edicts, determines the Bounds of Provinces, the Right of Lordship, &c. And

The Council of Finances; which hath the Care and Management of the Royal Revenues and all Taxes, and of supervising the Accounts of the Receivers. To this Council also belongs the Care of the Fortifications, the adjusting and proportioning the Charge of a War, &c.

But the levying Mony and enacting of new Laws, belong to the Convention of the Estates, which is compos'd of the Nobility, principal Clergy and Deputies of the Chief Cities; who, being called by the Governour General, assemble at Brussels, not in one Body, but by Provinces, (the several Provinces retaining still most of the Particular Privileges they anciently enjoy'd) where the Prince's desires are propos'd to them, in an obliging and endearing manner; (the Spaniard having by fatal Experience found his Error in treating these People with Severity) and if they appear unwilling to Grant what he Demands, the most winning Arguments, with all the power of Rhetorick, are used in his Behalf; which is the more necessary, because every City hath a negative Voice, and the dissenting but of one of them spoils the Law.

The settl'd Revenue of the Crown consists in Customs and Imposts, which, by reason of the great Loss of Trade, and the Encroachments of the King of France upon the Country, do not, by much, answer the Charge of the Government; but the King is oblig'd to send continual Supplies from Spain.

For maintaining the Peace and taking care of the Armies, &c. there is a Governour in every Province appointed by the King, subordinate to the Governour General.

And for administring of Justice, each Province hath a Provost or Bailiff; and over all there is a Grand Provost, who hath great Power in Criminal Matters.

The Bishopricks of the Netherlands, besides those already mention'd under the Archbishoprick of Cambray in the Account of France, are only these, viz.

The Archbishoprick of Machlin, with the Bishopricks of Antwerp, Ghent, Bruges, Ypres, Ruremond and Bois le Duc.

And formerly, the Bishoprick of Utrecht, with the Bishopricks of Haerlem, Deventer, Groningen, Lewarden and Middleburg; which being subject to the States-General, have been suppress'd.

C H A P. I.

The County or Province of ARTOIS, Artesia, Arthesia, or Adartesia.

THE Province of Artois is bounded on the North by that of Flanders, on the South by Picardy, on the East by the Territories of Cambresis, and on the West by those of Boulogne, extending it self from North-west to South-east about 60 miles, and 23 from N. to S. This is the Country of those ancient People call'd Atrebares by Cesar, and is at present entirely subject to the French. Within its Limits are 850 Towns and 9 Castellanies, together with a great number of rich Abbies and Monasteries. It bringeth forth much Corn, abounds in Pastures, and is water'd with divers Rivers; the chief whereof are, the Lys, the Scarpe, and the Aa. Artois was at first subdued by the Romans, and then by the French; under the second Race of whose Monarchs it obtained certain particular Governours or Earls, who in process of time render'd themselves proprietary Lords thereof; until, at length, after divers Revolutions, the French made an absolute Conquest of this Province, to whom it was granted by the 35th Article of the Pyrenean Treaty of Peace, A. D. 1659.

The most considerable Towns, Villages, &c. are these, viz.	{	Arras , Bish.	Aire , Pr.
		S. Omer , Bish.	Terouanne , ruin'd.
		Bapaume ,	Lens ,
		Hesdin ,	Avesne le Comte ,
		Bezbune ,	S. Paul ,
		S. Venant ,	Mont S. Eloy , Ab.

ARRAS, Atrebatum or Nemetocerna, and Nemetacum, is seated on the River Scarpe, at the distance of 30 miles from Amiens to the N. and 30 from Tournay to the S. W. 47 from Dunkirk to the S. and 18 from Cambray to the W. It is a very ancient and large City, defended by a strong Castle, and very good Bulwarks, Trenches, and other Fortifications. It is divided into two parts, call'd the City and the Town, separated formerly by a Wall. The former is the smaller, but best built; in it stands the Cathedral (a beautiful Building, dedicated to the Virgin Mary) wherein are kept some Famous Relicks, particularly a Candle pretended to be dropt down from Heaven, and some Manna shew'd down on S. Jerome. The Town hath fair broad Streets, a spacious Marketplace and stately Churches; and is inhabited by wealthy Traders and Artificers, who make Sayes and Tapestry Hangings, especially the latter, which Art was invented here, and therefore take their Name from this City, Arras is the See of a Bishop, Suffragan to the Metropolitan of Cambray, who is accounted Lord of the City, as the Secular Prince is of the Town. It was taken by the French Troops under the Command of the Marshals de Chaume, Chatillon and la Melleraye on the 10th day of August, A. D. 1640. and hath ever since remained in their Possession. The Spaniards, to regain so important a Place, laid Siege to it, but were repulsed with great Loss, on the 25th of August, 1654.

S. Omer, Fanum S. Audemari, or Audomaropolis, stands on the River Aa, in the Country of the ancient Morini, and is also an Episcopal See; the Bishop whereof hath been a Suffragan to the Archbishop of Cambray ever since the year 1559. when it succeeded the demolish'd City of Terouanne in this Dignity; from the Ruines of which it is distant 3 Leagues to the North, 20 miles from Boulen to the East, 20 from Dunkirk to the South, and 32 from Arras to the North-West. S. Omer, Bishop of Terouanne, founded a Monastery here, A. C. 660. whither People resorting, Buildings round it were erected, which in time increased to a good Town: And A. 880. Tongues, Abbot of S. Bertin, began to enclose it with Walls, which were afterward finished by Baldwin II. surnamed the Bald, Earl of Flanders, in 902. Not far from hence is to be seen a large Lake, in which there are divers floating Islands, which are remov'd by Poles and Cords, and inhabited by certain Families that never depart out of these Islands, and refuse to contract Alliance with any but those of their own Tribe; In one of these Islands stands a Monastery of the Order of S. Bernard, and a Church. S. Omer's is large and the People rich, by means of their Trade. An English Seminary of Jesuits is establish'd here; from whence our Nation hath been infested with Disturbers of the publick Peace. This City is Fortified both by Nature and Art, as being environ'd on one side with the River and Marshes, and on the other with an Hill or rising Ground, defended by a strong Castle, divers Bastions and very deep Trenches: However, the Duke of Orleans made himself Master thereof, after having defeated the Spanish Forces at the Battle of Cassal, on the 23d of April, 1677. And it was yielded up to the French King by the Peace concluded at Nimeguen in the Year ensuing.

Aire or Arien, Aira, is situate on the River Lys, 10 Miles from St. Omer to the South-East, and about 24 from Arras to the North-West; and is a very strong well fortified Town, having, besides the Walls, Bastions, Half-Moons, Horn-Works, Redoubts, Counter-carps and Ditches, a Morass which environs it on three Sides; and on the side that is accessible, a Fortrels, call'd Fort St. James, which hath 5 Bastions, 2 Half-Moons, and a deep Trench. But notwithstanding its Strength, this Town was taken by the French in 1641, and quickly after, retaken by the Spaniards: And in the Year 1676, the French again took it, and have ever since possessed it.

In the mid-way, between St. Omer and Aire, are the Ruins of the once considerable City of Terouanne, which was famous on Account of the Siege thereof by our King Henry VIII. in Person, in the Year 1513, at which the Emperor Maximilian assisted, and wore the English Badge (St. George's Cross) as a Soldier under King Henry. At this Siege, the French attempting to put Provisions into the Town, were beaten by the English with great Slaughter, and by reason of the Haste wherewith the French fled away, 'twas call'd the Battle of Spurs; intimating, That those were the chief Weapons they used. Quickly after the City was taken, but dismantled and quitted: Which the French afterwards repairing, it was again taken by the Emperor Charles V. and utterly demolished, in the Year 1553, and is at present a small Village only.

Bethune, Bethunia, a fortified Town, and the Capital of a County, stands on the River Briette. 12 miles from Aire to the East: An excellent sort of Cheese is made here, and sold into all the Neighbouring Countries. It is a Place of Trade, and hath two annual Fairs.

Bapaume, Bapalma, another small fortified Town, stands near the Confines of Picardy and Cambray, about 15 miles from Arras to the South-East.

Hesdin, on the River Canche, being incommodiously seated for Defence, was demolish'd by the Emperor Charles, and Hesdin-Fort built a little above upon the same River Canche, where the Ternois falls into it; which was well fortified, and made one of the strongest Towns in these Countries: But was, however, taken by the French in 1639. It is situated near the Confines of Picardy, 20 miles South from Aire, and about 10 West from St. Paul.

St. Paul, Poliniacensis Pagus, a small Town, the Capital of a County, formerly subject to its own Lords; is seated near the Head of the small River Ternois, about 10 miles from Hesdin-Fort to the East, 15 from Arras to the West, and as many from Aire to the South.

Azincourt, famous for the Battle between the English and French in 1414, where King Henry V. obtained a most signal Victory over the French Army, that was vastly more numerous than his own, was a Village seated near Hesdin and St. Paul.

CHAP. II.

The County or Earldom of FLANDERS, called Vlaenderen in Flemish; Comitatus Flandriae.

THIS is the first and most considerable County or Earldom of the Low Countries, and takes its Name from Flandrina the Wife of Liderick II. Prince of Buc, and Grand Forester of Flanders, who govern'd it according to the Orders of the Emperors Charlemain and Lewis the Debonnaire. Others derive it from that of Flambert, the Nephew of Clodion King of France, who, having married Belisinda, the Daughter of Golducrus, King of the Ruthenians, expelled the Romans out of Gallia Belgica. This Province is bounded on the North by the German Ocean, and the Mouth of the River Scheld, call'd the Hont, by which it is separated from Zeeland; on the South by Artois and Hainault, on the East by part of Hainault and Brabant, and on the West by the Ocean and part of Artois. It is extended from North to South for the space of about 60 miles, and 75 from East to West, which must be understood of its largest Dimensions. It is a very fruitful Country, especially that part towards the Sea, which is excellent Pasturage for the great number of Horse brought up in the neighbouring Countries and fed here. The rest of the Country affords store of Corn and Fruit. Within its Bounds are comprehended 28 or 30 walled Towns: many other Towns very remarkable, and 1154 Villages, besides 48 Abbies and a vast number of Priories, Colleges and Monasteries; insomuch, that the Spanish Noblemen, who accompanied Philip II. when he took a Progress into these Countries, declar'd, That Flanders was only one continued City. Here are included 5 Vicounties, which are Gaunt, Ypres, Furnes, Winoxberg and Haerlebeck; 3 Principalities, namely those of Steenhusen, Gaure and Espiney; 5 Ports, formerly very considerable, viz. Graveling, Dunkirk, Newport, Ostend and Sluce; and 32 Castellanies. The whole Province is commonly divided into 3 Parts: 1. Flanders Flemish, where the Vulgar-Language of the Country is spoken, and is stretched forth from the Northern Sea to the River Lys: 2. Gallican, where the French Tongue is chiefly predominant, lying to the South of the Flemish, and to the North of Cambrisis, having the Scheld to the East and the Lys to the West: 3. Imperial Flanders, situated between the Scheld and the Dender, comprehending the County of Alost, together with a few Offices or Districts, which were heretofore possessed by the Emperor. There is also another Division in the same Territories, viz. into Flanders Teutonic, Walloon, Imperial and Dutch: The first of these is extended between the Sea and the River Lys: The second, betwixt the Lys and the Scheld: The third between the two others: And the fourth to the North of the two former. But at present the Country of Flanders is divided, with respect only to the Sovereign Princes who are possessors thereof; so that it is usually distinguish'd into the French, Spanish and Dutch Quarters, according to the ensuing Table.

FRENCH FLANDERS.

L'YSL E or RYSS E L, Insula & Lila, so call'd by reason of its situation amidst divers Marshes, which have been drained by the Industry of the Inhabitants, is seated on the River Deule, at the distance of 25 miles from Arras to the North, 30 from Newport to the South West, 12 from Tournay to the West, 16 from Douay to the North, and 12 from the Confines of Artois. Baldwin IV. call'd the Bearded, Earl of Flanders, founded this City, A. D. 1007. and his Successor, Baldwin V. surnam'd of Lisle, caused it to be encompass'd with Walls. It hath been often taken and sack'd during the Wars of the Low Countries, but is at present extremely well Fortified, according to the modern Method, and hath a Citadel flanked with 5 Royal Bastions, besides many Half-moons and other Outworks, raised for its Defence; the Ditches are also double and fill'd with the Waters of the Deule. It is a large City and very considerable on account of its Trade, which consists chiefly in Silk Manufactures; and for the conveniency of transporting their Goods, a Canal is cut to the River Lys; and it is the usual place of Residence of the Governor of French Flanders. It was taken by the Army of the present French King, Lewis XIV. in the Year 1667. and was resign'd to him by the Peace of Aix la Chapelle, A. D. 1668. after which, its Fortifications were exceedingly encreas'd, and the City grew up into so flourishing a State, that it was called Petit Paris, as resembling that City in Opulency and Delights. As this was the Darling City of the Netherlands to the French King, the Loss of it is to be sure no small Affliction to him. The Confederate Army, after the Battle of Oudenard, set down before this City, and after a Siege of two Months, took the Town on the 22d of October, and the Citadel on the 11th of December, 1708. N. S.

Tournay or Dornick, Tornacum, the Capital City of a small County in Gallican Flanders, call'd Tournaisis, is seated in the midst of pleasant and fruitful Meadows, on the Banks of the Scheld, at the distance of 30 miles from Cambrai to the North, 30 from Gaunt to the South, and 11 from Lisle to the East, lying almost in the midst between Douay and Oudenarde, as also between Valenciennes and Courtray. It is a very considerable City, being large, well-built, a place of good Trade, and very populous. It is divided into 10 Parishes, the Churches whereof are stately, and the Cathedral dedicated to the Virgin Mary, magnificent. The Buildings in General are very handsom; and here are reckon'd 72 Companies of Traders. It is an Episcopal See under the Metropolitan of Cambrai, and is well fortified with Walls, Ditches and regular Out-works, besides the Castle, which was built by our King Henry VIII. by whom this City was taken, but restored to the French upon Conditions, A. D. 1518. Afterwards the Emperor Charles V. dispos'd of them in 1521. But the present French King regain'd it from the Spaniards in 1667. and it was granted to him by the Treaty of Aix la Chappelle.

Ipres, Ypres, Ipræ, hath its name from the small River Yperlee, on which it stands, at the distance of 23 miles from Lisle to the North-West, and is a rich well-traded City, the Capital of a Territory of large extent, call'd the Castellany of Ypres, which is a very fertile Country. The Trade consists in Sais, wrought Silks, &c. Several Fairs are held here, especially one in Lent, which is very profitable to the Inhabitants. The Buildings are fair and good, but the Fronts of the Houses are of Timber. The public Buildings are the Cathedral dedicated to S. Martin, several other Churches, many Convents, a large Hall or Repository for the Wool, and the Market-place very spacious and handsom. This City is an Episcopal See under the Archbishop of Malines, is honour'd with the Title of a Viscounty, and is reckon'd the third of the four that constitute the third Estate of Flanders. It was taken by the French in 1678. and yielded to them at the Treaty of Nimeguen.

Menene is a small Town upon the Lys, about 5 or 6 miles above Courtray, with a Ditch and other Fortifications to resist a sudden Surprise.

Armentiers stands also upon the Lys, 12 miles above Menene, and 8 from Lisle to the West: It is a Town of good Trade and considerable Strength; notwithstanding which, it hath been often taken and retaken, and is at present in the hands of the French, having been granted to them at the Treaty of Aix la Chappelle.

Warwyck, Warneton, and Comine, the Birth-place of the famous Philip de Comines, are all three seated upon the Lys, between Menene and Armentiers, and all subject to the French.

Orchies, an ancient tho' small Town, is situate 12 miles South-East from Lisle, 10 from Tournay to the South-West, and as many from Douay to the North-East, and water'd with a small Rivulet, which 5 miles below falls into the Scarpe.

S. Amand, formerly a place of good Strength, but now dismantl'd by the French, is seated on the River Scarpe, 7 or 8 miles from Orchies to the East, and 10 from Tournay to the South. It is noted for a famous Abby in it, dedicated to the Saint that gives name to the Town, and formerly for a fine Forest adjoining, of the same name also, which was cut down in 1676. by order of the French King.

Douay, Duacum, is seated also on the Scarpe, on the Frontiers of Artois, 16 miles from St. Amand to the West, and as many from Lisle to the South. It is a very considerable Town, on account of its large Extent, Trade and Strength. Its chief Trade is in making and and vending Worsted Camlets, which are bought by all the neighbouring People, especially at the Annual Fair in September. Here is a famous Seminary for English Roman Catholics, first Founded in 1569. by Philip II. Afterwards removed to Rheims in France, but stayed there only 20 Years, in which time they Publish'd an English Version of the Bible. The French Took this Town in 1667, and have ever since posses'd it. It is well Fortified, and hath a Fort upon the Scarpe a Cannon-shot below the Town, which is situated among Marshes, and by Sluces can drown the Country all round.

These are all the Places of any Note in the East part of French Flanders. The most considerable of the West part are, Winoxberg, Cassel, Furnes, Graveling, Mardyke and Dunkirk.

Winoxbergen, or Berg Saint Winox, Berga, or Mons Sancti Winiaci, is seated about 18 miles West from Ypres, and 14 East from Gravelin, as also Eight or Nine from Dunkirk to the South; it is the Capital of a Castellany, or large Territory, which is very fruitful, and feeds great Herds of Cattle. The Town hath its name from a Monastery erected on a Hill, in Honour of S. Winox an English-man. Woollen Cloth is made here; but its Trade was formerly much more considerable than at present.

Cassel, or Mont Cassel, Castellum, and Castellum Mynerum, stands upon the top of a high Hill, at the distance of 10 or 11 miles South from Winoxburg, and 15 West from Ypres: It is an ancient Town, and hath a considerable Jurisdiction, subordinate to that of Ypres. It was formerly a place of good Strength, but having been several times Taken and almost Ruin'd, it is now not considerable. The French took it in 1677. and have ever since held it. Near this Place, in the Year 1677. was fought a very bloody Battle, between the Dutch Army, commanded by the Prince of Orange, and the French, commanded by the Duke of Orleans, wherein the latter obtained the Victory.

Furnes, or Vuerne, Vurna, is a neat pleasant Town, seated within two Leagues of the Sea, at the distance of about 10 miles from Dunkirk to the East, and 5 from Newport to the West, 20 from Cassel to the North, and about 10 from Winoxberg to the North-East. This Town hath a Territory call'd an Ambacht belonging to it, which is exceeding Fertile. It is dignified with the Title of a Vicounty, and is a place of Trade, which consists in Linnen Manufactures, &c. It was taken by the French in 1667. and granted to them by the Peace of Aix la Chapelle, and since better Fortified. In the Year 1692 our English Forces took it, but the next Winter the French regain'd it.

Graveling, or Graveline, Gravelinga and Gravelina, is one of the Sea-ports of Flanders; and seated at the mouth of the River Aa, which parts France from Flanders, in the mid-way, between Calais and Dunkirk, 16 miles North-West from Cassel, and 12 West from Winoxberg. This being a Frontier of Flanders from France, was Fortified by Charles V. in 1528. and is at present very strong, as well by reason of its situation among low Grounds and Dikes, as by the strong and regular Out-works built all round it. It is but a small Town, ill Built, and thinly Inhabited, and at present subject to the French, being taken by them in 1658. and yielded up at the Pyrenean Treaty.

Between Graveling and Dunkirk, about 4 miles from the latter, stands what is left of the Fort of Mardyke, formerly a very strong Place, but in the Year 1645 dismantled, and in 1652, quite destroyed; so that there remains now only a small wooden Fort, with some few Guns on it.

Dunkirk Dunquerca, is situated on the Shoar of the German Ocean, at the distance only of 20 miles from Calais, and 12 from Graveling to the East, 15 from Newport, and 28 from Ostend to the West, 35 from Tournay to the West, 34 from Bruges to the South-west. It takes its name from the Sand-Hills, call'd in Flemish Duynen, that are ranged along the Sea-coasts, and on which a large Church, term'd Kirk by those People, is erected; the high Tower thereof appearing very far off to the Mariners as they sail on the Downs. It is a good large Town, well built, with neat large Streets, and very Populous: It is one of the Five Ports of Flanders, and was therefore a place of good Trade in the flourishing time of this Country: Afterwards, in the War-time, it became a Retreat of Pirates and Robbers, who infested the Seas, and very much disturbed Trade. The Emperor Charles V. first Fortified it; which the French Demolish'd when they Took and Sack'd the Town in 1558. The Spaniards Re-took it 1581. and here a great part of the Fleet, design'd to Invade England in 1588. was Equipp'd by the Prince of Parma, but by the Vigilance of the Dutch Fleet, which lay before the Harbour, were kept in, and could not join the rest of their Fleet; which much facilitated their Overthrow. It was afterward taken and re-taken by the French and Spaniard, before 1658. when it was finally taken by the joint Forces of England and France, and put into the Hands of the English, in whose Possession it remain'd till 1662. when it was deliver'd to the French by (Charles II. upon certain Conditions to us unknown) who have ever since held it, and have very much improv'd it, by enlarging the Town, and building exceeding strong Fortifications, &c. wherein they have bestowed prodigious Expence; having besides the building strong Walls an Ravelins, Half-moons and Counter-scarps, and a Citadel regularly Fortified: I say, besides these, the French King hath dug a large Basin within the Town, capable of receiving 150 Ships of Burden, and cut a Canal through the Splinter-lands out into the Sea, which is secur'd by a Mole or Gallery on each side, that are carried out into the Sea a mile in length, on which are Forts with Cannon planted on them, and on one side a strong Fort, call'd the Rice-bank, well secur'd with an hundred Pieces of Cannon that command the Port; a Work of vast Labour, Art and Expence, by which he intended to make it a Port for his Ships of War, but was disappointed of his Design; for the Sands do so choak up the Harbour, notwithstanding the Mole, that with all the advantage of the highest Tides, they cannot bring in a Ship of 70 Guns, without Un-lading her.

Spanish FLANDERS.

GAUNT or GHENT, Gande, Gandavum, is water'd with divers Rivers and Channels, which divide the Town and the adjacent Country into many Islands, being seated almost at an equal distance of 30 miles North from Tournay, East from Ostend; South from Middleburg, and West from Malines, as also 26 from Antwerp and 28 from Brussels. It is the Capital City of the Province of Flanders, and one of the largest Cities of Europe, being 15 or 16 miles in compass; but then Corn-fields and Meadows are included within the Walls. It was built (as it is reported) by Julius Caesar, in a Place extremely advantageous for Traffick, on the Account of its situation at the confluence of four large Rivers, viz. of the Saelder, which flows hither from the Province of Hainaut, the Lys, which runs from that of Artois, the Lien, which proceeds from the Port of Stuys, and the Moere, which took its rise near the four Offices, call'd Ambarces. Within the Precincts of Gaunt are included 26 small Isles, form'd by the Waters of the Canals and Rivers, and as many large Bridges, under which pass Barks of good Burden, and a great Number of smaller Bridges. The Churches, which are seven in Number, are fair and well built; the Cathedral especially is very stately, and has a Tower of 400 Steps high. The Castle or Prince's Palace, is said to contain 300 Chambers, in one of which the Emperor Charles V. was Born. The other publick Buildings are, the Town-house, a high Tower call'd Be fort, (in which hangs a great Bell, call'd Roland, that weighs 11000 pound weight,) many Monasteries, and several Hospitals. The private Houses are fair and well-built, and the Streets clean and neat. This City hath a good Trade in Cloths, Stuffs and wrought Silks, made here in great quantities. It is much resorted to from the neighbouring Places on account of the Provincial Council of Flanders, which was establish'd by John Duke of Burgundy, A. D. 1409. and still held in this City. It is also an Episcopal See subject to the Metropolitan of Mecklin, and is fortified with a Citadel built in 1540, by the Emperor Charles V. a Counterescarp, deep Ditches, Ramparts, and many other Out-works. However, the French King, Lewis XIV. took it after a Siege of 9 days, on the 9th of March, 1678. but was oblig'd to restore it to the Spaniards at the Peace of Nimeguen.

Julius

At the distance of 4 Leagues from hence to the North, stands a strong Fortreis, call'd by the Inhabitants, 't Sas van Ghendt. It was erected by the Spaniards, and taken by the Hollanders, A. D. 1644. by whom it hath been strongly fortified; and made almost impregnable. Between Gaunt and Bruges there is a Canal which was cut at great Expence by the Marquis Spinola, when he was Governor of the Netherlands, for conveying Goods and Passengers to and from each City; and is call'd by the Inhabitants De nieuwen Vaert, and by Strangers, The Canal of Bruges.

BRUGES, Brugs, so call'd from the multitude of its Bridges, is seated on the Canal of Reye, which is here divided into many navigable Rivulets, running through divers quarters of the Town, and afterward re-uniting in the same Canal that passeth as far as Stuys. But because that Port was in the Hands of the Hollanders, about 40 Years ago the Inhabitants made another, which flows to Ostend, and is so deep, that Ships of two or three hundred Tuns are brought up to Bruges, which thereby maintains a very good Traffick, but small in comparison of what it hath been: For before the Wars in Flanders, it was the greatest Mart in Europe; Merchants from all Parts resided here, and had Magazines for the Goods of every Country, which were here Barter'd and Sold; of these Merchants, there were no less than 17 Companies, all which remov'd to Antwerp about the Year 1500. by reason of the Wars and Disturbances hereabouts, except the English, who, upon the loss of Calis, remov'd the Staple for Wool hither in 1558. where it remain'd for a long time, to the great Advantage of the Town. Bruges is esteem'd the second City of Flanders; it is large, well-built, and reasonably populous; The Form of it is round, and the Circumference about 4 miles; there are six principal Streets, which begin at the six chief Gates, and center at the Market-place. The publick Buildings are sumptuous, the Houses neat, and the Streets strait and large. Their Trade consists in Spanish Wool, and the Manufactures of the Town, Fustians and other Stuffs, Cloth, Tapistry, &c. This City is an Episcopal See, under the Archbishop of Malines; The Cathedral is dedicated to S. Donat, besides which there are seven Parish, and two Collegiate Churches, three principal Abbies, and a great number of Religious Houses. The other publick Buildings are, the Castle, the Town-house, and the Water-house of very ingenious Structure. Bruges stands in the North-part of Flanders, at the distance of 10 miles from the Sea, somewhat more from Ostend to the East, and as many from Stuys to the South-west, as also 20 from Gaunt to the North-east.

Ostende is a small Town, and one of the five Ports of Flanders; it is situate about 10 miles West from Bruges, 9 from Newport to the North, and at the Mouth of the small River Guele, in the midst of a moorish Ground, and divers Channels and Dikes. It was at first only a small Village, but by reason of its convenient Situation, it was wall'd round and fortified; by the Strength whereof and the advantageous Situation, the Hollanders, with the Assistance of an English Garrison, sustain'd a Siege three Years and three Months, viz. from the 5th of July, 1601. to the 22d of September, 1604. when it was taken by Amberosio Spinola, and surrender'd to Albert Arch-Duke of Austria. The Spaniards had 78124 Soldier in their Army, and in counting the Officers, together with those that were slain in the Town, the number slain in this Siege is suppos'd to amount to 15000 Men. Since when, it hath been possess'd by the Spaniards, and is at present exactly and regularly fortified, and one of the strongest Places in the Netherlands. The Houses are well built, handsom and uniform, and the Streets clean and neat. The Haven is safe, large well defended by Forts, and deep enough to receive Ships of great Burden.

Newport, Novus Portus, heretofore call'd Sandhoft that is to say, the Head of the Sands, hath in like manner a safe Harbour, altho' scarcely capable, even at the high Tides, of receiving Vessels of any great Burden. It is seated near the Mouth of the River Tperlee, which falling into the Sea, makes a long and secure Haven, at the distance of 15 miles from Dunkirk to the N. E. 9 from Ostend to the S. W. 18 from Tpres to the North, and 38 from Gaunt to the West. It is a Place of good Strength, being well fortified with Walls and several Forts. The Buildings are neat, but low and of Timber: The Inhabitants are maintained by Fishing. From hence the English Paequet-Boat goes weekly to Dover. This Town being invested by the Hollanders in the year, 1600. under the Command of Maurice Prince of Orang assisted by some English Troops commanded by S. Francis Vere, the Archduke Albert of Austria, the Governor of the Netherlands, came to its Relief with a great Army; whence ensued a notable Battle fought on the adjoining Sand-hills, wherein Prince Maurice obtained a very signal Victory, and the Archduke was oblig'd to escape by Flight: In which Action the English bore the greatest part.

Oudenard, Aldenarda, is seated on the River Scheld which divides it into two parts: It is a place of good Wealth by means of the Trade, especially in its own Manufactures, Tapestry and Fine Linen. It is the Capital of a Castellany, which contains 33 Villages and

and a place of good Strength, being fortified with a Castle call'd Pamele, join'd to the Town by a Bridge over the River, strong Walls and regular Outworks: but is commanded by a high Hill on the side towards Alost, which takes away from its otherwise advantageous situation. In 1484. this Town was taken by Stratagem by Philip of Cleves Lord of Ravestein; surpriz'd by Blomart in 1567. besieg'd and taken by the Prince of Parma in 1582. and by the French in 1658. but being restored to the Spaniards by the Pyrenean Treaty, they again took it in 1667. and had it yielded to them at the Peace of Aix la Chapelle: But they were oblig'd to restore it by the Treaty of Nimeguen, and it hath ever since been in the Hands of the Spaniard. It stands 13 miles from Ghent to the South, 17 from Tournay to the North, and 14 from Courtray to the East. A Battle was fought near this Town on the 11th of July, 1708. N. S. between the French Army, under the Dukes of Burgundy and Vendisme, and the Confederate Army under the Duke of Mailborough and the Prince of Savoy, wherein a Glorious Victory was obtain'd by the Confederates.

Courtray, or Cortryck, Corteriacum, Contracum, is a very good well-traded Town, seated on the River Lys, 14 miles North from Lille, and as many East from Ypres. The Inhabitants are excellent Artists in Diapering of Linen: It was several times taken by the French and Spaniards before 1667. when the French finally took it, and had it granted to them at the Treaty of Aix la Chapelle. It hath a strong Citadel and other Fortifications, which have been much improv'd by the French, and is at present a Place of great Importance.

Alost or Aelft is seated on the River Dender, near the Confines of Hainault, 13 miles from Ghent to the South-East, as many from Oudenard to the East, and makes almost an exact Triangle with those 2 Places. It is reckon'd the Capital of Imperial Flanders, and of a County formerly subject to its own Lords. It was taken by the Spaniards in 1576, and by the Duke of Anjou in 1582. after which it came into the Hands of the English, who sold it to the Duke of Parma. In 1667. the French took it, and destroy'd its Fortifications before they restor'd it.

The Territories of this Town are large, being besides the County of Alost, the County of Waes and the four Offices of Hulfe, Axel, Bouchout and Aflemede, which comprehend above 150 Villages and 4 Cities.

Dendermond, seated on the River Dender, where it falls into the Schelde (whence the Town hath its name) 6 or 7 miles North from Alost, and 12 East from Ghent, is a good Town, and considerable for its Manufacture of Fustians and other Stuffs. It is fortified, and was strong enough to resist the Assaults of the French in 1667.

Ninove is seated in the Territory of Alost, at the distance of about 8 miles from it to the South, and 12 from Oudenard to the East. It is a small Town and not considerable.

Deynse is seated on the Lys, 8 miles from Ghent to the South-west, and 12 from Oudenard to the North-West; it is but a small Town, however the Capital of a Territory in the Castellany of Courtray, and subject to the Spaniards: As is also Harlebec near Courtray, a small Town, and the Capital of another small Territory.

Dixmude or Dixmuyde, is seated on the River Yperlee, 20 miles North-West from Courtray; and 10 South-East from Newport; it is a place of some Trade, and hath an Annual Fair in July. It is but small and not very well fortified. Our English Forces took Possession of it in 1692. but the French took it soon after, and have since quitted it.

DUTCH FLANDERS.

SLUYS or SLUCE, Sluys, Clausula, another of the Ports of Flanders, is seated in the North part of this Province, about 9 or 10 miles beyond Bruges, 16 from Middleburg in Zeeland to the South, 18 from Ostend to the North-East, and 20 from Ghent to the N. W: It belongs to the States of Holland, and is one of their strongest Frontiers. It hath the largest Haven of all the five, being capable of receiving 500 Ships of Burthen at a time, and was once a place of great Trade and Wealth. This Town having been first, as Bruges and Antwerp were afterwards, the chief Mart of these Countries; at present it is but poor, and thinly inhabited, but extremely well fortified, and hath a good Garrison.

Oostburg and Ysendrick, small Towns near Sluys, are both guarded by small Forts.

Philippine is a pretty strong Fort, seated about 15 miles East from Sluys, and 5 or 6 North from the 't Sas van Ghent.

Axel, the Capital of one of the four Offices, is seated about 6 miles East from Philippine, and 12 North from Ghent. It was surpriz'd by Prince Maurice, assisted by our Sir Philip Sidney, in 1586. and is a Place of good Strength.

Hulst, the Capital of another of the Offices, stands about 6 Miles East from Axel, and in the midst of the Country of Waes. It is a place of good Trade, and tolerably well fortified.

't Sas van Ghent, is a strong Fort seated 5 miles South West from Axel and 11 miles North from Ghent; taken by the Hollanders in 1644. and being very much strengthened, has been ever since possess'd by them.

These Towns, together with the Hont or Wester Schelde, which is an Arm of the Sea, make a secure Frontier toward Zeeland.

CHAP. III.

The Dutchy of BRABANT, Brabantia.

THIS Country lies in form of an Island encompassed round about with Rivers, having the Maes to the East and North, the Demer to the South, and the Schelde to the West, together with the Sea on the Side of Breda and Bergen-op-Zoom; that is to say, it is bounded on the North by Holland, and part of the Dutchy of Guelderland; on the East by part of the same Dutchy, and the Bishoprick of Liege; on the South by Hainault and the County of Namur; and on the West by Flanders and part of Zeeland.

Zeeland. Its extent from South to North consists of about 70 miles ; from West to East, in its broadest part, near 25 many. The Air is exceeding temperate, and the Soil no less fruitful ; besides the Rivers Schelde, Maes, Dile, Demer, Aa, Ischer, Domel, the greater and lesser Nephe, and the Ment, wherewith it is water'd, many Lakes, Marshes and Pools are found in its Territories : 26 walled and fortified Towns are also comprehended therein, not to mention a great number of others of lesser Consequence. In Brabant are compriz'd the Marquisate of the Holy Empire, the Capital City whereof is Antwerp, the Lordship of Malines, the Duchy of Afchet, the Marquisate of Bergues, the Earldom of Ostreten, the State of Maastricht, formerly of Liege, and 19 Baronies. In fine, the whole Province may be thus divided into four Parts, viz.

on the Banks of the small River Sinne, which is join'd to the Schelde by a Channel six Leagues in length, cut with great Labour and the Expence of 500 thousand Crowns by Charles V. and his Son Philip, and finish'd in 1560. by which the Commerce of the Inhabitants with several Places, especially Antwerp, was much advanc'd.

This City in general is very well built, the Streets large, handfom and convenient, and secured by double Walls of Brick, and a Ditch quite round the Town. The publick Buildings are: The Palace, which is seated upon a Hill in the upper Town, and is a magnificent and stately Structure, and so large, that several Crown'd Heads were at one time Lodged and Entertain'd in it, viz. Charles V. and his Son Philip King of Spain, Maximilian King of Bohemia and his Queen, the Queens of France and Hungary, and an African King. Adjoining to this Palace is a pleasant Park, well stor'd with Deer, also fine Gardens, Water-works, Grotto's and pleasant Walks. The Senate-house, a noble Building with a high Tower, whereon stands a large Statue of S. Michael in Brass, and the Church of S. Gudula, which hath 2 Towers of five hundred Steps high. Several other of the Buildings of Brussels deserve particular Descriptions, especially the Gallery which repeats an Echo 15 times, the magnificent Palaces of divers Noble Men, the Royal Stable which holds 120 Horses, together with the Hospitals and Religious Houses ; but for these the Reader must consult Bleau, Guicciardin, &c. being too long to be inserted here. The Private Citizens Houses are very fine, and are particularly pleasant by means of the Gardens they are almost all furnished with, which they are extravagantly curious in Cultivating. Flowers being especially valued here. The whole City is divided into the Upper and Lower, whereof the latter is the most pleasant, and adorn'd with artificial Fountains and Canals. with many fair Bridges. The Residence of Saint Gertrude is a fair Building, and the Convent of 42 Nuns, all of noble Extraction, is considerable.

Vilvoorden, seated upon the River Sinne about 6 Miles North from Brussels, is a wall'd Town, and by its situation reasonably strong: Here is an old Castle, wherein formerly Prisoners of Quality were kept, and also the Records of greatest concern belonging to the Dutchy of Brabant.

Senef, a small Village, 2 miles South of Nivelle, and near the Borders of Hainault, not at all considerable, but for a memorable Battle fought there in the Month of August, 1674. between the Confederate Forces commanded by the Prince of Orange, his late Majesty of Great Britain, and the French commanded by the Prince of Conde.

LOUVAIN or LOEVEN, Louvanium, is a City of a very large Extent, its Walls being 6 miles in Compass, but include many Meadows, Corn-fields, Vine-yards and Gardens, besides the Houses of the Inhabitants. It is seated in a pleasant Country, upon the Banks of the River Dyle at the distance of 15 miles from Brussels to the East, and 15 from Mechlin, forming a Triangle with those two Cities; as also 26 miles South from Antwerp, and 24 North from Namur. The private Buildings here are but ordinary. The publick ones are, The Stadt-house or Guild hall, which is a very handsome stately Pile; and the Castle, which is seated on a high Hill, in the midst of Vineyards and Gardens, and in a very wholsome Air, which together with the noble Prospect it affords, make it a most pleasant Seat, and therefore heretofore frequently made the place of Residence of the Dukes and their Children, and particularly the Emperor Charles V. ^{who began up} here. ^{here} as also the Churches, Religious Houses and Hospitals, are worth a Stranger's View. But that which Louvain is chiefly noted for, is the University, which was founded, as some say, in the peror Charles V. and hath a small Territory depending on it.

Sichem stands about 4 miles from Arfchoot to the East: It is a small wall'd Town, but not very strong; however, it made a notable Resistance when attack'd by the Prince of Parma in the time of the Low-Country War.

Diest or Diestheim, a large near Town, and of good Trade for several Manufactures, especially of Cloth, stands on the River Demer, 3 miles from Sichem to the East. It giveth the Title of a Barony to the Prince of Orange, and hath a large Territory its dependant. It is also wall'd and reasonably strong. As is also Halem, seated on the River Velppe, hardly 3 miles East from Diest, which tho' a small Town enjoys large Privileges granted to it at several times.

Leewe, stands about 6 miles South from Halem upon the River Geet, it is a small Town, but being near the Borders of Liege, is well fortified: It enjoys large Privileges, and the Inhabitants make great profit by a sort of Beer they brew, which is esteem'd and much bought by the neighbouring Towns. Here is a great Priory of the Order of S. Austin, whose Prior is one of the Noblemen of the Province.

Tienen or Tilmont, is seated on the River Geet, 6 miles West from Leewe, and 8 East from Louvain, and was formerly a very large and well-traded City enjoying great Dignity and Privileges; but having suffer'd by the Wars, was much decay'd before the French destroy'd it in 1675. so that at present it is not considerable.

Landen, though small is reckoned among the ancientest Towns of the Province; it is distant about 3 miles from Tienen to the East, and as many from Leewe to the South. Near this Town a Battle was fought on the 29th of July, 1693. between the Con-

Julius Cæsar, in a Place extremely advantageous for Traffick, on the Account of its situation at the confluence of four large Rivers, viz. of the Schelde, which flows hither from the Province of Hainaut, the Lys, which runs from that of Artois, the Lien, which proceeds from the Port of Says, and the Mere, which took its rise near the four Offices, call'd Amoëtes. Within the Precincts of Gaunt are included 26 small Isles, form'd by the Waters of the Canals and Rivers, and as many large Bridges, under which pass Barks of good Burden, and a great Number of smaller Bridges. The Churches, which are seven in Number, are fair and well built; the Cathedral especially is very stately, and has a Tower of 400 Steps high. The Castle or Prince's Palace, is said to contain 300 Chambers, in one of which the Emperor Charles V. was Born. The other publick Buildings are, the Town-house, a high Tower call'd Be fort, (in which hangs a great Bell, call'd Relana, that weighs 11000 pound weight, many Monasteries, and several Hospitals. The private Houses are fair and well-built, and the Streets clean and neat. This City hath a good Trade in Cloths, Stuffs and wrought Silks, made here in great quantities. It is much resorted to from the neighbouring Places on account of the Provincial Council of Flanders, which was establish'd by John Duke of Burgundy, A. D. 1409. and still held in this City. It is also an Episcopal See subject to the Metropolitan of Mecklin, and is fortified with a Citadel built in 1540, by the Emperor Charles V. a Countericarp, deep Ditches, Ramparts, and many other Out-works. However, the French King, Lewis XIV. took it after a Siege of 9 days, on the 9th of March, 1678. but was oblig'd to restore it to the Spaniards at the Peace of Nimeguen.

At the distance of 4 Leagues from hence to the North, stands a strong Fortreis, call'd by the Inhabitants, Castan Ghent. It was erected by the Spaniards, and taken by the Hollanders, A. D. 1644. by whom it hath been strongly fortified; and made almost impregnable. Between Gaunt and Bruges there is a Canal which was cut at great Expence by the Marquis Spinola, when he was Governor of the Netherlands, for conveying Goods and Passengers to and from each City; and is call'd by the Inhabitants De nieuwe Vaert, and by Strangers, The Canal of Bruges.

BRUGES, Bruxæ, so call'd from the multitude of its Bridges, is seated on the Canal of Reye, which is here divided into many navigable Rivulets, running through divers quarters of the Town, and afterward re-uniting in the same Canal that passeth as far as Says. But because that Port was in the Hands of the Hollanders, about 40 Years ago the Inhabitants made another, which flows to Ostend, and is so deep, that Ships of two or three hundred Tuns are brought up to Bruges, which thereby maintains a very good Traffick, but small in comparison of what it hath been: For before the Wars in Flanders, it was the greatest Mart in Europe; Merchants from all Parts resided here, and had Magazines for the Goods of every Country, which were here Barter'd and Sold; of these Merchants, there were no less than 17 Companies, all which remov'd to Antwerp about the Year 1500. by reason of the Wars and Disturbances hereabouts, except the English, who, upon the loss of Calis, remov'd the Staple for Wool hither in 1558. where it remain'd for a long time, to the great Advantage of the Town. Bruges is esteem'd the second City of Flanders; it is large, well-built, and reasonably populous; The Form of it is round, and the Circumference about 4 miles; there are six principal Streets, which begin at the six chief Gates, and center at the Market-place. The publick Buildings are sumptuous, the Houses neat, and the Streets strait and large. Their Trade consists in Spanish Wool, and the Manufactures of the Town, Fustians and other Stuffs, Cloth, Tapitry, &c. This City is an Episcopal See, under the Archbishop of Malines: The Cathedral is dedicated to S. Donat, besides which there are seven Parish, and two Collegiate Churches, three principal Abbies, and a great number of Religious Houses. The other publick Buildings are, the Castle, the Town-house, and the Water-house of very ingenious Structure. Bruges stands in the North-part of Flanders, at the distance of 10 miles from the Sea, somewhat more from Ostend to the East, and as many from Says to the South west, as also 20 from Gaunt to the North-east.

Ostende is a small Town, and one of the five Ports of Flanders; it is situate about 10 miles West from Bruges, 9 from Newport to the North, and at the Mouth of the small River Guele, in the midst of a moorish Ground, and divers Channels and Dikes. It was at first only a small Village, but by reason of its convenient Situation, it was wall'd round and fortified; by the Strength whereof and the advantageous Situation, the Hollanders, with the Assistance of an English Garrison, sustain'd a Siege three Years and three Months, viz. from the 5th of July, 1601. to the 22d of September, 1604. when it was taken by Ambrasio Spinola, and surrender'd to Albert Arch-Duke of Austria. The Spaniards had 78124 Soldiers in their Army, and in counting the Officers, together with those that were slain in the Town, the number slain in this Siege is suppos'd to amount to 15000 Men. Since when, it hath been possess'd by the Spaniards, and is at present exactly and regularly fortified, and one of the strongest Places in the Netherlands. The Houses are well built, handsom and uniform, and the Streets clean and neat. The Haven is safe, large, well defended by Forts, and deep enough to receive Ships of great Burden.

Newport, Novus Portus, heretofore call'd Sandhoft, that is to say, the Head of the Sands, hath in like manner a safe Harbour, altho' scarcely capable, even at the high Tides, of receiving Vessels of any great Burden. It is seated near the Mouth of the River Yperlee, which falling into the Sea, makes a long and secure Haven, at the distance of 15 miles from Dunbirk to the N. E. 9 from Ostend to the S. W. 18 from Ypres to the North, and 38 from Gaunt to the West. It is a Place of good Strength, being well fortified with Walls and several Forts. The Buildings are neat, but low and of Timber: The Inhabitants are maintained by Fishing. From hence the English Paequet-Boat goes weekly to Dover. This Town being invested by the Hollanders in the year, 1600 under the Command of Maurice Prince of Orange assisted by some English Troops commanded by St Francis Vere, the Archduke Albert of Austria, then Governor of the Netherlands, came to its Relief with a great Army; whence ensued a notable Battle fought on the adjoining Sand-hills, wherein Prince Maurice obtained a very signal Victory, and the Archduke was oblig'd to escape by Fight: In which Action the English bore the greatest part.

Oudenard, Adenarda, is seated on the River Scheldt, which divides it into two parts: It is a place of good Wealth by means of the Trade, especially in its own Manufactures, Tapestry and Fine Linen. It is the Capital of a Castellany, which contains 33 Villages and

and a place of good Strength, being fortified with a Castle call'd Pamele, join'd to the Town by a Bridge over the River, strong Walls and regular Outworks: but is commanded by a high Hill on the side towards Alost, which takes away from its otherwise advantageous situation. In 1484. this Town was taken by Stratagem by Philip of Cleves Lord of Ravestein; surpriz'd by Blomart in 1567. besieg'd and taken by the Prince of Parma in 1582. and by the French in 1658. but being restored to the Spaniards by the Pyrenean Treaty, they again took it in 1667. and had it yielded to them at the Peace of Aix la Chapelle: But they were oblig'd to restore it by the Treaty of Nimeguen, and it hath ever since been in the Hands of the Spaniard. It stands 13 miles from Ghent to the South, 17 from Tournay to the North, and 14 from Courtray to the East. A Battle was fought near this Town on the 11th of July, 1708. N. S. between the French Army, under the Dukes of Burgundy and Vendesme, and the Confederate Army under the Duke of Marlborough and the Prince of Savoy, wherein a Glorious Victory was obtain'd by the Confederates.

Courtray, or Cortryck, Corteriacum, Contracum, is a very good well-traded Town, seated on the River Lys, 14 miles North from Lisle, and as many East from Ypres. The Inhabitants are excellent Artists in Diapering of Linen: It was several times taken by the French and Spaniards before 1667. when the French finally took it, and had it granted to them at the Treaty of Aix la Chapelle. It hath a strong Citadel and other Fortifications, which have been much improv'd by the French, and is at present a Place of great Importance.

Alost or Aelft is seated on the River Dender, near the Confines of Hainault, 13 miles from Ghent to the South-East, as many from Oudenard to the East, and makes almost an exact Triangle with those 2 Places. It is reckon'd the Capital of Imperial Flanders, and of a County formerly subject to its own Lords. It was taken by the Spaniards in 1576, and by the Duke of Anjou in 1582. after which it came into the Hands of the English, who sold it to the Duke of Parma. In 1667. the French took it, and destroy'd its Fortifications before they restor'd it.

The Territories of this Town are large, being besides the County of Alost, the County of Waes and the four Offices of Hulst, Axel, Bouchout and Astemedede, which comprehend above 150 Villages and 4 Cities.

Dendermond, seated on the River Dender, where it falls into the Schelde (whence the Town hath its name) 6 or 7 miles North from Alost, and 12 East from Ghent, is a good Town, and considerable for its Manufacture of Fustians and other Stuffs. It is fortified, and was strong enough to resist the Assaults of the French in 1667.

Ninove is seated in the Territory of Alost, at the distance of about 8 miles from it to the South, and 12 from Oudenard to the East. It is a small Town and not considerable.

Deynse is seated on the Lys, 8 miles from Ghent to the South-west, and 12 from Oudenard to the North-West; it is but a small Town, however the Capital of a Territory in the Castellany of Courtray, and subject to the Spaniards: As is also Harlebec near Courtray, a small Town, and the Capital of another small Territory.

Dixmude or Dixmuyde, is seated on the River Yperlee, 20 miles North-West from Courtray; and 10 South-East from Newport; it is a place of some Trade, and hath an Annual Fair in July. It is but small and not very well fortified. Our English Forces took Possession of it in 1692. but the French took it soon after, and have since quitted it.

DUTCH FLANDERS.

SLUYS or SLUCE, Sluys, Clausula, another of the Ports of Flanders, is seated in the North part of this Province, about 9 or 10 miles beyond Bruges, 16 from Middleburg in Zeeland to the South, 18 from Ostend to the North-East, and 20 from Ghent to the N. W: It belongs to the States of Holland, and is one of their strongest Frontiers. It hath the largest Haven of all the five, being capable of receiving 500 Ships of Burthen at a time, and was once a place of great Trade and Wealth. This Town having been first, as Bruges and Antwerp were afterwards, the chief Mart of these Countries; at present it is but poor, and thinly inhabited, but extremely well fortified, and hath a good Garrison.

Oostburg and Ysendrick, small Towns near Sluys, are both guarded by small Forts.

Philippine is a pretty strong Fort, seated about 15 miles East from Sluys, and 5 or 6 North from the 't Sas van Ghent.

Axel, the Capital of one of the four Offices, is seated about 6 miles East from Philippine, and 12 North from Ghent. It was surpriz'd by Prince Maurice, assisted by our Sir Philip Sidney, in 1586. and is a Place of good Strength.

Hulst, the Capital of another of the Offices, stands about 6 Miles East from Axel, and in the midst of the Country of Waes. It is a place of good Trade, and tolerably well fortified.

't Sas van Ghent, is a strong Fort seated 5 miles South West from Axel and 11 miles North from Ghent; taken by the Hollanders in 1644. and being very much strengthened, has been ever since possess'd by them.

These Towns, together with the Hont or Wester Schelde, which is an Arm of the Sea, make a secure Frontier toward Zeeland.

CHAP. III.

The Dutchy of BRABANT, Brabantia.

THIS Country lies in form of an Island encompassed round about with Rivers, having the Maes to the East and North, the Demer to the South, and the Schelde to the West, together with the Sea on the side of Breda and Bergen-op-Zoom; that is to say, it is bounded on the North by Holland, and part of the Dutchy of Guelderland; on the East by part of the same Dutchy, and the Bishoprick of Liege; on the South by Hainault and the County of Namur; and on the West by Flanders and part of Zeeland.

Saint Gertrude is a fair Building, and the Convent of 42 Nuns, all of noble Extraction, is considerable.

Vilvoorden, seated upon the River Sinne about 6 Miles North from Brussels, is a wall'd Town, and by its situation reasonably strong: Here is an old Castle, wherein formerly Prisoners of Quality were kept, and also the Records of greatest concern belonging to the Dutchy of Brabant.

Seneffe, a small Village, 2 miles South of Nivelle, and near the Borders of Hainault, not at all considerable, but for a memorable Battle fought there in the Month of August, 1674. between the Confederate Forces commanded by the Prince of Orange, his late Majesty of Great Britain, and the French commanded by the Prince of Conde.

LOUVAIN or LOEVEN, Leuvenium, is a City of a very large Extent, its Walls being 6 miles in Compass, but include many Meadows, Corn-fields, Vine-yards and Gardens, besides the Houses of the Inhabitants. It is seated in a pleasant Country, upon the Banks of the River Dyle at the distance of 15 miles from Brussels to the East, and 15 from Mechlin, forming a Triangle with those two Cities; as also 26 miles South from Antwerp, and 24 North from Namur. The private Buildings here are but ordinary. The publick ones are, The Stadt-house or Guild hall, which is a very handsome stately Pile; and the Castle, which is seated on a high Hill, in the midst of Vineyards and Gardens, and in a very wholesome Air, which together with the noble Prospect it affords, make it a most pleasant Seat, and therefore heretofore frequently made the place of Residence of the Dukes and their Children, and particularly the Emperor Charles V. was brought up here. These, as also the Churches, Religious Houses and Hospitals, are worth a Stranger's View. But that which Louvain is chiefly noted for, is the University, which was founded, as some say, in the Year, 926, but not confirm'd till 1425. when John IV. Duke of Brabant, endowed it. At present it is in a very flourishing State, and Golnitz says, exceeds Cologne for number of Students and neatness of Building: It hath 45 Colleges and a vast number of Students, over whom the Rector is chief Governor, and hath great Honour and Respect paid him, even by the highest Magistrate of the Town. In this City are 11 Market-houses, 4 publick Fountains, 12 principal Streets, and above 100 small ones. The Walls are strongly built, and upon 'em are several Towers, whereof one is very fine, and was built by the Citizens in 1364. who design'd six more, but by reason of the great Expence were deterr'd; wherefore this hath got the Name of Verloren Kest, or Lost Expence. The Weaving Trade was formerly very great in this City, inso much, that about the Year, 1530. there are said to have been 4000 Weaver's Shops, and in each 30 or 40 Men at Work. And of the exceeding populousness of this place, Lipsius gives us a notable Instance, viz. 'That when the Bell rung at 11 a Clock at Noon for the Workmen to leave off, the Women in great haste snatch'd their Children out of the Street, lest they should be bore down by the great Crowd. But at present the Trade is not very considerable, some Manufactures of Linens and Stuffs is the chief of it; which, together with the Entertainment of the Students, afford the Inhabitants a good Support.

Aschot, seated on the River Demer, 10 miles North from Louvain, is a good large wall'd Town, dignified with the Title of a Dukedom by the Emperor Charles V. and hath a small Territory depending on it.

Sichem stands about 4 miles from Aschot to the East: It is a small wall'd Town, but not very strong; however, it made a notable Resistance when attack'd by the Prince of Parma in the time of the Low-Country War.

Diest or Diestheim, a large neat Town, and of good Trade for several Manufactures, especially of Cloth, stands on the River Demer, 3 miles from Sichem to the East. It giveth the Title of a Barony to the Prince of Orange, and hath a large Territory its dependant. It is also wall'd and reasonably strong. As is also Halem, seated on the River Velpse, hardly 3 miles East from Diest, which tho' a small Town enjoys large Privileges granted to it at several times.

Leuwe, stands about 6 miles South from Halem upon the River Geet, it is a small Town, but being near the Borders of Liege, is well fortified: It enjoys large Privileges, and the Inhabitants make great profit by a sort of Beer they brew, which is esteem'd and much bought by the neighbouring Towns. Here is a great Priory of the Order of S. Austin, whose Prior is one of the Noblemen of the Province.

Tienen or Tilmont, is seated on the River Geet, 6 miles West from Leuwe, and 8 East from Louvain, and was formerly a very large and well-traded City enjoying great Dignity and Privileges; but having suffer'd by the Wars, was much decay'd before the French destroy'd it in 1675. so that at present it is not considerable.

Landen, though small, is reckoned among the ancientest Towns of the Province; it is distant about 3 miles from Tienen to the East, and as many from Leuwe to the South. Near this Town a Battle was fought on the 29th of July, 1693. between the Confederate Forces under the Command of his Majesty of Great Britain, and the French commanded by the Marschal de Luxembourg.

Hannuye, a small wall'd Town, the Capital of a Mayorie or small Jurisdiction, is seated in a pleasant and rich Country, 5 miles South from Landen.

Judoigne or Geldenake, a wall'd Town larger than Hannuye, and the Capital of a Mayorie also, stands upon the River Geet, in a very pleasant Country, 7 miles West from Hannuye, and about 14 South-East from Louvain, and hath an old Castle, wherein some of the Brabantine Princes have been nurs'd.

Ramellies, altho' but a Village, is made illustrious by the Battle fought near it, May 12. 1706. between the Armies of the Confederates under the Duke of Marlborough and Monsieur d'Auverquerque; and the French under Marschal Villeroy, wherein a most glorious Victory was obtain'd by the Confederates, and thereby the whole Country reduc'd to the Obedience of King Charles. The Town stands upon the Borders of Liege, 7 miles South by East from Judoigne, and near the Head of the Gheet, between which River and the Mebaigne, this memorable Battle was fought.

Gemblours or Giblu, is a good wall'd Town, the Capital of a County, seated on a steep Hill, environ'd with Precipices, near the small River Lorn, which 6 miles below falls into the Sambre, and is distant 20 miles from Hannuye to the East, and 15 from Nivelle to the West. Here is a famous Monastery of Benedictines, whose Abbot is Lord of the Town. Near this place was fought a notable Battle, in the Year 1578. between the King of Spain's Army and that of the States-General, wherein the former obtain'd a very advantageous Victory.

ANTWERP, Antwerpia, Andoverpum, in Flemish Antwerpen, in High-Dutch Antert, in French Anvers, is advantageously situated on the Banks of the Schelde, at the distance of about 60 miles from the Ocean, 26 from Bruxels to the North, 26 from Gaume to the East, and about 30 from Flackercn, one of the Islands of Zeeland, to the South. Its Name (to omit the Fabulous Stories of some Authors) is derived from Werre a Bank or Wharf, as seated aen het Werve, on the Bank of the River. It is the Capital of the Marquisate of the Hoy Empire, the See of a Prelate, Suffragan to the Archbishop of Mechlin, and a very large, rich and well fortified City, enclosing within its compass 200 Streets, 22 publick Places, a great number of fair Houses, and many stately Churches. Among these the Cathedral, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is more especially remarkable: It is in length above 500 Foot, and 246 in breadth; within this noble Fabrick are contain'd 66 Chappels, enrich'd with Marble Columns and Statues, all different and adorn'd with most curious Paintings, as is also the Body of the Church, the Entry into which is through three large Doors of Marble gilt. The Steeple is made very beautiful by its curious Carvings: In it hang 7 or 8 very large Bells, the biggest whereof hath the name of Charles, from the Emperor; these, together with near 30 more, make the most melodious Chimes in the World: the Tower is reckon'd 425 Foot high, besides the Cross at top, of 16 more. The Jesuits Church is extremely beautiful, being paved with Marble, and the Roofs, (which are curiously painted) supported by 56 Pillars of the same, and the Walls all lined with rich Stone, so that nothing is to be seen in the inside but Marble, Jasper, Porphyry and Gold, or excellent Paintings drawn by the accurate Hand of the famous Rubens. In this City are also remarkable, the Stadthuys or Senate-house, which having been destroy'd by Fire, was magnificently rebuilt about the Year 1576. and hath 4 several rows of Apartments: The House of the Oosterlings, or Merchants of the Baltick Sea: The Exchange, which is a noble Building, 180 foot long and 140 broad, with covered Walks all round, the Roof whereof, is supported by 43 Marble-Pillars: And the Citadel or Castle, which is a very strong and regular Fortification, built by the Duke a'Alva, in 1567. It is a Pentagon, or hath five Bastions, together with Ravelines and other Outworks, and is reckon'd among the best Fortifications of Europe.

The River Schelde being found a convenient Haven, was much resorted to by Merchant-ships from all Nations; and therefore upon the Disturbances and Wars in Flanders, the Trade of Bruges and other places thereabouts removed to Antwerp, which increased to that degree, that in its most flourishing State (about the Years 1556. to 68) there were often seen to lie in the River 2500 Ships together, and 3 or 400 Vessels have frequently come up in one Tide; also 200 Waggon came in every day, laden with Passengers from the neighbouring Countries, and near 1000 every Week with Germans, French and other Foreigners; and 10000 Country Carts were continually employed in carrying Goods to and from the City. By this means the number of the Houses and Inhabitants grew exceeding great. Guiccardin tells us, That Antwerp contain'd 13500 Houses, and the number of the People was reckon'd no less than 200000. But this Grandeur quickly declin'd, and is now extremely diminish'd; for the Wars reaching this place also, Antwerp was Sack'd, and 700 of its Inhabitants kill'd by the mutinous Spaniards in the Year 1576. and afterwards taken by the Prince of Parma, after a remarkable Siege of no less than 12 Months durance. These Calamities, together with the growing power of the United Netherlands, who, by the possession of Zeeland, were able to stop the Passage of the Schelde, and oblige the Ships to come into their Ports, did quite break the Trade of Antwerp; which removing to London and Amsterdam, hath left this City empty of Inhabitants; and though it be still as populous and rich as many others in the Netherlands, it is by no means comparable to what it has been. The Houses are all of Brick and uniform, and the Streets large and neat, many particular Houses very stately, and the publick Buildings magnificent. The City is built in form of a Bow on the East side of the Schelde which is near 400 Yards broad, and 22 Foot deep at the lowest Tide, so that Vessels of the greatest Burden can come up and unlade upon the Kayes, which lye all along before 8 of the 13 Gates. From the River there are 8 Canals that run through the Town which are deep enough for Vessels of good Burden to come up; and over these Canals there are 74 Bridges. In fine, Antwerp is so beautiful a place, that being compar'd to Florence, it hath had the Preference by those that have seen both.

About 10 miles from Antwerp to the North, and as many from Bergen-op-Zoom, stands the strong Fortrefs of Souteliet.

MECHLIN, or Malines, Mechlinia, seated on the River Dyle, is the Metropolis of the Lordship of the same name, reckon'd one of the XVII Provinces though of but small extent, being not above 3 Leagues from West to East, and one and an half from South to North. It is the Seat of an Archbishop, whom Pope Paul IV. establish'd there, A. D. 1559. and dignified with the Title of Primate of the Low-Countries. The Grand Royal Council instituted by Charles Duke of Burgundy in 1473. is held here, as is also the Sovereign Court of all the Spanish Netherlands establish'd in the year 1502. The City stands in the midst of the Province of Brabant, between Antwerp Bruxels and Louvain, almost at the equal distance of 13 miles from each of them. It was formerly subject to the Dominion of its proper Lords, until the Year 1336. when it became Free. Afterward it fell into the Possession of the House of Burgundy, and at length escheated to that of Austria, 1477. The Inhabitants were freed from paying Taxes, for the signal Services they perform'd to Charles the Hardy, Earl of Flanders, at the Siege of Nuis on the Rhine. It is a large City and very well built, and is even so neat as to have obtained the Epithete of Fair. It is also a strong Place, having, besides the Fortifications a natural Security by the flatness of the Country round about, which by that means is easily laid under Water. The Trade of this Town is pretty considerable, consisting in Linen, Lace, Tanning Casting great Guns, &c. The Tide flows up beyond the Town, by which means Boats come up from Antwerp, and the Commodities of this City are Exported. Weavers were formerly very numerous here but upon a Riot by them committed, were deprived of their Privileges, by which the Trade decayed. The Cathedral Church of S. Rumbald is a beautiful Building, and hath a very high Tower; beside which, here are 7 other Churches belonging to the 7 Parishes that the City is divided into. The Monastery of the Franciscans is a curious and stately Building.

Building; and the Nunnery of S. Clara is very fine. A Magazine is kept here that was formerly exceeding well furnish'd. Some particular Companies of the Traders of this City enjoy great Privileges, especially the Tanners, who are very numerous. Other things of Mechlin may deserve a Traveller's Observation, whereof we cannot spare room for a particular Description.

Lire, or Liere, is a neat and pleasant Town, seated on the River Nethe, 7 or 8 miles from Mechlin to the N. and 20 from Antwerp to the S. E. it is a good large place, and strongly Fortified. The Collegiate Church of S. Gummans, is a magnificent Building, and the Market-place is remarkable for its largeness, and the curious Buildings that surround the Religious Houses, especially that of the Cathusians, are very fine. This Town is Inhabited by People of Quality, and rich Merchants retire from Business.

Herentals stands 10 miles E. from Lire on the River Nethe also; it is a wall'd Town, and the Capital of a Majorie.

DUTCH BRABANT.

BOIS LE-DUC, or BOLDUC, Boscu Ducis or Sylva Ducis, call'd by the Inhabitants, S. Hertogenbosch, and by abbreviation, the Bosch, is the Capital City of the Dutch Brabant, and the Seat of its supreme Court of Justice, standing on the Banks of the River Dromele, which having there receiv'd into its Chancel the Waters of the Ande, and then those of the Diese, falls into the Maes, about 2 Leagues from thence, at the Place where the Island of Bomel is form'd. It is distant only 5 miles from the River Maes, or Mose, as also from the confines of Holland and Guelderland, near 30 miles from Antwerp to the N. E. 54 miles from Maastricht to the N. about 40 from the River Rhine, and 20 from the Grave to the W. The Name thereof was taken from a certain Wood, where the Dukes of Brabant were wont heretofore to divert themselves by Hunting; which being cut down by Duke Henry to facilitate the March of his Army against the Guelderlanders, in the year 1172. this City was built in its place by Duke Geoffry, and wall'd round by Henry his Son, in 1196. Pope Paul IV. erected an Episcopal See, and Franciscus Sonnius was the first Bishop; but when Bois-le-duc was taken by the Hollanders in 1629. these Prelates were oblig'd to remove their Station to Goldorp. It is a good large Town and well Fortified, having strong Walls, wherein are 7 large Bastions, a deep Ditch, with Ravelins, Counterscarp and other excellent Fortifications, and is seated upon a Hill amidst Marshes, which are easily laid under Water, and thereby the Town made Inaccessible, but by artificial Causeys, which too are all commanded by Forts, so that 'tis in a manner Impregnable. This being an important Frontier, the Hollanders take care always to keep a good Garrison in it. It is a place of pretty good Trade for its Manufactures of Woollen and Linen Cloth, Knives, and other Steel-Ware, &c. The Church of S. John which was the Cathedral, is a sumptuous Building. The Market-place, seated at the meeting of 10 Streets, the chief of the Town, is surrounded with very good Buildings: several Canals run through the Town, which bring in Vessels of good Burthen; over these are 51 Stone-Bridges, besides others of Wood. In the defection of the Netherlands, the Bosch took part with the Confederates, and in 1579. embrac'd the Union of Utrecht, but was afterwards taken by the Prince of Parma, and remained under the Spaniard till 1629, when the Prince of Orange Re-took it, after a very difficult Siege. In 1672 it was invested by the French, but they marched off the next Month without taking it.

BREDA, Breda stands in a marshy Ground (which is often overflow'd) on the Banks of the River Merch, in Dutch Brabant, at the distance of 30 miles from Antwerp to the N. 8 S. from Gertruydenburg, 24 from Bois-le-duc to the W. and 22 from Bergen-op-zoom to the E. It is considerably large, populous and well-built, and is one of the strongest Places of the Low-Countries. It is dignified with the Title of a Barony, comprehending 17 Villages under its Jurisdiction, which in the year 1212 belonged to Geoffry Lord of Bergues, but descended to the House of Nassau, in 1404. by the Marriage of Mary, the Daughter and Heir of Philip Lord of Leek and Baron of Breda, with Egbert Earl of Nassau, in whose Descendants it hath ever since continued, except in the time that the Spaniards were Masters of it; viz. from 1581. when it was Surpris'd by the help of the Roman Catholics in the Town, to the year 1590. when it was regain'd by a notable Stratagem; for a Boat seemingly laden with Turf for Fuel, but indeed with Armed Men, passed into the Castle undiscover'd, and forced the Garrison to surrender. And again, from 1625. when the Marquis Spinola took it, after a long Siege and Blockade, till 1637. when Friedrick Prince of Orange recover'd it. The Soil of the adjacent Country is very Fertile in Corn, Pasture and Copses. An Academy for Education of Youths is held here under 4 Professors, establish'd by Prince Friedrick abovementioned. The Prince of Orange hath a Palace and Castle in the Town, where a Treaty was held, and a Peace concluded between King Charles II. and the States-General, A. D. 1667.

Bergen-op-zoom, Berga ad Zomam, or Bercizoma; by Guicciardin, said to have its name from the little River running by it, which he names Zoom, but Bleau contradicts, and says, The River hath no such name, except from the Town; and that the Town is call'd Bergen from the Hill on which it stands, and Op-zoom, or the Seam, because seated on the edge of the Province. It is conveniently situated between Brabant, Flanders, Holland and Zeeland, within half a League of a Branch of the Ooster Scheld, 18 miles from Antwerp to the N. 20 from Breda to the W. and as many from Middleburg to the E. It had the Title of a Marquisate given by the Emperor Charles V. and was formerly a Place of good Trade, till eclips'd by Antwerp: For convenience of its Trade, a Canal was cut through to the Hont, or Wester Schelde. The Country about it is very low and marshy, by which the Town is much secured, as well as by very strong and well contriv'd Fortifications, which the Dutch have built round it, with Forts upon the Channel, and other convenient places. The Buildings are fair, the Church of S. Lambert and the Marquis's Palace especially. Here are 3 spacious Market-places, and a large Hospital for the Sick, which was formerly a Nunnery. This Town was subject to its own Lords, from 1212. till 1567. when it was delivered into the hands of the Hollanders; from whom the Prince of Parma endeavour'd to recover it in 1588. But they defended themselves so courageously, that he was forced to raise the Siege. Again, in 1622. Spinola Besieg'd it, but had no better Fortune; for after 70 or 80 days furiously attacking it, he was glad to leave it, upon the approach of the Dutch Forces under Prince Maurice.

Lillo, a strong Dutch-Fort, stands on the Schelde 8 miles below Antwerp, and 13 miles S. from Bergen-op-zoom. This is the chief of the Forts that commands the passage of the Schelde, and at it a Toll is paid by all Ships.

Grave, Gravia, termed Graeff by the Inhabitants, is situated on the S. side of the Maes, the Waters whereof fill the large Trenches that environ its Bulworks, in a Plain on the Frontiers of Guelderland, at the distance of 18 miles from Bois le-duc to the East, 7 from Nimwegen to the S. and about 50 from Maastricht to the N. It is a small Town, but very neat and pleasant, and esteem'd the strongest and easiest to be defended of any in the Netherlands. It is the Capital of the small Earldom of Cuyck, which belongs to the Prince of Orange, as doth the Town it self. The Country about it is Meadow, and affords Pasture to a good Body of Horſe that are always kept here: The Town is exceeding well Fortified with Ravelins, Counterſcarp, Palisado, and a very strong Horn-work, and besides secured by the River on one side, and a Morais on another. It was taken in 1586 by the Prince of Parma, and recover'd in 1602 by Prince Maurice. In 1672 the French took it, and upon their being forced to quit Holland, had made this their grand Magazine, and therefore defended it for a long time when it was besieged by the Prince of Orange his late Majesty, to whom, however, they were obliged to Surrender it, with all the Artillery and Ammunition, on the 28th of September, 1674.

These 4 Towns make a very strong Frontier on this side to the Dominions of the States-General.

Ravenstein, a neat but not large Town, is seated on the River Maes, about 5 or 6 miles below the Grave; 10 N. E. from the Bosch; it is defended by a strong Castle, and hath a jurisdiction of 4 miles broad, extending about 12 miles S. from the Maes, towards Helmont, the Capital of the Country call'd Peel-land:

It is a good walled Town, seated on the little River Aa, that falls into the Maes a little beyond the Bosch, and is distant 17 miles from the Grave to the S.

Eindhoven, a good wall'd Town also, and the Capital of the Country call'd Kemper Land, stands upon the River Demmel, 10 miles W. from Helmont, and 14 S. from the Bosch.

Maastricht, tho' seated in the middle almost of the Bishoprick of Liege, is reckon'd part of this Province of Brabant, because formerly that Duke had one part, as the Bishop of Liege had the other part of the Jurisdiction of it; but since 1633. it hath belonged to the States-General. It stands on the River Maes, at a Place where was always a Ferry or Passage, which the word Treect in Dutch signifies; it is call'd in Latin, Trajectum ad Mosam & Trajectus inferior, to distinguish it from Utrecht. It stand on the W. side of the River, but hath a fair Suburb nam'd the Wick, on the other side, which is join'd to the City by a beautiful Stone-bridge of 9 Arches. The old Buildings are but ordinary; but those built since the Hollanders have had the Town are of Brick and very Fair, particularly the Stadt-house: The Streets are large, and the Houses cover'd with Slate. Here are 3 Dutch Churches, and one for the English and French; that of S.

Servatius was formerly a Collegiate, and had the Honour to have the Duke of Brabant always one of its Canons: It was also a Cathedral, built in Honour of that Saint, who planted the Christian Faith here, was the first Bishop, and died A. C. 395. from whom a Succession of 20 Bishops ruled in this City; but upon the Martyrdom of S. Lambert, the See was translated to Liege in the year 713. The City is large, being reckon'd 4 English miles in Circuit, but not very populous. It is very strongly Fortified, having, besides a good Wall and Trench, many Out-works of modern Form, well contriv'd to oppose the Advantages Besiegers may have by the nature of the Earth, convenient for Mines and Trenches, and by a Hill a little distant, that would command the Town if the Bastion to the S. E. were not built very high. At the top of that Hill stands an old Castle, and in the Bowels of it is a Quarry of Stone, of which vast quantities are transported to other Countries. This City descended with Brabant to the King of Spain, but in the War time taking part with the States, it was Besieged by the Prince of Parma in 1579. and though they made a very vigorous defence, were forced to submit, and continued under the Spaniard till 1633. when the Prince of Orange besieged and took it; and in the succeeding Peace of Munster, it was yielded to the Hollanders. In 1672. the French besieged and took it: They sat down before it on the 15th of June, the King of France himself, with the Dukes of Orleans and Monmouth, commanding the large Army that attacked it with great Fury, till the end of that Month; at which time the Burghers mutinying, and the Garrison being much weakned, the Governor was forced to Capitulate; and on the 2d. of July the Town was surrendred, and continued under the French till by the Peace of Nimeguen it was restored to the States General, who still possess it.

On the S. E. of Dutch Brabant lies the County of Horn, which is a Territory of about 20 Miles extent, bounded on the E. by the River Maes, on the N. W. by Peel-land in Brabant, and on the S. W. by the Bishoprick of Liege: It was formerly subject to its own Earls of the Family of Montmorency, of whom Philip and Florent were eminent for their Zeal in opposing the Tyranny of the Duke d'Alva, and assisting the Prince of Orange in asserting the Liberty of their Country; but had both the misfortune to lose their Lives, by the practices of d'Alva.

Horn, that gives Name to the County, is a small Town with a Castle, seated near the Maes, 24 miles S. E. from Helmont, 25 N. from Maastricht, and 4 or 5 W. from Ruremond.

Weert, the chief Town, stands 12 miles W. from Horn, 16 S. from Helmont, and 25 N. from Maastricht.

C H A P. IV.

The County or Earldom of HAINAULT, Hannonia.

THIS Province derives its name from the River, Heine, which passeth through the midit of it; called also Haingon and Hennegon by the Germans, and is bounded on the N. by Brabant, and part of Flanders, on the S. by Cambresis, Picardy and Champagne, on the E. by part of Brabant and the County of Namur, and on the W. by the River Schelde, that separates it from Artois and part of Flanders. It is extended from N. to S. about 50 miles, and about the same from E. to W. The Air is exceeding temperate and healthful, and the Soil Fertile and water'd with the Schelde, Sambre, Haine, Dender, and divers other Rivers. Here are also found many Lakes and Ponds, Woods, some Mines of Iron and Lead, and Quarries of Marble and Touchstone.

Within this Province are comprised 24 Wall'd Towns, 950 Burroughs or Villages, and several Castles; also 3 Principalities, 10 Earldoms, 12 Peerages, 22 Baronies, and 26 Abbies, not to mention divers Hereditary Offices that appertained to the Prince's Court.

viz. Those of a Marshal, Seneschal, grand Hunter, Chamberlain, &c. The French at present possess the greater part of Hainault, and the rest remains under the Dominion of the Spaniards, as it is shewn in the ensuing Table.

Valenciennes, Valenciana, or Valencena, is situated on the confines of the Country of Ostrevant, on the River Schelde, which there receives the Rouel that divides it into two parts, and by several Channels passes through most of its Streets; distant 15 miles from Tournay to the S. and lying also in the middle between Mons to the W. and Cambrai to the N. E. It was Founded (as is generally believ'd) by the Roman Emperor Valentinian, and is at present a very large, fair and rich Town, strongly Fortified. The Church of our Lady is an ancient but stately Building, having Pillars of Marble and Porphyry to support its Arches of Stone. The Church of S. Peter is very curiously Carved, as is also the Front of the Town-House adjoining. The Hospital for the maintaining and educating of poor Orphans, is well endow'd. Over the Schelde are built 10 Bridges, on which stand many fair and large Houses. The Trade of the Town consists in Linen-Cloth, Mohairs and Tabbies, to which is now added the Staple for French Wines. It was Besieged by the French King in the year, 1677. and taken by Storm; but upon the Inhabitants agreeing to pay 400 thousand Crowns for the building of a Citadel, it escaped being Sacked. It was granted to the French at the Treaty of Nimeguen, and hath been ever since possessed by them.

Bouchain, a small but strong Town, seated on the River Schelde, 10 miles above Valenciennes, and near as many from Cambrai to the North; is of service for the Communication of those two Places in time of War, and therefore Besieg'd by the French in 1676. to whom it was surrender'd after one Assault, tho' an Army was marching to its Relief.

Quesnoy, tho' a small Town, hath a good Trade for its Manufacture of Linens and Stuffs, and is reasonably well Fortified. It stands about 15 miles from Bouchain to the East.

Landrecy is a very strong Town, seated on the Sambre, near the Borders of Cambrai, and not above 6 miles from the Frontiers of Picardy, about 10 from Quesnoy, and 20 from Valenciennes to the S. E. It was formerly subject to the Duke of Areschat, under whom it held out against a long and furious Siege by the Emperor Charles V. in 1543. and the year following was surrender'd to him, together with Avesnes, a small Town 8 or 9 miles E. from Landrecy. All these 3 were taken by the French and granted to them by the Pyrenean Peace in 1659.

Maubeuge stands upon the Sambre, in the mid-way between Avesnes and Mons, about 12 m. from each and is a Place of good Trade for Woollen Cloth.

Bavay, call'd Bavay Mailon, to distinguish it from Bavay in Picardy, stands 8 miles West from Maubeuge, and 6 N. E. from Quesnoy. It is thought by some to have been formerly a great City, nam'd Belgium, from whence the Country had its Name, but is at present but a small Place. These were both granted to the French by the Nimeguen Treaty.

Conde or Condet, a small Town with a Castle, stands upon the Schelde, about 15 miles N. W. from Bavay.

Marienburg, Founded by Mary of Austria, Queen of Hungary, and Governess of the Low Countries, in 1542. and Fortified with a very strong Wall and good Out-works, stands on the Borders of the Bishoprick of Leige, about 6 miles from the River Maes to the W. 10 from the Frontiers of Picardy to the N. and 30 from Landrecies to the E.

Philipville stands about 4 miles N. from Marienburg, and is reckon'd part of the Province of Hainault. It was built soon after Marienburg, and nam'd from Philip II. King of Spain, who Fortified it with 5 Royal Bastions, and other strong Works, these two making a Frontier against France on that side; but they have been both taken by that King, and granted to him by the Pyrenean Treaty.

Spanish HAINAULT.

MONS, Montel, and Montes Hanonia, the Capital City of Hainault, call'd Berghen in Flemish, is seated on an Hill of easie Ascent, near the Banks of the River Trull, which a little below falls into the Haine, almost in the midst between Namar to the E. and Doway to the W. at the distance of 35 miles from both, as also 16 from Valenciennes to the N. E. 26 from Bruxels to the S. W. and 20 from Tournay to the S. E. It is a large City and well Fortified with a Stone-Wall, firm Ramparts, 3 large Trenches and an old Castle. The Buildings are beautiful, the Streets large, and the Market-place spacious: The publick Edifices are also very magnificent, and among others the Palace wherein is convened the general Council of the Province; the Religious Houses, of which the College of Canonesses, Founded by S. Gualtrude Princess of Lorraine, is more especially remarkable; the whole Society consists only of Ladies of great Quality and high Birth, who are obliged to assist at Mass in the Morning, cloathed in the Habit of Nuns, but have liberty to wear sumptuous Apparel in the Afternoon, and even to spend the rest of the Day in Dancing, and Singing, and other Exercises of a free Conversation; and are also permitted to abandon the Abby, or to marry whensoever they please. The Earls of Hainault had formerly the Title of Earls of Mons, and with the possession of the County receiv'd the Investiture of the Dignity of an Abbot, and other Perquisites holden in Fee of the Church, from the hands of the Lady Abbess of the said College. Mons is a Place of good Trade for divers Commodities, especially Wollen Stuffs, whereof they make great quantities. It was surpriz'd in 1572. by Count Lewis of Nassau by a Stratagem; for 12 Soldiers in Habit of Merchants obtaining leave to have the Gates opened for them earlier than ordinary, kill'd the Porter, and let in the Count with the Soldiers he brought for that purpose, who took possession of the Town without Opposition: But the same year the Duke d'Alva Besieg'd and recover'd it; from which time it quietly remained under the Spaniard, till 1678. that the French invested and had much distressed it; when the Prince of Orange, his late Majesty, came to its Relief, and gain'd a signal Victory over the Duke of Luxemburg, upon which the Peace was immediately concluded. In the late War, viz. the 8th. of April 1691. the French took this Town, but it was restored at the Peace.

Arth, a small Town seated on the River Dender, 14 miles N. from Mons, as many S. from Oudenard, and about 20 S. W. from Brussels, is a Place of good Trade for Linnen, and by reason of its situation near the Borders of these 3 Provinces of Hainault, Flanders and Brabant, hath been at several times well Fortified, especially by the French, after they had taken it in 1667 ; for being granted to them by the Treaty of Aix la Chapelle, Vaulen was set to work, and great Cost was bestow'd in strengthening this most advanc'd Frontier ; but they were oblig'd to restore it at the Peace of Nimeguen. It was again taken by the French in 1697. but restor'd at the Peace the same Year.

Lessin, or Lessines, is a small Wall'd Town, seated also on the Dender, about 4 miles N. from Arth.

Enghien, or Anguien, stands about 8 miles West from Arth, and hath had the Title of a Dutchy.

Halle is seated on the very Borders of this Province, within 5 miles S. of Brussels, and near 20 from Mons to the N. It stands in a very pleasant Country, and is water'd by the River Sienna. It is not large nor very well built, and is chiefly noted for the Famous Chappel of the Virgin Mary, whose Statue in it is cover'd with Gold, and is much resorted to by multitudes of Votaries, who annually make rich Offerings to it. It is Wall'd, but not being strong enough to endure a Siege, was quit to the French in April, 1690. but since they left it, it hath been made stronger, and well Garrison'd for the security of Brussels.

Braine le Comte, on the Frontiers of Brabant, about 8 miles South from Halle.

Soigny, about 3 or 4 miles South-west from it ; and Roeles, or Reux, 4 miles from Soigny to the South, are all 3 Wall'd Towns.

On the Borders of Hainault, and Frontiers of Brabant, about 3 miles N. E. from Soigny, as many S. W. from Halle, and about the like distance from Enghien to the E. stands the Village of Steenkirk upon the Rivulet Senneque ; a small place and not at all considerable, but for a Battle Fought near it on the 24th of July, 1692. between the Confederates and the French.

Binche, stands upon a little Branch of the Haine, 7 or 8 miles S. E. from Mons ; it was formerly a populous Place, and made a Seat of Pleasure by Mary Queen of Hungary, when she was Governess of these Countries, who had a fine Palace here ; but it hath suffer'd much by the Wars, particularly in 1544. it was burnt by the French : And since that the French took it ; but finding they must part with it, demolish'd the Fortifications before they surrender'd it, according to the Treaty of Aix la Chapelle, in 1668.

S. Ghislain stands about 8 miles W. from Mons, it is also a wall'd Town, but not remarkably strong. As is also Beaumont, which stands 12 miles S. from Binche, and 10 E. from Maubeuge. It is a pleasant Town seated upon a Hill, as its name imports. It was anciently an Earldom belonging to the second Son of the Earl of Hainault. It was taken by the French, and granted to them by the Truce in 1684. as was also Chimay, 14 miles South from it.

CHAP. V.

The Country of CAMBRESIS, Cameracensis Ager.

THIS small Country is bounded on the N. and E. by the Province of Hainault, on the W. by that of Artois, and on the S. by Picardy, including about 18 miles from N. to S. and 25 from E. to W, and is extremely Fertile. Here was concluded a Treaty of Peace at Chateau-Cambresis, in the year 1559. between Philip II. King of Spain, and Henry II. King of France, which was very disadvantageous to the latter. 198 considerable places being resign'd up for S. Quentin, Ham and Charlevoix ; however the present French King Lewis XIV. hath found means to get Possession of the whole Country, as well as of Cambray, its Capital City ; which were granted to him by the Treaty of Nimeguen.

The chief Towns are } Cambray, Arch-bish. and Cap.
these, viz. } Chateau Cambresis.
 } Crevecoeur.

CAMBRAY, Cameracum, is seated on the River Schelde, on the Confines of Artois, at the distance of 15 miles from Doway to the S. 20 from Arras to the E. as many from Peronne to the N. 16 from Valenciennes, and 60 from Brussels to the S. It was heretofore an Episcopal See subject to the Archbishop of Rheims, but at length erected into a Metropolitan by Pope Paul IV. A. D. 1559. It was also some time an Imperial and Free City under the protection of the Count of Alost ; but being afterward seiz'd by the Emperor Charles V. and Fortified with two Citadels, it fell into the hands of the Spaniard, and was united to the Earldom of Hainault. At length it was storm'd by the Forces of the present French King, on the 18th day of April, 1667. and surrender'd to him by the Articles of the Treaty of Nimeguen, in the year ensuing.

CHAP. VI.

The Dutchy of LUXEMBURG, Luxemburgensis Ducatus.

THIS Province is seated in the Lower Germany, and is bounded on the N. by part of the Bishoprick of Liege and the Dutchy of Limburg, on the S. by Lorraine, on the E. by the River Moselle and the Archbishoprick of Triers, and on the W. by the River Meuse, that parts it from Champaign and Namur. Its own extent from S. to N. consists of about 70 miles, and from E. to W. 60 miles. It is by Geographers divided into two Parts, whereof that to the N. call'd Famenne is a Fertile Soil, yielding store of Corn and some Wine ; the other towards France and the Maes, call'd Ardenne, is Woody and less Fruitful, but abounds with Venison and Game of all sorts. Here are also some Mountains, in which are found Mines of Iron. The chief Rivers are the Moselle, Else, Scmay, and the Ourte. In the extent of this Dutchy are contain'd 20 large Wall'd Towns, and about 1200 Villages. The ancient Earls and Dukes of Luxemburg were Princes of great Honour and Interest ; of these Henry II. obtained the Imperial Dignity ;

Dignity ; in 1308. John his Son enjoy'd the Crown of Bohemia ; Charles the Son of John and Wenceslaus the Son of Charles, were successively Emperors: And finally Sigismund was Emperor, King of Hungary and Bohemia, as well as Duke of Luxemburg, about the year 1400. Elizabeth the Niece and Successor of Sigismund having no Issue, sold this Dutchy to Philip the Good, Duke of Burgundy, and so it came to the King of Spain, from whom all the Southern part of it has been wrested by the King of France, and Retained till the Peace of Ryswick, by which he was oblig'd to surrender the whole Dutchy, and the County of Chimni. This Province is observed to have more Gentry and Nobility than any of the rest of these Countries. The chief Cities and Towns in it are,

Thionville .	La Ferte .	Konings Macheren .
Montmedy .	Astenay .	Sirick .

La Roche en Ardenne .	Eichternach .	Virton .
S. Vit .	Bastogne .

LUXEMBURGH, Luciburgum, or Luxemburgum, is seated partly on a Rocky Hill, which is almost surrounded by the little River Alstir, or Else, and partly on a Plain at the Bottom of the Hill, at the distance of 45 miles from the River Maes to the E. 12 from the Moselle to the W. 70 S. E. from Namur, 62 S. from Liege, 22 W. from Triers, and about 16 or 17 from the Frontiers of Lorrain. It is the old Town that stands in the Plain, which being commanded by the Hill, caused the building the new Town there, in which the Buildings are reasonably fair, and many of the Houses of Stone. It is a very strong Place ; for on one side the Hill is very steep and surrounded by the River, which is a good Defence ; and on the other it is Fortified with strong Bastions, Counter-guards, Half-Moons, Ravelins and Ditches, besides two cover'd Ways, and several Redoubts. Notwithstanding which, the French took it the 4th of June, 1684. after a Siege of 26 Days, and had it granted to them, together with its Dependences, in the succeeding Truce concluded the same Year, but was restored to the King of Spain in 1698. in pursuance of the Treaty of Ryswick.

Theonville or Diedenhoven, Theonvilla, or Theonifvilla, stands on the Western Bank of the River Moselle, 15 miles S. from Luxemburg ; it is a good Town, and of old well Fortified by the Emperor Charles the Great ; but the French having taken it in 1558. when it was restored to the Spaniards, they added to its Fortifications 6 Bulwarks, 4 large Hornworks and other Strengths: However, the French found means to take it again, and had it granted to them by the Pyrenean Treaty ; as was also Montmedy, a good strong Fortified Town, seated on a Hill near the River Cher, 34 miles from Thionville to the W. and about 20 from the River Maes to the E.

Damvillers, stands 12 miles S. from Montmedy, although it be a Town of good Strength, it was several times taken by the French, viz. in 1542. 1552. and 1637. and granted to them by the Pyrenean Treaty ; but afterwards, by that of Aix la Chapelle, it was dismantled.

Arlon, is seated on the River Semois, 13 miles from Luxemburg to the W. It was a neat and handsome Town, but hath suffer'd much in the Wars.

Neufchatel, or the New Castle, standing about 14 miles from Arlon to the W. was formerly a Place of great Strength and Beauty, but now not so considerable.

Bastogne, stands 20 miles N. from Arlon, and was heretofore a vast Market for Corn and Cattel.

Eichternach stands near the Frontiers of Treves, and 25 miles E. from Arlon. It is a small Town and not very considerable.

Vianden is seated upon the small River Ourt, 14 miles from Eichternach to the N. W. It is an ancient Earldom, belonging to the Illustrious Family of Orange.

S. Vit, 18 miles N. from Viande, is a neat handsome Town, giving Title to an Earldom, and enjoying a Jurisdiction over several Villages.

Roche en Ardenne, is seated on the River Ourt, 26 miles from S. Vit to the W. and 12 from Bastogne to the N. It is a pretty little Town with the Title of an Earldom also, and hath a Territory of several miles extent.

Durby is another small Town, seated on the same River Ourt, 10 miles N. from Roche, and likewise hath the Title of an Earldom.

CHAP. VII.

The Earldom of NAMUR, Namurcensis Comitatus.

THIS County is bounded on the N. by Brabant, on the W. by Hainault, on the S. by part of Hainault and of Luxemburg, and on the E. by part of Luxemburg and the Bishoprick of Liege. It is extended from W. to E. for the space of about 30 miles, and from N. to S. about 24 miles. There are found in it divers Mines of Iron and Lead, also many Quarries of Marble, and a sort of Stone call'd Houle, that serves for Fuel. In this Province are reckoned up 6 or 7 considerable Towns, together with 180 Burghs or Villages, and some fair Abbies, viz.

Namur , Bish. Cap.	Bouvines .	Florennes .
Charlemont .	Walcourt .	Charleroy .
Tille-chateau ,	Bonaf , Ab.	Mal-Roy .

NAMUR, Namurcum, the Capital City of the Province, is seated at the confluence of the Sambre and the Maes, between 2 small Hills, at the distance of 24 miles from Louvain to the S. 30 from Bruxels to the S. E. 30 above Liege to the W. 18 from Huy, and 35 from Mons to the E. Pope Paul IV. establish'd therein an Episcopal See under the Metropolitan of Cambray, and the Church of S. Albin, was erected into a Cathedral in the year 1569. The Town is beautified with many other stately Churches, Monasteries and publick Edifices built of Stone. The greatest part of the City lies on the N. side the Sambre, and therein stands the Town-house, the Market-place and several Churches, but the chief Parochial Church stands on the other side, as doth the Castle: A fair Stone-Bridge over the Sambre joins these 2 parts, and from the latter is a Bridge also of Stone over the Maes. The Fortifications are very strong, having, besides the Wall and Ditches, Ravelins and a Counter-scarp scarp well built and contrived according to the modern manner ; and a Castle upon a Rocky Hill which is reckon'd the best in all the Netherland ; notwithstanding which, the French took it on the 3d of July, 1692. But the Confederates regained it after a long and vigorous Siege, under the Conduct of his late Majesty King William in the year 1695.

Beuvines or Bevignes, Bovins, Boviniacum or Bovinium, is situated on the W. side of the Maes below Dinant, and 10 miles beyond Namur to the S. This little Town was encompass'd with Walls in the year 1173. by the Order of Henry, surnam'd the Blind, Earl of Namur, being a Pass between Luxemburg and Namur ; it suffer'd much by the Wars at several times, and was finally taken by the French in 1676. without making the least Resistance.

Charlemont, Carolomontium, stands on the top of an high Hill, the Foot whereof is water'd by the River Maes, being distant 18 miles from Namur to the S. It is a strong place, and was Fortified with divers regular Works, A. D. 1555. by the Emperor Charles V. to whom it was granted by a certain Bishop of Liege, and united to the Earldom of Namur.

Walcourt or Valencourt standing 20 miles S. W. from Namur, is a small Town, and not considerable, except for the Battle fought near it in the year, 1689. between the French and Confederate Armies.

Charleroy, Carolo-Regium, is a strong Fortrefs, seated on an Hill near the Sambre on the Frontiers of Hainault, almost in the midst between Namur and Mons, at the distance of 14 miles from the first, and 20 from the latter ; as also 24 from Bruxels to the S. The Town was built A. D. 1666. near a small Village named Charncy, by the Marquis of Castel-Rodrigo, on purpose to hinder the Inroads of the French Garrisons betwixt the Sambre and the Maes, and was call'd Charleroy in honour of Charles II. the late King of Spain : However, it was taken by them in the year ensuing, and resign'd to their King Lewis XIV. by the Treaty of Aix la Chapelle, on the 2d. day of May, 1668. after which they employ'd great Diligence and Cost in repairing the Fortifications and adding new ones, whereby they made it exceeding strong, but were however oblig'd to restore it to the King of Spain at the Conclusion of the Peace of Nimeguen ; but again in the late War they besieg'd it with a very numerous Army, and after 27 days Resistance the Garrison was fain to surrender on the 1st. of October, 1693. But it is now restored to the King of Spain in pursuance of the Treaty at Ryswick.

C H A P. VIII.

The Dutchy of LIMBURG, Limburgensis Ducatus.

THIS Dutchy hath that of Fuliers for its Bounds on the N. and East, the Bishoprick of Liege on the W. and a small part of Luxemburg on the S. It is extended from S. to N. for the space of 30 miles, and about 25 from W. to E. The Country brings forth good store of Wheat and Barly, and other Corn, also very good Pasture and several Medicinal Herbs. Here are also many Mines of Iron and Lead, and Pits of Coal.

The chief Towns are { Limburg, Cap.
 { Dalem, belonging to the Hollanders.
 { Rolduc.
 { Franquemont or Valkenberg.

LIMBURG, Limburgum, is advantageously situated on the Frontiers of the Bishoprick of Liege, near the Banks of the River Wesdo, being distant 20 miles from Liege to the E. 20 from Maestrecht, about 45 from the River Rhine to the W. and as many from the Meselle to the N. It is but a small Town, having only one Street, and that but ordinarily built ; but is considerable on account of its situation on the edge of a high Rock, which, together with the Wall, Trench, and other Fortifications, made it exceeding strong. It was taken by the Hollanders in the year 1633. but the Spaniards recover'd it within a little while after ; and in 1675. was besieged by the French, whom the Garrison very courageously resisted, but were forced however to surrender, and by them it was dismantled before they restored it at the Treaty of Nimeguen.

Dalem, Dalemum, is a small Town with a Castle, water'd by a Rivulet that dischargeth it self into the Maes, and is distant 10 miles from Liege to the S. E. and 15 from Limburg to the N. W. It formerly enjoy'd the Title of an Earldom under its proper Counts or Earls, and had very large Territories within its Jurisdiction. But Henry II Duke of Brabant surpriz'd this Town, and united it to his Dominions. Afterward it depended on the Dutchy of Limburg, and at present is possess'd by the Hollanders, altho' the French took it from them in the year 1672, and ruin'd the Castle, together with the other Fortifications, before they could be made to abandon the place.

Rolduc or s' Hertegen raidt, is seated on the Borders of the Dutchy of Fuliers, about 12 miles E. from Valkenberg, and 24 from Maestricht. It is a neat little Town, and hath an old Castle for its defence.

Valkenberg, called by the French Fauquemont, is a large and neat Town belonging to the Dutch, seated on the River Geuse, at the distance of 10 miles from Dalem to the N. as many from Maestricht to the East ; it was well Fortified, and had a strong Castle before the French took it in 1672, who added to its Works and made it much stronger ; however, the Dutch retook it soon after, and have since demolished the Fortifications.

C H A P. IX.

The Bishoprick of LIEGE, Leodiensis Ditio.

THO' the Diocese of Liege be part of the Empire, and of the Circle of Westphalia ; yet because of its situation in the midst of some of those Provinces, that are always reckon'd part of the Netherland, some Geographers have plac'd its Description here, whose Example we shall follow.

This

This Country is bounded on the North by Brabant, on the West by part of Brabant and the County of Namur, on the South by the Dutchy of Luxemburg, and on the East by those of Limburg and Fuliers. Its Extent from South to North consists of about 70 miles, from W. to E. 25 miles; but in some parts it stretches out in a narrow Tract near 60 miles. The Air is temperate and healthful, and the Soil Fertile, bringing forth abundance of Grains, Fruits, Cattle and Venison. It also affords divers Mines of Iron and Lead, together with Quarries of Marble; but more-especially great quantities of Brimstone and Vitriol. The Bishop is Lord of all these Territories, and a Prince of the Empire, bearing also the Title of Duke of Bouillon, Marquis of Franchimont, and Earl of Loth and Haslain, which are particular Lordships in this Country. In the Bishoprick of Liege are compriz'd 53 Baronies, a great number of Abbies, 24 walled Towns, and above 1500 Villages. The most considerable whereof are,

Liege, Bish. Cap.	Borch-loen.
Dinant.	S. Truden.
Bouillon.	Bilsen.
Spa.	Hasselt.
Franchimont.	Maeseyck, &c.

LIEGE Leodium, or Leodictum, call'd Luyck by the Inhabitants, and Luttyck by the Germans, is seated on the W. side of the Maes, in a pleasant Valley water'd with the Rivers Vesè, Ute and Ambluar, that discharge themselves into the Maes a little before it enters into the Town, at the distance of 50 miles East from Brussels, 65 from Cologne to the West, and 12 from Maestricht to the S. It is an Imperial and Free City under the Protection of its proper Bishop, whose See was first establish'd at Tongres, then translated to Maestricht, and at last remov'd hither about the year 713. by S. Hubert the Successor of S. Lambert Martyr, before which it was a small Village only, but afterwards encreased daily, and in 1007. Bishop Notger caused it to be Wall'd, and at present it is a large and beautiful City; the Streets are spacious and well built; the River Maes runs through the Town in two Arms, and many smaller Streams, which, together with the Legie and the three Rivulets of Ute, Vesè and Ambluar (that take their Rise in the Forest of Ardenne and fall into the Maes here) Water almost every Street, and have many stately Bridges over them. The publick Buildings are very magnificent, the chief whereof are the Bishop's Palace and 8 Collegiate Churches, together with a great number of Abbies and other Religious Houses, besides the Cathedral Church, dedicated to S. Lambert, which is Famous for its Chapter, as being one of the most renowned in Christendom, consisting of Princes, Cardinals, and Persons of the highest Quality; neither is any one admitted therein, unless he be descended of a noble Family, or hath merited this Favour on the Account of his profound Learning. In S. William's Convent without the Gate, lies buried the Famous English Traveller Sir John Mandevil. Here is an University, formerly exceeding Famous, for the Persons of great Quality Students in it. Many King's Sons, besides Dukes and Lords, were frequently found here; nay, in 1131. there were no less than 23 King's Sons resident in this University at one time, as Meibomius relates. The City is fortified with a Citadel, Bulwarks and several Outworks, and is judged to be about 4 miles in compass. Besides the Churches above-mention'd, there are many others, even to the number of an hundred in all; which, as also the Convents, are all so stately and well built, that this City is judg'd to outvie any in Germany. Among the Religious Houses there is a College of English Jesuits. In the year 1468, Charles Duke of Burgundy took and sack'd this City, and put the Inhabitants to the Sword, of whom, 'tis said, no less than 100000 were destroy'd by him. The French surpriz'd it in 1675. and demolish'd the Citadel, which hath been since repair'd, and new Fortifications added, especially in the year, 1693. upon Apprehensions of the French Designs against them.

Tongres, Tingri, or Aduatica Tungrorum, a very ancient Town, built on the Banks of the little River Jecker, 10 miles from Liege to the N. W. and as many from Maestricht to the W. It was anciently, even so early as the time of the Romans, a very considerable City, of whose Temples and other Buildings there still remain some Monuments. S. Maternus, who is said to have been S. Peter's Disciple, planted Christianity here, and erected an Episcopal See. After which it grew so large, that when Attila the Hun sack'd it, he destroy'd 100 Churches. Of later days it hath not been so very Eminent; for its See was translated to Maestricht, and thence to Liege, as hath been already said, whereby it declin'd, and is at present a good Town only. The French took possession of it in 1672. but quitted it when they had taken Maestricht.

Huy or Hocy, Huun, Huyum or Huyonium, was heretofore a Famous and potent City call'd Benefactum, but being afterward often ruin'd by the Incursions of the Barbarians, it lost both its Lordship and Name. It stands in the District of Condrotz, at the distance of 15 miles from Liege to the S. W. towards Namur on the E. side of the Maes, where the Brook Huy, from whence the Town takes its Name, runs into this River, that divides the Town into two parts, and over which is erected a fair Stone-Bridge now half demolish'd. It is defended with a very strong Castle, which was Founded on a high Hill by Eberard Cardinal of March and Bishop of Liege. The Country adjoining was, for some time, govern'd by certain particular Earls, until they resign'd their Right to the Bishop of Liege. There are many Iron Mines in the Neighbourhood, whence the Inhabitants of Huy have their chief Employment. The Town was taken by the French Forces, A. D. 1675. and its Fortifications were destroy'd in the ensuing year; but it being afterward restor'd to the Bishop of Liege. he caus'd the Works to be repair'd with much diligence, and render'd it a Place of tolerable Strength. However, the French took it in 1693. but the Confederates recover'd it the next year.

Dinant, Dinantium, Dinandium or Dionantium, is seated on the E. side of the Maes, in the Confines of the County of Namur; from the Capital City whereof it is distant 12 miles to the S. as also 7 from Charlemont to the N. half a League from Bouvines, and 36 miles from Liege to the S. W. This Town is a place of good Trade, and Fortified with a strong Castle built on a Rock, cut almost on all sides, but hath been often taken and regain'd during the Wars: It was taken by Charles Duke of Burgundy the same year as Liege, afterwards by the French in 1548. The French made themselves Masters of it in 1675. and raz'd the Citadel, but afterwards rebuilt it, and maintained a Garrison in the place, till by the Treaty of Ryswick they were oblig'd to restore it to the Prince of Liege.

Bouillon or Bullogne, is seated on the River Semois, 30 miles S. from Dinant, not above 8 or 10 from the Border of Champagne, about 16 E. from the River Mass, Maes, and 40 W. from Luxemburg. It is well guarded with a strong Castle, and with its small Territory adjoining gives the Title of Duke to the Bishop of Liege, which was also claim'd and assum'd by the Barons of Sedan. Of this place was that Famous Godfrey Duke, who was so celebrated through all Nations for his Courage and Bravery in the Conquest of Jerusalem, whereof he was the first Christian King.

Franchimont, formerly a considerable City, before Charles Duke of Burgundy destroy'd it; at present it is a good large Village only, and stands on the River Thuse 16 miles from Liege and 8 South-West from Limburg. This Town, with the adjacent Territory, gives the Title of a Marquis to the Bishop of Liege.

About 5 or 6 miles South from Franchimont, in a Valley encompass'd with Hills and high Mountains, stands the little Wall'd Town named

Spa or Spaw, much resorted to for the Famous Medicinal Waters that spring in and near the Town. Of these there are four several Springs; the strongest is that called Gercusfer, which rises in a Wood on the South-side of the Town: Two other call'd Sauvenir and Tomelet, rise on the other side the Town; but the chiefest of all is that nam'd Pobunt, which springs in the Town, and is beautified with a handsome Stone-work over it, built by the Bishop of Liege, who is Lord of the Town. From this last Fountain vast quantities of the Water is yearly sent out to all parts of Europe, besides what is drunk here. These Springs have procur'd the Town a general Protection, so that in the hottest Wars it has always escaped untouch'd.

Borch-loen or Loots, the chief Town of the Land of Loon, formerly govern'd by its own Lords, who had the Title of Counts of Dioftein, is seated 12 miles from Liege to the North-West; in it stands a Famous Collegiate Church dedicated to S. Adolphus.

S. Truyen, nam'd from a Monastery of Benedictines; dedicated to S. Trudo, call'd also by corruption S. Tron and Centron, is a good wall'd Town, distant 5 miles from Borch-loen to the West, and about 3 from Landen and Leewe in Brabant.

Bilsen, a small Town, near which stands a Nunnery of Ladies of Quality, who do not vow perpetual Chastity, but are allow'd to leave their Cells and Marry; it is 6 miles distant from Maastricht to the West.

Hasselt, a well built and populous Town, is seated on the River Demer 8 miles from Bilsen, wherein the Bishop of Liege hath a noble Palace.

Maeseyck, stands on the Maes, 18 miles North from Maastricht.

CHAP. X.

M A R E

GERMANICUM

OF the Situation, Soil, Rivers, ancient State and History of these Provinces to the Time of their Subjection to the King of Spain, an Account hath been already given, in speaking of the Netherlands in general: What remains, is to give the Reader some Idea of the Rise and Establishment of this Republick, known by the Name of The States General of the United Netherlands; before we proceed to the Description of the Country. In order to which it is necessary to begin with the first occasions of their Defection from Spain, which were as follow.

The People of these Countries enjoyed large Privileges under the ancient Princes, who were content always to maintain 'em to them, because the smallness of their respective Dominions, made their greatest Strength consist in the Affections of their Subjects: But when, afterwards, all these Provinces became subject to one Prince, who had also large Dominions elsewhere, the People were treated with less Indulgence. Charles V. was the first of these, who, as he was King of Spain, and Emperor of Germany, as well as Duke of Burgundy, had different Interests from his Predecessors, and being engaged in a War with France, brought Foreign Forces from his other Dominions into the Netherlands, notwithstanding the Laws to the contrary; but being a Native of this Country, of a gentle and generous Nature, residing long in it, and making use of the Native Nobility in the Government, he was generally beloved, and his Actions gave no disgust.

But his Son Philip, being born in Spain, was of the Humour of that Nation, very Austere, and had also so much Affection for his Country-men, that he conferr'd upon them all the Offices of Honour and Authority in these Countries, to the great displeasure of the Flemish Nobility; and himself also resided in Spain, governing these States by a Deputy; continu'd the Foreign Forces on foot, though the War were at an end; and which most of all disquieted the People, declar'd himself very zealous for the Romish Religion; and therefore the Edicts against Luther, that had been made in his Father's time, but by the Indulgence of Charles, had not been executed here, Philip revives, and commands to be strictly executed; which was very grievous, because the number of the Protestant Party was large.

In the Year 1550. the Dutchess of Parma, the King's Sister, was made Governess of the Netherlands; she was a Person of great Wisdom and Goodness; but the chief Minister Cardinal Grandvill, whom the King appointed to assist her, was of an intolerable proud and cruel Nature, and though of an obscure mean Birth, so insolent to the Nobility, that what with that, and his cruel Prosecution by the Inquisition, which was now set on foot for the suppression of Protestantism, he became universally odious, and the Nobility refus'd to assist at the Councils while he sat at the Head of them: Wherefore the good Dutchess prevail'd upon the King to remove him, and moderate the Edicts about Religion.

But the Inquisition was soon after reviv'd, and notwithstanding the Dutchess's good Offices, the King commands all Hereticks to be put to Death, and many were Executed accordingly; which created Horror and Rage in the Minds of the People, and caused them to break out in open Mutinies, to oppose the Executions, and release the Prisoners that were condemned for Religion. Also several of the Nobility confederated together against the Inquisition; and a great number, headed by the Lord of Bredereede, boldly Petition'd the Governess for abolishing it: To which she gave a calm Answer, and representing the Matter kindly to the King, prevail'd upon him to grant their Request; but the Favour being long delay'd, the People were dissatisfied, and at length broke out into open Rebellion, and committed many outrageous Actions; but were soon pacified by the Dutchess, and the publick Peace once more restor'd. But the King was still resolv'd to suppress this Heresie, (as he call'd it) and punish these mutinous Subjects; and therefore sent his Favourite the Duke of Alva, in the year 1567. into the Netherlands, with an Army of 10000 Spanish and Italian Soldiers, to assist the Dutchess in the execution of his Commands: Upon whose arrival, the People were in general so discontented, that great numbers of the Richer sort retir'd out of the Provinces; and the Dutchess foreseeing the Evils that were approaching, desir'd leave of the King to resign the Government; which was soon granted, and that Charge, with greater Power than usual, conferr'd on the Duke of Alva: Who immediately set himself to work to quell the Disorders, but by a different method than what had been used by the prudent Dutchess; for whereas she by mildness had pacified the People and brought them to Reason, he resolv'd by Rigor to force them to submit: And first of all, without regard to the Laws of the Land, he erected a new Court of Judicature, for Trying those that had been concerned in the late Insurrections; and many were Condemned and Executed thereupon. The Inquisition was set to work anew, and executed with greater Rigor than before; and many other things transacted that were contrary to the Liberties of the People, the Privileges of the Towns, and the known Laws of the Country: Which though the Nobility and People were exceedingly incens'd at, the Governor was not at all concern'd, but resolv'd to pursue his own Methods, and break the Strength of the discontented Party; which he thought he could not effectually do, without cutting off their Heads; the chief whereof were the Prince of Orange, Count Egmont, and Count Horn.

The Prince of Orange was a Person of great Interest, by the large Possessions he was Master of; and by reason of his great Wisdom and Goodness, was beloved by all, as he had particularly been by the Emperor Charles V. who made him Governor of Holland.

Count Egmont was a great Soldier, and had enjoyed the highest Places of Honour and Trust in Flanders, and was also exceedingly beloved by the People; as was likewise Count Horn, who had a large Estate in Brabant.

These three the Duke of Alva was resolv'd to take off; and accordingly the two latter were seized and imprisoned, and after some Months time Tried and Executed for being accessory to the late Insurrection, though they had been highly instrumental in suppressing it. But the Prince of Orange, having in time retir'd into Germany, sav'd his Life, though with the loss of his Estate, for that was seized as forfeited to the King. These Arbitrary and cruel Proceedings of Alva enraged the People to the highest degree, and made them resolve Revenge; and in order to it, great numbers flock'd to the Prince of Orange as their Head, who with them, and such other Forces as he could raise, invaded the Provinces. But the Spanish Army was too powerful, so that the Prince was forced to return without effecting any thing. And Alva, glorying in his good Fortune, insolently caused his own Statue to be erected, with two Figures, representing the Estates of the Low-Countries, under his Feet; and demanded of the States larger Supplies for the Army than they could grant: Who petitioned the King thereupon, but without Redress; and persisting in their Refusal, d'Alva published an

Edict:

Edict without their Consent, for Levying the Money he demanded; and upon the People's refusing to pay it, caus'd the Soldiers to take it by force, and commanded thole to be hang'd upon the Sign-posts that had refus'd to pay; but was interrupted in his career by the arrival of News from Holland, That the Briel was seiz'd by the Guefes: These were the Protestants, to whom the Papists had given that Name in Contempt, and who, to avoid the Rigor of the Inquisition, and d'Alva's Government, had fled, some into the Woods and Fastnesses, and others to Sea, where they liv'd upon Spoil, &c. These being grown strong by the additions of some of the remains of the Prince of Orange's Army, landed in Holland, and seiz'd the Briel; which was follow'd by the Revolt of most of the Towns of Holland and Zealand; and the Prince of Orange coming soon after out of Germany with new Forces, became so formidable, that the King found it absolutely necessary to remove the Duke of Alva, whose violent Proceedings had rais'd such a Spirit of Hatred, not only of him, but of the whole Spanish Interest, that without very prudent and cautious management, there was little hopes of ever bringing these Provinces to Obedience. After d'Alva's departure, Requisenes had the Government for a little time; but he dying, the Administration fell of course to the Council, till a new Governor came. Don John of Austria was appointed to succeed; but before he could arrive, the People grew mutinous, and oblig'd the Council to assemble the States, who being met at Ghent in the Year 1576. agreed upon the Act, call'd The Pacification of Ghent; the Substance whereof was, That all Foreign Soldiers be expell'd, the ancient Forms of Government restor'd, and Matters of Religion referr'd to the States of each Province: But the Foreigners refus'd to depart, and were therefore declar'd Rebels; in revenge whereof they plunder'd several Towns, particularly Antwerp. And when Don John arriv'd, the Estates refus'd to admit him till he had confirm'd the Pacification of Ghent; but he shortly after renounc'd it, and seizing the Castle of Namur, gave new occasions for a Breach: And immediately both Parties prepar'd for War. The Provinces call'd the Prince of Orange to Brussels, and made him Protector of Brabant; and the Spaniards drew their Armies together in Namur and Luxemburg; but Don John dying suddenly, and a new Party being risen among the Confederates, little was done till the Union of Utrecht.

The UNION of UTRECHT, from which the Original of this Common-wealth must be dated, was a firm Alliance agreed upon in the Year 1579. by the Seven Northern Provinces of the Netherlands, and Sign'd at the City of Utrecht: By which they united themselves, so as never to be divided, reserving however to each Province, all its former Rights, Laws and Customs. All the Provinces bound themselves to assist one another against all Enemies whatsoever, to carry on all Wars, and maintain all Frontier Towns at their united Expence; and by a joint Council of the Representatives of all the Provinces, transact all Affairs relating to the Union.

But this new-erected State found it self too weak to resist the valiant Duke of Parma, the Successor of Don John; who, tho' when he came to the Government, had only the Provinces of Namur and Luxemburg, free from the Confederacy, yet by his own Conduct and Valour, and the Strength of the Army he got together, was powerful enough in a little time to reduce the Confederates to such extreme distress, that in the Term of Poor and Distressed States, they implor'd the Assistance of our Queen Elizabeth, offering her the Sovereignty of their State, if she would afford them Protection. The Queen refus'd the Dominion, but lent them Money and Soldiers, in the Year 1585. upon the Security of the Briel, Flushing and Rammekins, which they put into her Hands: And in 1587. sent over more Forces under the Earl of Leicester, whom the States swore Obedience to, and admitted as their Governor: But his Government lasted not long, for some Differences arising between him and the States, the Queen recall'd him, but continu'd her former Assistance to the Dutch; who, after Leicester's departure, chose Prince Maurice, Son to the late Prince William of Orange (who was Assassinated at Delft by a Spaniard) for their Governor, who prov'd one of the greatest Captains of the Age, in wise Conduct, admirable Discipline, and excellent manner of Fortifying; which with the Diversion that Queen Elizabeth gave the Spaniards in her famous War with them, did so restore the Affairs of this State, that the valiant Duke of Parma dying, King Philip found it necessary to think of Peace; which the States were very little solicitous of. For not only were their Forces under Prince Maurice successful enough, but their Subjects had found the way to the East-Indies, and began to supplant the Portuguese, and make Holland the European Staple for the Commodities of those Countries; and were powerful enough at Sea to threaten the Spanish Plate Fleets and West-Indian Dominions; so that while the Spaniard, by the management of the Arch-Duke Albert, now Governor of the Netherlands, carry'd on the War at great Expence, in hopes of making the States ask a Peace, he found that the underhand Overtures he made them were but coldly receiv'd, and that they refus'd to grant a Cessation of Arms, or to be treated with upon any other Terms than as a FREE STATE, which he was at last forc'd to comply with: And,

In the Year 1609. a Truce was concluded for 12 Years; by which the Provinces were declar'd Free, both Parties allow'd the full Enjoyment of all that they then possess'd, and free Commerce establish'd betwixt them.

And thus this War of 48 Years continuance ended with the total Alienation of 7 Provinces from the Spanish Dominions, and the Erection of a State, which though it rose from such poor beginning, and struggl'd with the most Potent Prince of Europe, has grown to be one of the most Powerful, Rich, Well-planted and Populous of Europe.

Of the Government of the United Netherlands in general, and of Holland in particular.

THE Supreme Authority is the Assembly of the Representatives of the Seven Provinces, call'd, The Assembly of the States General; which consists of seven Voices, one for each Province, to whom belongs the power of making War or Peace, receiving and dispatching of Ambassadors, taking care of Frontier Towns, and assigning the Sums to be Levy'd for the Defence and Service of the Union. Assistant to these, there are the Council of State, and the Council of the Admiralty. The first is compos'd of 12 Persons, (whereof Guelderland sends 2, Holland 3, Zealand 2, Utrecht 2, Friesland 1, Overissel 1, and Groningen 1) who previously deliberate the Matters to be brought before before the States General, form the State of Expence for the succeeding Year, and propose the ways of Levying it, &c. Assistant to this Council is the Chamber of Accounts, compos'd of two Deputies from each Province, who audit the publick Accounts, and dispose the Finances. The Council of the Admiralty, when the States order the fitting out a Fleet, have the care of it, and the ordering of all Marine Affairs; Sub-ordinate to which are the five Colleges in Holland, Zealand, and Friezland, who execute the Orders they receive from this Council.

The Resolutions of the States General, when they concern Peace or War, Foreign Alliances, or raising Money, are never made but by the Agreement of every Province; nor must the Provinces conclude without the Agreement of every City; so that when such a matter comes before the States, they separate, each Member returning to his respective Province, where in the Assembly of every Provincial State the Matter is propos'd, with which the Deputies return to their Principals the Cities, for their Consent; which makes the Resolutions very tedious and liable to Interruption, by the Interest an opposite Party may make in any one of the Cities; which hath sometimes happen'd, particularly in the case of the Relief of Luxemburg, when the City of Amsterdam dissenting, hinder'd the raising the 16000 Men propos'd to save that Place, which was, for want of this Relief, taken by the French in 1684.

By which, the Reader will see, That though the States General represent the Sovereignty, the Power is diffus'd, and rests indeed in the several Cities that send Deputies to the States of the Province; for every Province is a distinct State, as are also all the Cities, in matters that concern themselves only. As a Specimen of the whole, we shall instance the City of Amsterdam, and the Province of Holland.

The Sovereignty of Amsterdam is lodg'd in the Council or Senate, which is compos'd of 36 Persons, who serve for Life, and upon the Death of one, the rest chuse another of the Burghers to supply his place. This Council chuses the Magistrates and Officers, and the Deputy which represents the City in the Provincial State; (so that the People have no share in Elections) and also make Laws for the Government of the City, and levy the Taxes for the publick Service of the City in particular, and its Quota for the Union in general: By its Magistrates (which are Burgomasters equal to our Lord-Mayor, Schepens, or Judges, and Schout, or Sheriff, the City executes an independent Government, judges all Causes Civil and Criminal, and inflicts Punishments, even to Death, without the Cognizance of any other Power whatsoever. The like Authority is found in all the Cities, but with some little Variation, not needful here to be mention'd.

The Provincial State of Holland is compos'd of the Deputies of the Nobility, and the Cities, which make Nineteen Voices, whereof the Nobles have One, and these Cities, viz. Dort, Harlem, Delft, Leyden, Amsterdam, Goude, Rotterdam, Gorcum, Scheidam, Schonehoven, Briel, Alcmaer, Horn, Enchusen, Edam, Monnickdam, Medenblick and Purmeren, One a piece, which make the other Eighteen Voices; which, as we have already said, must all concur in the making of any new Alliance, declaring War and making Peace, &c. These assemble at the Hague, as do also the States General and the Council of State.

The States of the other Provinces are much the same, only that the Nobility in some of them being more numerous, have a greater share; and in Utrecht the Deputies of the Clergy have Session; and in Friezland and Groningen, besides the Towns, the Lands divided into Bailiages, send Deputies to the States.

The Prince of Orange was the Person that represented the Dignity of this State, by his splendid Court, publick Guards, &c. He was Captain General and Lord High-Admiral, and thereby disposed of all Military and Marine Commands. He was Stadtholder of five of the seven Provinces; (for Prince Cassimer of Nassaw, is Stadtholder of Friezland and Groningen) and had the Nomination of Magistrates of the Cities out of a double number presented to him: He pardon'd the Penalties of Crimes, and had Session in the Council of State; and though he did not sit in the Assembly of States General, yet did they not resolve any important Matter without his Advice. He had also great influence in several of the Provincial States, by the large portion of Lands he was Owner of, whereby he had many Voices in Electing the Deputies of the Nobles. He was exceeding Rich, as well by the vast Patrimonial Estate descended to him from his Ancestors, among which are many Sovereign Principalities and Lordships, as by the large Revenues belonging to his several Charges and Commands. All which were possess'd by his most Excellent Majesty William King of Great-Britain, &c. Whose Ancestors that have enjoy'd the same Dignity in this State, are these, viz.

I. William of Nassaw, Prince of Orange, who was Governor of Holland and Zealand, under Charles V. and Philip II. and by his excellent Wisdom, Goodness and Courage, acquir'd the greatest Esteem and Authority imaginable among the People; and was therefore the Person to whom they apply'd themselves for Relief from the Oppressions of the Duke of Alva, &c. as we have already shewn. He was Assassinated at Delft in Holland by a Spanish Soldier, in the Year 1584.

II. Maurice of Nassaw, Prince of Orange, and Son of William, by whose wise Conduct the Confederacy (which he found Poor and Distressed) was rais'd to a very powerful State, and acknowledg'd Free by the King of Spain. He died A. D. 1625, and was succeeded by his Half Brother.

III. Henry Frederick, a Prince of great Valour, Prudence and Fortune: He died in the Year 1647.

IV. William his Son succeeded, who Marry'd the Princess Mary, eldest Daughter to King Charles I. of England, and died A. 1650, without Issue born, leaving his Princess then with Child of His late Majesty; which gave the Louvestein Faction an opportunity to endeavour to suppress the Authority and Office of Stadtholder, and which they did keep vacant till 1674, when the People having suffer'd a thousand Miseries by the hands of the barbarous French, forc'd the Magistrates to retract that Instrument they had Sworn to, and fondly call'd a Perpetual Edict, whereby the Office of Stadtholder was to be for ever suppress'd: I say, the People impatient of the Evils they endur'd for want of a Valiant Captain to head their Armies, oblig'd the Magistrates to restore the Prince to the Dignity of his Ancestors.

V. William Henry of Nassaw, Prince of Orange, Son to William and Mary above-mention'd, was Born November 6. 1650, eight Days after his Father's Death; liv'd privately till the Year 1674, when he was was restored to the Satdtholdership of Holland, Zea-land, Guelderland and Zutphen, Utrecht and Over-ysse, which by the States of each of those Provinces was confirm'd to him and his Heirs for ever. In 1677 he Married Mary our Late Queen of Blessed Memo-ry; and in 1688. Succeeded in the Throne of Eng-land, and was King of Great Britain, France and Ireland.

CHAP. XI.

The Province of HOLLAND and West FRIEZLAND, Hollandia & Westfrisia.

THE first Inhabitants of this Province of Holland, were the Batavi, a Branch of the Nation of the Catti, a People of Germany; but how far their Territory extended, is Disputed. It is said in general in Ancient Authors, that Batavia was included between the Mars and the Rhine; but whether it be to be understood of the old Channel of the Rhine which passes by Utrecht and Leyden, or the Channel of Drusus, which turn'd a great part of that River into the Iffel, is the question in Dispute. If the latter, not only this Province, but those of Utrecht and Gelderland, must have belonged to them. But however it be, all Parties grant, that at least all the South part of Holland, as far as Leyden, together with the Betuwe, (now part of Geldre, Nimeguen the chief City thereof being by some said to have been their Metropolis, was the Seat of the ancient and famous Nation of the Batavians, so often mention'd by Tacitus and other ancient Writers. As for the Northern part, there is good reason to believe that it was formerly contiguous with Friezland, or at least inhabited by that Nation.

The modern name of Holland was undoubtedly given it by the Danes: who very much infesting these Coasts with their Pyracies in the IXth. Century, had this Province, with the Islands lying South of it, given them by Leithius the Third, Son of Lewis the Godly, (to whose share this part of the Empire of his Grandfather Chlormagne was allotted) and by them nam'd Zealand and Holland from the two parts of their own Country so denominated. 'Tis true, some Etymologists will have it, that the name of Holland was given it q. d. Hollow-land, from the lowness of the Country: But since the Story of the Danes planting themselves here is undisputed, the former account is much the more rational.

The Original of its Barldom is already mention'd in the general account before the description of the Spanish Netherlands, together with its falling into the Family of Burgundy, and by Succession to the King of Spain; and of its Revolt from him we have been just speaking; as also of its present State.

The present Bounds of this Province (including West Friezland, or North Holland, which in all publick Acts is mention'd as part) are the German Ocean on the West, the Zuyderzee on the North, the same Sea with the Province of Utrecht and the Betuwe on the East, and Brabant and Zealand on the South. It is seated between the 51st. deg. 40 min. and 53.

deg. of Latitude, and 23. deg. 10. min. 24. deg. 20. min. Long. containing in its utmost extent, from North to South, 80 English miles, and from East to West about 25 but in some places above 40. The Soil is low and marshy; but by the Industry of the Inhabitants in draining out the Water by their artificial Channels, it is made to yield very good Pasture, and some Corn; but chiefly the former, for Food to their vast Herds of Kine, from which they receive the almost sole product of the Country, Butter and Cheese. The Air is thick and moist, by the Fogs arising out of the vast number of Channels and Lakes all over the Country, which makes the Inhabitants in many parts of it very subject to Agues, which would be yet much worse if it were not purg'd by the Easterly Winds, which coming over the long dry Continent of Germany, purifie the Air, and cause sharp Frosts during the Months of January and February, by which the Earth is dried, and the Vermine, which the moistness of the Land produces in great quantities, destroyed. The whole Province is divided into two great Parts. North and South; which are again Subdivided thus, viz.

AMSTERDAM, Amstelredamum, the chief City not only of Holland, but of all the United Netherlands, is seated on a small River named Amstel, that runs through the Town and falls into an Arm of the Sea, call'd the Z (and by abbreviation of the Dutch Article Het, & T.) which makes a large Haven wherein continually lye vast numbers of Merchants Ships. The City is distant about 30 miles from Rotterdam to the North, 20 from Horn, and 30 from Medinblick to the South, 12 from Harlem, and 15 from the Sea-shoar to the East, and about 25 from Utrecht to the North-west. It is but of modern Structure, being not mention'd in History before the year, 1299. nor then, but as a small Fisher-town only. De Witt hath publish'd Maps of its several Conditions, whereof the first shews it in the Year 1342, a small Town on the East side only of Amstel, with one Street in the middle, and 5 or 6 cross ones; which before 1400. was encreas'd to as much more on the other side the River; by 1432. it was again encreas'd on both sides and surrounded with strong Walls; in 1557. being grown populous, and beginning to be the chief Seat of Trade of this new erected State, it was much enlarged, as it was again in 1612. And again a fifth time in the year 1656. a very large space of Ground (great part whereof is not yet built) was taken in and the Walls built anew of Brick, and the Gates of Stone, with a large Ditch all round, which new Addition hath made it a large Semi-circle deriv'd from the River Z. It is an exceeding populous, rich and well-traded City, very well built and very nearly kept; the Streets are very large with Canals of Water in them, over which are a very great number of Stone-bridges. The Houses are all built of Brick or Stone, in good repair, and very beautiful, especially those in the newest part of the Town, where the Streets call'd the Heer, Konings and Keyfers Grachten, or Lords, Kings and Emperors Channels, are fill'd with magnificent Houses, many of them of Free-stone, adorn'd with Columns and Chapters according to the Corinthian Architecture. The principal publick Buildings are the Old, the New, the Western and the Southern Churches, the Stadshuys, the Exchange, the Hospitals, the Magazine of the Navy, that of the East-India Company's Shipping, and the Sluces; All which we cannot omit giving as particular a description of as our room will admit. 1. The old Church is a Majestick Building of Stone according to the Gothick Order, with a fair Steeple of great height; the Church was begun to be Built in 1360. but the Steeple not finish'd till 1566. 2. The New Church, so call'd in distinction from the former, was founded about the year 1414. but being burnt in 1645. was repair'd, and is at present a handsome structure; a Tower was design'd to it of exceeding Height, and a foundation laid accordingly upon 2334 Piles driven into the Ground for that purpose, which was not ever found strong enough for the building; it was carried up above 50 or 60 foot. In the Painted Windows of this Church is represented the Liberty of this City to the Emperor Maximilian, in presenting him with a large sum of Money when he was in it, and his Generosity in bestowing an Imperial Crown for a Crest to its Arms. And in this Church is to be seen the sumptuous Monument of Admiral Ruyter, who was kill'd at Medina; a Schreiner of the Chancel of cast Brass, which being kept burning, looks very beautifully; and an Organ (supported by rich Marble Pillars) of extraordinary Workmanship for its numbers of Pipes and Melodious combination of Humane Voices. 3. The Western Church is a handsome Pile, and hath a beautiful Tower with a large Imperial Crown of Copper on the top of it, which is reckon'd 260 foot from the Ground. 4. The South Church hath also a handsome Steeple, 155 foot high. The other Churches are less remarkable. 5. The Stadshuys or Guild Hall, is a very magnificent Structure, all of Free-stone, adorn'd with Pillars, Chapters, Corniches and Carvings according to the Corinthian Architecture; it is a square Building of 252 foot broad, 235 foot deep, and 116 foot high; of which height the Ground-rooms (which are the Offices belonging to the Bank and the Patrons, with some smaller Offices) take up above 20 foot, and the first and second Stories about 30 foot each; and over the middle of the Front (which is somewhat more advanced than the rest of the Work, above the Corniche, rises a Pediment, the Face whereof is of Marble with a Basso Relievo of curious Carving, and on the top and each side of it stand three very large Statues of Brass, and just behind a handsome Tower, is a Pavillion supported by Pillars, where hang a great number of Bells that compose very musical Chimes. The back Face hath also a Pediment with a Relievo, on the Top of which stands a very late Elizabethan Statue of Charles, with a Globe of Copper on his Back. Within the House the Gallery and the scales of the Offices are adorn'd with ingenious Carvings in Marble, and the Chambers with Marble Floors, and curious Paintings on the Ceilings and Chimney peices. In this House the Senate of the City hold their Assemblies, the Burgomasters and Causes as well Criminal as Civil are Try'd, the great Bank is kept, and in general all publick Business transacted. This Building was begun in the year 1600. but not finish'd in many years; indeed not yet entirely, for the Cielings of the Gallery are design'd to be painted, and the Walls faced with Marble. 6. The Exchange is a handsome Structure of Brick, with Pillars of Stone all along the Walks, built after the model of our old Royal Exchange before the Fire, and is at least as large. 7. The Hospitals here are many and large; above 300 poor Children are constantly maintain'd with Lodging, Diet and Cloath, and to Read and Write at the publick Charge, in the Wierds-luys, Weerts-luys, and Diacony-luys, three large Hospitals, so call'd; besides which, there is a large House wherein above 300 decrepid old Women are lodg'd and fed; these are all of modern Foundation, and maintain'd partly by the voluntary Charities collected by the Deacons, and partly by certain small Taxes, such as a Penny upon every Person that passes through the Gate after Candle light, half the Money receiv'd at the Play-house, &c. and the rest supplied out of the publick Revenue. But another Hospital, call'd the old Man's House, wherein 150 old Men and Women are maintained, was formerly a Monastery, the Rents whereof are assign'd for its support: In this House a poor Traveller may have Lodging and Diet for three days gratis. Here is also an Hospital for the Sick, another for Madmen, another for Fools, and a Pest-house.

The Magazine is a handfom large Building of Brick, standing on the Water-side, in the North-east part of the Town; it is three Angles of a Square, in the middle whereof is a Yard for building Ships of War, the Front is 220 and the Wings 200 foot long. In the several Chambers of it are laid up the Rigging of the Men of War belonging to this City, with Stores of Cordage, Arms, &c. all kept in very good order: This Magazine was built in 1655. Not far Eastward from hence is another stately Magazine belonging to the East-India Company; it is one Range of Brick Building, behind which is a large Yard with Docks for building Ships, and Shops of Anchor-Smiths, and all other Artificers belonging to Ship-building, particularly a very long Rope-yard: This House serves to lay up their Stores of Shipping, and also for Ware-houses for those Goods that they have not room for in their other Ware-houses; which with their House stands in the middle of the City.

The Sluces are Works of prodigious Expence and Art, and worth a Traveller's notice. Formerly the City was frequently damaged by the overflowing of the Water, which, upon the blowing of a North-east Wind, was driven out of the Zuyder Zee and 't Y with that violence into the Canals in the Streets, that the Water overflowing, not only run into their Cellars, but even rose to the first Floor of their Houses that stood in the lower parts of the Town; to prevent which, the Magistrates, not many years since caused these Sluces to be made at the mouth of every one of the four Channels that open to the 't Y: These are strong solid Brick-works of 10 or 12 foot thick, rais'd from the bottom of the River to the Surface of the Ground, and built cross the Channels, leaving only convenient places for the passage of Ships, which are again shut up with very strong Flood-gates, able at all times to resist the force of the Water, and secure the Inhabitants from being injured. Here are other publick Buildings worth a Stranger's View, such as the Ramp-houfe where Rogues are Imprison'd and kept to hard Labour, as raising Brazil-wood, &c. for 3 4 7. 10 years, or their whole Lives, according to the heinousness of the Crime; the Spin-house, where Whores are kept in like manner to Spinning &c. the East and West-India Company's Houses; the Jews Synagogue a noble Building indeed; the beautiful Stone bridge cross the Amstel, where it enters the Town; and the Walls all round the Town, which are exceeding near, and well built with Brick, and secure the City from surprize, as the marshiness of the Soil all round does from a formal Siege: The Gates, which are 5 in number, are all built of Stone, and in the Bridge from each of them over the Ditch are 2 Draw-bridges and a Watch-house, wherein, as well as in the Gates, continual Watch is kept by Soldiers maintain'd for that purpose, besides every night a company of the Train'd Bands of the City. And for their security from the Water-side, there are two rows of Pails all along before the Town, with narrow Gaps only at convenient places, for the passage of Ships, which are every night shut up by a Boom laid cross and lock'd. The Wealth and Trade of this City is exceeding great, the number of Shipping lying before the Pails in the Winter-time, when their East-land and other Fleets are in, is not to be computed, their Masts seeming like a great Forest, so thick they stand. The Ground here is Sand which the Water soaks through, and not only hinder them making the Cellars deep, but also obliges the Builders to drive a great number of Piles into the Ground, before they can lay the Foundations of the Houses. Here is no fresh Water, but what they save in Cisterns when it Rains; for though the Amstel be good Water, the 't Y is a branch of the Sea, and mixing with it makes it brackish for several miles above the Town.

The Supreme Authority in the City is lodg'd in the Senate, which consists of 36 Persons chosen originally by the People, but at present by themselves, and continue for Life. These chuse the four Burgomasters, who are the chief Magistrates; and the nine Schepens, who are the Judges of Civil and Criminal Causes; and the Scout or Sheriff who hath the care of bringing Criminals to Justice, and executing the Law. But it is necessary to note, That the Senate have not the absolute choice of the Schepens, for they return a double number to the Stadtholder, who chuses those of them he pleases. The Burgomasters keep the Keys of the Treasury of the City, and of the great Bank lodg'd here and kept in the Cellars under the Stadthuys, which without doubt is a vast Mass of Treasure, but whether so great as it's Credit, is not to be known, since none are permitted to see it; nor hath there ever been but once an occasion to try its Strength, viz. in 1673. when the French having overrun the Country, some People distrust'd the safety of their Money and call'd it out of the Bank, which the Treasurers readily paying, gave satisfaction to the rest, and it hath still remain'd there, tho transfer'd every day from one to another by Bills and Accounts, without ever telling the Money or any one desiring to see it. The compass of Amsterdam within the Walls, is reckon'd about 6 miles, but a large part of it is yet unbuilt; the number of Houses is about 25, or as some affirm 28000. The Number of Inhabitants may be guess'd at by the Burials, which in the year 1685, were 6245, according to the publick Account set up in the Stadthuys. Amsterdam is seated in the Latitude of 52 deg. 28 min. Longit. 24. 2.

HARLEM, Harlemum, stands about 10 miles West from Amsterdam, not above 4 East from the Sea, about 20 North from Leyden, and as many South from Alcmar; it is a large populous and pleasant City; the Buildings are all of Brick, neat, convenient, and in good repair, the Streets large and even, and in some them are Canals as at Amsterdam. It is a place of good Trade, which consists in Thread and Tape, Linnen-Cloath and wrought Silks; also Bleaching of Linnen, for which the Water is so fit, that most of the Inhabitants of Amsterdam and other neighbouring places, bring their Linnen here to be Wash'd, being curious in its whiteness. This City was made a Bishop's See in 1559. but that Dignity was soon after suppress'd. The Cathedral was dedicated to S. Bavo, but is now only call'd the great Church; it is a strong, spacious and beautiful Building. The Stadthuys is a handfom old Structure, as is the Shambels or Fleish-market. The Walls are strong and the Ditch broad, but the Town is commanded by the Neighbouring Sand-hills. The Art of PRINTING is said to have been invented here by one Lawrence Coster, who walking in the neighbouring Wood for his diversion, fell to whirling little Sticks, and at length form'd a Letter upon one of 'em, which pressing upon his Hand first, and afterwards with Ink upon Paper, found it made a legible Impression; which accidental hint, being an ingenious Man, he improv'd and had brought the Art to some perfection, when a Roguish Servant that he employ'd in it, stole his Implements and run away to Mentz, where he set up for the Inventor. They of Mentz deny this, and affirm, That a Citizen of theirs, John Fauij by name, was the sole Inventor. The Harlemers have many great and learned Men on their side in this Dispute; however, the first printed Books extant having been publish'd at Mentz, carries over many to the other Party: But wheresoever it was Invented, this ingenious Art appeared first in the World about the year 1430, or 1440. The Harlemers brag also of great Exploits done by their Townsmen who went to the Holy War with Godfrey of Bolloigne, particularly the cutting of the Chains that shut up the Haven of the City Damiata in Egypt, which (according to the Tradition among them) was perform'd by great Saws fasten'd to the Keels of their Ships; in memory whereof the Boys yearly carry little Ships about the Streets; to which purpose they say also are the three Ships that hang up in the great Church. The Siege of this City by the Spaniards in the year 1573. was very remarkable, for it continued 7 Months; during which time the Assaults were as violent, and the Resistance as obstinate as has been known, and the Defendants were reduc'd to such a Necessity, that they eat Grass, Leather, and such vile things for their Subsistence. They still shew a mark in the great Church where a Cannon Bullet lodg'd.

Just without the Walls there is a pleasant Wood, wherein the Citizens divert themselves; and a little to the Southward a great Lake call'd the Harlemer Meer, which begins near Amsterdam, and reaches almost as far as Leyden. From the small River Sparen which runs through the Town, a Channel was cut in the year 1637. to Leyden, whereby the Passage between these Cities hath been much facilitated.

LEYDEN, Lugdunum Batavorum, also Leyda, is esteem'd the pleasantest City in Holland; the Buildings being beautiful, the Streets large, the Channels commodious, but chiefly the rows of fine tall Trees in every Street, render them exceedingly agreeable; but then, for want of a good Current of Water, the Canals are apt to stink in Summer. This is an ancient City, and tho formerly but small, hath by several Enlargements been made to exceed any in Holland, except Amsterdam and Rotterdam. The principal publick Buildings, are, the Church of S. Peter, a handsom Pile, and had formerly a very high Tower, but it fell down in the year 1512. The Churches of S. Pancratius and S. Mary; and the new Church, of circular Form and very beautiful; the Hospitals of S. Katherine and S. Elizabeth, as also those of S. James and S. Barbara, for the Entertainment of decrepid aged and sick People, which are well endow'd and carefully kept. Here is also a large Hospital for the maintenance of poor Orphans, whereof there are reckon'd to be no less than 700 in it. The Town-house is a noble large Structure. The Burg, a noble piece of Antiquity, said to have been built by the Romans, for the Defence of the Town, but stands now in the middle of it, and an Ornament only, is a strong Fortification built of Stone in a round form, very high, the Ascent to it being of 50 Steps, and the Wall about it 21 foot high. In the year 1575 the Prince and States founded an University here, which is become the most famous of these Countries. The Schools is an ancient Building, handsom enough, but not exceeding beautiful; adjoining to it is the Physick-Garden, which is well stor'd with rare Plants; near the Garden stands a Gallery in which are kept many Curiosities of Nature; also in the Theatre of Anatomy are to be seen many such Rarities, besides Skeletons and Dissections. The Professors have annual Stipends, and make a good profit by their Pupils; but the Students have no Endowments, except some Privileges. They are very numerous, and are a great advantage to the Town. Here is also a large Trade maintained by the making of Woollen-Cloaths. The small branch of the Rhine, which retains its name, passes through this City, and is the chief Channel in it. Leyden was Besieg'd by the Spaniards in 1574. and very well defended by the Citizens for five Months, at the end of which it was reliev'd. It is fortified with good Walls besides Ramparts, Bulwarks and large Ditches, and stands at the distance of 20 miles from Harlem to the South, 22 from Amsterdam to the South-west, 15 from Rotterdam to the North, and 27 from Utrecht to the West.

The HAGUE, call'd in Dutch, 's Gravenhague, (that is, The Grave of the Earl) in Latin Hagæ Comitiss, is seated about 8 or 9 miles from Leyden to the South-west, about 6 from Delft to the North-east, 14 from Rotterdam to the North west, and not above 2 miles from the little Sea-Town Schieding. It glories in being the principal Village of Europe, for it is not wall'd, tho otherwise in all respects a City; being govern'd by its own Magistrates, and enjoying all the other Privileges, except sending Deputies to the States, as any City in Holland does. It is the Seat of the Princes, and the Assemblies of the States General, of the Provincial States of Holland, and of the Council of State; as also the Supreme Courts of Judicature; and is in general the place where all the publick Affairs of the Common-wealth are transacted; where all the Foreign Ministers receive their Audience, and commonly reside: All which causes a continual Concourse of People from all Parts, and very much enriches the Town, which is a neat built place: The Streets are large and adorn'd with Trees; the Houses are all of Brick and very hand-som; those that stand near the Court, and in that part of the Town toward the Wood, are very stately, and Inhabited by Persons of Quality. The Palace, containing the Prince's Lodgings, the Chambers of the States General and Provincial, Council of State, &c. is a handsom Building, making two Angles of a Square, in the middle whereof stands a fair large Hall, not unlike that of Westminster in form, and in respect to the Shops in it all round, as also for the Standards taken from the Enemies, hanging up in it. but far short of it in largeness, being not so big as the Guild-hall of London. Adjoining to the Court stands a very noble House of Stone, built by Prince Maurice of Nassau, and bears his Name: The whole Court is moor'd round, and Guards continually kept at every Gate: On the North-side is a large square Pond call'd the Vier, and on the West the Court opens to a large Plain, that is surrounded with fine Hedges. The Town is large and very populous. The great Church is a stately old Building. That of a round Figure, without any Pillars, is a neat beautiful Structure, and not of many years standing: The Town-house is built of Stone, but old and not very remarkable.

The Situation of this Town is very pleasant; for on one side lye lovely Meadows; and on the other a large and pleasant Wood, in the middle whereof stands a House of Pleasure of the Prince's having having behind it very beautiful Gardens, and in it, besides the stately Lodgings, a very large dancing Room with a high Roof, rising into a Cupola, and at the top of it a Lanthorn, in which is a Gallery for Musick: The Walls and Cielings all round adorned with Paintings of the best Masters, representing the Actions of Henry Fredrick (the Father of his late Majesty) by whose Widow this House was built. On the North-side of the Town lies a Walk, paved all the way with Bricks, and shaded by Lime-Trees, planted on each side for 2 Miles in length, which leads to the little Village Schievling; from whence his late Majesty King Charles took Shipping to his Glorious and Happy Restauration.

About 12 or 14 miles South from the Hague stands Hounslaerdyke, where is a stately Palace of the Prince's, adorn'd with very fine Gardens; to which he often retired, when the Affairs of the State did not require his presence at the Hague. And in the midway between the Hague and Delft stands the Village of Ryswick, and near it the Palace of His late Majesty, which has been render'd Famous, by being the Place of Treaty of the Peace in 1697. It was some time call'd Newburgh-house, because a Duke of Newburgh laid the Foundation; but his Highness Fredrick-Henry, Prince of Orange, built it. It is a handsom Structure, and adorn'd with good Gardens.

DELFT, Delphi or Delfsum, is pleasantly seated among Meadows, at a distance of 5 or 6 miles from the Hague to the South-east, and about 8 from Rotterdam to the North-west, and is a very neat and well-built City, the Streets large and even, with Canals and Trees, as have most of the Cities of Holland: It is a silent Town, and inhabited by wealthy Merchants that have retired from Business. The Trade of the Place is chiefly for a sort of Earthen Ware, in imitation of China: They had formerly a great Trade in Brewing, as also in Weaving Cloth; but that is remov'd. This City being one of the Chambers of the East-India Company, the fine Goods of those Countries, especially Porcellane or China Earthen Ware, is a main Trade of the Inhabitants. The Old and the New Churches are large and fair Buildings; in the latter is to be seen a noble Monument, erected to the Memory of William I. Prince of Orange, who was barbarously assassinated in this City. The Stadthouse is a handsom Building. Here is kept the Arsenal of the State, which undoubtedly is well stor'd with all War-like Necessaries: The Magazine of Powder belonging to it accidentally blew up in 1654. and destroy'd a great part of the Town; besides which, it had been almost totally consumed by Fire in 1536. so that the present Buildings are but of late Structure: It is a good large City, wall'd and moted, and well inhabited.

ROTTERDAM, Roterodamum, may be reckon'd the second City of Holland for Trade, tho' it be but the seventh in the Convention of the States: It is seated on the North-side of the River Maes (which is there very broad, and makes a good Haven) at the distance of about 7 Leagues from the Sea, and 5 from the Brill to the East, 8 miles from Delft to the South-east, about 30 from Amsterdam to the South, near as many from Utrecht to the South-west, and about 15 from Dort to the West. It is a large, exceeding Populous and well-traded City: The convenience of the Haven is very extraordinary, for by the Canals that run through the Streets, Ships of great Burden can come in and unlade at the Merchants Doors; which, with certain Privileges they enjoy here, hath made it very much increase, even within 20 or 30 years past. The number of English Ships that use this City is much greater than those that come to Amsterdam, this Port being exceedingly more convenient for them than that: An Exchange is held here, where every Day the Merchants meet; the Structure of it is but ordinary, and doth not deserve a Description; but the great Church, dedicated to S. Lawrence, is a stately Building, and hath a high Tower, wherein hang very melodious Chimes; the Stadthouse is a fair Structure of Stone, and the great Stone-bridge in the Market-place is very spacious and neat; on it stands a stately Statue of Brals, of the Famous Desid. Erasmus, a Native of that City, and near the great Church is still to be seen the House wherein he was born, with his Picture, and an Inscription in Latin, Spanish and Dutch, over the Door, intimating so much. The Houses here are of Brick, but seem older than those of the other Towns we have named; the Streets are also broad and well paved, but by reason of the multiplicity of Business (for every Canal is full of Ships) cannot be so neatly kept as at Amsterdam, (where the Ships lye without the Town) and other places, where less Business is transacted.

The Brill is a neat City, well built, reasonably populous, and of some Trade; it is seated on an Island, nam'd The Land of Voorn, and hath a convenient Haven at the Mouth of the Maes, about 5 leagues below Rotterdam, and 30 leagues from Harwich in England, whence the Pacquet-boat uses to come weekly hither; but the Port of Helvoet being found more convenient, they come not hither now. The Buildings here likewise are of Brick, and tho' old are very neat, and the Streets large and handsome, especially the great one: The great Church is of Stone, and hath a large Tower which is a good Landmark to Sailers. The Walls are strong, and made very pleasant by Rows of Trees planted on them. This was one of the Cautionary Towns pawn'd to Queen Elizabeth, for the Assistance she gave the Dutch against Spain, and was kept by an English Garrison till King James I. restor'd it, 30 years after.

Helvoet Sluys, is a small Sea-Town, with a very convenient Haven, seated on the South-side of the same Island, and not above 3 miles distant from the Brill. The Town is not at all considerable, except for the weekly Arrival of the English Packquet-boat, and that His late Majesty set Sail from hence, to his happy Expedition into England, in the year 1688.

Not above a League Southward of the Land of Voorn, lies the small Island Goree, so nam'd from goed and Reed, which signifie a good Haven for Ships; its chief Town, of the same Name, was formerly a Place of great Trade, but is now not at all considerable.

Eastward from Goree lies the Island of Overslackee, or Overlackee, which is of much larger extent than that of Goree, being about 15 miles long and 5 miles broad; and hath on it many Villages and good Towns, the chief of which is named Somerdyck.

DORT, or Dordrecht, Dordrecht, is a very ancient City, and the first in Dignity of those that compose the States of Holland; also the Capital of a small Country round it, call'd the Bailiwick of Dort, and by some South-Holland, is seated upon the River Meruwe (which, as we have said, falls into the Maes) at the distance of 15 or 16 miles from Rotterdam to the South-east, about 20 from Breda to the North, and 40 from Amsterdam to the South. It is strongly situated, is seated on a small River named Amstel, that runs through the Town and falls into an Arm of the Sea, call'd the Z (and by abbreviation of the Dutch Armel Heer, & Z) which makes a large Haven, wherein commonly lie a great number of Merchants Ships. The City is distant about 30 miles from Rotterdam to the North, 20 from Horn, and 30 from Medemblick to the South, 12 from Harlem, and 15 from the Sea-shoar to the East, and about 25 from Utrecht to the North-west. It is but of modern Structure, being not mention'd in History before the year, 1290. nor then, but as a small Fisher-town only. De Witt hath publish'd Maps of its several Conditions, whereof the first shews it in the Year 1342, a small Town on the East side only of Amstel, with one Street in the middle, and 5 or 6 cross ones; which before 1400. was encreas'd to as much more on the other side the River, by 1432. it was again encreas'd on both sides and surrounded with strong Walls; in 1557. being grown populous, and beginning to be the chief Seat of Trade of this new erected State, it was much enlarged, as it was again in 1612. And again a fifth time in the year 1656. a very large space of Ground (great part whereof is not yet built) was taken in and the Walls built anew of Brick, and the Gates of Stone, with a large Ditch all round, which new Addition hath made it a large Semi-circle deriv'd from the River Z. It is an exceeding populous, rich and well-traded City, very well built and very nearly kept; the Streets are very large with Canals of Water in them, over which are a very great number of Stone-bridges. The Houses are all built of Brick or Stone, in good repair, and very beautiful, especially those in the newest part of the Town, where the Streets call'd the Heer, Kerings and Kesfers Grachten, or Lords, Kings and Emperors Channels, are fill'd with magnificent Houses, many of them of Free-stone, adorn'd with Columns and Chapters according to the Corinthian Architecture. The principal publick Buildings are the Old, the New, the Western and the Southern Churches, the Stadthuse, the Exchange, the Hospitals, the Magazine of the Navy, that of the East-India Company's Shipping, and the Sluces; All which we cannot omit giving as particular a description of as our room will admit. 1. The old Church is a Majestick Building of Stone according to the Gothick Order, with a fair Steeple of great height; the Church was begun to be Built in 1360: but the Steeple not finish'd till 1566. 2. The New Church, so call'd in distinction from the former, was founded about the year 1414. but being burnt in 1645. was repair'd, which is recken'd to be 100 foot from the Ground. 4. The South Church hath also a beautiful Steeple, of 137 foot high. The other Churches are less remarkable. 5. The Stadthuse or Guild Hall is a very magnificent Structure, all of Free-stone, adorn'd with Pillars, Chapters, Corniches and Carvings according to the Corinthian Architecture; it is a square Building of 252 foot broad, 235 foot deep, and 116 foot high; of which height, the Ground-rooms (which are the Offices belonging to the Bank, and the Prisons, with some smaller Offices, take up above 20 foot, and the first and second Stories about 30 foot each; and over the middle of the Front which is somewhat more advanced than the rest of the Work, above the Cornish, rises a Pedement, the Face whereof is of Marble with a Busto Relievo of curious Carving, and on the top and each side of it stand three very large Statues of Brasse, and just behind a handsome Tower, being a Pavillion supported by Pillars, wherein hang a great number of Bells that compose very musical Chimes. The back face hath also the Pediment with Busto Relievo, on the Top whereof stands a very large brazen Statue of Atlas, with a Globe of Copper on his Back. Within the House, the Gallery and Door-ways of the Offices are adorn'd with ingenious Carvings in Marble, and the Chambers with Marble Floors, and curious Paintings on the Cielings and Chimney peices: In this House the Senate of the City hold their Assemblies, the Burgomasters meet, Causes as well Criminal as Civil are Try'd, the great Bank is kept, and in general all publick Business transacted. This Building was begun in the year 1648. but not finish'd in many years; indeed not yet entirely, for the Cielings of the Gallery are design'd to be painted, and the Walls faced with Marble. 6. The Exchange is a handsome Structure of Brick, with Pillars of Stone all along the Walks, built after the model of our old Royal Exchange before the Fire, and is at least as Large. 7. The Hospitals here are many and large; above 300 poor Children are constantly maintain'd with Lodging, Diet and Cloaths, taught to Read and Write at the publick Charge, in the Armeniers-huis, Wees-huis, and Diaconis-huis, three large Hospitals, so call'd; besides which, there is a large House wherein above 300. decrepid old Women are lodg'd and fed; these are all of modern Foundation, and maintain'd partly by the voluntary Charities collected by the Deacons, and partly by certain little Taxes, such as a Penny upon every Person that passes through the Gate after Candle light, half the Money receiv'd at the Play-house, &c. and the rest supplied Docks for building Ships, and Shops of Anchor-Smiths, and all other Artificers belonging to Ship-building particularly a very long Rope-yard. This House serves to lay up their Stores of Shipping, and also for Ware-houses for those Goods that they have not room for in their other Ware-houses; which with their House stands in the middle of the City.

The Sluices are Works of prodigious Expence and Art, and worth a Traveller's notice. Formerly the City was frequently damaged by the overflowing of the Water, which, upon the blowing of a North-east Wind, was driven out of the Zuyder Zee and 'tY with that violence into the Canals in the Streets, that the Water overflowing, not only run into their Cellars, but even rose to the first Floor of their Houses that stood in the lower parts of the Town; to prevent which, the Magistrates, not many years since caused these Sluices to be made at the mouth of every one of the four Channels that open to the 'tY: These are strong solid Brick-works of 10 or 12 foot thick, rais'd from the bottom of the River to the Surface of the Ground, and built cross the Channels, leaving only convenient places for the passage of Ships, which are again shut up with very strong Flood-gates, able at all times to resist the force of the Water, and secure the Inhabitants from its injuring them. Here are other publick Buildings worth a Stranger's View, such as the Ratp house where Rogues are Imprison'd and kept to hard Labour, as raising Brazil-wood, &c. for 3 4 7. 10 years, or their whole Lives, according to the heinousness of the Crime; the Spin-house, where Whores are kept in like manner to Spinning &c. the East and West-India Company's Houses; the Jews Synagogue a noble Building indeed; the beautiful Stone bridge cross the Amstel, where it enters the Town; and the Walls all round the Town, which are exceeding neat, and well built with Brick, and secure the City from surprize, as the marshiness of the Soil all round does from a formal Siege: The Gates, which are 5 in number, are all built of Stone, and in the Bridge from each of them over the Ditch are 2 Draw-bridges and a Watch-house, wherein, as well as in the Gates, continual Watch is kept by Soldiers maintain'd for that purpose, besides every night a company of the Train'd Bands of the City. And for their security from the Water-side, there are two rows of Pails all along before the Town, with narrow Gaps only at convenient places, for the passage of Ships, which are every night shut up by a Boom laid cross and lock'd. The Wealth and Trade of this City is exceeding great, the number of Shipping lying before the Pails in the Winter-time, when ing Criminals to Justice, and executing the Law. But it is necessary to note, That the Senate have not the absolute choice of the Schepens, for they return a double number to the Stadtholder, who chuses those of them he pleases. The Burrough-masters keep the Keys of the Treasury of the City, and of the great Bank lodged here and kept in the Cellars under the Stadhuis, which without doubt is a vast Mass of Treasure, but whether so great as it's Credit, is not to be known, since none are permitted to see it; nor hath there ever been but once an occasion to try its Strength, viz. in 1673. when the French having overrun the Country, some People distrust'd the safety of their Money and call'd it out of the Bank, which the Treasurers readily paying, gave satisfaction to the rest, and it hath still remain'd there, tho transfer'd every day from one to another by Bills and Accounts, without ever telling the Money or any one desiring to see it. The compass of Amsterdam within the Walls, is reckon'd about 6 miles, but a large part of it is yet unbuilt; the number of Houses is about 25, or as some affirm 28000. The Number of Inhabitants may be guess'd at by the Burials, which in the year 1685, were 6245, according to the publick Account set up in the Stadthuyse. Amsterdam is seated in the Latitude of 52 deg. 28 min. Longit. 24. 2.

HARLEM, Harlemum, stands about 10 miles West from Amsterdam, not above 4 East from the Sea, about 20 North from Leyden, and as many South from Alcmar; it is a large populous and pleasant City; the Buildings are all of Brick, neat, convenient, and in good repair, the Streets large and even, and in some them are Canals as at Amsterdam. The Harlemers have many great and learned Men on their side in this Dispute; however, the first printed Books extant having been publish'd at Menz, carries over many to the other Party. The Professors have annual Stipends, and make a good profit by their Pupils; but the Students have no Endowments, except some Privileges. They are very numerous, and are a great advantage to the Town. Here is also a large Trade maintained by the making of Woollen-Cloaths. The small branch of the Rhine, which retains its name, passes through this City, and is the chief Channel in it. Leyden was Besieg'd by the Spaniards in 1574. and very well defended by the Citizens for five Months, at the end of which it was reliev'd. It is fortified with good Walls besides Ramparts, Bulwarks and large Ditches, and stands at the distance of 20 miles from Harlem to the South, 22 from Amsterdam to the South-west, 15 from Rotterdam to the North, and 27 from Utrecht to the West.

The HAGUE, call'd in Dutch, 'sGravenhague, (that is, The Grave of the Earl) in Latin Hagæ Comitiss, is seated about 8 or 9 miles from Leyden to the South-west, about 6 from Delft to the North-east, 14 from Rotterdam to the North-west, and not above 2 miles from the little Sea-Town Schieding. It glories in being the principal Village of Europe, for it is not wall'd, tho otherwise in all respects a City; being govern'd by its own Magistrates, and enjoying all the other Privileges, except sending Deputies to the States, as any City in Holland does. It is the Seat of the Princes, and the Assemblies of the States General, of the Provincial States of Holland, and of the Council of State; as also the Supreme Courts of Judicature; and is in general the place where all the publick Affairs of the Common-wealth are transacted; where all the Foreign Ministers receive their Audience, and commonly reside: All which causes a continual Concourse of People from all Parts, and very much enriches the Town, which is a neat built place: The Streets are large and adorn'd with Trees; the Houses are all of Brick and very handsom; those that stand near the Court, and in that part of the Town toward the Wood, are very stately, and Inhabited by Persons of Quality. The Palace, containing the Prince's Lodgings, the Chambers of the States General and Provincial, Council of State, &c. is a handsom Building, making two Angles of a Square, in the middle whereof stands a fair large Hall, not unlike that of Westminster in form, and in respect to the Shops in it all round, as also for the Standards taken from the Enemies, hanging up in it, but far short of it in largeness, being not so big as the Guild-hall of London. Adjoining to the Court stands a very noble House of Stone, built by Prince Maurice of Nassau, and bears his Name: The whole Court is moted round, and Guards continually kept at every Gate: On the North-side is a large square Pond call'd the Vijver, and on the West the Court opens to a large Plain, that is surrounded with fine Houses. The Town is large and very populous. The great Church is a stately old Building. That of a round Figure, without any Pillars, is a neat beautiful Structure, and not of many years standing: The Town-house is built of Stone, but old and not very remarkable.

The Situation of this Town is very pleasant; for on one side lye lovely Meadows; and on the other a large and pleasant Wood, in the middle whereof stands a House of Pleasure of the Prince's having having behind it very beautiful Gardens, and in it, besides the stately Lodgings, a very large dancing Room with a high Roof, rising into a Cupola, and at the top of it a Lanthorn, in which is a Gallery for Musick: The Walls and Cielings all round adorned with Paintings of the best Masters, representing the Actions of Henry Fredrick (the Father of his late Majesty) by whose Widow this House was built. On the North-side of the Town lies a Walk, paved all the way with Bricks, and shaded by Lime-Trees, planted on each side for 2 Miles in length, which leads to the little Village Schievling; from whence his late Majesty King Charles took Shipping to his Glorious and Happy Restauration.

About 12 or 14 miles South from the Hague stands Houfflaerdike, where is a stately Palace of the Prince's, adorn'd with very fine Gardens; to which he often retired, when the Affairs of the State did not require his presence at the Hague. And in the midway between the Hague and Delft stands the Village of Ryswick, and near it the Palace of His late Majesty, which has been render'd Famous, by being the Place of Treaty of the Peace in 1697. It was some time call'd Newburgh-house, because a Duke of Newburgh laid the Foundation; but his Highness Fredrick-Henry, Prince of Orange, built it. It is a handsom Structure, and adorn'd with good Gardens.

DELFT, Delphi or Delfium, is pleasantly situate among Meadows, at a distance of 5 or 6 miles from the Hague to the South east, and about 8 from Rotterdam to the North-west, and is a very neat and well-built City, the Streets large and even, with Canals and Trees, as have most of the Cities of Holland: It is a silent Town, and inhabited by wealthy Merchants that have retired from Business. The Trade of the Place is chiefly for a sort of Earthen Ware, in imitation of China: They had formerly a great Trade in Brewing, as also in Weaving Cloth; but that is remov'd. This City being one of the Chambers of the East-India Company, the fine Goods of those Countries, especially Porcellane or China Earthen Ware, is a main Trade of the Inhabitants. The Old and the New Churches are large and fair Buildings; in the latter is to be seen a noble Monument, erected to the Memory of William I. Prince of Orange, who was barbarously assassinated in this City. The Stadthouse is a handsom Building. Here is kept the Arsenal of the State, which undoubtedly is well stor'd with all War-like Necessaries: The Magazine of Powder belonging to it accidentally blew up in 1654. and destroy'd a great part of the Town; besides which, it had been almost totally consumed by Fire in 1536. so that the present Buildings are but of late Structure: It is a good large City, wall'd and moated, and well inhabited.

ROTTERDAM, Roterodamum, may be reckon'd the second City of Holland for Trade, tho' it be but the seventh in the Convention of the States: It is seated on the North-side of the River Maes (which is there very broad, and makes a good Haven) at the distance of about 7 Leagues from the Sea, and 5 from the Brill to the East, 8 miles from Delft to the South-east, about 30 from Amsterdam to the South, near as many from Utrecht to the South-west, and about 15 from Dort to the West. It is a large, exceeding Populous and well-traded City: The convenience of the Haven is very extraordinary, for by the Canals that run through the Streets, Ships of great Burden can come in and unlade at the Merchants Doors; which, with certain Privileges they enjoy here, hath made it very much increase, even within 20 or 30 years past. The number of English Ships that use this City is much greater than those that come to Amsterdam, this Port being exceedingly more convenient for them than that: An Exchange is held here, where every Day the Merchants meet; the Structure of it is but ordinary, and doth not deserve a Description; but the great Church, dedicated to S. Lawrence, is a stately Building, and hath a high Tower, wherein hang very melodious Chimes; the Stadthouse is a fair Structure of Stone, and the great Stone-bridge in the Marketplace is very spacious and neat; on it stands a stately Statue of Brass, of the Famous Desid. Erasmus, a Native of that City, and near the great Church is still to be seen the House wherein he was born, with his Picture, and an Inscription in Latin, Spanish and Dutch, over the Door, intimating so much. The Houses here are of Brick, but seem older than those of the other Towns we have named; the Streets are also broad and well paved, but by reason of the multiplicity of Business (for every Canal is full of Ships) cannot be so neatly kept as at Amsterdam, (where the Ships lye without the Town) and other places, where less Business is transacted.

The Brill is a neat City, well built, reasonably populous, and of some Trade; it is seated on an Island, nam'd The Land of Voorn, and hath a convenient Haven at the Mouth of the Maes, about 5 leagues below Rotterdam, and 30 leagues from Harwich in England, whence the Pacquet-boat uses to come weekly hither; but the Port of Helvoet being found more convenient, they come not hither now. The Buildings here likewise are of Brick, and tho' old are very neat, and the Streets large and handsome, especially the great one: The great Church is of Stone, and hath a large Tower which is a good Landmark to Sailors. The Walls are strong, and made very pleasant by Rows of Trees planted on them. This was one of the Cautionary Towns pawn'd to Queen Elizabeth, for the Assistance she gave the Dutch against Spain, and was kept by an English Garrison till King James I. restor'd it, 30 years after.

Helvoet Sluys, is a small Sea-Town, with a very convenient Haven, seated on the South-side of the same Island, and not above 3 miles distant from the Brill. The Town is not at all considerable, except for the weekly Arrival of the English Packquet-boat, and that His late Majesty set Sail from hence, to his happy Expedition into England, in the year 1688.

Not above a League Southward of the Land of Voorn, lies the small Island Goree, so nam'd from goed and Reed, which signifie a good Haven for Ships; its chief Town, of the same Name, was formerly a Place of great Trade, but is now not at all considerable.

Eastward from Goree lies the Island of Ove-flakee, or Overlackee, which is of much larger extent than that of Goree, being about 15 miles long and 5 miles broad; and hath on it many Villages and good Towns, the chief of which is named Somerdyck.

DORT, or Dordrecht, Dordrecht, is a very ancient City, and the first in Dignity of those that compose the States of Holland; also the Capital of a small Country round it, call'd the Bailiwick of Dort, and by some South-Holland, is seated upon the River Meruwe (which, as we have said, falls into the Maes) at the distance of 15 or 16 miles from Rotterdam to the South-east, about 20 from Breda to the North, and 40 from Amsterdam to the South. It is strongly formed, being an Island between the Merwe and Maes on the North, and a large Lake call'd the Bies-Bes on the South and East. The City is large and populous, the Houses of Brick and very high, and the Streets broad and very neat: The chief Church hath a high Steeple, from whence that of Breda may be seen. Our English Merchants enjoy great Privileges here, as being our Staple for Cloth: This City is also the Staple for Rhenish Wines, whereof the Merchants have very great Stocks; as also of Corn, Wood and other Commodities, brought down the Rhine and the Maes. Dort boasts of being a Maiden Town, and never taken by any Enemy, tho' often Besieg'd, particularly by the Duke of Brabant, in 1304. whom they repulsed and forced to return home. It hath long enjoyed the Privilege of Coining Money. The City is also noted for the famous Synod held in it, in the year 1619. for Reconciling the Points of Religion then in Debate between the Arminians and Calvinists: The Room wherein it was held is still shewn, with the Seats in it, as they then stood.

This Bailiwick of Dort was made an Island in the Year, 1421 at what time a Tempest drove the Waters up the Maes and the Maruwe, with that Violence that it overflow'd the Banks, and swallowed a great Tract of Land that lay between Dort and Brabant, with seventy two Villages and one hundred thousand Persons.

Geertruydenberg, so named from a certain Saint Gertrude who died in 664. is a very strong fortified Town, on the Frontiers of Holland towards Brabant, esteemed of that Consequence formerly, that the Earls of Holland used to be bound by Oath to keep it, as the Dukes of Brabant were to recover it, since the Year 1213 that the former took it. The supreme Jurisdiction of it was conferr'd upon Prince Maurice, by the States, in 1611. since when it hath been part of the Patrimony of the illustrious House of Orange. It is seated on the South Side of the Lake call'd Bies Bes, where the River Dreg falls into it; which, tho' narrow above, is here so increased, that it will receive Ships of good Burden; and is distant 12 miles from Dort to the South-east, 10 from Breda to the North, and near 20 from the Bosch to the West. This Town is very strongly Fortified, and hath also the Advantagious situation common in this Country, viz. very low and marshy Grounds round it; notwithstanding which, it was taken by the States, in 1573. and by the Spaniards in 1588. and in 1595. retaken by Prince Maurice, and ever since been possessed by the States General. About 15 miles Westward from hence stands

Klundert or Clundert, a strong Fortification belonging to the Prince of Orange since 1553. It was formerly call'd the Nieuwerdt, and the Branch of the Roo Vaert was a good Road for Ships. Five miles from hence stands Willemsstadt, a strong but small Town, built in 1553. by Order of William Prince of Orange, from whom it had its Name, and on whom the Lordship of it was conferr'd by the States. It is seated upon the Water nam'd the Roo Vaert, that parts the Island, call'd in general the Land van Voorn, from the Continent, and serves to secure the Trade between Holland and Zealand: It is defended by a Wall with seven Battions and a double Ditch, besides other Fortifications.

Heusden is another well fortified Frontier of Hol- land; it stands on a Stream, that running out of the Maes forms a little Island call'd the Hemerder Waer, at the distance of 12 miles from Geertruydenberg to the East, and about 7 or 8 from the Bosch to the North-west. It is an ancient Town, and was subject to its own Lords for 500 years, by whom sold to the Duke of Brabant, who gave it to the Earl of Holland; but being afterwards claim'd by others, gave occasion to grievous Wars. A lamentable accident happen'd here in the Year 1680. for the Magazine of Powder blew up in the Night-time, suppos'd to have been fired by Lightning, and destroy'd great part of the Cattle and the neighbouring Streets, shatter'd the whole Town, and kill'd near two hundred People.

Crevecœur, a little Town strongly fortified, stands upon the Maes, 5 miles from Heusden to the East, and not above 3 from the Bosch, and at the most extreme East-part of Holland.

The Bosch or Bolduc, Breda, and Bergen op Zoom, belong to the States, but being all seated in Brabant are already described in our Account of that Province.

Louvesteine Castle is seated on the most Western part of the Bomeier Wiert, at the confluence of the Wael and the Maes, and distance of 8 or 9 miles from Heusden to the N. W. It is a strong Place, but chiefly remarkable on the account of the Faction against the Prince of Orange (his late Majesty of Great-Britain) who about 50 years ago using to assemble in it, gave occasion to the whole Party's being commonly call'd by its Name.

Worcum, an ancient and strong fortified Town, is seated on the South-side of the Wael, just over against Louvesteine, being parted from it by the Maes, which falls into the Wael betwixt them: It was sometime subject to the Duke of Cleeve, afterwards to the Earl of Hoorne, and in the Year 1600. sold to the States by the Widow of the last Count; who was Beheaded at Brussels by the Duke d' Alva.

Gorcum is seated at the mouth of the Ling, and on the North side of the Wael, not above 3 miles from Worcum, and about 15 East from Dort. It is a neat well-built Town and very strong, as well by reason of its situation as strong Fortifications; and is also a Place of Wealth, having a good Trade by Corn, Cheese, Butter, &c. brought down the Ling to its Market, and by the Inhabitants carried to other Places: The Church hath a high Tower, from whence may be seen 22 wall'd Towns, besides a great number of Villages. The Town is reasonably large, and hath a Senate and Magistracy of its own.

Vianen is a wall'd Town, formerly subject to its own Lords, seated on the South-side of the River Leck, near the Borders of the Province of Utrecht, about 8 miles North from Gorcum, and as many South from Utrecht: It is pleasantly seated and a very neat Town, and hath a Cattle and a stately high Tower.

Schoonhoven, so call'd for its fine Gardens, Schoon in Dutch signifying Fair or Clean, and Hof a Garden-House, stands on the North-side of the Leck, about 12 miles West from Vianen, and 15 East from Rotterdam; it was so strong, that it was able to repell the French, who endeavoured to take it in 1672, since when it hath been also better Fortified. It is a very pleasant Town, and hath an old Castle, built in 1312.

Just over against it stands Newport, formerly a rich and populous Town, but now not considerable.

Goude corruptly call'd Tou Gou, is a fair large City, chiefly in Dignity of those that compose the States of Holland, and seated on the small River Gouwe and the IJel, which about 10 miles below falls into the Meuse at the distance of about 12 miles from Amsterdam to the North-West, as many from Rotterdam to the North-East, and 24 from Amsterdam to the South. It was founded in 1272, but suffer'd much by Fire about a hundred years after, and by Wars in 1429, and again totally consumed by Fire in 1535, but being rebuilt, is now an exceeding neat Place, and more than ordinary clean, by means of the great Tide up the IJel into the Channels in the Streets, which carry away all their Ordure. The Houses are of Brick, and tho' of late very neat; the Market place is very spacious, on it stands the Stadthuis, and near it the great Church; which being burnt by Lightning in 1552, hath been at vast Expence repaired, and is now a very stately Building; it is especially remarkable for its painted Glass Windows, which are thought to exceed any others in Europe. This City enjoys a healthful Air, tho' it be seated upon a morish Ground, and the Country about is so low, that it may be easily overflow'd by opening the Sluces: Besides which, it is secur'd by Walls and a broad Ditch, and therefore reckon'd a very strong Post and a Security to that side of the Country.

Nierden a small City, but very strongly fortified, is seated near the Zuyder-zee, 22 miles from Goude to the North-East, 15 from Utrecht to the North, and about 12 from Amsterdam to the East. It stands in low marshy Grounds, and hath of long time been a considerable Port; in 1481, it was taken by the People of Utrecht: But in the same year, the Narders not only regain'd their City, but obtain'd so great a Victory over their Enemies, that with the Booty they gain'd, a Tower was erected to commemorate it. In 1752, Frederick of Toledo, the Spanish General, in revenge for their having submitted to the Prince of Orange, summon'd all the Inhabitants into the Market-place, and caus'd his Soldiers to cut them in pieces, and burnt down the Town; which barbarous Action encreas'd the Hatred of the Hollanders to the Spaniards, and made them hold out their Towns the more vigorously afterwards. It was taken by the French in 1672, and regain'd in 1673. And it being a place of great Consequence as serving to secure Amsterdam, the States have lately bestow'd great Cost in Fortifying it, the old Walls being pulled down, and new ones built of Brick, together with Ravelings, Half Moons, Countericarsps, double Ditches, &c. so that it is now a regular Fortification, and as strong as any. The Town stood formerly more Northward, but was swallowed up by the Encroachment of the Zuyder-zee, whereof some Remains are still to be seen at Low-water.

Muyden, a small wall'd Town, seated upon the IJel, where it falls into the Zuyder-zee, in the Midway between Nierden and Amsterdam, was made a strong Post in the late War, when the French were at Utrecht; as was also Wesep, another small Town on the IJel, about 2 or 3 miles distant from Muyden to the South.

And now having Travell'd round, and brought the Reader back to Amsterdam, we must proceed to North-Holland or Wierland, which is divided from Amstelland by the IJ, Ye or Ya, call'd a River, but may be more properly esteem'd a Branch of the Zuyder-zee or South-Sea, from which it begins at the Pampus, about 3 miles West from Muyden in a Channel of about half a mile broad; where breadth it continues to Amsterdam, but grows soon after twice so broad, and receives the Saen, out of North-Holland, and the Spoer from Haerlem, and then passes Northward to Berckwick, &c.

North-Holland in general is commonly understood by the Name of Wijl-Friezland, though but one part of it, viz. that to the North-East (wherein stand Horn, Encluyfen and Medinbick, be the ancient Frisia Occidentalis. In this Country has 17 of the 18 Cities that have Voices in the Provincial-States, viz. Those three now mention'd, and Munickdam, Edam, Purmerent and Sickener.

Munickendam, so named from the small River Monick that passes through it, is seated on a small Bay of the Zuyder-zee, about 8 miles North from Amsterdam, and 3 South from Edam. It is a small Town of some Antiquity, and defended but by a Rampart, and in some places by a Wall.

Saen edam, or Sardam, seated on the IJ, at the Mouth of the small River Saen, about 7 miles North-West from Amsterdam, tho' but a Village, deserves mentioning rather than some of their Cities, being so remarkable for Ship-building, that 'tis commonly said of this Town, the Ship-wrights in it will undertake to build so many Ships of War in a year as there are days in it. By this Trade the place is much enrich'd and encreas'd. The old Town stands below the Dam of the River, whence it hath its Name: To which hath been since added a long row of Buildings on both sides the River beyond the Dam, which is called the New Town, out of which Ships are haul'd over the Dam upon Rowlers.

Edam or Yedam, is seated at a little distance from the Zuyder-zee, to which it has a Channel or Haven, 3 miles from Munickendam to the North, and 10 from Horn to the South. It is a small Town, but is noted for Building of Ships, and making excellent Cheese.

Purmerent, a good neat Town, fortified with a Rampart and Ditch, is seated about five miles from Edam to the West, and 12 from Amsterdam to the North, formerly belonging to the Lords of Egmond, who sold it to the States in the year 1595.

The Land between Edam and Purmerent was formerly a great Lake, but by the Industry and Skill of the Inhabitants it was Drain'd, and is at present a fruitful and pleasant Country, bearing still the name of Purmer: And Southward from Purmerent lies the Beemster, a great Lake also before the year 1612, when after four years Labour and vast Expence (the Banks by which the water that was thrown out by their Mills having been broken, the Water return'd, after the Work was half done) it was made dry Land, and is now so planted with Gardens, Orchards, Rows of Trees and fertile Enclosures, that Sir William Temple says, it is the pleasantest Summer Landship he ever saw. Its extent contains 7090 Acres, besides the Highways, and the Dikes that surround and cross it in several Places. Of the like nature are the Wormer, which lies South of it, the Schermer and the Heer Huygen Waert, to the West of the Beemster, as is also the Zijpe in the most North part of this Province; which last is defended from the Sea by a vast Mole, built of great Beams of Timber driven into the Ground, and the Distances fill'd with Stones.

Alomar, is seated a little beyond the Schermer, at the distance of 13 miles from Purmerent to the North-West.

West, and about 20 from Haerlem to the North. The Buildings are beautiful, and the Streets even and neat, the Houses generally furnished with Gardens, and the Town surrounded with Meadows; and at the end of the Town stands a very pleasant Grove, or Wood of Trees, planted in regular order; all which make this Place esteemed one of the pleasantest in these Countries. The Inhabitants are enriched by the great quantity of Butter and Cheese they receive from the vast Herds of Kine fed in the Neighbouring Pastures. It is Wall'd round, and was strong enough to resist the Spaniards, who endeavour'd to take it in the Netherland War.

Hoorn, is a good large, pleasant and rich City, with a convenient Port on the Zuyder-zee, at the distance of 15 miles from Alcmaer to the East, 20 from Amsterdam, and 10 from Edam to the North; it is surrounded with broad Dykes for its Security, large Pasture Grounds for its Profit, and fine Gardens and Walks for its Pleasure. The Trade of this Place consists chiefly in Butter and Cheese, whereof they export great quantities into Spain, Portugal and other parts, especially at their annual Fair in the Month of May.

Enchuyfen, is seated also on the Zuyder-zee, in the most Eastern part of the Peninsula of West-Friesland, at the distance of 10 miles from Hoorn to the North-East, and as many from Medenblick to the South East, as also 30 miles from Alcmaer to the East. It is a fair, neat and large City, with a capacious Port, from whence great Fleets yearly sail to the Barrick and other parts, by which, as also by their Herring-Fishing, building of Ships, and refining of salt from Britany in France the Inhabitants are much Enriched. The Buildings are mostly of Brick, for being formerly of Wood they suffered much by Fire, wherefore of late Years no Wooden Houses have been erected. The Steeple of the great Church is remarkably high, considering the M'orishness of the Soil whereon the City stands, which is thereby secur'd, as well as by the Ramparts and other strong Fortifications about it.

Medenblick or Medemblick, is one of the most ancient Cities of North-Holland, and formerly the Metropolis of it, but Enchuyfen hath out-strip'd it in Grandeur, for this is but a small City. It is seated on the Zuyder-zee, in the North-west part of West-Friesland, 10 miles from Enchuyfen to the North-west, as many from Hoorn to the North, and about 25 from Alcmaer to the East. It hath a very large and commodious Haven, and a Castle of very ancient Structure. The Banks are here more strong and large than any in this Country, for there being nothing to break the Sea quite from der Schelling and Flieland Islands to this Shoar, the Waters beat violently upon it when the Northerly Winds blow. The Country about affords good Pasturage. Medenblick had formerly a Territory depending on it, govern'd by an Officer call'd Dyk-grave.

Cross the Mouth of the Zuyder-zee lye a row of Islands, the first of which named the Texel or Teffel, is disjoined from the North Cape of North-Holland, but by a very narrow Channel; nor are the Distances between the rest much larger. The three named, Texel, Flieland, and der Schelling, are reckon'd part of North-Holland.

Texel, is a small Island of not above 4 or 5 miles extent but very fruitful, affording especially good Pasturage; it is defended from the fury of the Ocean partly by the Sand-hills, and partly by strong Banks. Here is a large fair Town, besides many Villages; and a strong Fort to command the Passage into the Zuyder-zee.

Flieland or Vlieland, lies North-West from the Texel; it is about 10 miles long, but very narrow: It hath only two Villages, and is not considerable, but for abundance of Muscles taken there.

Schelling, lies next to Flieland, and is longer and broader than that. Here are five Villages, the chief whereof containing near 1000 Houses was burnt, together with above 100 Sail of Merchant Ships, by our English Fleet under the Command of Sir Robert Holmes, on the 7th of August, 1666.

These Islands, together with some Banks of Sand, break the Assaults of the Ocean, and make two good Harbours denominated from the two first.

Southward from the Texel, and in the midway between that and Medenblick, lies another small Island call'd the Wierings, which hath several good Villages, and a rich and fertile Soil.

Sir William Temple is of opinion, That the Zuyder-zee hath been made by some great Inundation, there being no mention made of it in ancient Authors; and the great Shoals of flat Sands that are spread almost all over it, and the Row of Islands that lie like the broken Remains of a continued Coast, together with the name of West-Friesland, do give good reason to believe, that the outward part, at least, was anciently a continued Country from North-Holland to Friesland.

C H A P. XII.

ZEALAND, Zealandia.

ZEALAND, so call'd from its situation in the Sea, or as others say, so nam'd by the Danes, (who formerly used to infest these Coasts) in memory of their principal Island of the same Name, is seated between Holland on the North, Flanders on the South, Brabant on the East, and the German Sea on the West. It is composed of several Islands, which are usually divided into two Districts, called the Beosler, [or the Eastern] Schelde, and the Bewesler [or Western] Schelde, from the two different Channels by which that River falls into the Sea. Which Division is Political and made for the more easie Government of them, each District having one grand Magistrate in the nature of a Justiciary, with large Power to punish Vagabonds and Criminals out of the Jurisdictions of the Cities; but this Jurisdiction hath been much restrain'd, and therefore this Division less regarded: And Geographers now only mention the Islands as they are situate beyond the Ooster-Schelde, or between that and the Western.

Those beyond, or North of the Ooster-Schelde, are Scheuven, Duyveland, Tolen and Oresand, Goree, and Overflackee (already mention'd in Holland) were formerly reckon'd part of Zealand.

Those between the Ooster and the Western Schelde are Walcheren, North Beveland, South-Beveland, and Wolferdyke.

These Islands were formerly subject to the same Earls with Holland, (but with the enjoyment of their own proper Laws and Customs) and with that fell to the the House of Burgundy, and afterwards associated with the other Provinces in the Union of Utrecht (as we have already shewn) and have ever since been a considerable part of the Territories of the States General; for by reason of the situation of Zealand, the Inhabitants are much enrich'd by Fishery and Navigation; They Trade into all Foreign Parts, especially the West-Indies and France. They have few or no Manufactures, but have an excellent way of boiling and purifying the Salt they fetch from France.

The Land here lies extreme low, so that they are forced to be at great expence in maintaining the Banks to keep out the Sea. But then the Soil is fertile and produces very good Wheat and excellent Pasture; also Madder for Dying; and Colewort, the Seed whereof yeilds them good Profit. The Air is not so wholesome as in the neighbouring Countries, for by reason of the noisom Fogs and Vapours arising from many Pools of standing Waters and the neighbouring Sea, it disposes to Agues and Fevers, and other such Diseases.

The extent of Zealand is not easie to be computed, because of the intervening Waters, but reckoning Water and all, from the most Northern Banks of Schouwen to the Southern Shore of Zuyd Beveland, is about 20 miles, and from the most Eastern part of Walcheren to the Town of Tolen, near 30 miles. In this Province are 8 Wall'd Towns and 102 Villages; the chief whereof are these, viz.

In Walcheren the chief Island of Zealand situate the most South-West: For Trade, Wealth, number of Inhabitants, and splendor of its Cities and Villages, much surpassing all the rest.

In North-Beveland, situate South from Schouwen, and East from Walcheren.

MIDDLEBURG, the Capital City of Zealand, is situate in the Island of Walcheren, at the distance of 40 Miles from Rotterdam to the South-West, 42 from Breda to the West, and 25 from Bruges to the North-East, in the Latitude of 51 deg. 35 min. and Long. of 22 deg. 50 min. and is a large well-built and populous City, the Streets large and neat, and the publick Buildings stately, especially the Stadthuyse, which is adorn'd with curious Statues. The Churches, whereof here are about twenty, are very fine; the highest Tower is exceeding costly and beautiful. Its Haven hath been made very convenient by a great Channel cut from a little Arm of the Sea, that running out at Armmuyden makes a little Island, and falls in again at Rammekins, from the middle of which Branch this Channel is deriv'd, and made to bring up Ships into the Streets of the Town, by which means the City hath been exceedingly enrich'd by Trade, especially by the Staple of French, Spanish and Portugal Wines settled here. In the new Erection of Bishopricks which King Philip II. attempted, this City was made one, and the Abby of St. Nicholas the Seat, but it was soon alter'd and made the Place of Assembly of the States of this Province, the College of its Admiralty, its Mint, and other publick Offices. Middleburg is strongly fortified with a good Wall, large and deep Ditches, and a Counterescarp.

Armmuyden, so call'd from the small River Ame that runs from hence to Middleburg, is at present but a small Wall'd Town, seated about 3 miles from Middleburg to the East, at the Mouth of that little Arm of the Sea above mention'd, which afforded it formerly an extraordinary good Haven, and the Town was exceedingly enrich'd by the many Merchant-Ships that frequented it: But the Sands have so choak'd it up, that for many years past Ships cannot enter, and therefore the Trade is now quite decay'd, and the present subsistence of the Inhabitants, is by the Boiling and Purifying Salt. It was formerly a Lordship, but in the last Century, purchased by the City of Middleburg, and is now a dependant on that.

Rammekins, call'd in Dutch Zeburg, is a strong Fort, seated at the Mouth of the Harbour of Middleburg, at the distance of about 3 miles from that City to the South-East, and as many from Flushing to the East. The Creek whereon it stands is a secure Retreat for Shipping; and to the Land-side it is surrounded with pleasant Meadows and many Villages. This Fort was one of the Cautionary Towns deliver'd to Queen Elizabeth.

Flushing, call'd by the Dutch, Vlissingen, is seated in the most Southern part of the Island, at the distance of about 3 Miles from Middleburg; and tho' formerly but a small Place at which a Ferry was establish'd to carry Passengers to Flanders, (which is just over against it, at about half a League's distance) is at present a considerable City, well-built, and a Place of good Trade by means of its excellent Port. The Buildings are not quite so good as those of Middleburg, nor the Streets so broad, but the Stadthuyse is a very stately modern Building. It was first Wall'd about 140 years ago, but upon the Erection of this Republick it was very strongly fortified, as being a Place of great consequence. It was formerly subject to its own Lords of the Family of the Borsals, of whom it was purchas'd by the Prince of Orange about the year 1581. who hath still the Nomination of their Magistrates. This was also one of the Cautionary Towns deliver'd to Queen Elizabeth in 1585. and restor'd by King James in 1616.

Ter Vere is a strong fortified Town with two good Harbours, seated on the North-side of the Island, at the distance of three Miles from Middleburg, and hardly so much from Armmuyden to the North. It hath been a place of good Trade, especially for the Stoch Trade, the Staple of which was fix'd here, but is not now so considerable; it is govern'd by its own Magistrates, and is well fortified, having three strong Bulwarks and a broad Ditch. The Sea hath often assaulted and threatned the Ruin of this Town, as it actually did its Tower that stood on the North-side of the Port, in the year 1630. This Town is also subject to the Prince of Orange.

Zirczee, or Zirczee, the cheif City of the Island of Schowen, is seated on the Channel which divides Schowen from Duyveland, at the distance of about 15 Miles from Middleburg to the North-east, and as many from the Briel to the South. It is esteem'd the ancientest City of Zealand, and is a place of Trade, having a good Haven by means of a Channel from the Sea, by which they receive Salt from France, and export Madder in great quantities; though the Harbour, by being somewhat choak'd with Sand, be less convenient than formerly. It is a large place and hath several good Buildings, especially the great Church called de Munster, which is a very beautiful Structure: The Walls are old, but by reason of the low Grounds about, which are easily laid under Water, the place is strong enough, and did actually sustain a Siege of the Spaniards in 1575. for 8 Months, and at last obtain'd good Terms.

Brewershaven, so call'd from the great quantities of Beer brought thither from Delft and other places, and distributed to all the Towns in this Province, is seated on the North-side of the Island over against Goree, at the distance of 5 Miles from Zirczee; and was formerly a place of good Trade, and therefore Wall'd, increas'd in Buildings, and govern'd by its Magistrates; but it is now much declin'd, and subsists chiefly by Fishing and Agriculture, Bommenes stands near the Sea, about a Mile Eastward of Brewershaven, over against Goree and the West part of Overflackee, and is a very strong Fortrefs, being compass'd with a Wall and a deep Ditch, fill'd by the Sea, besides other Fortifications.

Oostduyveland, q. d. in the East of Duyveland (so nam'd from the great number of Doves and Pigeons found in this Country) is a Village only; as are also Oudekerke, Nieuwerkerk, Vianen, Capelle, Swaneburg, &c. situate also in Duyveland.

Tolen or Ter Tolen, the cheif City of the Island of the same Name, is seated on the Channel call'd Het Slaeck, which makes Tolen an Island and divides it from Brabant, and is distant about 10 or 12 Miles from Zirczee to the South-East, and 3 or 4 from Bergen-op-zoom to the North West. It was formerly the Seat of one of the Custom-houses of the Earls of Zealand, whence it had its name, and is at present a well-fortified and strong Place, capable of resisting a powerful Enemy.

This Island is but small, and hath no other considerable Town in it.

Cats and Colyns Plaet, are the cheif Towns of North-Beveland; the first seated on the Eastern Shore, and the second on the Southern, but neither of them are considerable enough to deserve a particular Description. This Island was formerly exceeding pleasant, but by an Inundation in 1532. the greatest part of it was overwhelm'd, and therein the City Cortgeen (at that time a place of note) with many Villages destroy'd. The Inhabitants have recover'd a great deal of the Land in the North and East part, whereon stand the Towns above mention'd, but cannot regain their ancient State, the place being at present not at all considerable.

Oresand or Maersand, reckon'd one of the Islands of Zealand, is a very small Country lying North-west from North-Beveland, and is divided from that but by a narrow Channel, hath no Town in it worth describing.

Wolferdyck, another small Island of about 5 Miles long, but not above one Mile broad, is situate between North and South Beveland, and contains only 3 or 4 Villages, nam'd Westerland, Oosterland, Hongerdyck &c.

South Beveland may be reckon'd the largest of all the Islands of Zealand, tho' it be at present of less extent than formerly, the Sea having encroach'd upon it several times, especially in 1532. when the Town and most of the Lordship of Borsales was swallowed up. The length of this Island is about 24 or 25 Miles; but all the Eastern part being overflow'd, it cannot be reckon'd above 15 Miles, and its breadth 8 or 9. The Soil of it is in some places Woody, but the rest produces very good Corn and Fruit. The cheif Town here is Ter Goes, seated on the South-side of the Island, 12 Miles East from Middleburg, and 15 West from Bergen-op-Zoom. It is a reasonable large City, nearly built and well inhabited; the cheif City was burnt down in 1618. but was quickly rebuilt, and is now a stately Structure. Here are three Market-places, a Grammar-school and three Hospitals, all fair and well built. This Town was endow'd with large Privileges in 1530. Wall'd round about in the year 1340. and afterwards strongly fortified by the States in 1585. It hath a Channel to the Sea, by which Vessels of smaller Burden come up to the Town.

There are many large and populous Villages, as also several fine Mansion-houses of Gentlemen in South-Beveland; but those containing nothing very remarkable, we must omit them to speak a little of Romerswael, formerly one of the three cheif Towns of this Island, and enjoy'd large Privileges; but by the Misfortunes of six Inundations and one Conflagration which all happen'd in ten years time; about the middle of the former Century was so reduc'd, that though many Attempts were made for its Restoration, the Remains of the whole Town were sold in the year, 1631. for no more than 90 Pounds Flemish or 60 Pounds Sterling. It stands on the Banks of the Ooster-Scheld 10 Miles from Ter Goes to the East.

UTRECHT, Ultrajectina Ditio.

THE Province of Utrecht is bounded on the North by Holland and the Zuyder-zee, on the South by part of Holland and part of Guelderland, on the East by Guelderland, and on the West by Holland, containing in extent about 20 Miles in length, and as much in breadth. The Land here is higher and therefore fitter for Agriculture, and the Country much pleasanter, than those we have been speaking of: It produces plenty of good Corn, and is replenish'd with fine Gardens and Orchards. An account hath already been given of its having been subject to its Bishops for several Ages, and of its Engagement with the other Provinces in the Union made in its Metropolis; since when it hath been always part of these States

States, but with the same Form of Government, the Bishops excepted as formerly; and tho' the Episcopacy be banish'd, the Canonries and Prebendaries having been disposed of to Gentlemen of the Country, retain the same share in the Government that their Predecessors the Clergy had, and send Eight Delegates to the Provincial States, who, in the name of the Clergy, have Session therein: The rest of the Members of the States being the Deputies of the Nobles and of the chief Towns, as in the other Provinces.

This Province was wholly subjected to the French, in the years 1672. and 1673. their King keeping his Court in the Metropolis some part of the year 1672. & remain'd their Head Quarters till the end of 1673.

The Chief Towns of this Province, are {	Utrecht, Cap.

	Amersfort.
	Dufterde Wyck.
	Rhenen,

UTRECHT, Ultraj. ſium, Trajectum Inferius, & Trajectum ad Rhenum, ſo nam'd from an ancient Ferry or Paſſage over the Rhine, is a fair, large and populous City, ſeated upon the old Channel of the Rhine, at the diſtance of 24 Miles from Amſterdam to the South eaſt, 27 from Leyden, and about as many from Rotterdam to the Eaſt, 17 from the Zuyder-zee to the South, and 34 from Breda to the North. The Buildings are of Brick, neat and beautiful, with convenient deep Cellars, not to be found in Holland. The Streets are large, but not ſo well adorn'd with Trees, nor the whole City in general quite ſo cleanly and beautiful as ſome in Holland are. The Church of St. Martin call'd the Dome, formerly the Cathedral, was a magnificent Building before a great part of it was deſtroy'd by Tempeſt in 1674. but the large ſquare Tower, of 460 Steps to the top, is ſtill ſtanding. The Churches of our Saviour, St. Mary, St. Peter, and St. John, were formerly Collegiate, the Chapter whereof (tho' now compos'd of Laymen, to whom the Revenues have been given) make the States of the Clergy. The other publick Buildings are ſtately enough but being ancient are not particularly remarkable. The chief Excellence of this City, is its pleaſant Situation, (in a ſerene and whoſom Air, among rich Meadows and Corn-fields, and within a days Journey of at leaſt fifty Wall'd Towns) and its famous Univerſity, at firſt a publick School only, founded by David of Burgundy, Biſhop of Utrecht in 1459 but erected into a Univerſity by the Magiſtrates, and confirmed by the Provincial States in the year 1636. which is at preſent in a very flouriſhing State. Beſides the Rhine, two artificial Channels call'd de Maert and de Nieuwe Gracht, run through the Streets, and have 35 arch'd Bridges of Brick over them. The Wall of this City is very high and hath a broad Bank with a ſide to ſuſtain it (which is planted with Trees and makes a pleaſant Walk) but is old and decay'd: and here being pretty large Suburbs, and no Outworks, the place cannot be eſteem'd fit to reſiſt a powerful Enemy; which was the reaſon the Inhabitants gave for their ſending the French King the Keys of the City in 1672. But the Hollanders accuſe them of Treachery and Cowardize, and ſay, They had beforehand made a Bargain, and therefore reſuſ'd to permit new Fortifications to be rais'd, or to admit the Prince of Orange with the Army into the City, when the French were at Arnhem. But tho' theſe courageous Citizens ſent above 20 Miles to ſeek the Enemy, and preſent them the Keys, they ſared little better than the other Conqueſts of that King, having been forced to pay no leſs than One hundred and ſixty thouſand Pounds Sterling to their new Gueſts while they tarried with them, (which was from the 23d of June, 1672. to the end of November, 1673.) beſides above Fourty Thouſand Pounds at their departure.

Amersfort, Amisfortia, and Amisfurtum, ſtands upon the little River Eems, 14 Miles from Utrecht to the North Eaſt, and 7 from the Zuyder-zee to the South. It is a good large Wall'd Town, well Inhabited, and pleaſantly ſeated between large Corn-fields to the Eaſt and South, and Paſture-Grounds to the North, which afford the Inhabitants a plentiful Subſiſtance, the chief Trade of the Town being Agriculture and Grazing. The Buildings are neat and handſom; among the publick ones are two Churches, ſeveral Hospitals, and a publick School. The Town is govern'd by its own Magiſtrates, and is a place of great Antiquity, but hath been much enlarg'd; for tho' it were formerly a ſmall Place, the compaſs of its Walls at preſent is near an hours Walk. The Strength of it is not conſiderable. It is the uſual Winter Quarters of ſeveral Troops of Horſe.

At a little diſtance from Amersfort to the South-weſt lies a large Tract of Hills, Woods, and barren Heath, of near 10 Miles long, and 4 or 5 Miles broad, call'd Amersforder Burgh: Juſt upon the edge of which ſtands SOESTDYCK, a pleaſant Palace of His Majeſty's adorn'd with fine Gardens, and curious Fountains, delightful Walks ſhaded with tall Trees, pleaſant Parks fill'd with Deer, a large Volary and exceeding fine Stables.

Duſterde Wyck, or Wyck te Duſterde, Doroſtatum and olim Duroſtadium Batavorum, is ſeated juſt in the place where the middle Channel of the Rhine joyns with the Leck, and is diſtant 15 Miles from Amersfort to the South, and as many from Utrecht to the South-Eaſt. It is a pretty neat Wall'd Town, pleaſantly ſituated and indifferently rich. It is a place of Antiquity, being mention'd by Tacitus, and afterwards ruin'd by the Normans.

Rhenen, another Wall'd Town of great Antiquity, is ſeated on the Rhine 7 Miles from Duſterdewyck to the Eaſt, and 15 from Amersfort to the South.

Montfort is a good neat Town, tolerably well Fortified, and ſeated about 7 or 8 Miles from Utrecht to the Weſt, near the Frontiers of Holland. It is water'd by the ſmall River Iſſel, and is the Capital of a ſmall Territory adjoining.

C H A P. XIV.

GELDERLAND and ZUTPHEN, Geldria & Zutphania.

Gelderland, with Zutphen, which is reckon'd part of it, (both together compoſing one Province of the United Netherlands) is bounded on the North by the Zuyder-zee and Overyſſel, on the South by Brabant and and the Duchy of Cleeve, on the East by the Bishoprick of Munster, and on the West by the Provinces of Utrecht and Holland, containing in extent about 50 Miles from North to South, and about 45 from East to West, without reckoning the Spanish Gelderland, which is disjoyn'd from the rest by part of the Duchy of Cleeve. The Air of Gelderland is Clear and Healthy, the Country lying high and Inland, and consequently freed from those Fogs that infest the Maritime Provinces. The Soil of it is Fruitful, producing good Corn and Pasture, except in the Veluwe, part of which is Heathy and Barren. Zutphen is somewhat more Level and Moorish, and therefore yields not much Corn, but affords very good Grass.

This Province hath in it 25 Cities and Wall'd Towns, besides the Royal Seats of His late Majesty, Deeren and Loos; many Noblemen and Gentlemens Mansion Houses, and a great number of fine Villages, and is usually divided into these four Parts, viz.

The Veluwe, being the Northern part, and seated between the Zuyder-zee the Iffel, and the Rhine, contains these chief Towns.

Arnheim.
Wageningen.
Harderwyck.
Elburg.
Hattem.

The Betuwe, lying between the Rhine and the Leck to the South, and the Maes and Merve to the North, hath these considerable Towns, Nimeguen.

Tiel.
Scherkenstans.
Bommel.
Buren.
Culenbu g.

Zutphen, bounded on the North by Over-issel, on the South by Cleeve, on the West by Munster, and on the East by the Iffel, which parts it from the Veluwe; wherein these Towns are most remarkable,

Zutphen.
Doesburg.
Groll.
Bredvoort &c.

The Quarter of Geldre, subject to the King of Spain, lies at some distance from the rest of the Province, the Western part of the Duchy of Cleeve intervening. Its extent is about 25 Miles from East to West, and 15 from North to South; to which the Quarter of Ruremond is join'd on the South, and is extended along the Banks of the Maes for about 15 Miles more; in both which these are the Towns of chiefest note, viz.

Geldre.
Venloo.
Stralen.
Wachtendonk.
Ruremond.
Monsfert.

ARNHEM. Arnhemum, is seated on the Southern Banks of the Rhine, at the distance of 60 Miles from Utrecht, and 26 from Rhenen to the East, 24 from Amersfort to the South-east, 28 from the Zuyder-zee to the South, 10 from Doesburg to the West, and 23 from the Grave to the North. It is a very large, neat and strong City, formerly the Seat of the Dukes of Geldre and at present of the Supreme Council of the Province. It is very pleasantly situated, having the River on one side, and beyond it the Meadows of the Betuwe; and on the other side Heaths, Woods and Hills of the Veluwe, which afford abundance of all sorts of Game, and an exceeding wholesome Air, and is therefore Inhabited by many Gentlemen and Persons of Quality. The Buildings are neat and beautiful: The Church of St. Eusebius is a noble Structure, and adorn'd with a stately Tower: The three Hospitals, especially that called the Island of God, for the maintainance of decay'd Citizens, are well Endow'd. Large Privileges were conferr'd on this City by Otho Earl of Geldre, in the year 1233. when it was first Wall'd about; and in 1443, it was incorporated into the Body of the Hanse Towns of Germany. It is Fortified with a Wall of Brick and strong Ramparts, but is commanded by a Hill on the North-side: However it is esteem'd a place of good Strength, and capable of making a good Defence, although the Inhabitants surrender'd it to the French in 1672. the first day they attack'd it; who remaining there all that, and the following Year, added some new Fortifications, and made it a great Magazine, to which they brought the Canon from Utrecht and other places when they quitted them; till at last, being forced also to quit this, they Exact'd 17000 Guilders of the Inhabitants, as a Ransom for their City. In the Walls are five Gates, which are very strong; that of St. John's was in 1537 fortified with large Out-works. Near the Gate which opens to the Rhine is a Bridge of Boats over that River to the Betuwe; and on the other side is an exceeding fine large flat bottom'd Ditch lined with Freestone, which almost surrounds the Town, and is fill'd with Water by a Spring arising in the neighbouring Hill.

Wageningen is a very ancient Town seated near the Rhine, about 10 Miles West from Arnheim; It is Wall'd round, and stands in a Moorish Soil, which makes it a place of some Strength.

About 10 Miles from Arnheim to the North-East, stands DIEREN, where his late Majesty had a stately Palace, adorn'd with beautiful Gardens and exceeding pleasant Walks.

About 17 or 18 Miles from Arnheim to the North, and 20 from Amersfort to the East, stands LOO, another of his Majesty's Houses, which is seated near the middle of the Veluwe, in a very sweet Air, and a Country abounding with all sorts of Game, and therefore was the Place he us'd commonly to reside at all the Summer. The Palace is a noble Building, and the Gardens exceeding Pleasant, being adorn'd with curious Knobs of Flowers, fine shady Walks and Grotto's, and admirable Fountains, especially the Bason of Venus, and the two great Cascades or Water-falls, which are incomparably beautiful; the Water in the Cascades falling so easily out of one Bason into another, that it makes a broad Mirror from top to bottom.

Harderwyck, Hardervicum, stands on the Banks of the Zuyder-zee, 28 Miles from Arnheim to the North, and 22 from Deventer to the West. It is a fair well-built City, adorn'd with an University, which was anciently a publick School only, but rais'd to this Dignity, and Sallaries settled upon the Professors, by the States of this Province in the year 1648. The Houses in general are well built and very high. The Cathedral Church of St. Mary is a stately Building, adorn'd with curious Workmanship on the Roof and Arches within-side, and an exceeding high Tower. A Staple of Fishbath of long time been establish'd here, by which the Inhabitants are Enrich'd; and the Town is defended by an old Castle, a Wall round, a Rampart on the South-side, and some other Fortifications; but was however taken by the French in 1672. as were indeed all the Towns of this Province, as well as Utrecht, &c.

Elburg is seated near the Zuyder-zee, at the distance of 12 Miles from Harderwyck to the North-East. It is a small City of an oblong square Form; a small River runs through it, and falls into a Creek of the Zuyder-zee, which makes its Port; over this River are built five Stone Bridges. It was surrounded with Walls about A. 1400. and was sometime one of the Hanse-Towns, as was also Harderwyck.

Hattem stands about 10 Miles from Elburg to the East, and hardly one from the Iffel to the West: It had formerly a very good Castle and other strong Fortifications, but is at present not very considerable.

Nimwegen, or Nieumegen, Noviomagus, famous for the Treaty held in it in the Years 1678. and 1679. and at last a Peace concluded between the King of France, and the several Princes then at War with him, is seated on the River Waal, at the distance of 10 Miles from Arnhem to the South, and 8 from the Grave to the North, 30 from Gorcum to the East, and 12 from Schencksconce to the West. It is a large City, of a semicircular Form, and exceeding pleasant, being built upon five small Hills between the River on one side, and an exceeding pleasant Country, consisting of Woody Hills (out of which issue many Springs) Corn-fields and Gardens, on the other. The Houses are of Brick, cover'd with Slate, and very neat, and the Streets spacious and handsom. Among its ten Churches, all well built and adorn'd with Towers; that of St. Stephen is chiefly commendable for its stately Tower and costly Structure. The Stadthuys is a magnificent Fabrick, adorn'd with the Statues of divers Emperors; as is the publick School with those of the Apostles and Doctors of the Church. Here are two Hospitals for the maintenance of poor Orphans, one for old People, and another for the Cure of the Sick. The Walls of the City are of Brick, exceeding high, and guarded by very strong Towers: The Gates are 12 in number, whereof 7 are toward the Water. This City enjoys great Privileges, and was Imperial and Free before the Year 1248. at which time it was given to the Earl of Geldre; and with that Province became subje^t to the States General.

Schencksconce or Schencken-schanse, so nam'd from a famous Captain Schenck, by whose direction it was built by the States in 1588. is seated upon the point of the Betuwe, where the Rhine divides into two great Arms, one whereof retains its Name, and runs to Dufterde-wick, and the other is call'd the Waal, by which Situation it commands both those Rivers, and the Commerce between Germany and the Netherlands. It is an exceeding strong Place, having, besides the Rivers on two sides, very strong Walls, with good Bastions, a large Ditch, Half moons and other Fortifications; however, it was taken by the Spaniards in 1635. by surprize, but the same Year recover'd by the Prince of Orange; and by the French in 1672. by the Treachery of the Governour. In 1674. the French surrender'd it to the Duke of Brandenburg, who claim'd it as a dependent on Cleve; and in 1679. sold it to the Dutch. It stands about 10 Miles East from Nimwegen, and 12 South from Doesburg. About 2 or 3 Miles below Schencksconce, on the West-side of the Rhine, stands a small Fort call'd the Tolhuys, which was also taken by the French in 1672.

Tiel stands upon the South-side of the Waal, about 12 Miles West from Nimwegen, and 8 Miles South from Rhenen, in a marshy Ground, which, together with the narrowness of the Streets, makes the Town somewhat unhealthy. It is well fortify'd, and by reason of the Soil, not attackable but on the North-West side: However it was taken by the French in 1672. The Country lying to the Westward between the Waal and the Ling, depends on it, and is call'd the Tieler Waert.

Buren is seated about 7 or 8 Miles West from Tiel, on a small Stream that falls into the Ling; it is a wall'd Town, and the Capital of a small Lordship, which with the Town belong to the Prince of Orange, as do also the Town and Lordship of Culenburg, seated on the Leck, about 5 or 6 Miles from Buren to the North-West, and about 12 from Utrecht to the South-East.

Bommel is seated on the South-side of the Waal, about 12 Miles from Tiel to the West, and as many from Gorcum to the East. It is a pleasant, neat and well-built City, govern'd by its own Magistrates and sends Deputies to the Provincial State. It is surrounded with very good Fortifications, and seated in a low and marshy Country, which renders the place exceeding strong. It was first wall'd and endow'd with Privileges by the Earl of Geldre, in 1229. and in the Low-Country War very strongly fortify'd by the States. When the French took it, in 1672. it was surrounded with a double Ditch and Ramparts, besides the Walls and Bastions; all which they destroy'd before they quitt'd it, in 1673: But it being a Place of great consequence, the States speedily repair'd the Fortifications, and put it into a state of Defence. Bommel stands on an Island made by the 2 Rivers Maes and Waal, which is call'd the Bommeller Waert; on the West-point whereof stands the Castle of Louvestein, already mention'd in the account of Holland, and on the East stand two strong Holds, call'd Fort St. Andrew and Fort Voorn, which command the Passage of these two Rivers.

The Earldom of ZUTPHEN, reckon'd formerly one of the Provinces, but now, as we have said, only a part of Gelderland, lies on the East side of the Iffel, between Cleve to the South, and Overijssel to the North; and is extended about 30 Miles from North to South, and near as many from East to West. The Capital City from which the whole Province hath its Name, is,

ZUTPHEN, Zutphania, seated upon the Iffel, over which it hath a Bridge, at the distance of 25 Miles from Nimwegen, 18 from Arnhem to the North-East, 42 from Utrecht to the East, and 22 from Hattem to the South. The River Berckel, which rises in the Bishoprick of Munster, after it had cross'd the Province, runs thro' the middle of this City, and falls into the Iffel, dividing the Town into two parts, call'd the Old and the New: The chief Church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a neat, sumptuous and ancient Structure, the Tower whereof being fir'd by Lightning, was rebuilt in 1635. in most curious manner: The Brazen Font in this Church is particularly remarkable for its curious Workmanship; and the publick Library at the East-end is a reasonable good one. Here is a publick School, and several Hospitals, which, together with the high brick Tower, call'd Diegenap's Toorn, are worth a Stranger's View. In this City dwell many Nobles and Gentlemen of Quality, and it is generally reckon'd a Place of much Civility. The Buildings are fair and neat, and the Fortifications very strong, at least were so before the French took it in 1672. for then we read, that it had nine Bastions, four Half-moons, a double Ditch, and treble Ramparts: Notwithstanding which, it was surrender'd to them after a very short Siege on the 26 of June 1672. and kept by them till April 1674. In the Spanish War it was taken and attack'd attack'd by Alva's Army, and regain'd by the States by this stratagem. A good number of Soldiers coming in the habit of Market-women, loiter'd about the Gate till they found an opportunity to seize it, and let in the rest that lay ready to assist them. But this was atter a long Siege, wherein that Ornament of our Nation, Sir Philip Sidney, was unfortunately slain. This City enjoys great Privileges, and was one of the Hanseatick Society; as also had the Royalty of Coinage: But this last they parted with to the States in 1604. for an annual Sum of Money to be paid them in lieu.

Dreesburg is seated on the Old Iffel, 9 or 10 Miles from Zurphen to the South: It is strongly situated between the River on one side and a great Marsh on the other, and had good Fortifications when the French attack'd it in 1672, so that it might have been expected to have made a very good Defence, but was however quickly surrender'd, the French losing only 3 Men in obtaining it, and held it till the April following; when, being oblig'd to quit it, they demolish'd the Fortifications.

At this place the Channel mention'd by the Ancients to be cut by Drusus, and therefore call'd Fossa Drusiana, is let into the Iffel, being deriv'd from the Rhine a little above Arnheim; by which the Iffel is very much enlarg'd, and may not improperly be reckon'd another Branch of the Rhine.

Groll stands on the small River Slink, which falls into the Berkel, and is distant 18 Miles from Zurphen to the East. It was esteem'd a very important Pass from Germany, and therefore fortify'd by the Emperor Charles V. which was afterward improv'd by the Spaniards. The Works describ'd by Grotius, in his account of the remarkable Siege of this Place by the States in 1627, being exceeding Strong and Regular, consist'd of five Bastions, join'd by strong Curtains, a lower Wall or Rampart under the Bastions, in lieu of the modern Ravelins, a broad Ditch fill'd by the River Slink, and a Rampart or Counterescarp beyond it; yet did this Town make but very little Resistance before it surrender'd to the Bishop of Munster, in 1672.

Breevoort is a good strong Town, having, besides pretty good Fortifications, a marshy Soil all round; by which it is render'd almost inaccessible: And therefore not taken without great difficulty by Prince Maurice in 1597. It stands 12 Miles South from Groll, and 17 East from Dreesburg.

Spanish-Gelderland, or the Quarter of Geldre, contains these chief Towns, &c.

GELDRE, Geldria, altho' it hath the Honour to give Name to the whole Province, is but a small City, and not very considerable: It hath an old Castle, and is strongly fortify'd by the Marshes that surround it, which together with its distance from the rest of the Province, has hinder'd its falling into the Hands of the States. It is distant 36 Miles from Dreesburg to the South, and 20 from the Frontiers of Brabant to the East, 32 from Nimeguen to the South-East, and 25 from Duse-dorp to the North-West.

Venloo, a City of good note, is seated in a flat fenny Country, on the East-side of the Maes, about 5 Miles from Geldre to the South-west. It is a Place of great Trade for Corn, Brails, Marble, Free-stone, Coal, &c. brought from the Country of Liege and other parts of Germany, down the River to this City, whither the Hollanders and Brabanders repair to buy 'em. It was endow'd with the Privileges of a City in 1343, and was strong enough in the last Century to oppose Margaret of Austria when she besieg'd it; and even to keep out Charles V. till he had granted them good Conditions. The States took it in 1532, but lost it again to the Spaniards in 1536.

Wachtendonck, a very strong Town, is seated on the small River Niers, 5 Miles from Geldre to the South, and 7 from Venloo to the East: It is surrounded by low moorish Grounds, which hinder any access to it, and makes it one of the strongest Towns in the Province. In 1588, it held out three Months against Count Mansfeild. In 1600 it was surpriz'd by Lodowick of Nassau upon the Ice; but in 1605 was finally regain'd by the Spaniards.

Stralen stands about 2 Miles from Wachtendonck, and almost in the mid-way between Venloo and Geldre; it is a Place of some Dignity, having a small Territory depending on it, but otherwise not very considerable.

Roe-mond stands upon the Maes, where the small River Ryer falls into it, and is distant 12 Miles from Venloo to the South; it is a rich and populous City, and remarkable for the Neatness of its Buildings and Strength of its Walls. A Monastery of Carthusians here is much spoken of for its Grandeur and Wealth. The City was taken in 1632, by the States, but was restor'd at the Peace of Munster, and is still subject to the Spaniard.

The Spanish Gelderland being possess'd by the French, at the beginning of this War, the Confederates recover'd it by Conquest in the Year 1702.

CHAP. XV.

The Province of OVERISSEL, Transsissalana.

OVERISSEL, so nam'd from its Situation beyond the River Iffel, is bounded on the North by Greeningen and Friseland, on the South by Zurphen and Gelderland, on the East by the Bishoprick of Munster, and on the West by the Zuyder-see. Its Extent from North to South is about 60 Miles, from East to West about 40 Miles; but the Soil is not very Fertile, a great part of it being either Barren Heaths or Quaggy Marshes; which, together with its Inland Situation, unfit for Trade, and its lying expos'd to Inroads from Germany, makes this Province less inhabited than any of the others. It is divided into three Parts, viz.

- I. Ifeland, Ifaland, and by corruption Salland and Zalland, lies next the Iffel, and contains these Chief Towns. } Deventer, Cap.
Swoll.
Campen.
Hasselt, &c.
- II. Twente, lies East of Salland, and to the Frontiers of Munster. } Oldenzael.
In it are these Towns, with many others of smaller moment; Ormersan.
Enschede.
- III. Drent is the North part of Overissel, and contains these Towns of chiefest note; } Coeverden.
Meppel, &c.

The small Territory of Vollenhoven, on the Banks of the Zuyder-zee, is by some Geographers made a separate part, and not included in the Drent: In it stand Vollenhoven.

Steenwyck.
Swarte-fluys.
Blockzyl.

DEVENTER or Daventer, Daventria, is seated on the Iffel, 8 Miles from Zutphen to the North, and 18 from Swoll to the South, 30 from Amersfort to the East, and 22 from Arnhem to the North. It is a large and populous City, exceeding neatly built and well fortify'd: By means of the River it enjoys a good Trade, and was formerly one of the Hanse Towns. It still enjoys great Privileges, particularly the Royalty of Coinage. It is seated in a very fruitful and pleasant Country, and inhabited by many Noblemen and Persons of Quality. The Cathedral Church of St. Leevin is a spacious ancient Structure, and the Stadthuys is a handsome old Building; here is a publick School, and several Hospitals, which with the remarkable round Tower, 15 Foot thick, near the Noremberg-Gate, are worth a Stranger's notice. The City is fortify'd with a double Wall and Ditch, besides several Outworks; notwithstanding which it was surrender'd to the Bishop of Munster, after only 5 Days Resistance, on the 21st of July 1672.

Swoll or Zwoll is seated in a fruitful Country, between the two Rivers, Iffel and Vecht, at about 2 Miles distant from the first, and 4 from the last, and 18 Miles from Deventer to the North; having also another small River, which rising near Deventer, passes through it, and a little beyond falls into the Vecht, and with it runs into the Zuyder-zee. The Buildings are fair and the Streets neat, which makes the City exceeding pleasant. It enjoys a reasonable good Trade, by means of the aforesaid River, thro' which the Tide flows up to the Town: The Church of St. Michael is a stately Structure, and remarkable for its fine Organ, Pulpit, harmonious Chimes and exceeding high Steeple. The publick School is considerable both for its great number of Scholars, and its College for the study of the Sciences. Here are also divers Hospitals, a publick Granary and an Arsenal. The City enjoys great Privileges, particularly the ultimate Determination of all Causes, the Royalty of a Mint, and the Jurisdiction over 18 large and populous Villages, that stand in its Prefecture. It is surrounded with Walls, on which are 24 Towers, and a Trench; and hath 3 very strong Gates, which open to so many Suburbs. In 1672. it was surrender'd to the Bishop of Munster, as soon as they heard of the taking of Deventer.

Campen is seated among pleasant Fields (whence it has its Name) on the South-side of the Iffel, near the Zuyder-zee, and 8 Miles West from Swoll. It is a large, neat and well-built City, and hath a strong wooden Bridge over the Iffel, which is secur'd by a Fortification at the end of it. The Churches here are very capacious and of a curious Structure, as is also the Stadthuys; but the Custom-house is an exceeding fine Building and much admir'd. This was formerly a place of great Trade, but of late Years the Mouth of the Iffel hath been so choak'd up with Sand, that Ships of Burthen cannot enter. The Wall is high and thick, and provided with many Towers, after the old manner, but not able to resist the modern way of Attacking. This City also Capitulated upon the Surrender of Deventer, and was yielded to the Bishop of Munster; who delivering it to the French, they kept it to the end of the next Year, and then being forc'd to quit it, exacted 80000 Guilders of the Inhabitants to save it from Fire.

At the mouth of the Vecht, and on a Bay of the Zuyder-zee, call'd the Zwollsche-diep, 7 Miles from Zwoll to the North, stands the small City Genemuyden, which had formerly a good Castle.

Vollenhoven stands upon the Zuyder-zee, 12 Miles from Swoll, and 7 from Genemuyden to the North; it is a neat and handsome Town, conveniently seated for Trade, and is a great Market for Corn brought from the Baltick Sea and other places.

Steenwyck stands near the Frontiers of Friezland, 10 Miles North from Vollenhoven, and 17 from Swoll: It is a small but very strong Town, having been very well fortify'd by Prince Maurice after he took it, in 1592. It was taken by the Bishop of Munster in the last War, and oblig'd to pay 10000 Guilders as a Ransom, when he quitted it in 1673.

Blockzyl stands on the Zuyder-zee, 3 or 4 Miles from Vollenhoven to the North, and 6 from Steenwyck to the South-East. It is a strong Town, and besides, considerable for Navigation and Commerce.

Swartfluys, a Fortress standing upon the Vecht, 2 Miles East from Genemuyden, and 7 North from Swoll; being taken from the Munsterians in 1672. was by them made very strong, and able to resist three several Attempts of the Dutch to regain it.

Coeverden, the chief Place of the Drente, is seated near the Frontiers of the Country of Benthem, and about 12 Miles from the Confines of Munster, 30 Miles from Swoll, 35 from Campen to the East, and near 46 from Deventer to the North-East. It is a Fortress of very great Strength, having, besides the strong Walls and Outworks, Marshes and impassable Grounds almost all round it. It commands the Passes out of Munster into Friezland and Groningen, and being therefore a Place of great Importance, hath been often besieg'd. It was taken by Prince Maurice in 1592. and withstood a Siege of 7 Months by the Spaniards the next Year: Yet in July 1672. it surrender'd in 4 Days to the Bishop of Munster, but was recov'd by surprize by the Dutch in December following: Again, in 1673. the Munsterians blockaded it, but could not take it.

Ootmersum or Otmarsen, a Town of great Antiquity, and said to be founded by Odomarus King of the Franks, is seated in the Twente, near the Borders of Benthem, and 20 Miles South from Coeverden; it was formerly secur'd by a Rampart and a Ditch round it: But is at present not very considerable.

Oldenzyl or Oldensael, stands 8 Miles South from Otmarsen, and as many West from Benthem: It is a wall'd Town, but not remarkable for Strength or Grandeur; it was often taken and retaken in the Spanish War; and being taken by the Bishop of Munster in the last War, was regain'd by the Dutch in 1674.

C H A P. XVI.

The Province of FRIEZLAND, Frisia.

Concerning the Country possess'd by the ancient Frisians, there is great dispute among the Learned, some affirming, that they spread over all Holland, Utrecht, part of Geiderland, Zutphen, Overijssel and Greeningen, as well as this Friezland; and the other call'd East-Friezland, beyond the Ems: Others say, that of Holland, they had the North part only, which is thence call'd West-Friezland, whilst others make the old Channel of the Rhine the Southern, and the River Ems the Eastern Bounds of their Country. The present Bounds of this Country is the Zuyder-zee to the West, North and South, Groningen and Overijssel to the East and South, containing in extent from North to South about 35 Miles, and from East to West about 30 Miles. The Land is low and marshy, and frequently overflow'd, however affords good Pasture, and in some Parts store of Corn. The Province is divided into three parts, viz.

Westergce, or the West Part, containing these Towns,

	{	Franecker,
	{	Harlingen,
	{	Bolswaert,
	{	Sneek,
	{	Worcum,
	{	Staveren, &c.

Ostergce, or the East Part, hath these,

	{	Leuwarden,
	{	Dockum.

Seven Welden is the South-East Part, which being a barren Soil, is but meanly inhabited, and besides 77 Villages, hath only one Town of Note, namely,

	{	Sleet.
--	---	---------------

FRANEKER. Franequera, & Franequera, is seated on the Channel cut from Leuwarden to the Zuyder-zee, and is distant 40 Miles from Campen to the North, 37 from Greeningen to the West, not above 7 from the Shoar of the German Ocean, and in the midway between Leuwarden to the East, and Harlingen to the West. It is a fair, neat, well-built City, enjoying a reasonable good Trade by means of its Canals, and inhabited by many Persons of Quality: Being also the Seat of an University, which was erected by the States in the Year 1585. and good Revenues allotted to the Professors out of the Abbey-Lands, confiscated upon the Revolution. The Rector hath the Power of judging Civil Causes, and the Students enjoy many Immunities. The whole Town hath but one Church, which is a spacious Building, with a tall handsom Steeple: Here is an Hospital for Orphans, and a very good Grammar-School. The Town is surrounded with a good Rampart, and a deep Ditch, and hath a strong Castle built of Brick.

LEUWARDEN, Leuardia, is distant 6 Miles from Franecker to the East, 30 from Greeningen to the West, and 12 from Dockum to the South; and is the largest, richest, best-built, and most populous City of Friezland, being also the Seat of the Sovereign Council, and the Residence of the Stadtholder of the Province. It enjoys a good Trade by means of its Channels, whereof that from Dockum brings up large Boats with Goods, from Hamburg, Bremen, &c. This Place is commended for the Neatness of its Streets and Bridges, the Pleasantness of its Gardens, and the Splendor of its Buildings; among which the Stadtholder's Palace, the Provincial Court, and several Houses of Noblemen, together with the two Hospitals and the Churches, are especially remarkable. It is well fortify'd, being surrounded with a thick and high Rampart, a broad Ditch and 5 Bulwarks.

Harlingen Stands on the Banks of the Zuyder-zee, in which it hath a good Haven, being distant about 5 Miles from Franecker to the West. It was at first a small Village only, but by several Enlargements since 1543. it is become a considerable City, and a place of good Trade, which consists in Corn and the Commodities of Norway and the Sound; its Harbour being well frequented by Merchants Ships from those Parts. It is well fortify'd, which, with the flatness of the Country round it, (by that means easily overflow'd) makes it a place of good Strength and Security.

Dockum is a neat and well-fortify'd Town, seated at the head of the Channel leading to Leuwarden, and upon a River, which makes a good Haven of 2 Leagues in length, from a Bay of the German Ocean, call'd Dockumer-diep, and is distant 12 Miles from Leuwarden to the North East, and about 5 from the Ocean to the South. The Streets and Buildings are remarkably neat; the Tower of its Church is high and stately, and the Stadthuys is a handsom Structure. The chief Bridge is of Stone, and very large; besides which there are two others over the River. which runs thro' the Town, and communicates with the Channel of Leuwarden. The Harbour is secur'd by Piles of large Timber driven into the bottom of the River, and shut up a-nights with a strong Boom: And the Town is fortify'd with a Rampart, large Ditch, and Bulwarks, built by the States in 1582.

Bolswaert stands about 7 Miles from Franecker to the South, and 10 from Leuwarden to the South-West. It is a good wall'd Town, formerly one of the Hanseatick, and maintaining a pretty good Commerce, by means of the Channels leading from it to Franecker, Leuwarden, Worcum, and other Places.

Worcum stands upon the Zuyder-zee, 7 Miles South from Bolswaert. It hath a small Haven, but by the Tempests from the North and West is almost choak'd up with Sand; but by the many Channels the Inhabitants trade in small Vessels, and supply the Country with store of Fish.

Sneek is an ancient populous, neat and well fortify'd Town, 6 Miles distant from Bolswaert to the South-East, and as many East from Worcum, seated in a low fenny Country, near a Lake of the same Name; which being well stor'd with Fish, afford the Inhabitants a good Support, by furnishing the Neighbouring Parts with that Commodity. Here is a Publick School, which for the number of its Scholars and Salleries is very considerable.

Sloot or Sloten, stands upon a navigable Channel, which comes from a neighbouring Lake, and falls into the Zuyder-zee, about a League below the Town, which is distant 8 or 9 Miles from Sneek to the South, and by means of this Channel maintains a Commerce

Commerce with Holland and other parts. The Buildings are but ordinary; nor are the Fortifications very strong. It hath one Church, a handſom Stadthuys, and one of the Gates is very large and ſtately.

Staveren ſtands on the Zuyder-zee, at the extream South Weſt Point of Frieſland, over againſt Medenblick in North-Holland, from which it is diſtant four Leagues to the North Eaſt, as alſo 12 Miles from Sloten to the Weſt. It had formerly a capacious Harbour, and was a famous Empory; and the Inhabitants ſtill enjoy particular Privileges in the Sound, which ſhews the great Trade they formerly had thither, and was alſo the third in the Rank of the Hanſe Towns: But this Trade is long ſince decay'd, and the Haven choak'd up with Sand, ſo that at preſent the Town is not conſiderable, and can only brag of what it hath been; wherein they have much to ſay, for this was anciently the Metropolis of the Frieſons, and the Seat of their Kings. It is recorded alſo, That about 500 Years ago, there was a Paſſage by Land almoſt quite croſs from hence to Enchuſen, in North-Holland.

C H A P. XVII.

The Province of GROENINGEN, Groeningia, with the Omlands.

THIS Province is the moſt North-Eaſt Part of the Dominions of the States General, and is ſeated between the German Ocean to the North, Overiſſel to the South, Frieſland to the Eaſt, and the Bay call'd den Dollert, which parts it from the Country of Emden or East-Frieſland, to the Weſt. Its Extent from North to South is about 20 Miles, and from Eaſt to Weſt about 35. The Soil of it is but poor, except the Parts lying towards the Sea, which afford very good Paſture. The Air is ſharp, but whoſom enough, and the Inhabitants long-liv'd. It is divided into

The Lordſhip of Gorecht, a narrow Tract in the middle of this Province; in which ſtands Groeningen, Capit. The Old Ampt, lying Eaſt from Gorecht, and extending to the Bank of the Dollert, the chief Town whereof is Winſchoten. The Weſterwold, which lies South of the Old Ampt, and runs out, in form of a Wedge, between the Drente of Overiſſel and the North-part of Munſter: It hath ſeveral Villages, but no Town of conſiderable note.

The Weſt Quarter, or the Weſt Part, lying between the River Lavica, which parts it from Frieſland, and the River or Channel leading to Groeningen. In it are about 25 Villages, but no conſiderable Town.

Hunſingo, which takes up all the North part of the Province: But hath likewise no Town of note.

Five-ingo, which lies between Hunſingo to the North, the Old Ampt to the South, Gorecht to the Weſt, and the Mouth of the River Ems to the Eaſt: In which Diſtrict ſtand ſeveral Villages, and the Town of Dam. GROENINGEN or Groningen, Groeninga, is ſeated upon the Confluence of two ſmall Rivers, call'd the Aba and the Huneſus, with ſeveral artificial Channels, which lead to all parts of the Province; and it is diſtant 30 Miles from Leuwarden to the Eaſt, 32 from Coeverden to the North, 13 from the Sea to the South, and 14 from the Mouth of the Ems to the Weſt. It is a large and populous City, ſurrounded with ſtrong Walls, in which are 17 large Baſtions, and other Fortifications; and is the Seat of an University, which was founded in the Year 1614. and well endow'd with the old Abbey-Lands. Beſides ſeveral other Channels, leading from this City, there is one, which running Weſtward, falls into a Bay of the German Ocean; and another Eaſtward, that leads to Dam, and thence to the Ems; by theſe the Inhabitants receive Goods from Foreign Parts, and by the other Rivers and Channels convey them to the other Places of the Province, and ſo maintain a pretty good Trade. The principal Church is that of St. Martin, and next is that of St. Walburg, which hath a Tower exceeding high; there are alſo two other Churches, viz. St. Mary's, and the New-Church. The Stadthuys is an old Building, and not remarkable; but the broad Market, on which it ſtands, is very large; as is alſo the Fiſh-Market: Upon theſe Markets 17 Streets meet, 6 whereof lead to ſo many Gates of the City. The City hath been twice enlarg'd ſince the Year 1600. and may at preſent be reckon'd 3000 Paces in compaſs. Moſt of the Houſes are furniſh'd with Gardens, wherein grow many Fruit-Trees, and make the Place exceeding pleaſant. It enjoys great Privileges, and was ſome Ages ago one of the Hanſe Towns. In the Low-Country War it ſided with the Confederates in 1579. but returning to the Spaniard, was taken by Prince Maurice in 1594. In 1672. it was beſieg'd by the Biſhop of Munſter, but ſo bravely defended, that after a Month's furious battering it with great Shot and Bombs, he was forc'd to raiſe his Siege. For which Valour, the Groeningers were rewarded with a double Voice in the Council of State.

Dam is ſeated upon the Channel call'd the Damſterdiep, about 3 Miles from the Mouth of the Ems to the Weſt, and 12 from Groeningen to the Eaſt. It has a rich Soil about it, and is beautify'd with good Buildings, but hath no Walls or Bulwarks.

Winſchoten is a ſtrong Fortreſs, which commands the Paſs out of East-Frieſland into this Province, being ſeated between the Dollart Bay on one ſide, and a great Morafs on the other, 17 Miles from Groeningen to the Eaſt, and 13 from Dam to the South. It was fortify'd by the States in the latter end of the laſt Century, in whoſe hands it continu'd; but was taken by the Biſhop of Munſter in 1674.

For the better Security of this Paſs, there is another ſtrong Fort about 6 Miles South-Eaſt from Winſchoten, call'd Billingworderſconce, which, tho' it be very well fortify'd, was taken by the Biſhop of Munſter in the Year 1672. but ſoon recover'd by the Dutch.

The Bourtanger Fort, ſeated in the middle of a Marſh, on the very Borders of the Weſterwold, towards Munſter, and 12 Miles South from the Dollart, is another very ſtrong Place, and a good Defence to the Country.

GERMANY.

CHAP. I.

THE Bounds of Germany, as set out by Ptolemy and other ancient Writers, were much different from what they are at present; for according to their Account, it extended Northward as far as the Ocean, whereby Denmark, Norway, and Sweden, were included; and Southward it was bounded by the Danube, so that Austria, Bavaria, Stiria, Carinthia, Carniola, &c. now reckon'd part of it, were were then excluded; as were also Alsace, part of the Palatinate, and the Spiritual Electorates, the Rhine being by them reckon'd the Western Bounds; but these last, together with Lorrain and the neighbouring Countries, were afterwards possessed by Germans; and being Conquer'd by the Romans, were by them nam'd Germania prima & secunda.

Germany, as it is at present bounded by the Low-Countries on the West; Poland and Hungary on the East; Denmark and the Baltick-Sea on the North; and Switzerland, with the Dominions of the State of Venice, on the South; is situated between the 45 D. 12 M. and 54 D. 50 M. of Latitude, and 25 D. and 39 D. of Longitude, in form almost square; extending from North to South (that is to say, from Straelsund in Pomerania, to the Frontiers of Carniola and Istria) 150 German Leagues, which is 600 English Miles; and in breadth from the Town of Spa in the West, to the Confines of Poland in the East, about 500 English Miles.

The SOIL is exceeding fruitful, especially on the Banks of the Rhine and the Danube, where also the AIR is very Temperate; but in the Northern part it is cold, and the Ground less fruitful. Besides great plenty of Corn, vast quantities of rich Wine is produc'd here and exported to Foreign Nations. The Earth also affords Mines of divers sorts of Metals and Minerals, as Iron, Copper, Tin, Lead, and even Silver in some parts; Alom, Quick silver, Salt &c.

The chief RIVERS, are, 1. The Danube, call'd by the Natives Thonaw, which rises in Schwaben, near a Village call'd Tone Eschingen, whence tending Eastwards, it receives two small Rivulets, and soon after divides and encircles the City Um, where it begins to be Navigable, and having receiv'd the Iler Guntz, Minael and Wernitz, passes on through Bavaria receiving the Lech at Lechmund, the Altmul at Kelheim, the Nab, Regen, Iffer and Inn, watering by the way the Cities Newburg, Ingolstadt, Ratisbon, and Stranbingen; thence passes through Austria, where, having water'd Lintz, it is encreas'd by the Rivers Fraun, Ens, and others of smaller note, and then runs by the Walls of Vienna, receiving the small River Wien, (whence that City hath its Name) and afterwards the Moraw, pursuing its course still Eastward into Hungary, where it passes by Presburg and Gran; then, tending Southward, it passes by Buda and Belgrade, being exceedingly encreased by the Drave, which it receives at Esseck, and the Save at Belgrade; after which it loses its name and is call'd Ister, and running Eastward between Servia and Wallachia, as also between Moldavia and Bulgaria, falls at last into the Black or Euxine Sea in six Mouths, which part Bulgaria from Besserabia, after having run above 11 hundred Miles an end. It is very broad, runs with a very rapid Current, and hath three great Cataracts, which are, 1. The Saw-Russel, or Swine's Snout, near Lintz, so call'd from a pointed Rock hanging over, which hath under it a dangerous Whirlpool. 2. Der Strudel near Greinen in Austria, where the falling of the Water makes a horrid Noise. And, 3. Der Warbel, another very dangerous Whirlpool. The Rhine rises in two Springs in the Alps, which falling into Switzerland, unite near the City Cur or Coir, and soon after dilates it self into a large Lake, call'd the Boden Sea, or Lake of Constance; whence passing Westward to Basil, it runs up to the North, and runs between Schwaben and Alsace into the Palatinate, receiving the Nekar at Manheim, and the Maine at Mentz; then runs to Coblentz, where it recieves the Moselle; afterwards waters Cologne and passes on thro' the Dutchy of Cleeve, receiving the Rocr and the Lippe, and other smaller Rivers by the way, and passes into the Netherlands at Schenckenschans. Of its Course afterwards we have already given an account. It is very broad, even two English miles (as some say) at Schenckenschans, and its course very swift, but the Navigation of it is interrupted by nine Cataracts; the most remarkable whereof are two in Switzerland, one near Schatthusen (where the whole River falls 75 Foot) and the other near Lauffenburg. 3. The Elbe rises out of the Mountains near Hirschlung in Silesia, upon the Confines of Bohemia, in eleven several Springs, which being united, pass Northward between Misnia and Lusatia into Saxony, receiving by the way the Warlitz, Orlitz, Meldau and Agra, passes by Magdeburg, Lawenburg and Hamburg, and a little below Gluckstadt divides into two Branches which fall into the German Ocean; it is very large and deep at Hamburg, which is above 70 Miles from the Sea; Ships of 4 or 500 Tun ride at Anchor in it. 2. The Oder springs in Moravia, and after a Current of 300 English Miles, through Brandenburg and Pomerania, falls into the Baltick Sea. 4. The Weser rises in the Mountains of Thuringen, runs through Hessen and Westphalia, and empties it self into the Ocean below Bremen.

Other Rivers of smaller note the Reader will discover the Course of, in the following Description of the Country; as also an account of the Mineral Waters, Baths, Mines, Mountains, Forests, Lakes, &c. found in several Parts of this great Nation.

Of the Inhabitants of Germany.

Whether Germany was Peopled after the Flood by Ascanas the Grandchild of Japhet, or whether Tuisco, who some say was the Son of that Ascanas, and others the Son of Noah, was the Conductor of the first Colony hither, is uncertain. Cluverius affirms the former, assigning the very Year when this Plantation was made, viz. The 136th after the Flood; and Verslegan pleads hard for the latter. However that be, it is certain that Germany was Peopl'd very early. The ancient Germans had two Deities call'd Teuto or Tuisco, and Mannus his Son, under which Names, by their Songs and Festivals, they honour'd God the Maker of the World, and Adm the Propagator of Humane Kind. And from the Names of the former of these two Deities, had the appellation of the Teutsche Nation, which by the mutation of T for D is now made Duytsche; and the Country Duytschland.

Much Dispute hath risen among the Etymologists concerning the derivation of German and Alman, two other Names of this Nation: The most agree'd on is, That Gar signifying all, they were call'd Gar Man, q. d. all Man, denoting their great Manliness and Valour. All signifies the same, and therefore Alman is but a synonymous Term, signifying the same thing with German; though others assign the reason of that denomination to be the many Nations of them, and that it was first given 'em in the Year 358. when they muster'd up a great Army from all parts against the Romans; which being a mixture of many sorts of Men, it was call'd an Army of Almanner: Which Word afterwards was us'd by the Italians, Spaniards and French, to signify the whole Nation of Germans. Again, others say, That the name Almain, belong'd to the People of Schwaben, which they took from Mannus the Son of Tuisco; and that it became not universal, till those Dukes, having obtain'd the Imperial Dignity and kept it many Years, made the Name of the Inhabitants of that Region be extended to the whole Country.

By what we have said, the Reader will judge, That the TEMPER of the Inhabitants was Martial; which indeed they were, so far as to oppose the Romans for 210 Years, but cannot however be esteem'd to deserve the Character their Name implies; For though they are generally of large Bodies, with big Bones, much Flesh and strong Sinews; they want Spirit to animate their large Bulk, and Heat to concoct the Phlegmatick Humour where-with their Bodies are fill'd, and therefore are better at guarding a Post than gaining Ground. 'Tis true, in our Days they have notably oppos'd the Turks, fought many Battles, and acquir'd great Honour by the glorious Victories they have obtained over those Infidels. They are generally good natur'd, free from Malice and Subilty, much addicted to both Drunkenness and Gluttony, but not over-much to Venery. The poorer sort are Laborious, Sincere and Honest. The Nobility are Men of great Honour, and commonly Scholars. All the Sons of a Noble Man inherit their Father's Title, which exceedingly increases the number of the Nobility, and the more, because the German Women are generally good Breeders; and by that means the Estates of the Princes are so often divided for the sake of younger Children, that the Principalities and Sovereign Lordships have increased to a vast number. All the Nobility scorn Marriage with a Commoner; wherefore the younger Brothers are often oblig'd to take up Arms, or enter into Orders, whereby they are enabled to keep up the Grandeur of the Family, especially by the latter, because the Ecclesiastical Preferments here are both Numerous and Rich. The Women are of good Complexions, Corpulent, and very Fruitful, as we have said, and more obsequious to their Husbands than our Women, many not sitting at Table with them, and none having the upper Place there.

The GENIUS of the Germans hath appear'd in the Invention and Improvement of many Mechanical Arts, whereof Clock-work especially is owing to them. In this Art they have exceeded all the World in the contrivance of variety of Motions, to shew not only the Course of the Hours and Minutes, but even of the Sun, Moon and Stars; whereof the Clocks at Strasburg, Prague, and many other Places all over Germany, are sufficient Instances. The Emperor Charles V. had a Watch in the Jewel of his Ring; and in the Elector of Saxony's Stable, is to be seen a Clock in the Pommel of a Saddle. The Story of Regio Montanus's wooden Eagle, that flew an English Mile to meet the Emperor Maximilian, and return'd with him to Norimberg; as also of the Iron Fly (made by the same Person) that flew round the Room, and return'd to his Hand, are seriously related by Keckerman and Peter Ramus. The Germans claim the Invention of the Art of PRINTING, whereof something hath been already said in our description of Haerlem; but because that Art is so very curious, and hath been so serviceable to the World, we shall a little enlarge in the History of it. We have said already, That Lawrence Coster of Haerlem found out the Art by accident, and had brought it to some perfection, but was robb'd of his Materials by a Servant who fled with 'em to Germany: This the Dutch Men say; but the Germans alledge, That John Gut- temburg, an Alderman of Strasburg, first Invented it in the Year 1440. and remov'd with it to Mentz, Printed several Books, in which he made use of Cast Letters of Metal in the same manner as now used. The Hollanders in answer affirm, that it was Coster's Servant that taught Guttemburg, and that the Servant's Name was John Faust; which Name is set in all the first Printed Books, as the Printer of them. Tully's Offices, Printed in 1465. is to be seen in the Bodleian Library at Oxford, and in many other Places, with this Inscription at the end: Præfens M. Tullii clarissimum opus, Johannes Faust, Moguntinus Cives, non atramento, plumali, canna neq; aurea, Sed arte quadam perpulcra Petri manu pueri mei feliciter efficit, finito Anno MCCCCXV. Angelus Rocca in his Account of the Vatican Library (Printed at Rome in 1501.) lays, that he had seen Donatus's Grammar, Printed upon Vellum with this Inscription at the beginning; Johannes Faustus, Cives Moguntinus, Avus Maternus Johannis Schæffer, primus excogitavit imprimendi artem Typis ære: Quos deinde plumbeas invenit: multaque ad poliendam artem addidit ejus filius Petrus Schæffer: Impressus est autem hic Donatus primum omnium, A. D. MCCCC. Admonitus certe fuit ex Donato Hollandie prius impressio in tabula incisa. In an old Chronicle of Colen, Printed in 1496. 'tis said, That the hint of this Art was given from Holland, where an Impression of this Donatus had been made before that of Mentz. So that upon the whole, the Invention may be granted to Holland, but improved and propagated in Germany: whence it was carried again to Holland, and from thence brought to England very early, by Caxton and Tourner, whom King Henry VI. sent at his own expence to learn it: These prevail'd upon one of the Printer's Men at Haerlem to steal away and come with them to England; where being arrived, they set to Work at Oxford, and having taught other Men, Printing-houses were set up at Westminster, S. Albans, Worcester, and other Places. There is now to be seen at Oxford, S. Jerom upon the Creed with this at the end; Explicit expositio Sancti Jeronimi in symbolo Apostolorum ad Papam Laurentium. Impressa Oxonie & finita Anno Domini, MCCCCXLVIII. xvii die Decembris.

But to return to the Germans,

The Invention of Guns is undisputedly theirs, which was also produc'd by an Accident, in this manner. One Bartbold Schwartz, a Friar, in making Chymical Experiments, had one Day mixed some Saltpetre and Brimstone with other Ingredients, and set them upon the Fire in a Crucible; but a Spark getting in, the Pot suddenly broke with great violence and wonderful noise; which unexpected effect surpriz'd him at first, but thinking farther on the Matter, he repeated the Experiment, and finding the effect constant, set himself at work to improve it: To which purpose he caused an Iron Pipe to be made with a small Hole at the lower end to fire it at, and putting in some of his new Ingredient, together with some small Stones, set Fire to it, and found it answer'd his expectation in penetrating all before it. This happen'd about the Year 1330. and was soon improv'd to the making of great Ordnance, &c.

To these Inventions of the Germans, we may add their improvement of the Art of Chymistry; which being brought hither by Albertus Magnus, was very much studied by the Monks, and much time lost by them in the search of the Philosopher's Stone, and the Study of the Resurrection Philosophy.

The

The RELIGION of the ancient Germans was Paganism, which was driven out of several parts of it by the Preaching of S. Clemens, S. Crescens, S. Mark, S. Maternus, S. Eutherius, and other the immediate Successors of the Apostles : So that in the middle of the second Century, Christianity was in a flourishing State in Germany, as is testified by S. Irenaeus. But the remote Northern Parts remain'd long in their blind Superstition ; the Saxons not being Converted till the time of Charles the Great, as we shall shew more particularly when we come to speak of that Nation.

The Corruptions that crept into the Romish Church in the middle Ages, dispers'd themselves hither, and were generally believ'd, before John Huss and Jerom of Prague, about the Year 1407. oppos'd those Errors, and Preach'd up the Doctrin of Wiclif ; for which they were both Burnt at the Council of Constance : But their Followers in Bohemia being numerous, obtain'd a Tolleration of the Emperor, and continued administering the Sacraments in both kinds, and in several things acting contrary to the Church of Rome : In which State the Reformation stood when Luther appear'd for it, upon the following occasion :

In the Year 1517. Pope Leo X. in pursuance of the pretended Power of the Popes in pardoning Sins, sent abroad his Letters and Bulls, promising Pardons to all that would purchase them with Mony : And the Friars were employ'd to Preach up the Doctrin, and Offices establish'd in several parts of Germany, to receive the Mony that the ignorant People gave for the Indulgences the Collectors were empower'd to give them. These Preachers continually buzzing in the People's Ears the Efficacy of the Pope's Pardons, and the mercenary manner of prostituting of them, rais'd Indignation in many ; and therefore Martin Luther was soon favour'd in opposing it. He was a Doctor of Divinity, and an Augustine Friar, living at Wittenberg in Saxony : At which Place, in the same Year, 1517. he began to Preach against the Pope's Power of pardoning Sins ; and publish'd Theses concerning Purgatory, Penance, &c. which were answer'd by Tetzelius, Eckius, Pricrias and others, on the Pope's side. To which Luther reply'd ; and being now favour'd by Fredrick the Elector of Saxony, proceeded in time from one Point to another, till he shook the very Foundation of the Roman Church ; a publick Disputation being held at Liepsick in 1519. between him and Eckius, wherein the Authority and Primacy of the Pope was the Subject of the Argument. And in a few Years, not only the Elector of Saxony, but the Dukes of Brunswick, Mecklenburg, and Lunenbourg, the Marquess of Brandenburg, the Landgrave of Hesse, together with several other Princes and many Imperial Cities, embrac'd his Doctrin. In 1529. a Decree was made against it by the Diet at Spire ; against which, the Elector of Saxony, the Marquess of Brandenburg, the Dukes of Lunenbourg, the Landgrave, together with the Deputies of Strassburg, Norimberg, Ulm, Constance, and ten other Imperial Cities, enter'd a publick Protestation ; which gave Occasion to the Name of PROTESTANT, the Lutherans from that time being so call'd. In the next Year, the Princes above-mentioned presented the Confession of their Faith to the Emperor, in the Diet at Augsburg ; which being rejected, and a Decree made against their Opinions, the Protestant Princes and Cities met at Smalcald, and enter'd into a Defensive League about the end of the same Year, 1530. and not long after a War broke out, between them and the Emperor, which lasted many Years, till in the end the Emperor comply'd ; and, by the Pacification of Paffaw in 1552. agreed, that Matters concerning Religion should be referred to the Diet ; which being assembled at Augsburg in the Year 1555. decreed, That neither the Emperor, nor any other Prince or State, should in any manner whatsoever hurt or injure any Man for the Confession of the Augustan (or Protestant) Religion, nor force any of the Princes to forsake their Religion, Ceremonies or Laws, which they had already instituted in their Dominions, or which choic of the Augustan Confession should thereafter Institute, or that the Emperors or Princes should condemn the same, but suffer them freely to Profess this Religion, and quietly enjoy their Goods and Estates ; together with much more to that Purpose, as may be seen, at large, in Sleidan's Hist. of the Reform. in Germany, lately Translated into English. So that at present the Lutheran Religion is profess'd in the Dominions of all those Princes and Cities above-mentioned, and many others ; as the Roman Catholick is in Austria, Bavaria, the Spiritual Electorates, &c.

The Germans value themselves extremely upon speaking a Primitive LANGUAGE, and have obstinately refused to borrow Words of their Neighbours, tho' they are forc'd to make very uncouth Compounds, to be able to express themselves intelligibly. The Radical Words themselves are very harsh, and abound with Consonants ; and many of these being put together, fill the Mouth, 'tis true, and make a thundering Sound, which is called Manly ; but to a Stranger it seems as untuneable as the Welch, and as difficult to learn. Compounds, 'tis granted, is an Elegancy, but excess in every thing is ill ; and no Language is copious enough of it self to furnish all Words ; which themselves begin to be sensible of, and do therefore now admit some few French words, for the better and more intelligible expressing themselves. In short, the High Dutch hath the Reputation of a Manly noble Language, but withal, not tuneable or docible, and is fitter for a General than a Courtier. It extends very far, for not only in Germany, but in Denmark and Sweden, the High Dutch is spoken, with some variation of Dialect, as also in Switzerland ; not to mention Holland and Flanders, the Language whereof is of the same Original, but varied so much that the Germans disown it, and have given it the Name of Low Dutch for distinction.

Concerning the ANCIENT STATE of Germany we can only say, That from the beginning of History it was divided into many Nations, who, tho' they all Spoke the same Language, preserv'd their separate Governments ; and though by Invasion of Neighbours, and Wars among themselves, several Revolutions have happen'd in almost all the Parts, yet to this Day it is divided into a great number of Principalities, every one of which hath had a different Fate ; as the Reader will find in the following Description of them.

The greatest Monarchy that hath been in Germany was that of Charles the Great, otherwise call'd Charlemagne, King of France ; for he was not only Lord of the Parts upon the lower Rhine and the Main, but by his Arms subdued Saxony and Bavaria ; and acquiring the Honour of Emperor of the Romans, resided with it here ; and Germany hath ever since been called, The Sacred Roman Empire.

But

But to be inform'd how Charles attain'd this titular Honour, it is necessary to look back into the latter State of Italy, and see by what degrees the Roman Monarchy declin'd. and at last expir'd in the Person of Augustulus. 300 Years before the time of Charles the Great: The beginning whereof must be dated from Constantine the Great; for tho' he was a very wise and excellent Prince, yet by removing the Seat of the Empire to Byzantium (now call'd Constantinople) he left these Western Parts naked, and exposed to the Ravages of those swarms of Northern People that soon after invaded them. At his Death Constantine dividing the Empire between his Sons, first erected the Eastern and Western Empires, the Seat of one being Constantinople, and the other Rome: But the latter became again united under the Eastern Emperor, and continued so till the Death of Theodosius, who again divided it for the sake of his two Sons Arcadius and Honorius; these were succeeded for about 80 Years by several Eastern and Western Emperors, but both the one and the other very sensibly declin'd; especially the Western Empire, by the Invasion of the Goths and other barbarous Northern Nations (who seiz'd its Provinces, invaded Italy, and sack'd even Rome it self) was brought very low, and none of the latter Emperors made any considerable figure in the World: The last of them was Augustulus, against whom Odoacer King of the Heruli waged War, subdued a great part of Italy, took Augustulus Prisoner, and made him resign the Empire, and finally determine that Dignity: This happen'd about the Year 476. The Heruli reign'd but a little while, being Conquer'd by the Ostrogoths, and those at last driven out by Justinian, and Italy again made a part of the Eastern Empire; till (the Power of those Emperors being much declin'd) the Popes found means to obtain the Temporal as well as Spiritual Jurisdiction over a great part of it; and the Lombards conquer'd another large part, and erected a considerable Monarchy; which at last, the Popes grew uneasy at, and therefore stirr'd up the French Kings against them; and Pope Adrian I. being besieged in Rome by Desiderius King of Lombardy, sent to Charlemain for assistance; who accordingly invaded Lombardy, overcame Desiderius, and was himself Crowned King: By which he became Lord of a great part of Italy, as he was before of Germany and France. Upon this occasion it was that the Pope, in gratitude for the Service he had done him, and to secure to himself so powerful a Protector, by consent of the People of Rome, declared Charles Emperor, and erected anew the Western Empire. But inasmuch as the Pope was Lord of the Territory about Rome, and Charles in his turn must shew his Gratitude, he left that City to the Pope, and fixed the Seat of the Empire in Germany; which was also more convenient to him, because more in the middle of his Dominions. Thus Germany became the Seat of the Western Empire; which Dignity (tho' but a shadow of the ancient Roman) it has ever since born, under the Government of these following Princes.

Of the Power of the Emperor.

Having shewn how the King of Germany obtain'd the pompous Title of Romanorum Imperator, and how many Princes have succeeded in that Dignity, it remains that we speak something of the Territories subject to his Dominions and of his Power. It is plain, by what we have already said, That Charles the Great got nothing but a bare Title by the Pope's saluting him Emperor: Germany and France were already in his possession, Lombardy he had just conquer'd, Spain had been long possess'd by the Goths, and the Popes had a good part of Italy; so that the Citizens of Rome had nothing to bestow upon him but the Honour, when they declar'd him their Emperor. However, that Title his Successors have been careful in preserving, and always write themselves Cæsar in memory of Julius, and Augustus from Octavius, in imitation of the Roman Emperors: They also call Germany the Sacred Roman Empire, and endeavour in all things to keep up the Grandeur of those ancient Princes. The Dominions of Charlemaign were soon divided; his Son Lewis the Godly erecting out of 'em many Kingdoms, as we have already shewn in our account of the Kings of France: Germany with the Imperial Honour he gave to his eldest Son Lotharius; but his Posterity proving mean degenerate Persons, they soon lost it, and several Princes were afterwards elected to that Dignity; Germany in time being divided among many Princes, whose Powers were exceedingly increas'd by the Offices and Dignities that the Emperors conferr'd on them, and at several times made Hereditary to their Families. These Offices were Hertogen, or Dukes, to whom were committed the Government of the larger parts of Germany; Graffen, or Earls, who had the care of smaller parts; Pfaltzgraven, Counts Palatine, or Præfects of the Court Royal, who administred Justice in the Verge of the Court: Landgraves, who were Presidents set over Provinces; Mirgraves, or Marquisses, who were Presidents of the Marches or Borders for repelling the Incursions of Enemies and administring Justice to the Inhabitants: also Burggraves, who were Governors of the Royal Castles or Forts. These Offices being made Hereditary, the Possessors of them in time obtain'd Sovereign Authority in their respective Governments; which the Em-perors, either thro' their own Liberality, or being prevail'd on by Money or Service, or oblig'd by some exigency of Affairs, have at several times confirm'd to them: So that at present, tho' the Emperor be supreme Lord over all Germany, he is not, as Emperor, Master of any particular part of it except some few of the Princes Estates that have return'd to the Crown as Fiefs for want of Heirs, it being all subject to the several Princes; whereof 'tis true, the present Emperor, as Arch-Duke of Austria, is the Richest.

The Power of the Emperor hath been so restrain'd by several Capitularies or Agreements between the Emperors and Princes, that 'tis difficult to say what it is: The best Account that can be given of it is. That he exercises Regal Authority all over Germany, except in such things as by Grants of his Predecessors he is restrain'd; the chief of which are as follows, according to a late Author that collected it out of them. First, the Emperor hath not the Legislative Power. The general Law all over the Empire is the Civil or Roman, mix'd with the Canon, and the old Customs of the Germans, and in the several states the particular Laws made by them, which firmly oblige in their own Dominions. To these are added the Statutes of the Diets, by which alone can any new Law be introduc'd, or any Law made that will bind all the States; and such Statute or Recess (as it is call'd) of the Diet, obliges the Emperor also. Next, the Emperor cannot levy Taxes. If there be occasion for Money to be rais'd for the Service of the Empire in general, it cannot be done without the consent of the Diet. By the Capitulary of the present Emperor, he is ty'd up from beginning a War, or making Alliance with a Foreigner, without the consent of the Electors. By the same it is declar'd, That the Emperor shall not deprive any Prince or State of their Dignity or Dominions. Nor can he impose Religion on any Prince or State, or punish any Man on that account.

But what I have been saying of the limitation of the Emperor's Power, is to be understood of him as he is Emperor; for in his own Hereditary Dominions he may act as he pleases, with respect to the particular Laws there: Wherefore, the present Emperor being King of Hungary and Bohemia, Arch-Duke of Austria, Duke of Silesia, and Marquess of Moravia, Duke of Stiria, Carinthia and Carniola, Earl of Tyrol, Cilley and Gorice, and Lord of many Cities and Territories in Schwaben, besides what he has lately gain'd from the Turks, is a very powerful and mighty Prince, and able to carry on a War at his own Expence, tho' the Diet should happen to disagree with him.

The Emperor only can confer Honours, create Princes, and affranchise Cities; all the Princes receive Investiture from him; he instituteth Universities; and 'tis he only can give leave to build Cities. He is serv'd by the greatest Princes of Germany, address'd to by the name of Cæsar, and semper Augustus, and his Ambassadors in Foreign Courts take place of those of all the Kings and States of Europe.

Of the King of the Romans, the Electors of the Empire, and the other Princes of Germany.

The King of the Romans is a Dignity erected of late Ages, being begun in the time of Charles IV. He is chosen to be the Emperor's Deputy in case of his Absence or Sickness, and upon his Death to succeed ceed him without other Election. This was introduced in Policy by the Emperors, that they might in their Lives time secure the Succession to their Family, and procure their Successors better Terms than they might be able to obtain in a Vacancy. This Dignity therefore is not constantly in being, and hath been only conferr'd when the Emperors have had a Son to succeed, and have had Interest enough to engage the Electors to chuse him. The present Emperor was elected to this Honour on the 24th Jan. 1658, and Crown'd at Augsburg two Days after.

The Electoral Princes are Nine in number, viz.
 1. The Archbishop of Mentz, who is styl'd Arch-Chancellor of Germany, Dean of the Electoral College, sits on the Emperor's right Hand in the Diet, and had formerly the right of Crowning the King of Bohemia.
 2. The Archbishop of Trier, who is call'd Arch-Chancellor of France and the Kingdom of Aries, and claims the first Vote in the Election of the Emperor; he sits over against the Emperor in the Diet.
 3. The Archbishop of Cologn, he has the Title of Arch-Chancellor of Italy, claims the first Vote in chusing the King of the Romans, and of setting the Crown on his Head; he sits next the Emperor on his left Hand.
 4. The King of Bohemia, he is Lord Cup-bearer to the Emperor, next of the secular Electors, and in publick Processions walks next the Emperor, or King of the Romans.
 5. The Duke of Bavaria, who is Lord Sewer, and carrieth the Globe before the Emperor in solemn Processions.
 6. The Duke of Saxony, he is Lord High-Marshal of the Empire, and carrieth the naked Sword before the Emperor.
 7. The Marquess of Brandenburg, he is Lord High-Chamberlain, and in Processions carrieth the Scepter before the Emperor.
 8. The Count Palatine of the Rhine, who is Lord High-Treasurer, and in the Procession at the Coronation scatters the Medals among the People.
 9. The Duke of Brunswick-Lunenbourg-Hannover.

These have much greater Authority, and enjoy larger Privileges and Rights than the other Princes of Germany. They chuse the Emperor and King of the Romans, and pretend a Power of Deposing him. In some cases they exclude the rest of the States, and consult by themselves Matters of greatest Importance; the Emperor is oblig'd to ask their Advice when he calls a Diet. In an Interregnum the Elector of Saxony and the Elector Palatine of the Rhine govern the Empire; in which case, the Jurisdiction of the former extends over all the Northern part, and the latter governs all the Countries on the Rhine, the Circle of Saxony, &c. but the Duke of Bavaria disputes this Right with the Count Palatine, and at the Death of the former Emperor did actually take the Office upon him; which the other protested against, and complain'd of as an Usurpation upon his Right.

At what time, or by what means, these Princes first obtain'd the Electoral Power, is not certainly known: The common Opinion is, That the Emperor Orto III. and Pope Gregory V. instituted them; but this is disputed, and many learned Men are of Opinion, That tho' it be true that from the time of Orto the Empire was elective, yet that the Elections were not made by these seven Princes only, but by the great Officers of the Empire in general; of whom these being the chief, and most considerable by their Estates, made a shift to overtop the rest, and assume that Power wholly to themselves; this is dated from the time of Frederick II. and Conrad IV. at the Death of the last of which, several Elections were made at the same time, and the Affairs of Germany put into great disorder thereby. But these Princes having Power enough to repeal this Act, made it a Custom, which was at last pass'd into a Law by the Emperor Charles IV. who made that famous Bulla Aurea (so call'd from the Golden Seal affix'd to it) that contains the whole Form of the Election and Power of the Electors. The number of these Electors were then but Seven, to whom an Eighth was added in the last Age on the following occasion: Frederick V. Count Palatine, falling into difference with the Emperor, and accepting of the Crown of Bohemia in opposition to the pretension of Ferdinand II. was by him proscrib'd; and being defeated at the Battle of Prague, in the Year 1620. was depriv'd of his Country and Honours, which the Emperor bestow'd upon the Duke of Bavaria: But great Contests and Wars ensuing thereupon, it was at last agreed in the Westphalian Treaty, A. D. 1648. That the Count Palatine should be restor'd to his Electoral Dignity. But because the Duke of Bavaria could not be brought to part with his, an eighth Electorate was erected for him, and part of his Country, viz. the Lower Palatinate, being restor'd, he has since had the Title of Electo Palatine of the Rhine, and the eighth Seat in the Electoral College. To this Number there has been yet another added very lately, viz. in the Year 1693. and by the Emperor's Favour conferr'd on Ernestus Augustus, Duke of Brunswick-Lunenbourg-Hannover.

The other Princes are, the Dukes of Lunenbourg, Mecklenbourg, Wuertemburg, Sax-Lauenbourg, Sax-Naumburg, Sax-Hall, Sax-Goth, Sax-Mersburg, &c. the Marquisses of Baden, Culembach, &c. the Landgraves of Hesse, the Princes of East Friezland, Anhalt, Montbelliard, Birkfield, Nassaw, Furstemburg, Hoenzollern, &c. the Counts of Solm, Dietrichstein, Aversburg, with many others. As also, the Archbishop of Salzburg, the Bishops of Munster, Liege, Wurtzburg, Bamberg, Paderborn, Osnaburg, Aichstadt, Strasburg, Augsburg, Basil, Constance, Hildesheim, Spire, Worms, Passaw and Lubeck, together with some Abbots, and the great Master of the Teutonic Order, &c. These have Sovereign Authority in their own Estates, and govern their Subjects without Cognizance of the Emperor.

There is yet another Class of Sovereign States in Germany, viz.

The Imperial Cities and Hanse-Towns.

The Cities of Germany were, from their beginning, endow'd with large Privileges, which were given by the Princes that built them, to invite the People to inhabit them, and leave the rude manner of Living they had been accusom'd to before the Fifth Century after Christ. Accordingly, upon this encouragement, they flock'd to the Cities, and betook themselves to Manufactures and Trades; by which, being in time grown Rich, many of the Cities obtain'd by purchase, or otherwise, exemption from the Jurisdiction of the Princes in whose Dominions they stood; and by permission of the Emperors, at several times, were erected into independent States, to be govern'd by their own Magistrates under the Protection of the Emperor, each City paying its Proportion in all Taxes levy'd for the publick Service of the Empire; and these are those Cities that are call'd Imperial and Free, and are very numerous, the Catalogue of them would be too tedious; the Reader will find them noted in the following Description, to which we refer him. These Cities have frequently made

Leagues

Leagues for their mutual Defence, as also for the sake of Trade; upon which account was form'd the famous Hanseatick Society, which was a League made between several of the Maritime Cities of Germany, (whereof Hamburg and Lubeck were the chief) about the end of the 13th Century, for their mutual assistance in carrying on their Commerce, by which they grew very considerable, and engag'd many Cities into their Society, even to the number of near four-score; they also obtain'd large Privileges, and exercis'd a Jurisdiction among themselves; to which purpose they were divided into 4 Circles, distinguish'd by the Names of the four Principal Cities among them, viz. Lubeck, Cologne, Brunswick and Dantzick, wherein were held their Courts of Judicature. They were call'd Hanse or Anse, q. d. am zee, on the Sea, because the Society at first consisted only of such, tho' afterwards many Inland Cities were introduc'd; 'Tis true, this Etymology is disputed, and many others assign'd; but this seems the most probable, and therefore we shall name no more. The most flourishing time of this Society was from about the Year 1400 to 1500. after which it declin'd, and is at present not very considerable.

Of the Diet of the Empire.

The Diet, or Parliament of Germany is compos'd of the Electors, the Princes Spiritual and Temporal of the Empire, and the Deputies of the Imperial Cities. This general Assembly of all the Estates of the Empire is summon'd by the Emperor, by Letters directed to every Member six Months before the Session, informing them of the time and place. When they are assembled, the Emperor, or his Commissioner, proposes to them the Matters to be transacted, which are things that concern the whole Empire in general, such as raising Money for a Foreign War, and making Laws which oblige all the States. The Diet is divided into three Houses, which are, the Electors, the Princes, and the Cities: In the first, the Bishop of Mentz is Speaker; in the second, some Prince of the House of Austria and the Bishop of Salzburg by turns; and in the third, that City in which the Session is held. The Princes are divided into two Benches, the Spiritual and Temporal: The Cities are also divided into two Benches, the Rheinische and the Schwabische; on the former sit the Deputies of the Cities on the Rhine, &c. and on the latter the Cities in Schwaben, Franconia, &c. The Diet was formerly assembled annually, but latterly not so often, except at this time of War; and it is at the Emperor's pleasure to call it; only in case of his omission the Electors may advise him to it; the States judging it convenient that it be assembled once in 3 Years. The place of its Meeting is also at the Emperor's disposal; Mentz was by Charles the Great appointed for it, but it has since been held at several other free Cities; at present Ratisbon is the usual place of its Meeting.

Of the Supreme Courts of Judicature.

The chief Court for determining great Causes in Germany is the Imperial Chamber: At first the Emperors with their chief Ministers heard and decided all considerable Causes; but those growing numerous, Maximilian I. settled a Court at Worms in 1495. which was afterwards remov'd to Spre, and nam'd The Imperial Chamber, wherein Causes are try'd by certain Judges call'd Assessors: Of these at first there were Sixteen, now Fifty, whereof the Emperor appoints the President and the four chief Officers, the Electors chuse each of them one, and the rest are nam'd by other Princes and States of the Empire. Disputes between the Princes are brought before this Court, as also other Causes, by Appeal from Inferior Courts. The Seat of it was establish'd at Spire, never to be remov'd without consent of the Diet; but in this last War, the City having been taken and burnt by the French, it is remov'd and establish'd at Wetlar in Hesse, by consent of the Diet.

The Emperor holds another high Court in his Palace, which is call'd the Chamber of Vienna, and is of equal Authority with that of Spire: The Emperor, by himself, or Deputy, sits as Chief, and is assisted by a certain number of Judges, whereof part are Protestants. This Court decides all great Causes brought by Appeal from subordinate Courts, and claims the same Authority with the Chamber of Spire.

The Marquisate of Moravia, into Eastern and Western.

Also SAVOY and SWISSERLAND are reckon'd part of the Empire; but these being now distinct States shall be spoken of apart hereafter.

CHAP. II.

Of the Spiritual ELECTORATES.

IN this Description of Germany, we shall pursue the same Method as in other parts, and without regard to the Precedences of Princes, place the Descriptions according to the situations of the Countries, and therefore begin with Cologne, rather than Mentz and Triers, because this lyes first in the way from the Netherlands, whence we are last come, omitting Cleves and Juliers, till we come back to Westphalia, and the Dominions of the Elector of Brandenburg, whereon they depend.

From Cologne we shall pass up the Rhine, taking in by the way the Maine and the Necker, together with so much of the Moselle as lyes in Germany: And having view'd all the Countries on both sides of these Rivers, pursue our Journy through Saxia to the Danube and the Estates of the House of Austria; thence, through Bobemia and its Dependences, Coast the Oder, Elbe and Weser, and at last return through Westphalia again to the Banks of the Rhine.

SECT. I.

The Electorate of COLOGNE.

The Archbishoprick and Electorate of COLOGNE is extended on the Western Bank of the Rhine, between the Dutchy of Cleves on the North, and the Electorate of Trier on the South, the Dutchy of Ju-liers on the West, and that of Berg (parted from it by the Rhine) on the East. It is a fruitful and pleasant Country, producing excellent Wine, besides Corn and other Necessaries for Life. Its extent is not large, for though it be about 40 Miles in length, it is not above 7 or 8 in breadth; the Archbishop is Supreme Lord of it, as also of a pretty large Country in Westphalia, and is richer and more potent than either of the other two Ecclesiastical Electors; his Annual Revenue being reckon'd to be above 100 Thousand

Thousand Pounds Sterling. He is dignify'd with the Title of Arch-Chancellor of the Empire, and Legate in Italy. This See was advanc'd from Episcopal to Archi-Episcopal in the Year 743; to which was added the Dignity of Elector in 1021. The Archbishop is chosen by the Chapter, which is the most Illustrious of any in Germany (being compos'd all of Princes or Noblemen at least, private Gentlemen being excluded) and are 24 in number. The present Archbishop and Elector of Cologne, is Prince Clement, Brother to the Elector of Bavaria, who was chosen July 14. 1688. and invested notwithstanding the Pretensions of Cardinal Furstemburg; the Justification of which by the French King, and the Opposition of it by the Emperor, was the occasion of the beginning of the late War.

The chief Cities and Towns of this Elec- torate are,	{	Cologne, Cap.	Breel.
		Bonne.	Zons.
		Mulheim.	Arensberg.
		Rheinberg.	Werle.
		Kempen.	Geseck.
		Kreyserswaert.	Dorsten.
		Nuys.	Recklenhausen, &c.

COLOGNE, or Colen, call'd Keulen by the Germans, and in Latin Colonia Agripina, and Colonia Ubioum, is seated on the River Rhine, at the distance of 70 Miles from Mentz, and 40 from Coblentz to the North, 70 from Nimeguen, and 20 from Duseldorp to the South-East, and 60 from Maastricht to the East. It is one of the largest Cities of Germany, and very considerable on account of its Buildings, number of Inhabitants, and great Trade in Wine and other Commodities of Germany, which by the means of the Rhine are brought hither, and transported to Holland. It is a free City, being govern'd by its own Senate, which orders and judges all Civil Matters and Causes; but Criminal are judg'd by the Elector. It is also one of the four chief Hanse Towns, and is call'd the Holy City, because of the many Churches and Religious Houses in it; here being, besides the Cathedral, 10 Collegiate and 19 Parochial Churches; also 37 Monasteries and many Hospitals. In the Cathedral they shew the Tombs of the Three Wise Men that came to worship our Saviour, call'd hence the Three Kings of Colen, whose Bones they pretend were remov'd to Constantinople by Helena, the Mother of Constantine; thence they were carry'd to Milan, by Eustorpius Bishop of that See, and afterwards brought hither by Rainold Archbishop of Colen: Three Skulls very richly Enshrind are shewn to Strangers, and affirm'd to have belong'd to their Bodies, and to have great Virtue in curing Diseases by Touch, &c. One of the Parish-Churches is dedicated to St. Ursula, who, with her 11000 Virgins, they say, were Martyr'd here. An University was long since planted here, which being declin'd, was re-establish'd in 1388. and endow'd with large Privileges by Pope Urban VI. and is at present in a very flourishing State. The Walls of this City are flank'd with 83 Towers, and encompass'd with three deep Ditches.

Cologne was Built, or Repair'd and Enlarg'd at least, by the Ubi, who possess'd the Weteraw and Hassia, and in the time of Augustus obtain'd this Country and Fuliers of that Emperor (being disturb'd by the Catti their Neighbours) and put themselves under the Protection of Agrippa, from whence some say it had its Name, or as others, from Agrippina (Daughter to Germanicus, Wife of Claudius, and Mother to Nero) who was Born here. It was the Metropolis of the Germania Secunda, and the Seat of the chief Roman Colony. Meroue, King of France, beat the Romans hence about the Year 450. and quickly after Attila the Hunn ruin'd it. Afterwards the Romans rebuilt it, and it was again taken by the French, and about the Year 500. made part of their Kingdom by Clovis the Great. The Emperor Otho about 950. subjected it to its Prelate, which was oppos'd by the Citizens, and great Differences at several times have happen'd thereupon, which were at last compos'd by the Emperor Maximilian, and the City made Free and Imperial, but oblig'd to pay Homage to the Elector, who is also oblig'd to confirm their Privileges: And they are still so tenacious of Liberty, that tho' the Elector by his Officers exercise Justice in all Criminal Causes in the City, they will not permit him in Person to reside long in Town, nor come with a great Train; for which reason he lives always at Bonne. It was in the Year 1260. that this City entred into the League of the Hanse Towns, and was made the Capital of their Fourth Province. Cologne is seated in Lat. 51 Deg. and Long. 26 Deg.

In a Convent of Carmelites, not far from hence, a Treaty of Peace was set on foot in 1673. between the Emperor, King of Spain, France, &c. and the several Princes sent their Plenipotentiaries accordingly: But it was interrupted by the Seizure of William Prince of Furstemburg, since made Cardinal, who tho' a German and a Count of the Empire, had espous'd the Interest of France, and was made that King's Ambassador at this Treaty, in which he carry'd Matters so high, that he defeated the Endeavours of the several Ministers for Peace, and made the Emperor cause him to be seiz'd and carry'd to Vienna, where he was detain'd close Prisoner till the Treaty of Nimeguen.

Bonne, Bonna, Colonia Julia Bonna; also Ara Ubioum, from the Altars erected here by the Ubi the ancient Inhabitants; is the usual place of Residence of the Archbishop of Colen, who has a magnificent Palace in the Castle. It stands upon the Rhine, 15 Miles South from Colen, in a fruitful Country, which produces very good Wine, and the Woods abound with variety of Game. A Ridge of Mountains on both sides the Rhine, reach from hence as far as Bingen. It is a small City, but well inhabited: The Churches are stately, especially the Collegiate, dedicated to the Holy Martyrs Cassius, Florentius and Malusius, whose Bodies, with several other of the famous Theban Legion, are said to be Bury'd in it, being brought hither by St. Helena, who Founded this Church to their Honour. The Town-house is well built, and adorn'd with fine Paintings. This was formerly an Imperial City, but now subject to the Elector. Frederick of Austria, chosen Emperor in opposition to Lewis of Bavaria, was Crown'd here in 1314. It suffer'd much in the Low-Country Wars, was Besieg'd by the Duke of Parma, and forc'd by Famine to surrender in 1588. The Fortifications here are regular; the Wall is fac'd with Brick, and the Ditches are very broad and dry, but the Counterscarp is not very defensible: In 1673. it was taken by the Prince of Orange, our late King, from the French, after a Siege of 9 Days. In 1688. Cardinal Furstemburg, in pursuance of his pretended Election above-mention'd, by assistance of the French Troops, got possession of it; but the Germans, under the Command of the Elector of Brandenburg, regain'd it in 1689. after a Siege of 3 Months.

Rhinberg

Rengberg is a pretty large Town seated on the Rhine, in a small Country of 10 Miles extent, belonging to the Archbishop of Cölen, tho' separated from the rest by the small County of Meurs. It is distant 40 Miles from Cölen to the North-West, and 10 from Geele to the East; a small River (or Canal rather, for it seems to be Artificial) passes by it, and runs quite cross from the Rhine to the Maas: By means of this convenient Situation, it hath a good Trade, and the Burghers are reasonably Rich. This Town being near the Borders of Guelderland, hath been claim'd by the Hollanders, and is therefore strongly fortify'd.

Kempen, a strong Town and Castle, stands on the Borders of Guelderland and Fuliers, 35 Miles North-West from Cölen, and 10 Miles West from the Rhine. It was remarkable for the gallant Defence it made in 1642. when it was vigorously Besieg'd by the French, Hessians and Saxons united.

Kerleswartz stands on the East side of the Rhine, between Dunsburg and Dufeldorp, 15 Miles from Kempen to the East, and 25 from Cölen to the North-West. It is a small Town and strong Fort, first built, as 'tis said, by one Swibertan an Englishman.

Nuys, or Nuss, Neotium, Nuffia, seated on the River Erp and near the Rhine, 20 Miles from Cölen to the North, and 15 from Kempen to the South East, is a large City and well fortify'd, having the River on one side, and a double Wall on the other. The Rhine did anciently run by its Walls, but having alter'd its Channel, they have been forc'd to make a Trench from it to the Erp to bring Vessels up to their Gates. The Citizens enjoy great Privileges, which were granted to them by the Emperor Frederick III. in recompence for their Service, in holding out a whole Year's Siege against the Duke of Burgundy, who oppos'd Herman Landgrave of Hesse, chosen Bishop of Cölen in defence of his Brother, chosen also by another Faction. Here is a fair Collegiate Church, besides other publick Buildings of good Structure.

Bonn is a small pleasant Town with a strong Castle, which is the Seat of the Elector when he divers himself with Hunting in the Neighbouring Forreits. It stands in the midway between Cölen and Bonne, and 5 Miles West from the Rhine.

Zons, a small Town tolerably well fortify'd, stands on the Rhine, 8 Miles West from Nuys, in a Country producing much Corn, the Sale whereof is the chief Trade of the Town. The Houses are of Brick, and make a good Shew.

Mulheim, a fair and large Town on the Eastern Bank of the Rhine, 5 Miles below Cölen, stands in the Limits of Bergen, but is subject to this Elector. The Inhabitants attempted to wall it round, and intended to make it an Imperial City, but were oppos'd in it by the Citizens of Cölen, and forbid by the Emperor, who caus'd the Marquis Spinola to spoil their Out-works in the Year 1613. and the next Year the Inhabitants of Cölen pull'd down all the new Buildings in the Town: Afterwards, during the Wars in Germany, they endeavour'd it again, pretending it necessary for their Security; but it was again hinder'd, and it still remains a Dependent on Cologne.

On the East-side of the Rhine, at about 20 Miles distance from it, lies a tract of Land of about 20 Miles long and 12 broad, bounded on the North by the River Lippe, that parts it from Münster, and on the South by the River Emser, which belongs to the Archbishop of Cölen, and contains many large Mansions and Lordships, and these two Towns, viz.

Recklenhausen, a strong Town in the middle of this Territory, 35 Miles North-East from Nuys; taken in War from the Duke of Cleve, by the Elector of Cölen's Forces, A. 1343. mortgag'd in 1442. but redeem'd 150 Years after by Archbishop Salentine. Here is a Nunnery, the Abbess whereof hath Power of punishing Offenders, even to Death.

Dorsten, a place very well fortify'd by the Landgrave of Hesse Cassel in 1639. but taken from him two Years after by the Elector of Cölen's Forces, after a sharp Siege of two Months. It stands on the River Lippe, 10 Miles West from Recklenhausen, in the Barony thereof.

To this Electorate also belongs a large Tract of Land in Westphalia, wherein are these Towns, viz.

Ansberg, a neat and pleasant City on the River Ruhr, 60 Miles from Nuys to the East, often honour'd with the Archbishop's Presence, who comes hither for the diversion of Hunting. It was formerly subject to its own Lords, and by them given to this Elector.

Werle, a pleasant Town, between the Rivers Ruhr and Lippe, in which the Elector's chief Judge Official in Westphalia resides. It is wall'd and fortify'd.

S E C T. II.

The Archbishoprick and Electorate of T R I E R.

The Electorate of Trier lies between that of Cologne and the Duchy of Fuliers on the North, Lorraine and the Palatinate on the South, Luxemburg on the West, and Weteraw on the East. It is a fruitful and pleasant Country seated on both sides the River Moselle and Rhine. Its extent from South to North-East is about 70 Miles, and from West to East about 60. It was made a Metropolitan See under Agilulphus, in the Year 743. and the Archbishop was made an Elector in 1021. He hath also the Title of Arch-Chancellor of the Empire in France, is Temporal as well as Spiritual Lord of this Country and hath Precedency of the Elector of Cologne. The Grandeur of this Prince was much greater when the Empire was in the House of France, than it is at present: In this Age the French have invaded it often, and taken many of the Towns, which they held till the Peace of Münster. And both in the War of 1675. and in this late one, they have overrun and harra's'd it exceedingly. The Revenue of the Elector us'd to be reckon'd near One hundred thousand Pounds Sterling per Annum, but hath been much diminish'd by the War. The Chapter is compos'd of 16 Capitulary Canons, who are all of Noble Extraction, and chuse the Bishops always out of themselves.

The chief Towns of this Electorate are,

	[Trier , Cap.
		Coblentz .
		Hermanstein .
		Meyne .
		Overeissel .
		Bopart .
		Engers .
		Sarburg .
		Bern-Castle &c.

T R I E R, call'd Treves by the French and in Latin Triviri aut Augusta Triviorum, is seated on the River

River Moselle, over which it hath a fair Stone-bridge, and is distant 55 Miles from Coblentz to the South-West, 70 from Mentz to the West, and 65 from Cologne to the South. It is a large City, and of very great Antiquity, but was often ruin'd by the Huns, Vandals, Goths and French. It was afterwards Imperial and Free, but hath been subject to its Archbishop ever since 1561. when it was surpriz'd by the Archbishop James III. An University was establish'd here in 1472. which is in a flourishing State, and well fill'd with Students. Here are 4 Collegiate and 5 Parish Churches, 2 principal Abbies, and several other Religious Houses. The City is Fortified with strong Walls and Outworks; but was taken by the French in the last War, and recover'd from them in 1675. And in this War they put a Garrison into it in 1688. but quitted it after they had almost destroy'd it.

Coblentz, in Latin Confluentia & Confluentes, from its situation on the Confluence of the two Rivers Rhine and Moselle, stands in a pleasant and fruitful Country cover'd with Vines, at a distance of 35 Miles from Mentz to the North West, and 40 from Cologne to the South-East. It is a large City and built in the form of a Triangle, two sides whereof are secur'd by the two Rivers, and the third by strong Fortifications. It has a Bridge over the Moselle, and to guard it a Fort of 3 Battions on the other side, and another Bridge over the Rhine to Hermanstein. This, in the time of the Romans, was the station of their first Legion. It was given to the See of Triers about 1000 Years ago by King Dagobert, and was afterwards an Imperial City till 1312. when it was separated from the Jurisdiction of the Empire by Henry VII. Its situation has made it exceeding populous and of great Trade, which consists chiefly in Wine, Corn, Wood and Iron. The chief publick Buildings are, the Elector's Palace, two great Churches and some Monasteries. The private Houses are generally fair and uniform, and better built than the other Cities on the Rhine. It was first encompass'd with Walls by Arnulphus Elector of Trier in 1250. and afterwards regularly Fortified by Gaspar a Petra and other Archbishops, and is now one of the strongest Cities of Germany.

On the other side the Rhine, just over against this City, stands

Hermanstein, or Ehrenbreitstein, an Impregnable Fort well defended by Out-works on the top of a steep rocky Hill, twice as high as Windsor-Castle, which commands the City and the two Rivers: At the foot of this Fort, on the Banks of the Rhine and fronting the River, stands the Elector's Palace, which is a very noble Building. From hence is a Passage to Coblentz by a long Bridge of Boats, in the middle whereof two or three are let slip to let any great Vessel pass by, which they easily fasten again.

Meyn or Meyen, on the River Nette, is 15 Miles distant from Coblentz to the West: It has a Castle built in 1280. by Henry Archbishop of Trier, and the Town was wall'd round by his Successor. It gives Name to a large Territory about it, in which stands Munster a small Town, for distinction call'd Munster Meynfeld.

Oberwesel stands on the West-side of the Rhine 20 Miles from Coblentz to the South, and 25 from Mentz to the West. It was once an Imperial and Free City, but since the Year, 1312. it has been subject to the Archbishop of Trier.

Boppard is a Town and Fort seated on the Rhine, 10 Miles South from Coblentz. It was also formerly an Imperial City, but given by the Emperor Henry VII. to Baldwin Archbishop of Trier, who built the Castle to secure it.

Engers, a fair Town and Fort of the Rhine, stands between Coblentz and Andernack, and gives Name to a neighbouring Territory. It has a strong Castle and a noble Bridge over the Rhine, founded by Cuno Archbishop of Trier, who died in 1388.

Bern Castle is a good Town pleasantly seated upon the Moselle, and makes great quantity of Wine, which enriches the Place, and has made it Populous.

Sarburg, on the River Sar, is a Town of good Strength; made so and much beautified by Vestinger their Archbishop.

Limburg stands on the River Lohn, betwixt Idestein and the County of Weilburg; it suffer'd much in the Wars between the French King and the Emperor.

Montroyal, belonging to the French, stands on the Frontiers of the Electorate, 20 Miles from Triers to the North-East, and 30 from Coblentz to the South-West; it is a strong Fortress, built in a Peninsle made by the Rhine, which, with the Citadel and Outworks, render it almost Impregnable.

SECT. III.

The Archbishoprick and Electorate of MENTZ.

The Archbishoprick of Mentz lyes on the Banks of the River Mayne, between the Electorate of Trier on the West, the Palatinate on the South, Franconia on the East, and the Weteraw on the North. It is in length from North-West to South-East about 50 M. and about 20 in breadth; but besides this, the Elector hath Dominions in other Provinces. This Prince hath the Precedency of both the other Ecclesiastical Electors, is Dean of their College, and stiled Arch-Chancellor of the Empire in Germany. He is Lord of this Country, and maintains in his Court a Marshal or General, and a Chancellor: His annual Revenue is reckon'd above one hundred thousand Pounds. To all which he is Elected by the Chapter of 24 Capitulary Canons, who are all of noble Extraction. This See was formerly Episcopal only, and Suffragan to that of Worms, till 745. it was erected into an Archbishoprick. It is a pleasant fruitful Country, very populous, and hath these Towns of note, viz:

Mentz , Capit.	Other Towns subject to this Elector.	{	In Hesse,	{	Fritzlar , Ommenburg , Neustat.

Elfield	{	In Thuringen,	{	{	Erfurt , Heyligensladt , Duderstadt .
Reineck , Coun.

MENTZ, call'd by the Germans Mayntz, by the French Mayence, in Latin Moguntia, Magontiacum & Mocontiacum, is seated on the Rhine near its Confluence with the Maine, at the distance of 65 Miles from Trier to the East, 32 from Coblentz to the South East, 20 from Francfort to the West, and 50 from Spire to the North. It is a large City, well fortified and very populous. The private Buildings are not extraordinary, the Houses being old and the Streets narrow: But the publick ones, which are many Churches, the the Electoral Palace, the Town-house or Guild-hall, three Castles, and a Bridge of Boats over the Rhine, are stately Structures. Here is an University which was founded in the Year 800. and re-established in 1482. This City claims the Invention of the Art of PRINTING, which at least was brought to perfection here by John Faust, or, as others, John Guttenburg, about the Year 1450. It is a Place of very good Strength, which hath been much encreas'd by a Fortrefs built not many Years since on a Hill, (wherein stands the Elector's Palace) and by the regular Fortifications that have been added by the late Archbishop, since the beginning of the late War: This City is by the Germans pretended to be above 1300 Years older than Christianity; but by others 'tis thought to have been Built by Drusus, whose Tomb is still shewn here. It was sometime Imperial and Free, but subjected by its Archbishop Adolphus of Nassau, who took it in the Year 1462. and his Successors still retain the Authority. Gustavus Adolphus took it in 1631. and oblig'd the Citizens to pay 80000 Dollars as a Ransom for their Lives and Houses. And in the late War it was taken by the French in the Year 1688. and regain'd by the Duke of Lorraine in 1689.

Bingen is a pleasant Town, seated on the Rhine, 15 Miles West from Mentz. It was a Fort in the time of the Romans, and thought to be the Place where Drusus died. The River Nabe, over which here is a fair Stone Bridge, runs through the Town, and empties it self into the Rhine: Here is also a Castle, which stands on a Hill, and over-looks the Town. This was also formerly an Imperial City, but is now subject to the Dean and Chapter of Mentz.

Between this Place and Mentz in an Island in the Rhine, stands the Famous Maus-turm, an old Watch-Tower, said to have its Name from the Mice and Rats which follow'd hither, and devour'd the covetous Archbishop of Mentz, who scoffingly call'd some poor People that begg'd at his Gate, the Rats that eat up the Corn.

Elfeld is a strong fortifi'd Town seated on the North side of the Rhine, 5 Miles from Mentz, to the West, and adorn'd with a fair Church and a high Steeple. It is the chief Town of a small Territory, extended along the Rhine 20 Miles, call'd Ringaw, a Country richly stor'd with choice Vines; wherein also stands Erbach, a stately Monastery, where lie buried many of the Counts of Nassau, and Rodesheim, a Place noted for the Growth of the best Wines in these Parts.

Weisbaden stands about five or six Miles North from Mentz.

Koningstein is 15 Miles distant from Mentz to the North-east.

Ascaffenburg, Aschaffenburgum, aut Asciburgum, is a strong Town and Castle on the Eastern Bank of the Main, 40 Miles distant from Mentz and 20 from Francfort to the East; it is divided into the Upper and Lower Town, and is beautified with a stately Palace, lately built, wherein the Elector often resides; and hath a fair Stone-Bridge over the Main.

Reineck, the chief Town of a County of the same Name, stands on the River Syn. 35 Miles from Aschaffenburg to the West, 25 from Fuld to the South, and 8 from the Main to the North. This Town and County, together with that of Lohr adjoining to it, and on the Banks of the Main, do also belong to this Archbishop.

Ommenburg or Amelburg, a strong Town on the River Obrn, 5 Miles distant from Marpurg in Hessen, and 45 from Francfort to the North, is the Capital of a small Territory belonging to this Elector, in which also stands Neustadt.

Freitzlar, the chief Town of another small Territory, subject to this Archbishop, is seated on the River Eder, in the Landgraviate of Hesse, about 25 Miles from Ommenburg to the North-east, 10 from Waldeck to the South-west, and near the mid-way between Marpurg and Cassel. It hath a Castle and good Fortifications, and is esteem'd a place of as good Strength as any in these Parts.

To this Electorate belongs also a small Country of 20 Miles extent, call'd Eichfeld or Eschfeld, lying beyond the Weser, between the Dutchy of Brunswick on the North and the Landgraviate of Hesse on the South. In which stand Heglingenstat, built by King Dagobert; in it is a College of Jesuits, but is not otherwise considerable.

Duderstadt, a small Hanse-Town, anciently subject to the Duke of Brunswick, by whom it was sold to Gerlacus Archbishop of Mentz.

THE Province of Hessen lies on the North Side of the River Main, extending as far as the Weser, comprehending under this Name in general, besides the Landgraviate of the same Name, the Abbies of Fuld and Hirchsfeild; the Weteraw, in which are also compris'd several Principalities and Lord-ships; and the Landgraviate of Darmstadt; together with several Imperial Cities. The whole Country is bounded on the North by Westphalia, on the West by the Dutchy of Berg and Electorate of Trier, on the South by the Electorate of Mentz and Franconia, and on the East by the Dutchy of Weimar and Thuringen. Its utmost Extent from North to South is about 100 English Miles, and from East to West as many. The Air is healthful, the Waters wholsom, and the Soil fruitful, producing much Corn, and towards the Banks of the Rhine and Lohr Grapes; here are also large Forests, which afford store of Deer and other Game; and Mountains, wherein Mines of Copper and Lead are found. This is judg'd to have been the Country of the ancient Catti, mention'd by Tacitus and others.

It is divided into Hessen and Veteravia, or the Veteraw.

In Hessen are	The Landgraves of	Hesse Cassel , which lies on the Banks of the Rivers Weser , Eder , and Lohn and hath these Towns, viz.	Cassel , Rodenberg , Homburg , Witzenhausen , Zeigenheim , Suntra , Geyfmar , Eschwege , Smaicald .

This House of Cassel is the Elder, and the Landgrave, with his Subjects, are of the Calvinist Religion.

Rodenburg, a fair Town, stands on the River Fulda, 30 Miles from Cassel to the South east; it is pleasantly seated, and has a Collegiate Church with a Dean and 20 Canons nobly endow'd. Near the Town is a Quarry of white Marble.

Suntra stands 12 Miles East from Rodenburg.

Homburg is 25 Miles distant from Cassel to the South, and 12 from Rodenburg to the West.

Zeigenheim stands 30 Miles South from Cassel. It is a small but fair City, and gives Name to a County.

Geyfmar, stands 12 Miles from Cassel to the North Witzenhausen is seated on the Weser, 12 Miles from Cassel to the East.

Eschwege stands also on the Weser, 20 Miles above Witzenhausen, a wall'd Town, built by Charles the Great, and repair'd by Henry II.

These are all good Towns, but not particularly remarkable.

Smaicald stands in a little Territory on the East-side of the River Verra, disjoyn'd from the rest of the Lands of this Prince; it is 50 Miles distant from Cassel to the South-East, 30 from Hirschfeld to the East, and 20 from Eysenach to the South. It is a Town of good Trade for Iron-ware, many Mines in the Neighbourhood furnishing the Inhabitants with plenty of that Metal, which they work and send abroad to foreign Parts. This Place was famous in the last Age, by the assembling of the Protestant Princes here, in the Years 1530, 1531, 1535 and 1537. to make a League for the Defence of the Augsburg Confession, against the Emperor Charles V. and the Popish Princes of Germany: Which League grew so powerful, that they forced the Emperor to a Treaty, held in 1557. at Passaw, wherein Lutheranism was establish'd in several Parts of the Empire.

Marpurg, Marpurgum, Amesia, is seated on the River Lohn, in a pleasant Country, near 50 Miles from Cassel to the South-west, and 40 from Francfort to the North. It was some time a free and Imperial City, afterwards subject to its own Lords, now the Chief of the Upper Hesse, and the Seat of the supreme Court of Judicature; to which Appeals are brought from both Cassel and Darmstadt. It has a strong Castle, which stands on a Hill, and is otherwise well fortified. The great Church is a stately Building, and has in it many noble Monuments. The University here is one of the most considerable in Germany.

Frankenburg, on the River Eder, 25 Miles North from Marpurg, is a large Town, said to be built by Theodorick King of France, Anno 520.

Alsfeld stands 15 Miles from Marpurg to the East: It is one of the ancientest Towns of Hessen, and had formerly very great Privileges, even Power over Life; but lost their Charter in an accidental Fire many Years since, so that now they have only a Memorial of it, by the chief Magistrate's having a Sword born before him. The Town-house is a fair handsome Building.

Gieffen is a fair Town, seated on the River Lohn 15 Miles from Marpurg to the South, and 28 from Francfort to the North; the Royalty whereof is divided between the 2 Landgraves of Cassel and Darmstadt: It is adorn'd with a University, and defended with a strong Wall and regular Fortifications, and hath an Armory very well furnished. The Trade of this Town lies in Dressing and Selling of Cloth.

WESTLAR, an Imperial City, stands on the Borders of the County of Solms, upon the River Lohn not above 6 Miles below Gieffen, 18 Miles South-west from Marpurg, and 26 North from Francfort. It is an old Town, and has nothing in it worth notice but the great Church. However, it is at present the Seat of the Imperial Chamber, which was removed from Spire hither in the Year 1689. by reason that that City was taken and destroy'd by the French.

FRIEDBURG, a Rich and Imperial City, stands 15 Miles South from Wetlar, and 12 North from Francfort: It is seated at the Foot of a Ridge of Hills, call'd de Hobe, and enjoys large Privileges, granted by the Emperor Frederick II. The Mart, now held at Francfort, was, before the Year 1340. held in this Town; at which time it was remov'd, at the desire of the Merchants, and this City. in lieu, hath four annual Fairs.

DARMSTADT, Darmstadium, seu Darmstadtium, a considerable City, seated on the Banks of a River of the same name, in the Country of Geram, otherwise call'd the Landgraviate of Darmstadt, which lies on the South-side of the Main; it is defended by a strong Castle, which is the Palace of the Landgrave; and for the better Security of the Country, there are two Forts, one on the Rhine, named Markburg, and another on the Main, called Russelheim. The Town is distant 10 Miles from the Rhine to the East, and 15 from Frankfort on the Main to the South. The House of Darmstadt, by the failure of the Second House of Marpurg, succeeded to that Lordship, together with those of Giessen and Catzelbogen, and by that means is become more considerable than the elder House of Cassel. The Landgrave usually resides at Marpurg; he is of the Lutheran Religion, as are also most of his Subjects.

The County of Catzelbogen lies on the Banks of the Rhine, between that River and Nassau; the Town which gives name to the County is but small, and is seated at the distance of 10 Miles from Nassau to the East, and about 22 from Mentz to the North-west. The Property of this Town and County has been much disputed between the Earls of Nassau and the Landgraves of Hesse, the former having married the Sister of the last Earl, and the latter pretending a Donation from the Earl: In 1548. the Emperor Charles V. adjudg'd it to the Count of Nassau; but the Judgment was revers'd at the Treaty of Passaw, and Count William of Nassau surrendred it to the Landgrave Philip, who paid him 60000 Crowns for it: However, the Family of Nassau does still retain the Title of it. In the same County stands Schwalbach, famous for many Springs of Medicinal Waters in it, which are of great virtue for curing several Distempers. It is distant 10 Miles from Catzelbogen to the South, and 12 from Mentz to the North.

The Castle of Rheinfeld, which gives Name to a small County, stands on the East-side of the Rhine, 25 Miles West from Catzelbogen, and 20 South from Coblentz.

The Country is fruitful, affording Wine as well as Corn and Pasture, besides Mines of Copper, Lead, Quicksilver, &c. The chief Town is but small, and not very considerable; it is distant 30 Miles from Marpurg to the North, and 20 from Cassel to the South-west.

The other Places of Note in this County are Wildungen, a pleasant Town built upon two Hills, in the middle of which lies a very fine Garden;

Corbach, formerly a free City, wherein is held a small University; and Eyenberg, a very strong Castle, built upon a Hill near Corbach.

The Territory of the Abbey of FULD, call'd by some Buckem and Fagonia, is a large rich Country, lying South of Hesse, and North of Hanaw, Reineck, &c. extending about 30 Miles in length. The chief Town Fuld stands upon a River of the same name, 40 Miles East from Marpurg, and 45 North-east from Hanaw: The Monastery is of the Benedictine Order, and one of the noblest in all Europe; it was founded in the Year 744. by S. Boniface, and endowed with great Privileges by several Emperors. The Abbot is Lord of the Town and Country, Primate of all the Abbots in Germany, a Prince of the Empire, and sits in the general Diers at the Emperor's Feet. There are many other Towns in this Territory.

The Monastery of HIRCHFELD stands on the River Fulda, at the distance of 20 Miles from Fuld to the North. It is a very noble Structure, artificially built upon an Arch, supported by 16 Pillars. It was founded by Sturmius, Abbot of Fulda, and a Territory of about 12 Miles extent given to it. Alcuinus, who was Tutor to Charles the Great, was Abbot of this Monastery, and lies buried in its Church. The Revenues of this Abbey have been in the Hands of the Landgrave of Hesse ever since 1606.

The WETERAW, Veteravia, is the general name of the Country lying between Hesse on the North, the River Main on the South, the River Rhine on the West, and the County of Reineck on the East; wherein are contained the Estates of the Counts of Nassau, Solms, and Hanaw, who are constant Confederates for their mutual Defence.

NASSAU, as it is now encreased by the accession of the Counties of Weilburg, Idstein, Wiesbaden, Dillenberg, Beilstein, Geilberg, Sigen, and Hadamars, is bounded on the North by Westphalia, on the East by Hesse and Solms, and on the West by Berg, Trier, and the Rhine. This Country is fruitful in Corn and Pasturage, abounds with Cattle and Venison, and hath Mines of Iron, Lead and Copper. It was at first only a County, but was made a Principality by the Emperor Ferdinand II. Anno 1653. and is subject to its own Princes, a very ancient and honourable Family; from which descended Adolphus, chosen Emperor A. D. 1292. Engelbert, the Seventh Earl of this Family, acquir'd by Marriage the Barony of Breda, and other Estates in the Netherlands; and Henry his Great-grand-son married Claude de Chalons, Sister and Heir to Philibert, Prince of Orange, whose Son Rene, in 1530. succeeded in that Principality; which Honour hath ever since remain'd in this Family. These Princes have in all Ages been celebrated for their Bravery, especially in the last, when they so zealously defended the Belgick States, and by their Courage and Wisdom rescued them from the Spanish Cruelty, and acquitted the Dignity of Hereditary Stadtholder, and Captain General of all the Forces of the United Netherlands: Which great Honours being possess'd by William of Nassau, Prince of Orange, King Charles I. chose him for a Husband to his eldest Daughter Elizabeth; by whom he had Issue William Henry, who married Mary the eldest Niece of Charles the Second, and were both our late King and Queen of Great Britain.

NASSAU, Nassovia, that gives name to this Principality, is a small Town and Castle seated on the River Lohn, 8 Miles from the Rhine to the East, 12 from Coblentz to the South-east, and 35 from Frankfort to the West. It was the usual Seat of the first Branch of this illustrious Family.

Dillemburg stands on the River Dilla, 40 Miles from Nassau to the North-east, and 16 from Marpurg to the West. It is a Town of good Trade, and hath two annual Fairs. Here is a Castle standing on the top of a Hill, which commands the Neighbourhood, and was the Seat of a Branch of the Family of Nassau, who had the Title of Counts of Dillemburg: In it is a large Armory, very compleatly furnish'd.

Sigen, on the River Siege, 18 Miles from Dillemburg, is seated on the top of a rocky Hill, and defended with a strong Wall and regular Fortifications, and gives Name to a County. Near the Town is a Mine of Iron.

Herborn stands upon the River Dilla, but 5 Miles South from Dillemburg; it is a City of pretty good Trade in Woollen Cloths, and hath an University of good Repute, endow'd with the Lands of some dissolved Monasteries, and hath bred some considerable Scholars; particularly, J. Piscator, H. Martinus, G. Passor, and H. Alstedius. This City is wall'd round, and has a Castle.

Hademar, a small Town, the Capital of a Territory which hath the Title of a Principality, stands upon the Lhon, at the distance of 20 Miles from Mentz to the North.

Weilberg, which gives name to another County, stands also on the Lhon, 35 Miles from Nassau to the East.

Wisbaden, the Capital of a County also, stands 5 Miles North from Mentz, and 20 South-east from Nassau; it is an ancient Town, and much frequented by reason of famous Hot Baths in it which give name to the Place.

Idstein, a Town and County, lies next to Wisbaden to the North.

The County of Isenburg lies between Solms on the West, Hanaw on the East, the Lands of the Abbey of Fuld on the North, and Nassau on the South. It is about 20 Miles in length, and 8 or 9 in breadth.

Budingen, the chief Town of it, is about 30 Miles North-east from Francfort. And

The Castle of Ronenburg, a noble old Fort, a few Miles from Gelnhausen, was anciently the place of Residence of the Counts.

It is now defended by strong Walls and modern Fortifications, but was twice taken, viz. in the Year 1631 by the Swedes, and in the Year 1658 by the Germans, after a long Siege both times, and not without Treachery and Stratagem at last.

GELNHAUSEN, an Imperial City, stands in the Limits of this County, on the River Kintzing, 12 Miles North-east from Hanaw, 15 North from Aschaffenburg, and 20 East from Friedburg: It is now but a poor City, though very considerable, and inhabited by many Noblemen and Gentlemen before the German Wars.

CHAP. IV.

FRANCONIA, Franconia.

THE Dutchy of Franconia, call'd by the Germans Frankenland, and heretofore Franconia Orientalis, one of the chief of the ten Circles of the Empire, is bounded on the North by Thuringen and Hessen, on the South by Schwaben, on the East by the Palatinate of Bavaria, and on the West by that of the Rhine; extending from North to South about 130 Miles, and from East to West 140. The Soil of it in some parts is mountainous and barren, but in others very fruitful in Corn, Wine, Liquorice, Saffron and Fruits: Here are also several Forrests, well stockt with Game, and Rivers abounding with Fish. This Province is suppos'd to have been the ancient Seat of the Franks or French, from whence they set forth under Pharamond, to their Conquest of Gaul; and that the famous Salique Law was here made upon the Banks of the River Sala: Besides which, the chief Rivers are the Main, the Tauber, the Rednitz, the Pegnitz, and the Altmutz. Several Sovereign Princes have the Dominion of this Country which is the Reason that several Religions are predominant in several parts; but the Lutherans are most numerous.

Franconia hath these States and Chief Towns following.

The Imperial Cities of

Francfort,
Nuremberg,
Regensburg,
Schweinfurt,
Weinsheim, Weissemburg.

WURTZBURG, Herbipolis, is the Capital of Franconia, and seated on the Banks of the River Main, at the distance of 80 Miles from Mentz, and 60 from Francfort to the East, 80 from Cassel to the South, 40 from Bamberg to the West, and 30 from Regensburg to the North. The City is divided into two parts by the River, which are again joyn'd by a fair Bridge; besides the Main several little Brooks run thro' the Streets, and pleasantly water the Town. It is adorn'd with an University, and one of the richest and most magnificent Hospitals of Europe, and defended by a strong Castle, built on a Hill, which is joyn'd to the Town by a Wall, flank'd by four Bastions. This was formerly an Imperial City, but has been subjected to the Bishop. To St. Burchard, the first Bishop of this See, the Emperor Charlemaign granted the Country of Francia Orientalis, upon which account his Successors assum'd the Title of Dukes of Franconia. This Prelate is very Potent, being Secular as well as Spiritual Lord of 400 Villages and Towns, and able to raise an Army of 15000 Men. He judges Causes, and condemns Criminals, in token whereof on solemn occasions he hath a naked Sword born before him.

FRANCFORT, Francfurtum aut Francfordia, being the Foord of the Franks, and heretofore Heleopolis: Now commonly for distinction call'd Francfurtum ad Moenum. Is seated on both sides the Main, if the Suburb of Saxenhausen on the South-side of the River be consider'd as part of it, that as well as the City being strongly fortify'd with Bastions, large Moats, Counterscarps, and other Outworks; and also joyn'd to the City by a Bridge, which is a noble Work, being built of Stone, and compos'd of many Arches. It is a large, populous, rich and well traded City, Imperial and Free, and govern'd by its own Consuls, Senators and Sheriffs, chosen by the Trades-men. In the Church of St. Bartholomew here the Election of the Emperor is made, being expressly so ordain'd in the Golden Bull, or Grand Charter of Germany, made by the Emperor Charles IV. Which Golden Bull is also it self laid up in the Town-house of this City. Here is also an Imperial Palace, call'd the Brunsfeld, a Mansion-house of the Knights of the Teutonic Order, which with the Port, the Fortrefs, the Bridge between two Towers, and several Houses of Noblemen, together with the Bridge over the Main above-mention'd, are good Ornaments to the Town. The private Houses are of Wood plaister'd and painted over. Francfort is conveniently seated for Trade; for the Main receives several smaller Rivers, and it self falls into the Rhine about 20 Miles from hence, whereby Goods are easily brought to it, especially at the two great Annual Marts in April and September, when great quantities of all sorts of Commodities, especially Bocks, brought from all parts of Europe are vend'd here, to the great profit of the Town. The Inhabitants are generally of the Lutheran Religion, and were the first that demanded the free Exercise of it; the Refusal of which in the Year 1525 made them revolt against the Clergy and Senate, and chuse themselves new Magistrates: And in 1530. the Augsburg Confession was Establish'd; however other Religions are tolerated; and among the rest, the Jews, who are pretty numerous here, but confin'd to live in one Street, which is lock'd up every Night. A Monument is to be seen here of a very Notorious Fact that three of the Nation were guilty of, for which they were ty'd up in Sacks and thrown into the Main, and a Memorial of their lewd Action painted over one of the Gates. Francfort stands in the Latitude of 50 deg. and in the Longitude of 28 deg. 10 min.

Aschaffenburg on the North-side of the Main, with the Counties Reineck and Lohn, are reckon'd part of this Circle, but belonging to the Archbishop of Mentz. They are already spoken of in the account of that Electorate.

NUREMBERG, or NURNBERG, Nuremberga, aut Noricorum Mons, one of the largest, richest and most populous Cities of Germany, stands at the bottom of a Hill near the Confluence of the Rivers Rednitz and Pegnitz, at the distance of 55 Miles from Wurtzburg to the East, 40 from Bamberg to the South, as many from Ingolstadt to the North, and 50 from Ratisbon to the North-West. It is a very considerable Place on account of its two Annual Fairs, its Traffick and Manufactures, the Clocks and Small-Wares made here being especially admir'd. The Houses are all built of Free-Stone, and 4 or 5 Stories high; the Streets are large, and the Publick Places very regular: The Town-house, or Guild-hall, is very magnificent: Here are 11 Stone Bridges over the Pegnitz, whereof that of one Arch is most artificially and admirably built. The other publick Works are 12 Fountains, 26 Wells, and a large Arsenal, containing 300 Pieces of Canon, and Arms for 1500 Men, a strong Castle, and 6 Gates, each defended with a large Tower. In this City the Emperor is oblig'd to hold the first Diet after his Coronation, and for that purpose, the Regalia or Imperial Ornaments, viz. the Imperial Crown of Charlemaigne, the Dalmatica, or Mantle of the same Charles, together with his Cloak, Sword, Belt, Gloves, &c. are here laid up. It was made an Imperial City by the Emperor Frederick Barbarossa, and purchas'd its Liberty of Frederick I. Elector of Brandenburg; and it is now govern'd by its own Senators. The Inhabitants are of the Lutheran Religion, the Roman Catholicks having only one Church. A Peace was concluded here between the Princes of Germany in the Year 1649.

The City of Nuremberg hath a Territory belonging to it of about 20 Miles extent, wherein about 15 Miles to the South stands Altorf, a small Town, but made considerable by an University in it, first establish'd in 1578. but improv'd in 1623. and does now contain at least 200 Students.

BAMBERG, Bamberga, aut Babanberga, took its Name from Baba, the Daughter of the Emperor Osbo. It stands about 40 Miles from Wurtzburg to the East, and 30 from Nuremberg to the North, in a Country abounding with rich Fruits and Plants, and is water'd by the River Rednitz, which a little below falls into the Main. It was formerly Imperial and Free, but now subject to its Bishop, who depends on no Metropolitan but the Pope, and is not only Lord of this See (which is 60 Miles in length, and 30 in breadth) but also of divers Mannors in Carinthia, and the Castles of Cronach and Forkeim, besides several Royalties elsewhere, whereby he has the Honour to have 4 of the Electors, viz. the King of Bohemia, and the Electors of Bavaria, Saxony and Brandenburg, his Dependents for some parts of their Estates. The Bishop's Palace here is a splendid Building, and adorn'd with fair Gardens and Orchards: The Cathedral Church has a high Steeple Steeple with 4 Spires, which, with the Jesuits Church and the Castle, are worth a Traveller's View.

MERGENTHEIM, or MARIENDAL, the Capital of the small Territory of the Great Master of the Teutonic Order, and the usual Place of his Residence, is a small Town, and not very considerable. It stands upon the River Golach, 20 Miles South-West from Wurtsburg.

OHNSPACH, or ANSPACH, Onoldium, and Onspachium, is the Capital of a Marquisate of pretty large extent, which belongs to a Prince of the Family of Brandenburg; it is fortify'd, and hath a Castle, situate about 25 Miles from Nuremberg to the West, and 20 from Rotemberg to the East.

The Bishoprick of AICHSTADT lies between the Marquisate of Ohnspach and the Burgraviate of Nuremberg on the N. the County of Oeting and Dutchy of Newburg on the S. and the Palatinate of Bavaria on the E. It extends about 30 Miles from E. to W. and in some parts of it 15 or 16, in others not above 7 or 8 from N. to S. The Bishop is Temporal as well as Spiritual Lord of it; and the chief City whence it is nam'd stands upon the River Aemul, 35 Miles S. from Nuremberg, and 8 or 9 N. from the Danube.

ROTEMBURG, Rotemburgum, a Free Imperial City, seated in the Limits of the Marquisate of Ohnspach upon the River Tauber, 20 Miles from Ohnspach, 30 from Nuremberg to the West, and 40 from Wurtzburg to the South. It obtain'd its Freedom of the Emperor Frederick I. in the Year 1163.

WINTZHEIM, another small Imperial City, stands also in this Marquisate upon the River Aisch, about 16 Miles North from Rotemburg, and 20 North-West from Ohnspach.

The small County of LEWNSTEIN lies also South from Holach, and West from Limpurg.

The County of WERTHEIM lies on both sides the Main, West from the Bishoprick of Wurtzburg; 'tis of about 20 Miles extent, of a square Form, and a very fruitful Country, affording, besides Corn and Pasture, very good Wines, the making whereof is the chief Trade of the Town, which stands on the Banks of the Main, where it receives the Tauber, and is distant 20 Miles from Wurtzburg to the West.

REINECK County lies on the North of Wertheim.

ERPACH, the Capital of another County, which lies on the South-side of the Main, stands 30 Miles South-East from Francfort, and 20 North from Heidelberg; it is a Place of no great Trade, nor considerable, but for giving Title to a Count of the Empire.

SCHWEINFURT, an Imperial Free City, is seated on the Main, 30 Miles from Wurtzburg to the N. E. and near as many from Bamberg to the East. This City suffer'd much in the German Wars, having been taken by the Swedes, and afterwards seiz'd by the Marquess of Brandenburg in 1553. but being besieg'd the next Year, he plunder'd and deserted it.

The Marquisate of CULEMBURG is reckon'd part of this Circle, tho' it be subject to the Duke of Brandenburg. It is a Country of 50 Miles in length from North to South, and 30 Miles in breadth, lying next the Bishoprick of Bamberg to the East: The chief Town, which gives name to the County, is seated on the Main, 25 Miles East from Bamberg.

The RIVER MAIN arises in two Springs in Munt Fichtelberg on the East-side of this Marquisate, which unite near the Town of Culembach, and flowing Westward, receives the Rednitz, Warres, and other Rivers; and in a Serpentine course runs thro' the middle of Franconia, passing by Schweinfurt, Wurtzburg, Wertheim, Aschaffenburg and Francfort; and falls into the Rhine a little above Mentz, after a course of 110 Miles: Its breadth at Francfort is reckon'd by English Travellers about half as much as the Thames at London.

CHAP. V.

The PALATINATE of the RHINE, Palatinus Rheni, aut Palatinus Inferior; in the German Language, Pfaltz auf Rhein, or Nider Pfaltz.

THE Palatinate of the Rhine, call'd the Lower Palatinate, to distinguish it from that of Bavaria, is bounded on the North by the Bishoprick of Mentz, on the South by Alsatia, on the East by Franconia and Wirtemberg, and on the West by Lorrain and the Bishoprick of Triers: It extends from East to West almost 100 English Miles, and from North to South about 60. The Air is Healthful, and the Soil Fruitful, the Country abounding in delicious Wine, besides Corn and Pasture: Here are also some Mines of Agate and Jasper, and even Gold is found among the Sands of the Rhine, whereof particular Ducats are Coin'd. Besides the Rhine, which by passing thro' it gives name to this Region, the Neckar, a very considerable River, waters the Eastern part of it, and having pass'd by Heidelberg, falls into the Rhine at Manheim; and several other smaller Rivers are found in several Parts of it.

The Dominions of this Elector were much larger before Frederick V. (who Marry'd the Daughter of King James I.) was dispossest'd of them by the Emperor in 1620. and his Estates, together with the Electoral Dignity, given to the Duke of Bavaria: Afterwards at the Treaty of Munster in 1648. he obtain'd this part to be restor'd, but that of the Upper Palatinate he could not recover, nor prevail that the Duke of Bavaria should be divested of the Electoral Dignity; however to make him some Amends, he was chosen a-new, and made an Eighth in the Electoral College, with the Title of Elector Palatine of the Rhine. But Providence has so brought it about, that now at last his Posterity have it restor'd, in the Person of John-William-Joseph, upon the Deprivation of Maximilian Duke of Bavaria, A. 1708.

The chief Cities and Towns in this Electorate, are, { Heidelberg, Capital.

HEIDEL

HEIDELBERG, Heidelberg aut Eldelberga, the Capital of this Palatinate, is seated on the Banks of the River Neckar in a fruitful Plain at the foot of a Mountain near the Frontiers of Schwaben, at the distance of 40 Miles from Frankfurt to the South, 60 from Wurstburg to the South-West, 10 from Manheim and the Confluence of the Rhine and Neckar to the East, and 12 from Spire to the North-East. It is a large and flourishing City (at least was so before the French destroy'd it) populous and rich; it was much enlarg'd, and a Suburb call'd Bergheim added to it, in 1392. It is beautify'd with a magnificent Castle wherein the Elector keeps his Court; and adorn'd with an University, planted by Rupert Prince Elector Palatine, in 1387. which hath been happy in the Education of the famous Philologer Janus Gruterus, and other considerable Men. The Church of the Holy Ghost was remarkable for the famous Library kept in it, which in the Wars with Spain was transported to Rome for Preservation. The Wine of this place is valued, and the great Tun is much talk'd of, for it's stupendious Bulk, containing no less than 200 Tun of English measure: It stands (if the French did not destroy it) near the Palace. This City was part of the Bishoprick of Worms before the year 1225. at which time Lewis I. Elector Palatine was invested with the Castle and old Town, to which his Successors added the New Suburb, as is already said. It has suffer'd much by Wars, having been laid waste by the Spaniards and others during the German Wars in the last Century; but more so in the late War, for the French have twice taken it, viz. in 1683 and 1692: and most barbarously burnt and destroy'd it.

Manheim, seated at the Confluence of the Rhine and Neckar 10 Miles West from Heidelberg, was strongly fortify'd by Frederick IV. in 1606. but taken and dismantl'd by the Spaniards in 1622. afterwards re-fortify'd by the last Elector, and had besides the Citadel several Outworks and a small Citadel on the Rhine, when the French attack'd and took it in 1688. who being forc'd to abandon it in 1689. destroy'd all the Fortifications.

Frankendal is seated on the West-side of the Rhine, 10 Miles from Manheim, and 20 from Heidelberg to the West. It was at first a Monastery only, but encreas'd to a fair City, and fortify'd by Frederick III. Elector Palatine in 1571. afterwards taken by the Spaniards and kept by them till the Westphalian Treaty. when it was restor'd to the Elector. It hath suffer'd the same Fate as Manheim in this War, having been taken and burnt by the French in 1689.

Alzheim or Aitzey, the Capital of one of the Bailiwicks, or Ampten and the ancient Seat of the Elector, stands 25 Miles North-West from Frankendal: It is a good Town, with a Castle and Walls.

Creutznach is a good Town, with a Castle seated upon a Hill, and nam'd Kansenberg: The Town stands upon the River Nabe, about 18 Miles North-West from Alzheim. The Jurisdiction of it is divided between this Elector, the Marquess of Baden, and the Prince of Simmeren.

The Castle of Eberimberg, remarkable for the Siege it sustain'd in 1692. stands on the Nabe, not above 8 or 9 Miles East from Creutznach.

Keiser-Lautern, call'd Caselouvre by the French, stands upon the River Lautern near the Borders of the Duchy of Zweibruggen, 30 Miles South from Creutznach, and 35 East from Manheim. It is a small City, formerly Imperial, but exempted in 1402. and now subject to this Elector.

The Bishoprick of Spire lies on both sides the Rhine, in length from East to West about 40 Miles, and in breadth about 15. It is surrounded by the Dominions of the Elector Palatine, and lies next to the Bailiwick of Heidelberg to the South.

The Bishoprick of Worms lies also on both sides the Rhine, and encompass'd by the Palatinate; it is small, being hardly 2 Miles in length, and about 7 or 8 in breadth. It lies North-West from Heidelberg.

The Duchy of Zweibruggen is stretch'd out from North-East to the South-West about 40 Miles in length, and in breadth in some places 25, in others not above 8 or 9. It lies next to the Palatinate to the South-West and is possess'd by a Prince of that Family.

SPIRE, Spira, aut Noviomagus, Numetum & Nemetas, is a large rich and populous City, seated on the East-side of the Rhine, where it receives the small River Sparbach, being almost in the midst between Mentz to the North, and Strasburg to the South, at the distance of about 50 Miles from both, and about 12 or 14 from Heidelberg to the South-West. Tho' it be the Seat of the Bishop, it is not subject to him, but Imperial and Free, under the Protection of the Elector Palatine. The Cathedral Church is a very stately Building, and hath in it the Monuments of no less than eight Emperors that have been bury'd there; but the private Buildings are not very good. In this City the Imperial Chamber, or supreme Court of Judicature in Germany, was establish'd in the Year 1530. and was constantly held here till the Year 1689. when it was remov'd to Wetlar in Hesse, because this Place was taken by the French, and most inhumanly burnt and destroy'd. The Chamber was the chief Support of the Town; so that at present it must needs be in a very ordinary Condition.

Philipsburg, Philoburgum, formerly a small Town call'd Udensheim which was encompass'd with Walls, by Gelberd Bishop of Spire, in 1343. is now one of the strongest Towns of Germany. In 1615. Philip Christopher of Soetern, Bishop of Spire and Trier, repair'd and fortify'd it with 7 Royal Bastions, and gave it its present Name. The Castle was founded in 1513. by George Count Palatine of the Rhine and Bishop of Spire, repair'd in 1570 by Bishop Marquard de Hattenstein, and is a stately Building. The Town is seated in a Plain environ'd with Marshes, which adds much to its Strength; however it was often taken and regain'd in the German Wars. viz. by the Swedes, in 1634 by Famine; by the Austrian Troops the Year after, by Stratagem; and by the French by Storm, in 1644, which last bestow'd great Cost in fortifying it, adding many Out-works according to the Modern manner, and kept it till 1676, when the Germans regain'd it after a Siege of four Months, and it was granted to them by the Peace of Nimwegen. But they lost it again in the late War, which War began with the Siege of this place by the Dauphin of France, to whom it was surrender'd on the first of November, 1688 and not restor'd till the conclusion of the Peace in 1697. It stands on the East side of the Rhine, 20 Miles from Heidelberg, and 8 or 9 from Spire to the South.

WORMS, Vormacie, olim Borbetomagus, & Vangiones, is seated on the Western Bank of the Rhine. 25 Miles North from Spire, and as many South from Mentz. It was formerly a Metropolitan See, but afterwards reduc'd to an Episcopal, under the Archbishop of Mentz. It was made a free and Imperial City by the Emperor Henry II. and is now govern'd by its own Magistrates under the Protection of the Elector Palatine. It was often taken and retaken during the German Wars, and was taken and burnt by the barbarous French in the Year, 1689.

WEYBRUGGEN, in French DEUX-POINTS, lat. Bipontium, so call'd from Bridges over two small Rivers whereon it stands, at the distance of 45 Miles from Worms and 50 from Spires to the West, as many from Trier to the East, and 40 from Mentz to the S. is the Capital of a Dutchy, whose Duke Charles Gustavus succeeded in the Crown of Sweden, A. 1654. It is a small but well built City, formerly fenced with a good Fort, which is now demolish'd, the whole Town having suffer'd much during the German War.

SIMMEREN, Simmera, the chief Town of the lower County of Sponheim, and the Capital of a Territory, formerly govern'd by its own Prince, but now subject to the Elector Palatine, with the Title of a Dutchy, is seated at the distance of 30 Miles from Mentz, to the West, and 25 from Coblentz to the South.

BIRKENFELD, Bircofelda, is a small Town, with the Title of a Principality and Dutchy, seated in the upper County of Sponheim and District of Hundsrug near the River Nab, at the distance of 28 Miles from Trier to the East, and 30 from Zweibrucken to the North-East. It is wall'd and hath a Castle, wherein died Charles III. Duke of Lorrain, on the 17th. Sept. 1675.

LAUTERACH, is seated on the River Lauter, 40 Miles West from Worms, and 18 from Zweibrucken.

LENINGEN, the Capital of the County of Linage, stands 18 Miles North-West from Spire, and about 20 South-w^t from Worms.

RHINGRAVESTINE, stands between Creutznach and Eberemburg, 35 Miles almost North-west from Worms.

REIPOLSKIRK is 30 Miles West from Worms, and the Capital of another small County.

The Hunt's-rug, i. e. Dog's-back, is a ridge of barren Hills in this Country.

ALSATIA, Alsatia, in High Dutch Elsalz.

ALSATIA is the Country of the ancient Triboces, and one of the four Landgraviates of the Empire, but is at present entirely subject to the French, having been conquer'd by the present King. It is seated on the Banks of the Rhine, and bounded on the East by that River, the Dutchy of Wurtemberg, and some other parts of Schwaben; on the West by a Ridge of Mountains that divide it from Lorrain; on the North by the Palatinate; and on the South by Swisserland. Its Extent is from North to South 100 English Miles, and from East to West, comprehending Brigaw, 40 Miles, but in the other parts not above 25. The soil is fruitful in Corn, Pasture, Wine and Fruits; and in the Mountains Mines of Copper and Lead. Alsatia was erected into a Landgraviate by the Emperor Otho III. and some time possess'd by the House of Austria; but being conquer'd by the French, was granted to them by the Pyrenean Treaty 1659. It is divided into the Upper and Lower, to which is usually added Suntgaw, Brigaw and Ortnow. The whole contains 46 Towns and 50 Castles, besides a great many Villages. To which may be added :
The County of Montbeliard.

STRASBURG, Argentoratum, Argentina, aut etiam Strasburgum, stands upon the Confluence of the two Rivers Ill and Breusch, which a little below falls into the Rhine, and is distant 50 Miles from Spire, and 14 from Haguenaw to the South, 30 from Brifac, and 55 from Basil to the North, and about 70 from Nancy, in Lorrain to the East. It is seated in the midst of a pleasant Plain, and is a large, populous and rich City; formerly Imperial, and govern'd by its own Magistrates, from the time of its embracing the Reformation, Anno, 1529, till the French took it in 1682, who having alter'd the Government, has much injur'd the Trade of it. It is an Episcopal See under the Metropolitan of Mentz, and adorn'd with many stately Buildings, among which the Townhouse, Arsenal and Cathedral Church are chiefly remarkable; especially the last, the Tower whereof is built in form of a Pyramid 574 Foot high; and hath in it a Clock, exceedingly admir'd for its curious Workmanship.

Workmanship, shewing not only the Hour of the Day; but the course of the Sun, Moon, and all the other Planets. Here is an University, which was founded in the Year 1535, and a considerable Library: Tho' the French be Masters, the Inhabitants are generally of the Lutheran Religion. The old Wall and Fortifications were formerly of no great Strength; but since the French have had it, they have made it very strong by the addition of many new Works and a Cittadel, with a great Horn-work for its defence that end of the Town next the Rhine, together with Forts in some Islands in the Rhine, which secure the Bridge and command the Passage of the River; which will be better understood by this Draught which, because this City was surrender'd to the French by the Treaty of Ryswyck, we have added. By the Treaty the Fort Keil, here also shewn on the other side the River, was granted to the Confederates.

Zabern, Saverne or Elfsabern, is next to Strasbourg, the chief Town of the Lower Alsace; it is situate 15 Miles North-west from Strasbourg, and defended by a strong Castle at the top of a Rock, wherein formerly the Bishops of Strasbourg kept a Court of Judicature.

Hagenau, an Imperial City before the French Wars, is seated between the two Rivers, Motter and Sorne, about 6 Miles from the Rhine to the West, and 14 from Strasbourg to the North, and encompass'd with thick Woods, and at some distance with Corn-fields and fruitful Vineyards. It was formerly the Seat of the Supreme Court of Judicature for Alsace, and had in it a fair Palace of the Emperors built by Frederick Barbarossa, in 1164. It was taken by the French, and granted to them by the Treaty of Munster, and hath been strongly fortified.

Fort Louis stands in an Island of the Rhine, almost over against Baden, and about 10 Miles East from Hagenau. It is small, but very strong, and was built by the present French King, for the better security of this part of the Country, and the command of the River, Weissenburg was also an Imperial City, and much honour'd by Dagobert King of France, who presented them with a large Crown of Silver: But now subject to the French. It is situate on the River Lutra, about 10 Miles West from the Rhine, 16 North from Hagenau, and 25 South-West from Spire.

Landau is seated on the Borders of the Palatinate, 10 Miles North from Weissenburg, and 15 West from Spire. It was granted to the French by the Treaty of Munster, and is now in their Possession, and very strongly fortified.

In 1683, the French lodg'd here the Plunder they took out of most of the Towns of the Palatinate, which by accidental Fire was all destroy'd the next Year.

Rosheim stands 12 Miles West from Strasbourg.

Schlestadt, formerly a free and Imperial City, but taken by the French, and granted to them by the Westphalian Peace, is seated 20 Miles from Strasbourg to the South, and 12 from Colmar to the North. The Fortifications were demolish'd by the Confederates, in 1673, but since rebuilt by the French, and is now a place of good Strength.

Colmar, once an Imperial and very populous City, but by the German Civil War, and the French Armies almost quite depopulated, stands in a plain fruitful Country, about 8 Miles West of Brisac, and 30 South from Strasbourg.

Pfirt, call'd Ferette by the French, is a small City, but the Capital of Suntgow; it stands near the source of the River Ill, 30 Miles South from Colmar, and about 10 West from Basil. It was granted to the French by the Treaty of Westphalia, and is now possess'd by them. About 10 or 12 Miles from hence to the North-East, and not above 2 or 3 from Basil, stands Huningen, a very strong Fortress, built not many Years since by the French King; it stands on the West side of the Rhine, about 2 or 3 Miles North of Basil, and 20 South of Brisac: It is large enough to hold a Garrison of 4 or 5000 Men, and is compos'd of five Bastions; and had a Magazine vaulted with Brick so strongly, that it is proof against Bombs; besides the Tenails, Ravelines, Counterscarp and double Ditch, two large Horn-works to the North and South, and a third on the other side of the River; and from the Ramparts go Vaults to the Horn-works for conveying Men to them. But all this is destroy'd, as was agreed by the Treaty of Ryswyck.

Mulhauser,

Mulhausen, an Imperial City in Alliance with the Swiss Cantons, stands 12 Miles North from Pfirt, and near 20 South from Colmar.

Befort or Beford, formerly the Capital of this County, but was almost ruin'd by the Wars, and is now a small City of no great Note. It stands 20 Miles West from Pfirt, and as many from Mulhausen.

Adjoyning to Alsace, and Westward of Suntgaw, lies the County of .

MONTEBELGART, formerly belonging to the Dukes of Wurtemberg, but now to France: The Capital City is of the same Name, seated in a very pleasant and wholsom Air, 40 Miles South of Colmar, and 35 from Basil, and about 18 from Befort to the West. See the Account of it in the Franche Comte.

Brifac, the Capital of the Brifgaw, stands on the East-side of the Rhine, 30 Miles South from Strasbourg, 24 North from Basil, and 8 West from Colmar. It stands on the Banks of the River, and is joynd to two or three Islands in it, by Bridges, which, as well as the Town, are fortify'd. It was heretofore an Imperial City, but was subjected to the House of Austria about 1330. and taken by the French in 1638. To whom it was granted by the Westphalian Treaty, and had ever since been subject till the Year 1700. when, in pursuance of the Treaty of Ryswick, it was restor'd to the Emperor, after the fair Stone Bridge over the Rhine was destroy'd. It stands upon a Hill, in a plain level Country, and hath a strong Citadel standing in an Island on the West-side of the Town. The Fortifications are exceeding strong; on the West-side are 8 Bastions fill'd with Earth and fac'd with Brick, and before every Curtine stands a Half-Moon; the Ditch is broad, and the Counterescarp, Cover'd-Way and Palisado, are well executed. The Fortifications are a League in Circumference, and the Place capable of garrisoning 9 or 10000 Men.

Friburg stands on the East-side of the Rhine, 10 Miles from Brifac, in a fertile Plain, at the foot of the Mountains, and on the small River Treiffheim, that falls into the Rhine; it is a good City, and the Seat of an University, which was first establish'd by Albert, Arch-Duke of Austria, in 1450. It was thrice taken by the Swedes in 1632, 1634, and 1638. and twice by the French, viz. 1671, and 1677. and surrender'd to them by the Treaty of Nimeguen, and since very strongly fortify'd: But by the Treaty of Ryswick it was restor'd to the Emperor.

S C H W A B E N, Suevia.

THE Dutchy of Schwaben, or Swabia, in French Scuabe, had its Latin Name Suevia, from some Tribes of the Suevi, that came down from the Northern Parts against Julius Caesar; whose Posterity settling in this and the neighbouring Countries, in time establish'd a powerful State, which was govern'd for some Ages by a Duke, who was at first elected by the People: But about the beginning of the XIIth Age 'twas made Hereditary to Frederick the Ancient; in whose Family it continu'd till about the Year 1268. when Conradine dying without Issue, this Country was divided between several Princes, Bishops and Free Cities, who have all Sovereign Power in their respective Dominions, viz. the Bishops of Augsburg and Constance, the Duke of Wurtemberg, and the Princes of Hobenzol'eren, Furstemburg and Mindelheim, 8 Counts, 5 Barons, the Grand Master of Malta, 18 Abbots, the Provost Valenhausen, and 34 Imperial Cities.

The Extent of Schwaben from North to South is about 110 Miles, and from East to West 130. and its Bounds are, the Palatinate and Franconia on the North, Switzerland on the South, Alsatia on the West, and Bavaria on the East. The Air of it is Healthy, and the Soil is generally Fruitful; for tho' some Parts be Mountainous and Woody, yet do the Hills afford Mines of Copper, Silver and other Metals, and the Forests much Pine and Fir-Timber, besides great store of Game: And the other Parts of the Country yield great store of Corn, Wine and Flax. The chief River is the Danube, which hath its Source here, in the Principality of Furstemburg, as hath also the Neckar near the same place. The chief Employment of the Inhabitants is making of Linnen Cloth, whereof they vend great Quantities to other Nations.

The Marquifate of BADEN is extended along the Eastern Banks of the Rhine, over against Alsace, beginning a little below Philipsburg on the North, and paſſing on in a narrow Tract to the height of Baſil in the South, except where it is diſjoyn'd by the Intervention of Briſgaw. It is an exceeding fertile and populous Province producing Corn, Wine, Hemp, Fiſh, Fowl and Veniſon, in great plenty: It is alſo ſo remarkable for Baths and mineral Waters, that the chief Town, and the whole Country hath its Name from them. The Dominion is divided between two Princes of the ſame Family, who are diſtinguiſh'd by the Names of the chief Town of the 2 Marquifates, Baden and Durlach, whereof Baden of Baden is a Roman Catholick, and Baden Durlach a Lutheran.

BADEN, Bada, aut Therma Inferiores, ſtands a German League, or 4 Engliſh Miles Eaſt from the Rhine, 60 from Briſac to the North, and 25 from Heidelberg to the South upon a hilly craggy Ground, ſo that the Streets lie very uneven. It is famous and exceedingly reſorted unto for its hot Baths, whereof there are many ſpring in the Town, and are reckon'd ſovereign Remedies for the Gout, Cramp, &c. Theſe bringing Nobility and Gentry from all parts of Germany, create a great Trade to the Town, which would be otherwiſe not very conſiderable. The Marquels hath his Palace here; and, for the Security of the Town, there is a good Fortreſs built on an adjacent Hill.

DURLACH, Durlacum, ſtands 12 Miles North from Baden, 20 South from Heidelberg, and 2 Leagues Eaſt from the Rhine. It is ſeated on the Banks of the River Pfinz, at the foot of the Mountain, on the top whereof ſtands a ſtrong Tower. The Streets are ſtrait, and the Buildings fair, and the Marquels's Palace remarkably Magnificent, far exceeding that of Baden, and even capable of receiving a great Prince's Retinue.

Pfirtzheim, is a ſmall City ſeated on the River Ens, where it receives the Nagold, about 22 Miles South from Durlach, between pleaſant Meadows and Corn-fields on one ſide, and Mountains and Woods on the other. It was formerly ſubject to the Duke of Wurtemberg, but now belongs to the Marquels of Durlach.

Badenweiler, the chief City of that part of Baden that lies South of Briſgaw, ſtands about a League from the Rhine, and in the midway between Briſac to the North, and Baſil to the South, about 15 miles from each. It is famous and much frequented for its hot Baths, which are of great Virtue, but not quite ſo valuable as thoſe of Baden above-mention'd.

It is Imperial, but not perfectly free, for Charles V. subjected it to the Austrian Family for refusing the Terms concerning Religion tender'd to them; and the Emperor still maintains a Governour and Garrison here, under the Title of Protector. However, the City enjoys many Privileges, is a populous and rich Place, and hath a considerable Trade by means of the Lake. after Christ, being govern'd by their proper Kings at first, and Dukes afterwards, to the time of Charles the Great, who conquer'd Tassilo, made himself Master of the Country and erected it into a Kingdom, in which State it lasted for about 100 Years, when Lodowick their King dying without Issue, the Bavarians chose Arnolph, a Descendent from Charlemain, to be their Governor; who contented himself with the Title of Duke, as all the Princes of it have since done; among whom, Maximilian was the first that had the Electoral Dignity, which was conferr'd on him, together with the upper Palatinate, by the Emperor Ferdinand II. A. D. 1623. in reward for the Service he did him in his War against Frederick V. Elector Palatine, chosen King of Bohemia.

PASSAU, Passavia aut Patavia, olim Batava Castra, stands on both sides of the Danube, where it receives the Inn on one side, and the Ilz on the other, at the distance of 60 miles from Ratisbon to the East, and not above 10 from the Borders of Austria. It is a large City, Imperial and Free, but under the protection of its Bishop, who is a Prince of the Empire. The Rivers above-mentioned divide it into three parts, viz. Passau it self, which stands on the South-side of the Danube, and the West-side of the Inn; Innsstadt, on the other side of the Inn; and Ilsstadt, on the other side the Danube, and on the Banks of the Ilz. The private Buildings here are of Wood, but the Churches are fair and stately, especially the Cathedral, which is dedicated to S. Stephen. The Bishop's Palace, and the Castle on a Mountain near Ilsstadt, are handsom Buildings. The City is very strong, being fenced on all sides with Rocks and Rivers, and hath been famous by a Peace concluded in it in 1552 between the Emp. Charles V. and the Protestant Princes, by which the Lutherans were granted the free Exercise of their Religion.

The Bishop is Lord of a Country of about 20 miles extent, lying on the North-side of the Danube, between the Palatinate and Austria, in which stand two strong Castles, nam'd Obernberg and Ebersberg.

NEUBURG, Neuburgum aut Novoburgum is seated on the South-side of the Danube, at the distance of 45 miles from Ratisbon to the West, and 55 from Ulm to the East, 25 from Augsburg to the North, and 40 from Nuremberg to the South. It is a place of good Trade for Wines, and well fortified; but chiefly remarkable for being the Capital of a Duchy, erected about 150 Years ago, and given to a Branch of the Bavarian Family, whose Descendent Philip William succeeded in the Palatinate of the Rhine, A. D. 1685. and hath been signally fortunate in an illustrious Issue; for of his twelve Children, he has married three Daughters to the present Emperor, King of Spain, and King of Portugal, and a fourth to the Prince of Poland; his eldest Son, the present Elector Palatine, married the Emperor's Daughter; his second Son is Grand Master of the Teutonic Order; his third Son married the Princess Radzeville, the Marquess of Brandenburg's Widow; his fourth Son is Dean of Augsburg and President of the Chapter of Constance; and his fifth Son is Bishop of Breslaw. A stately Palace, built in this City by Otto Henry its Duke, soon after the Erection of the Duchy, is the usual Seat of this Prince. The extent of his Country is not large: it runs along the Banks of the Danube about 40 miles, but is very narrow. In the extream West part of it stands Laugingen, a strong regular fortified Town belonging to the Duke. It was the Birth Place of the famous Albertus Magnus: The great Church is a fine Building, cover'd with Copper, and has a Tower 300 Foot high. Here is also a Castle and a Bridge over the Danube.

Hochstadt,

Hochstadt, which stands on the Danube, not many miles East from Laugingen, and 12 West from Donawert a well fortified Place with a strong Castle, is also under the Duke of Neuburg, but claim'd by the Bishop of Bamberg. This Place was notable in some degree for a small Defeat the Germans receiv'd from the French near it in 1703. But a place that will be nam'd by all Posterity by whom for ever the Story will be repeated with wonder and applause, for the most glorious Victory here obtain'd by the Confederate Forces, commanded by John Duke of Marlborough and Prince Eugene of Savoy, over the most compleat Army of French and Bavarian Forces, that the great Lewis was ever Master of; The Gens-d'Arms; the Household Troops; the Mousquetaire; and in short the Flower of all the Army France could produce, together with the best Forces the Elector of Bavaria was Master of, were here assembled to conquer Austria; and assur'd themselves of Victory over any Army whatsoever that could be brought against them. But they were convinc'd of their Vanity on Wednesday the 2d. of August, 1704. O. S. and were so entirely Defeated, that there has hardly ever been known a more compleat Victory. The Particulars of this Battle is set down in all the Histories of that Year's Actions.

And altho' it stand in the limits of the next Circle, we are to speak of, namely, Bavaria, yet the Connexion will warrant our naming here.

Eleinheim, a Village only, which is equally Famous, on the same Account, this Place standing on the Flank of the French Army, was crowded by their Soldiers upon the turn of the Battle, and being afterwards surrounded and set on Fire by the Confederates, 10000 Men were forced to surrender Prisoners at Discretion.

Donawert or Thonawert, formerly an Imperial City, stands in the Confines of this Duchy, on the Northern Banks of the Danube, at the confluence of the Leck with it, about 15 or 16 miles West from Neuburg; it is on the Road to Augsburg, and therefore pretty much frequented by Travellers; here is a strong Castle, which is nam'd Schellenberg. This City was divested of its Liberty about the beginning of this Age, for adhering to the Reformed Religion, and is now subject to the Duke of Bavaria.

In the Year 1704, when our English Forces under the Duke of Marlborough, with a Detachment of Dutch under Baron Hompesch, march'd into the Heart of Germany to relieve the Emperor, then in great Danger from the United Forces of France and Bavaria, a most signal Victory was obtain'd at this Place. The Duke of Marlborough understanding that the Elector of Bavaria had sent good part of his Forces to the Schellenberg, a strong Fortrefs not far from this City, which they had extraordinarily Fortified by several new Intrenchments, in order to stop the Course of our Army; set out on the 2d of July at Three in the Morning from Hemeringden a Village about Twenty Miles distant, with 6000 Foot, 30 Squadrons of Horse and 3 Regiments of Imperial Granadiers; and notwithstanding the badness of the Roads, and the difficulty of Passing the River Weytn which lay in their way, all which so Fatigued the Soldiers that it was Six at Night before they could make the Onset; I say, notwithstanding these Inconveniencies his Grace, suitable to the Character of an Englishman, attack'd the Enemies Entrenchments, which they defended very well; and for an Hour and Half as obstinate Fighting on both Sides was maintain'd as was ever seen; but the Intrepidity of the Soldiers, the presence of Mind, Judgment and Activity of the General, render'd the Confederates Victorious, and his Grace that Day gain'd a Glory that will ever shine in History. This Heroick Action, which can never enough be applauded, (and 'tis no small Glory to England that her General effected it) was the Inlet to all the future Successes of that Glorious Year. No what if, or long-reach Politicks, were thrown here in the way to balk the Soldiers Courage, and most happily, no Envy crept into the Breast of one General to supplant the other's Glory, but by the kind Influence of Heaven good Nature reign'd and the Prince of Baden, as well as Baron Hompesch, were content to assist the Duke of Marlborough; and all Fought as those Heroes always do, that resolve to Conquer.

FREISINGEN, Frisinga, olim Frixinum, is seated on the declension of a Hill, in a fertile Country, near the Banks of the River Iser, about 20 miles North from Munich, as many from Landshut to the South-west, and 40 from Neuburg to the South-east. It is a very ancient City, and was made an Episcopal See in the Year 716. the Bishop whereof is Lord of the adjacent Territory. This City was taken and almost entirely destroy'd by the Suedes in 1632. but restor'd in 1639. There is another small Territory lying on the Borders of Bavaria and Tyrol, subject to this Bishop, call'd the County of Werdenfels, from its chief Town, which stands near the River Iser, 45 miles South from Munich.

The Arch-bishoprick of SALTZBURG is a Country of pretty large extent, viz. 70 miles from East to West, and 50 from North to South. It is bounded on the East with Styria and the Upper Austria, on the West with the County of Tyrol, on the North with the Duchy of Bavaria, and on the South with the Duchy of Carinthia, and Bishoprick of Brixen. The Country abounds with Salt, Mines of Copper and Iron, and some of Silver, also great Quarries of Stone: A Mineral Water here, call'd the Gastein-bath, is famous for its Virtue in curing many Distempers. The Arch-bishop is a Prince of the Empire; by his Place Legate to the See of Rome in Germany, and, in the Diet, sits on the first Bench next the Electors. He is one of the richest Prelates of Germany, and Lord of this Country, which hath its Name from Saltzburg, Salisburgum, olim Innavia, seated on the River Saltza, 50 Miles South from Passaw, 60 East from Munich, and 60 from Innspruck to the North-east. It is one of the fairest Cities of Germany, and very well fortified. The Cathedral Church hath been new built in 1628, and is esteemed one of the most magnificent in Europe. The Arch-Bishop's Palace is very stately; it is in a Castle nam'd Mirabel, which stands on a Hill. An University hath been establish'd here not many Years since. In the Church of St. Sebastian, lies buried, the famous Physician and Chymist, Theophrastus Paracelsus. The whole Town is generally well built, and the Inhabitants have a good Trade, which consists chiefly in the Salt produc'd in the neighbouring Pits. The Archiepiscopal Dignity was remov'd from the See of Passaw, and conferr'd on this by Pope Leo III. in 798. and the Bishoprick of Chiamsee incorporated with it to enable the Bishop the better to support the Dignity. This City had the misfortune to be Burnt down in the Year 1195. but it was soon Rebuilt, and now, as we have said, is in a flourishing State.

CHAP. IX.

The Circle of AUSTRIA.

THE Circle of Austria is seated between Bohemia and Moravia on the North, the Dominions of the Republick of Venice on the South, Hungary on the East, and Bavaria on the West, and comprehends the Estates of the Family of Austria viz. Austria, Styria, Carinthia, Carniola, Gilley, Goritz, and Tyrol, and the Bishopricks of Trent and Brixen. The extent of the whole is about 300 miles from East to West, and 200 from North to South. The Soil is fertile, producing Corn, Wine, Pastures and Woods. The Danube passes through Austria; the Drave rises in the Mountains of Brixen, and runs through Carinthia; the Save hath its source in the Mountains in the North-west Borders of Carniola, and passes through that Duchy; the Muer rises in the Confines of Salzburg, runs through Styria, and falls into the Drave a little above Canisja; besides which, a great number of smaller Rivers water the several Provinces of this Circle.

AUSTRIA, which is dignified with the Title of an Arch Duchy, lies on both sides the River Danube for the space of about 60 or 70 Miles from North to South, and 160 from East to West. It was the Pannonia Superior of the Ancients; and its present name of Oestrich or Eastern Kingdom, in Latin Austria, was given by the Franks, because situated Eastward from France. It is a very plentiful Country, affording a great quantity of Wine and Saffron, besides Corn and all other Necessaries for Life in abundance. The Air is not of the wholesomest, the Lower Austria being subject to Infectious Vapours that cause Agues; to prevent which, may be the reason of their much Drinking, which it seems they are notable for, their Neighbours calling 'em Paschaller, or Ransers.

This Province, after the Romans time was part of the Kingdom of Boiarij or Bavarians, afterwards erected into a separate Marquisate by the Emperor Otto I. and the Austrian Family growing powerful, it was honour'd with the Title of Arch-Duchy.

This great Family is, by the German Genealogists, pretended to be deriv'd from the ancient Greek or Roman Heroes. But the first certain Account that is to be found of it, is, That they were Lords of Vindonissa, a City of Switzerland, afterwards Counts of Atemburg, and Earls of Hapsburg; which Honours they had held from Father to Son for 600 Years before Rudolph, Earl of Hapsburg, was advanc'd to the Imperial Throne in 1273. who, being a very brave Prince, rais'd his Family exceedingly. In his time Frederick, Duke of Austria, dying without Issue, Ottocarius King of Bohemia seiz'd upon it, pretending a Right by his Wife, and added to it Carniola and Carinthia, which he bought of Ulric the last Prince of those Provinces; but the Emperor claim'd it as a Fief-Male to return to the Empire, and by Force dispossest Ottocarius, and gave it to his Son Albert, who, by Marriage with Elizabeth, Daughter of Meinard Earl of Tyrol, obtain'd that Earldom and several Estates in Schwaben and Alsacia: By all which Accessions he became powerful enough to contend with the Emperor Adolph, whom he slew in Battle, and caus'd himself to be chosen Emperor; but after he had reign'd 10 Years he was slain. He left behind him six Sons, from whom descended Frederick III. chosen Emperor 1440. Maximilian his Son succeeded him in the Empire, and marry'd Mary Daughter of Charles the Warlike Duke of Burgundy (the richest Heiress of Europe) and thereby acquir'd all Belgium, or the Netherlands. Philip the Son of Maximilian marry'd Joan the Daughter of Ferdinand and Isabel, the first Monarchs of all Spain, and in her Right succeeded in that Kingdom, and began the Spanish Branch of the Austrian Family. Charles succeeded his Father and Grandfather in all their Honours and Estates, so that he was Emperor of Germany, and King of Spain, Naples and Sicily, and Lord of Belgium, besides the Realms of Mexico and Peru in America, with the Duchy of Milan, which were added to Spain in his time. This mighty Prince, after he had reign'd 42 Years, voluntarily resign'd all his Dominions; and after he had given his Son Philip his Kingdoms of Spain, Naples, Sicily, Mexico, with Belgium, &c. and obtain'd his Brother Ferdinand to be chosen Emperor, himself retir'd into a Monastery. Ferdinand was chosen King of Hungary and Bohemia, which, with the Empire, his Successors have ever since enjoy'd. By the means of this Grandeur, the Family of Austria hath obtain'd large Privileges: The Arch-Duke is the first Councillor of the Empire; he can create Barons and Counts all over the Empire: The Princes of this Family cannot be disseiz'd of their Estates, even by the Emperor himself. In case of the failure of the Male-Line, the eldest Daughter may inherit, and her Husband enjoy the Dignity and Privileges of Arch-Duke, &c.

The late Emperor LEOPOLD was the Heir of the German Branch of this great Family, and Inheritor of all its Honours and Estates.

Austria is divided into the Upper and Lower, with respect to the course of the River Danube, being divided by the River Enz.

	In the Lower are these chief Towns,	{	Vienna , Capital.

VIENNA, olim Vindomina & Vindobona, call'd by the Natives WIEN, is the Capital of Austria, and by being the Seat of the Emperor, is esteem'd the Metropolis of Germany; it was originally a Fort of the Romans, and not at all considerable, till Henry Prince of Austria rebuilt it in 1158. It was enlarg'd larg'd, beautify'd and wall'd round in the Year 1192. with the Money that was paid by the English Nation for the Ransom of Richard I. detain'd Prisoner by the Marquess of Austria, in his return from the Holy Land. It is now a very rich flourishing City, and exceeding populous; great numbers of Strangers, besides Natives of other parts of Germany, being brought hither by the Emperor's Court. The Houses are well built of Stone and very high, commonly six Stories, and besides have frequently Cellars sunk four Stories under one another. The Emperor's Palace is a noble piece of Building, but not very large; it consists of two Courts: Over the Entrance are set in Capitals the 5 Vowels, the Exposition of which causes many Conjectures; one that pleases best, is, Austria Est Imperare Orbi Univerſo. The Furniture is very princely. But that which most deserves a Traveller's Sight, are, the Repository or Collection of Rarities of Nature and Art, and the Library; in the former of which are kept a vast number of Curiosities, the bare Catalogue whereof takes up a large Vol. in Fol. Dr. Brown has mention'd several of the most considerable, to which we must refer the Reader. it being too long to set down here. The Library consists of 8 Chambers, which contain a very valuable and numerous Collection of Printed Books, besides a great number of Manuscripts, and is excell'd by no Library of Europe, as containing 80000 Volumes.

This City is the See of a Bishop, who is Suffragan to the Archbishop of Salzburg. The Cathedral Church, dedicated to St. Stephen, is a stately Fabrick; the Windows are of thick painted Glass, which makes the Church somewhat dark; the Belfry is extraordinary, being adorn'd with Statues and fine Embellishments; the Steeple rises in a Spire to the height of 482 Foot (456. according to Dr. Brown) and on the top was set the Turkish Arms, a Star and Crescent, to save it from being destroy'd at the time that Solyman besieg'd this City, which continu'd there till the Year 1683. when, after defeating the Turks that Year, it was taken down. An University is establish'd here, which is endow'd with many Privileges and a fair Revenue, and a great number of Students: It was founded, as some say, by the Emperor Frederick II. and enlarg'd and compleated by Albert III. Duke of Austria, who also obtain'd its Privileges to be confirm'd by the Pope. The Jesuits have two Houses here, which, together with their College and Church, are fine Buildings; as are also the Abbey and Church of St. Gregory.

The Roman Catholick Religion only is here profess'd, which obliges the Protestants to go as far as Presburg to Church. The Jews had formerly a Liberty to Trade here, but of late they have been wholly banish'd.

The Fortification of this City consists of a very strong Wall, wherein are 12 large Bastions, 2 of which are to the Water, and the other to the Land, and deep Ditches: And indeed this Fortification is needful, for it has been besieg'd no less than four times by the Turks. viz. in the Year 1529, by Solyman the Magnificent, with an Army of 200000 Men, who were repuls'd and forc'd to return, after they had given two general Assaults to the Town; in the Years 1532. and 1543. and again in our Days. viz. A. D. 1683. at which time the City was reduc'd to great Extremity, being batter'd by the Enemy's Cannon from the 14th of July to the beginning of September, which they valiantly resisted, under their Courageous Governor Count Staremburg; till John, the late King of Poland, came up with his Army to their Relief, which being joyn'd with the Imperialists, set upon the Turks the 10th of September, and totally routed and destroy'd their Army, which was said to consist of 100000 Men, and took their Cannon, Camp and Baggage, and so rescu'd the City, which was reduc'd to the last Extremity.

The Suburbs, call'd Leopoldstadt, is divided from the Town by a fair Plain of a good breadth, and the River Danube; and before the last Siege was almost as considerable as the Town, being fill'd with the Houses of Nobility and Gentry very magnificently built; but this was quite burnt down in the Siege.

The City stands on the South-side of the River Danube, which running thro' low Grounds, is here divided into several Streams, and makes many Islands, one of which call'd Peters, lies just before the Gates, and is large enough to lodge a considerable Army for their defence; near the Town a small River call'd the Wien falls into the Danube, over which last here is a Bridge. It is distant 26 German Leagues, or 104 English miles from Lintz to the East, 6 Leagues from the Confines of Hungary, and 10 from Presburg to the West, and seated in the Lat. of 48. 20. Long. (reckoning from Teneriff according to the old Maps) 36. 10. but according to Sanſon, 31. 19.

Lintz, Aurelianum, Lyncia or Lyncium, the next considerable City, as being the Metropolis of the Upper Austria, is situate upon the Danube, over which it has a Bridge, 100 miles from Vienna to the West, 30 from Passaw to the East, and 50 from Salzburg to the North East; it stands in a very pleasant Country, and therefore much resorted to by the Nobility, who have their Houses of Pleasure in its Suburbs on the other side the Danube, and in the Neighbourhood. The Emperor has a Palace here, to which he retir'd during the Siege of Vienna in 1683. Dr. Brown says, This is not a great, but very neat City; the whole Town is built of Stone, the Market-place very large, and not a bad House in it; the Castle stands upon a Hill, is very large and of modern Structure. The Imperial Army rendezvous'd here when the Turks came to Vienna in 1532. Here was for some time a Church and University of Lutherans in so flourishing a Condition, that in 20 Years time there were no less than 3000 Counts, Barons and Noblemen had been educated in it; but it was put down by the Austrian Family, when the Emperor Matthias resided here for almost a Year together, A. D. 1614. The Church and the Palace in the City and the Monastery of the Capuchins in the Suburbs, are the things chiefly worth a Traveller's Sight. There are 2 Fairs held here yearly, which brings great resort of People.

Ens, Anasium, Ensum Civitas, a fair strong and well-built City, stands on a River of the same Name, which 2 miles North of it falls into the Danube, and is distant 15 miles from Lintz to the East; this Town was built in the place where formerly stood the City Laureacum, considerable in the Romans time, having been the Seat of some of their Emperors, and since Christianity, was an Archbishop's See; but that City was destroy'd by the Huns, A. D. 903. and this of Ens built, which was formerly govern'd by its Count, till the Emperor Rodolph I. bought it, and annex'd it to the States of Austria.

Steyer, a neat handſom Town at the Conflux of the 2 small Rivers, the Steyer and the Ens, about 10 miles from Ens to the South. It is inhabited by Smiths, Cutlers, and other Iron-workers, who, by the Danube, furnish the neighbouring Parts with their Ware, and much enrich themselves.

Wels a neat Town upon the River Traune, 4 German miles from Linz to the South, not considerable.

Eberditz or Efferding, about 12 miles from Linz to the West, and near the Banks of the Danube, is a strong fortified Town, and defended with 2 Castles, one within the Walls of the Town, and another without which is call'd Schaumburg, and gave Title to a Count of the Family of Fulbach, to whom this Town belonged; but the Count of Staremburg is now Lord of it, his Ancestor having marry'd the Daughter of the last Count Schaumburg, about A. D. 1560.

Freystat, on the North-side the Danube near the borders of Bohemia, is a well-built Town, but not very strong; it stands 25 miles from Linz to the North. A Fair is held here once a Year which lasts 14 Days, and brings great Concourse of People to it.

Newstadt, the chief Town near Vienna of the Lower Austria, is seated on a Bog in the middle of a Plain, at the distance of 30 miles from Vienna to the South; it is fortified with 2 Walls and a Ditch, which makes it so strong that it resisted the main force of the Turks, who were contented to retreat if the Town would give them some Trophy to carry to Constantinople, who thereupon sent them their Whipping-post.

Krems stands on the North-side of the Danube, near a small River of the same Name about 40 miles from Vienna to the West. It is a neat, well-built, walled City, and has a good Trade, especially at 2 Yearly Fairs, which last 14 Days.

Stain is a small City on the North-side of the Danube also, not above 2 miles from Krems to the West, and has a Bridge over the Danube.

Baden, call'd so from the natural Baths that rise here in so many Springs as to supply 2 Baths within the Town, 5 without the Wall, and 2 beyond a Rivulet call'd Swaart, the Waters of which are commended for curing many Distempers, and therefore much resorted to. This Town stands in a Plain about 15 miles from Vienna to the South, and as far from Newstadt to the West.

Tuln is an ancient Town about 20 miles Westward from Vienna, upon a small River of the same Name, which falls into the Danube about 5 or 6 miles below it. The Country about it is reckon'd the fruitfullest and healthiest part of Austria, but the Town however not very well furnish'd with Provisions for Travellers.

Hainburg or Haimburg, Hamburgum Austriae, was anciently the Metropolis of Austria and the Seat of the Dukes, and one of the greatest Mart-Towns in these Parts, but decay'd upon Duke Leopold's removing to Vienna about A. D. 1200. It is situate on the South-side of the Danube, 30 miles East from Vienna, and near the Borders of Hungary, from whence it has been frequently disturb'd by the Rebels of that Country. They have plenty of Wine and Corn, which is now the chief Trade of the Town. There are still to be seen some Remains of strong Walls and Fortifications round the Town.

The Dukedom of STYRIA, call'd in High-Dutch Steiermark, with the County of CILLEY, lies between Austria on the North, Carinthia and Carniola on the South, Hungary and Sclavonia on the East, and Salzburg on the West: Its extent from East to West is about 110 miles, and from North to South in some Parts 30, in others 80 miles. The Soil yields Corn, Wine, Fruits, Mines of Iron and Salt-Springs. Some part of the Country is mountainous and barren, but the Valleys afford Pasture for great Herds of Kine. The Air of the Lower Styria is somewhat unwholsom. The Disease mention'd by Travellers to be found among the People that dwell at the foot of the Alps, viz. a strange Swelling under the Chin, is very frequent here, which grows incredibly large, occasion'd, 'tis judg'd, by drinking Snow-water that comes off the Mountains, which the poorer People are fain to be content with.

Styria is divided, with respect to the course of the River Mur, into the Upper, wherein are,

Fudenburg,
Bruck or Fuch,
Lawben,
Seckaw,
Isenartz,
Gracz Capital,
Rakelsburg,
Pettau,
Marksburg.

The Lower, whereof the chief Towns are,

The Earldom of Cilley lies on the South-side of the River Drave, extending to the Banks of the Save.

Cilley,
Rain.

GRACZ, Gracium, the Capital of Styria, is a neat well-built City, standing in a pleasant and fruitful Country, on the Banks of the River Mur, 80 Miles South from Vienna, 20 from the Drave, and 40 from Cilley to the North, and about 50 from the Borders of Hungary to the West. It is defended by regular Fortifications that render it almost Impregnable, and hath a stately Castle standing on a high Hill, which is a Palace of the Arch-duke, and is adorn'd with fine Furniture, particularly a good Library, and a Repository of Rarities. The Jesuits College here is well endow'd, and hath the Privilege of conferring Degrees, which makes it to be reckon'd amongst the Universities of Germany, and well fill'd with Students.

Judenburg, a handsome and well-built Town, famous for two great Fairs for Cattle yearly held in it. The Duke of Styria has a Palace here, in which his Deputy sometimes resides: It stands on the River Mur, 50 Miles from Gracz to the West, in a very pleasant and fruitful Country.

Lawben is also on the Mur, 25 Miles North East from Judenburg: It is a neat pleasant City, and the Capital of a Barony; but was sold to the Duke of Carinthia in 1246, and fell to the House of Austria with that Duchy. It was taken and plunder'd in 1292, by the Archbishop of Salzburg, then at War with the Duke of Austria.

Bruck or Pruck an den Mur, is an old Town, and has nothing considerable in it, only that the Emperor has sometimes assembled here the State of these three Dukedoms of Styria, Carinthia and Carniola. It stands on the Mur, 25 Miles North-West from Gracz.

Seckaw, a small Cattle on the River Gail, 40 miles from Gracz to the West, and 60 from Stain to the South, is an Episcopal See, erected in 1219, under the Archbishop of Salzburg, who has the Power of Electing and Inveſting, and receiving an Oath of Fidelity of this Bishop; and he has no Voice in the Diet.

Isenartz, famous for Mines and Forges of Iron, (from whence it has its Name) which employ a vast number of Labouring-men, which therefore live here and supply the neighbouring parts with this Metal, and all Germany with Steel. They have an annual Fair for Hemp, Leather, Tallow, and all Necessaries. The Mines were discover'd in A. D. 712, and have been wrought ever since without any sensible Decay. This Town stands near a little River call'd Salzta, that falls into the Enns, is distant 12 Miles from Lawben to the North-West, and 24 from Judenburg to the North-East.

Rakelsburg,

L A U-

LAUBACH, Labacum, ant Labians, the Capital of Carniola. stands on the Banks of a small River of the same Name, which falls into the Save 10 miles below it, and is distant 30 miles from the River Drave to the South, 50 from the Confines of Croatia to the West, and 35 from Trieste upon the Gulph of Venice to the North. It is a well-built City and very populous, the See of a Bishop, hath a large Castle for its defence, but it is commanded by a Hill, and the Town is not very strong; however endured a Siege in 1420 when Frederick III being Crown'd at Aken, his Brother Albert and Count Ulric attack'd this City, but it held out till the Emperor came to its Relief.

Crainburg, seated on the Banks of the Save, 20 Miles from Laubach North-west, and 24 from Clagenfurt to the South-east, on the top of a Hill, and fortified with a strong Castle. The Town has three Churches in it, and in the Suburbs is a Monastery of Capuchins. It once gave Title to a Marquess.

Lack, or Bischofs Lack, is a handsome well built fortified City, standing upon a small River, 10 Miles South from Crainburg and 20 East from Laubach. It is subject to the Bishop of Freyding, to whom the Emperor Henry III gave it, and the Governour of it is his Lieutenant. This Town was plunder'd and burnt in 1451, since when it has been Re-built and better fortified.

Zirknitz, a Town of no great bulk, nor considerable but for the Lake near it, to which it gives name.

This Lake is very wonderful; it is about 4 German Miles in length, and 2 in breadth, and from September to June, is full of Water, but the other six Months is quite dry. In June the Water descends thro' many large Holes in the bottom, (at which time the Country People catch abundance of Fish, by laying Nets over the Holes) leaving the bottom quite dry, so that the neighbouring People sow Corn in it, which they have time to reap, and afterwards to put in their Cattle; and let in the Deers and Hares from the neighbouring Forests, which they Hunt in this Lake, and all before the Water returns; for the Earth is exceeding Prolifick: And in September the Water returns, spouting up with great Violence, and to a great height, out of these Holes, and soon makes that a Sea, that was before a Field for Corn, Pasture and Hunting; and this happens constantly every Year, and at this certain time.

Ober-Laubach, about 16 miles West from the Laubach, already described, and on the same River with that, is considerable by being a Mart for Italian Goods, which are brought hither in great quantities, and sent to all parts of Germany.

Metling, Metulum, the chief Town of the Windschmark, stands on the Frontiers of Croatia, 35 miles South-east from Cilly, and 25 East from the Lake of Zirknitz. It is a Place of no great Consideration: The chief Trade of the Inhabitants lies in Swine, which they fatten in 2 neighbouring Woods of Chestnut-trees and Oaks. In the Year 1431, this Town was surpriz'd by the Turks, and the Inhabitants massacred. And again, in 1578, it was plunder'd by 'em.

Rudolphswarth or Neustadt, stands upon the River Gurk 12 miles North-west from Metling: It is a very ancient Town, and honour'd with great Privileges, which were given them by the Emperor Frederick IV, about the Year 1435, for having oppos'd Albert of Austria and Ulric Count of Cilly. This Town is famous for the best Wine in these Parts.

GORITIA, a small County in Friuli, is subject to the Emperor. The rest of the Province being subject to the Venetians, shall be describ'd with the rest of Italy. The Chief Town is, Gortz or Goritz, seated upon the River Ligonzo, 20 miles from the Gulph of Venice and 15 from Aquileia to the North, 50 from Clagenfurt to the South, and as much from Laubach to the West. The Town is old and by some thought to be the old Roman Noricia or Noricia. Dieterich, King of the Goths, vanquish'd Odeacer King of the Heruli, near this Place. The Slavonian Tongue, spoke in these Provinces, reaches no farther West than this Town, and here the common People speak a corrupt Italian. It was taken by the Venetians in 1608, but regain'd by the Emperor the Year after; and in 1616, they attempted to surprize it, but were forced to retreat.

Trieste, the chief Town of the small Province of Karstia, stands on the Adriaticque Sea, or Gulph of Venice, 30 miles from Aquileia to the East, at the bottom of a Bay, to which it gives Name. It is a small, but strong and populous Place, and a Bishop's See, under the Patriarch of Aquileia; it has a large but unsafe Harbour. The Emperor took this City from the Venetians, A. D. 1507, and has been ever since in possession of it.

S. Piet am Flaum, tho' situate in Istria, which is accounted part of Italy, yet being subject to the House of Austria, must be described here. It is a strong Town, having a Castle, besides Walls and Ditches for its Defence, and is seated on the Adriatick Sea, 20 miles South from Czernitz, and 30 South-west from Metling, and at the Mouth of the River Flaum. The Italian Tongue is here spoken in its Purity, and therefore the Austrian Gentry send their Children here to be taught it. In the Suburbs stands a Monastery famous for a Treaty of Peace concluded in it between the Emperor and the Venetians, in the Year 1618.

The County of TYROL, with the Bishoprick of BRIXEN.

TYROL is one of the largest Counties of the Empire, its extent being 120 miles from East to West, and 60 from North to South. It is bounded by Schwaben and Bavaria on the North, the Grisons and Trent on the South, Carinthia on the East, and Switzerland on the West. The Country is very mountainous, and the Soil barren in many parts; however, the Valleys are very fruitful and afford good Pasture. Here are divers Springs of mineral and Salt Waters, and Mines of Silver, Iron and Copper. The chief Rivers are the Eisack or Laisack, the Inn, which crosseth this Province from South-west to North-east, and the Adige or Etsch, which takes its rise here, and passes through the Territories of Venice.

Tyrol is said to be the Rhetia inferior of the Romans, and upon the decay of their Power was seized by the Princes of Bavaria, and the Governors of it were appointed by them, with the Titles of Margraves; this Margrave was afterwards made hereditary, and a Count of the Empire, by Frederick I, about the Year 1350. The Bishoprick of Trent was added to it by Ludowick, Son to the Duke of Bavaria and Count of Tyrol, who took that Bishop Prisoner. This Ludowick dying without Issue, his Widow settled this County upon the Duke of Austria; in which Family it has ever since continued.

It is divided into

The

The Bishoprick of Brixen.Brixen.

The Counties of

Meran, Pludentz,
Bregentz,
Felakirk, Montfort.

INSBRUCK, Oenipons, is seated in a pleasant Valley, at the Foot of the Mountains of Venden, and on the Banks of the River Imn, which separates the City from its large Suburbs. It is 64 miles distant from Munchen to the South, 80 from Saltzburg to the South-west, and 70 from Trent to the North. Though it be not large, it is well built, and adorn'd with curious Fountains, spacious Market places, and a magnificent Castle, wherein the Arch-Dukes of Inspruck used to reside, and has since been the Seat of its Princes of the House of Austria; it is a noble Palace, furnished with a Cabinet of curious Rarities in Art and Nature, and adorn'd with pleasant Gardens. Inspruck was Wall'd by Otto the Great Count of Meran, about the Year 1234. but is now destitute of that Defence. But Ombras, about an Engish mile distant from it, is a very strong Fort: This was the Summer Seat of the Dukes, being exceeding pleasantly situated. The Armory here is very fine; amongst the Arms and Pictures of several Princes, the Statue of Francis I. on Horse back, representing him as he was taken Prisoner at Pavia, is to be seen in it. And in the Duke's Closet of Rarities, there is a Trunk of an Oak with a whole Deer enclosed in it.

Hall, call'd Im'thall for distinction, is seated on the River Imn 10 miles from Inspruck to the North-east, and is famous for its Salt-pits, which afford the Inhabitants a profitable Trade. The Pits are about 4 miles from the Town, where the Salt is dug up like Copper Oar, then laid to soak in great Trenches fill'd with Water, and afterwards boil'd up in great Pans here in the City, of which they have four made of Iron that are each 48 Foot long, 34 broad, and 3 deep.

BRIXEN, Brixino, stands at the bottom of Mount Brenner, upon the River Eysach, 30 miles South east from Inspruck, and 30 from the Confines of Carinthia. It was formerly an Imperial City, but it is now the See of a Bishop, who hath Jurisdiction over it, and is a Count of the Empire. The City is small, and not very populous; it lies upon the Road to Italy, and is therefore the Station of some Merchants that hand the Commodities of that Country and Germany to and again. Here are mineral Waters of good Fame, especially one call'd the Virgin Well, which is much resorted to.

The Diocess of this Bishop is about 40 miles long, and 30 broad.

Meran, once the Capital of this County, and gave Title to an Earl, is a small City seated on the River Er/ch, 50 miles South of Inspruck. Near it is Tyrol, an ancient Castle, which gave name to the whole Country. It is seated in a pleasant Country, but has nothing considerable in it.

Pludentz, stands at the foot of the Mountains upon the Bank of the River Ill, about 75 miles West from Inspruck.

Bregentz stands at the East-end of the Lake of Constance, 80 miles West from Inspruck.

Montfort stands about the mid-way between Bregentz to the North, and Pludentz to the South.

Felkirk stands upon the Ill, and near the Rhine, about 12 miles West from Pludentz.

The Bishoprick of T R E N T.

This Country is by some Geographers made part of Italy: But the Bishop of it being a Prince of the Empire, the Germans reckon it into the Circle of Austria. It lyes among the Alps, between the County of Tyrol on the North, the Dominions of the State of Venice on the South and East, and the Grisons on the West. The extent of it is about 70 miles from East to West, and 50 from North to South. The River Adige runs thro' it from North to South and receives several smaller Rivers that rise in the Mountains on each side this Country. The Soil here produces Wine, Oil, Fruit and Pasture, but not much Corn.

The Chief Towns are $\begin{cases} \text{Trent,} \\ \text{Pozen.} \end{cases}$

TRENT, Tridenum, is seated upon the River Adige, in a pleasant Vally, between three very high and steep Mountains, 45 miles South-east from Brixen, 35 North from Verona, 30 from the Confines of the Valteline to the West, and 70 from Inspruck to the South. It is adorn'd with many stately Palaces, and several beautiful Churches, whereof the Cathedral dedicated to S. Vigel, is reckon'd a fine piece of Architecture: It's Chapter consist's of Noblemen, who choose the Bishop. Here are also a great number of Religious Houses. The Inhabitants speak both the German and Italian Tongues very perfect, and are observ'd to be exceeding Civil to Strangers, whereof a great many pass thro' this Place in Travelling into Italy and Germany. It was formerly an Imperial City, but is now subject to its B.shop, on whom the Emperor Conrad II. bestowed the Sovereignty of this Territory, which had before been subject to its own Lord, under the Protection of the Duke of Bavaria. This Donation was ratified by the Emperors Frederick I. and II. and the Count of Tyrol made Protector of it. The Bishop is Suffragan to the Patriarch of Aquileia, and as we have said, a Prince of the Empire. The Council held here in the last Age hath made this City famous: It began in the Year 1545. but was not ended till 1563. during most of which time there are said to have been in this City 7 Cardinals, 3 Patriarchs, 33 Archbishops, 235 Bishops, 7 Vicars General, and 146 Divines, besides many Ambassadors, who with their Attendants, were provided with Lodging, Victuals, and all Necessaries. This Council was Assembled by Pope Paul III. at the instance of many of the Princes of Europe, for the Reformation of the Discipline of the Church, but by the contrivance of the Pope and Cardinals, so many Italian Bishops were brought to it, that they over-rul'd the Endeavours of the rest, and permitted nothing to be Decreed but what the Pope directed, which was so notorious, that it was a common Jest, That the Holy-Ghost was sent from Rome to Trent in a Cloak-bag. And so little was done of what was expected during all this long Session, that not only the Protestants, but the whole German and French Nations refused to receive its Decrees. This Council began on the 4th of January, 1545. and continu'd all the Reign of that Pope, who dying in 1549. it was resum'd by Pope Julius III. in 1551. He dy'd in 1555. and a War broke out in Germany, which interrupted it till Pius IV. re-assembled it on the 18th of January, 1562; from which time it continu'd till the 3d of December, 1563. when it finally broke up, after having with the utmost Partiality establish'd the Pope's Authority, and ratified the Doctrins of Purgatory, Invocation of Saints, Indulgences, &c.

Poggen, call'd by the Italians Bolzano, is seated on the Adige, 25 miles North from Trent, and near the *Confin*es of Tyrol. It is pleasantly situated, and is a Place of good Trade, especially at its four Yearly Fairs, that hold 15 Days each, to which great numbers of Merchants come from several Parts of Germany and Italy; for whose sake great Privileges have been granted to the City. Tho' it be seated in the Diocesis, this Place is not subject to the Bishop of Trent, having been taken from him by the Earl of Tyrol, in 1295.

The Kingdom of BOHEMIA, with the Dukedom of SILESIA and Marquisite of MORAVIA.

UNDER the name of Bohemia in general are comprehended Bohemia, Moravia, and Silesia, which altogether lye in form of a Lozenge, between Austria on the South, Brandenburg and Lusatia on the North, the Palatinate of Bavaria, with part of Saxony on the West, and Poland on the East, and extends 69 German Leagues, or 276 English Miles from North to South, and 65 Leagues, or 260 Miles from East to West.

Although this Kingdom be compriz'd within the compass of Germany, and the King is an Elector of the Empire, it hath several peculiar Constitutions and Customs, and a Language different from the Germans. The Kingdom is Elective; but the House of Austria, by claiming it as Hereditary, occasion'd bloody Wars in the beginning of this Age between the Emperor Ferdinand II. and Frederick Count Palatine, who being Elect'd, had accepted of this Crown. But this Prince being overcome by the Emperor in the famous Battle of Prague, A. D. 1620. the Kingdom hath been ever since entirely subject to that Family.

The Reformation of Religion was begun very early here by John Huss and Jerem of Prague, and their Converts were numerous long before Calvin and Luther appear'd; whose Doctrines also being brought hither, prevail'd much, and the number of Protestants were very great, before by Persecutions and Wars they were harass'd and subjected to the Roman Catholics, which Religion at present is only predominant in this Kingdom.

The ancient History of this Country is very obscure; the best account that remains is, that the People of the more Northern parts came hither for a warmer Climate, and at first liv'd in a sociable Community, distributing all things in common, but differences arising, they were forc'd to Elect a Governor, who had at first the Title of a Judge only, afterwards honour'd with that of Duke, and at length King. The Succession of these Princes, as well as can be made from the imperfect Chronicles of this Nation, is as follows.

BOHEMIA proper, is bounded on the East by Moravia and Silesia, on the West by Misnia and Bavaria, on the North by Lusatia, and on the South by Austria; it is almost entirely encompass'd with Mountains, out of one of which springs the River Elbe. In these Mountains there are Mines of Silver, Copper and Lead, and in them are found certain precious Stones, which the Jews send into foreign parts. The River Muldaw rises in the Mountains on the South side, as the Elbe does in those on the North, both which join a little below Prague, and make a good Navigable Stream. Many other small Rivers water this Country. The Soil is good, affording Corn, Pasture and Saffron, and some Wine; as also abundance of Hops, whereof they make Beer that is much esteem'd. The People are generally Strong and Courageous, reckon'd strict observers of their Word, but much addicted to Robbing.

MORAVIA, call'd Morawa by the Inhabitants, and Mihern by the Germans, lies between Silesia on the North and East, Austria on the South, and Bohemia on the West. The North and West parts are woody and mountainous, but the rest is fair, champaign and good Soil, yielding much Corn. The Pastures are fill'd with Oxen, Horses, Sheep and Goats, and the Woods with Hares, Foxes, Wolves and Beavers. Here are many Pits of standing Waters of a poisonous and peccilential Quality, which hurt the Vines and Fruits, and make the People subject to Epidemical Diseases: But there are other Waters which make amends, having the Virtue of Curing many Distempers. Moravia was anciently the Seat of a Kingdom, including also Bohemia and Silesia, which being conquer'd by the Romans, was parcell'd out into four Dukedomes; th's of Moravia was afterwards reduc'd to a Marquisate, which Title it still bears, but is mostly subject to Bohemia. The River Morava, which rises in the Mountains on the North part, passes through the middle and gives name to this Province.

SILESIA, or SLYSKO, lies between Bohemia on the South-west, and Poland on the North-east: Its utmost length from North-west, to South-east, is about 225 Miles, and its breadth 65 Miles. On the side next Bohemia are many Mountains but the rest of the Country is good Soil, and produces Corn, some Wine, Madder and Flax. Here are Mines of Silver, Copper, Lead and Iron, and plenty of Saltpetre. The River Oder takes its rise in the Southern bounds of this Province, and traverseth it from South to North-west. The Vistula, which is the chief River of Poland, springs in the South-east Confines of Silesia: Many smaller Rivers rise here, and fall into the Oder, encreasing it to a large Navigable Stream before it passes into Brandenburg. The Meadows have Cattle, the Forrests Venison, and the Rivers Fish in good plenty. Silesia was part of the Kingdom of Poland for many Ages, but revolted under the Reign of Vladislaus Lothicus, and is now part of the Kingdom of Bohemia: but several Princes have Sovereign Dominion over small parts of it.

PRAGUE, Praga, olim Marobundum Rubienum, and Cusurgis, is seated on the River Muldaw, in a very fruitful Country, and is encompass'd with stately Courts and pleasant Places, appearing as it were in the midst of an Amphitheatre; it may be divided into three parts, viz. the Alt Stadt, or Old Town, the Nieue Stadt, or New Town, which is the chief, and wherein the Royal Palace stands, and the Kleine Seiten, or lesser Town on the other side of the Moldaw. All these together form one of the largest Cities in Germany, wherein Dukes, Princes and Emperors have for a long time kept their Court. In the lesser Town stands the Cathedral Church, dedicated to Sr. Vair, wherein are magnificent Tombs and a strong Castle. A stately Stone-bridge of 24 Arches over the Moldaw, joyns this to the other Town. The Town-house, the College and Church of the Jesuits, and the University, are stately Buildings, which, together with several other beautiful Edifices, make this so fine a Place, that Æn. Sylvius compares it to Florence, but our ingenious Country-man Dr. Brown says, this City is larger and more populous than that; that the River Moldaw is much better than the Arno at Florence, but that the Duke's Palace and the Cathedral at Florence, exceed any thing in Prague. It is the See of an Arch-Bishop, and the Seat of a flourishing University, Founded by the Emperor Charles VI. in the Year 1353. The Bohemians brag much of the great number of Students that have been in this University, and say, that in the Year 1409 J. Huss alone had above 20000 Scholars. This City was often taken ken during the German Wars; and near its Walls was fought that famous Battle between the Bohemian and German Protestants, under Frederick Prince Palatine, chosen King of Bohemia, and the Forces of the Emperor Ferdinand, on the 8th day of November, 1620. wherein the Emperor obtain'd the Victory, and forc'd the unfortunate Prince to quit his Royalty. Prague stands in the Latitude of 50 deg. and in the Longitude of 34 deg. 15 min. and at the distance of 100 Miles from the Danube to the North, 145 Miles from Vienna to the North-west, 50 from the Confines of Saxony to the East, 180 from the borders of Poland to the West, and about 40 from the bounds of Lusatia to the South.

Egra, called by the Bohemians Chebbe, is a great City at the Borders of Bohemia, towards the Palatinate, 80 Miles distant from Prague to the West; It stands upon the River Eger, and is Fortified with a double Wall, &c.

Königgrätz, or Krakovitz, Gradum Regine, Regis & Gradecium, is a good City, seated upon the River Eibe, at 50 Miles distance from Prague to the East, and 35 from Glatz to the South-west: It is now the See of a Bishop, who is a Suffragan to the Arch-bishop of Prague, being lately made so by Pope Alex. VII. in the year 1664.

Glatz is a small City, built at the Foot of one of the Hills that part Bohemia from Silesia, and water'd by a small River call'd the Miza. It is the Capital of a very rich and fruitful Country of the same Name, (in which are nine great Towns and 100 Villages) is very well Fortify'd, and has a strong Castle which stands on the Top of a Hill: It is distant 85 Miles from Prague to the East, and 55 from Olmütz to the North-west.

Elbogen is a very strong Town upon the River Eger, 16 Miles from Egra to the West, and near the Borders of Misnia; it is call'd the Bohemian Key to the German Empire.

Pilsen is a large strong and well fortify'd City, standing upon the Confluence of the River Men and Caburg, 40 Miles from Prague to the South-west, and 20 from Egra to the South-east, was besieg'd in vain by the Hussites, but was taken by Count Mansfield, and was afterwards the last Town of Bohemia that yielded to the Imperialists. The Market-place is spacious, and is seated at the meeting of 4 or 5 Streets of very good Building. They have two very fine Churches.

Czestaw, a small City, but the Head of a considerable Prefecture, 40 Miles distant from Prague to the East, and 25 from Königgrätz to the South. This was the Burial place of John Ziska, the famous General of the Hussites, who, to revenge the Death of John Huss and Jerome of Prague, got an Army together of 40000 Men, with which he obtain'd many Victories over the Papists. At his Death he order'd, That a Drum should be made of his Skin; saying, The Enemy would fly at the sound of it: Which was done accordingly, and had a strange effect upon the Enemy, who, being raw Soldiers, fancied themselves bewitch'd by this Drum, and shamefully run away without fighting. He flourish'd about the year 1420. And built Tabor, which the Hussites fortify'd, and made the seat of their War; from whence, for 20 years together, they ravag'd the Imperial Countries; and thereupon were call'd Taborites. It stands upon the River Laufnitz, 45 Miles from Prague to the South, 35 from Czestaw.

BRINN, call'd BRUNO by the Bohemians, Lat. Brinum and Bruna, is situated at the Confluence of the Rivers Schwarta and Zwitta, at the distance of 50 Miles from Vienna to the North, and 120 from Prague to the South-east. It is by some reckon'd the Capital of the Marquisate of Moravia, and is defend- ed by strong Fortifications; by the help whereof it sustain'd a vigorous Siege of the Swedish Forces in 1645.

Olmütz, Olomutium, is not very large, but a neat and well-built City, and has a good Trade with the Merchants, of Bohemia, Poland, Hungary, &c. for which it is conveniently seated upon the River Morawa, which falls into the Danube, 80 Miles below it. It is the Metropolis of this Marquisate, and the only Bishop's See in it, of which St. Cyril was the first Bishop, about the year 880. This Bishop was formerly a Suffragan to Mentz but in the year 1346. was alter- ed, and made Subject to the Arch-bishop of Prague: It is distant 30 Miles from Brinn to the North-east.

Iglaw, otherwise Giblawa, is a pretty large well- built and strongly fortify'd Town, on the Border of Bohemia on the Road from thence to Hungary, and therefore much frequented by Travellers: It is wa- ter'd by a River of the same Name, which springs in Bohemia about 20 Miles from hence, and is di- stant 50 from Brinn to the West, and about 70 from Prague to the South-east. The chief Trade of the Town is in Beer and coarse Woollen Cloath: The chiefest Building in it is the Jesuits College, and Gymnasium, which with two Monasteries of Domi- nicans and Franciscans are worth seeing. In the Hussites Wars this place was obstinate to the Popish side, but very early receiv'd the Augsburg Confessi- on. In the year 1645 it was surrendred to the Swedes, who defended it for a whole year against all the Emperor's Forces.

Znaim or Znoymo, Znigma, stands upon the River Taya, not above 5 Miles from the Borders of Austria, and 20 Miles South from Brinn, in a pleasant Soil and wholesome Air, and is well fortify'd by a strong Castle, but with the inconvenience of being over- look'd by a Mountain, within Cannon-shot. This City is also on the Road to Vienna, which brings a good Trade to it. It was burnt in the year 1145. by Uladiслаus King of Bohemia, but rebuilt by Pri- mislaus Ottocar, about 1222.

Hradisse or Hradisch, a City situate upon the Ri- ver Morawa, 30 Miles from Olmütz to the South, and as far from Brinn to the East.

Kremsir or Kremsier, and by the Bohemians Krome- ritz, on the River Morawa, in the Middle be- tween Olmütz, and Hradisse, is now become a very fair City, tho' not many Ages ago a poor Village; which was occasion'd by a fine Palace, that Bruno Bishop of Olmütz built here; which drew so many People together, that in a little time he wall'd it, and made it a City.

BRESLAW, Uratistavia, the Metropolis of Si- lesia, and of a particular Duchy, to which it gives Name; is seated upon the River Oder, at the distance of 120 Miles almost North-east from Prague, 110 North from Brinn, and 35 Miles West from the Con- fines of Poland. It is a very large, well-fortified, and fair City, the See of a Bishop, establish'd in 1033. and the Seat of an University. It is a free City, being go- vern'd by a Council of 15 Senators, whereof 11 are Noblemen, and the other 4 chosen out of the Corpo- rations of Drapers, Mercers, Brewers and Butchers, The Citizens are rich and have a good Trade.

In the most North-east part of Silesia is the Duke- dom of Crossen, which was anciently part of the great Duke of Silesia's Dominions, but was several times pawn'd lawn'd to the Marquess of Brandenburg, and redeem'd; but in the year 1391. it was deliver'd to John III. Elector of Brandenburg, with the consent of Ulrich, King of Hungary and Bohemia; which was confirm'd, and the sole and entire Possession of it granted to Joachim and John, Marquesses of Brandenburg by the Emperor Ferdinand I. King of Bohemia, and is still enjoy'd by that Elector.

Crossen, the chief City of it, is seated upon the River Oder, where it receives the Belbor in a Pleasant Plain and good Air, and is distant a few Miles from the Frontiers of Brandenburg to the South, and 40 from Glegaw to the North-west. It is a neat old City; the Duke's Palace, the Town-house, and some Citizens Houses are built with Stone. The neighbouring Hills are covered with Fruit-Trees of many sorts, and the Country yields some Wine but not very good.

Glegaw, call'd the Great, to distinguish it from a small Town of the same Name. It is also the Capital of a Dukedom, some time govern'd by its own Lords, but now subject to the Emperor, as King of Bohemia. It was made a City by Conrad its Duke, in the year 1260. at which time the Wall and Cathedral Church were built: It was taken by the Swedes in 1647. but being restor'd, is now regularly fortified, and has a strong Castle. It stands on the River Oder, near the Frontiers of Poland, 40 Miles from Crossen to the South-east, and 55 from Breslaw to the North-west.

Sagan, call'd Regan, the chief City of another Dukedom, of a small extent, is seated upon the River Bober near the Frontiers of Lusatia, 25 Miles South from Crossen, and as many West from Glegaw; it was once one of the most populous and largest Cities of Silesia, but is now much decay'd, having been often taken by the Swedes, and retaken by the Imperialists in the German Civil Wars.

Lignitz, the chief City of a Dukedom also, is a fair City, on the Banks of the little River Katsbach, 35 Miles from Glegaw to the South, and 36 from Breslaw to the West. About the year 1170 this Town was much enlarg'd and fortify'd, which was afterwards so improved in the year 1532. by Frederick its then Duke, that it became one of the best Fortifications, next Breslaw, in Silesia. The Castle is a very strong and noble Building, and the Hospital and Town house are worth a Stranger's seeing. The Country of this Dukedom yields much Corn. In the year 1675. the last Duke dying without Heirs, it fell to the Emperor.

Hannau a small inconsiderable City on the North side of the Oder, 26 Miles distant from Lignitz, formerly part of the Dukedom of Lignitz, but now gives Title to a Duke of its own.

Oelze is a neat uniform well-built City, formerly well strengthened with Walls, Gates, Turrets and other Fortifications, but in the year 1648 they were demolished by the Swedish General, and not since rebuilt; here is a fair Church, College, Town-Hall and Market place, which is exactly square. This City had also a Duke of its own, till in the year 1492 it was given to the Duke of Munsterberg, who is still Lord of it, and some other small Cities its dependences. Oelze is situated about 15 Miles from Breslaw to the North East.

Fauer and Schweidnitz, are two small Dukedoms, (both now in the Emperor) extended on the South-side of the Oder between Lignitz on the North, Breslaw, on the East, and Munsterberg on the South.

The City Fauer stands in a pleasant Valley, and is fortify'd with high Ramparts, deep Ditches, and a Castle in which resides the Lieutenant of these two Dukedoms.

Schweidnitz stands South-east from Fauer, and South-west from Breslaw, about 20 Miles distant from the former, and 30 from the latter. It is fortified with Walls and Ramparts, and beautified with many fair Buildings, so that it may be esteem'd one of the finest Cities in Silesia. In the Armory here, is a Gun of an extraordinary size, being able to carry a Bullet of 320 pound weight. Besides these two Cities, there are 22 Towns in these two Dukedoms.

Munsterberg, the Capital of another Dukedom, is a small City seated in a fruitful Plain, 30 Miles South from Breslaw. It is an old Castle, which, with the Town-hall, is all worth noting in this Town. Five other Towns are in this Dukedom.

Oppelen stands on the Northern banks of the River Oder, over which it has a Bridge, 40 Miles above Breslaw. It has very thick Walls and strong Gates for its defence. Ever since 1647 it has been subject to the King of Poland, and all the People here and in the neighbouring Villages speak the Pollish Language. This is a Dukedom also, and has 13 Towns its dependences.

Grotzaw, a small City that stands between Munsterberg and Oppelen, is the Capital of another Dukedom subject to the King of Bohemia; wherein stands also Neissa a City of good Trade, seated on a River of the same name, and 11 other Towns.

Fagenzdorf, call'd by the Moravians, Carnowf, stands upon the River Oppa, 35 Miles from Oppelen to the South. It is a small City, and not very considerable, except, that it is the Capital of a Dukedom, which with the City, was by Lewis King of Hungary and Bohemia, given to George Marquess of Brandenburg, who built a Castle and erected some other Fortifications about it.

Treppaw, a small City upon the River Oppa, 10 Miles from Fagenzdorf, has nothing very remarkable in it, nor in its Dukedom, which has 8 other Towns in it.

Ratibor is a pretty good City, having in it a Cathedral and the Duke's Palace; the Houses are of Wood, as they are generally all over Silesia, but handsome enough, and the publick Buildings are of Stone: It stands in a pleasant Plain on the Banks of the River Oder, 35 Miles above Oppelen. The Dukedom of Ratibor, containing 5 other Towns, fell to the King of Bohemia in the year 1516. at the Death of Duke Valentinus its last Prince.

C H A P. XI.

The Marquisate and Electorate of BRANDENBURG, with MAGDEBURG and HALBERSTADT; and the Dukedom of POMERANIA.

THIS Country, included within the Circle of the Upper Saxony, is bounded on the North by Po- merania and the Dutchy of Mecklenburg, on the South by Silesia and the Upper Saxony, on the East by and Linen Cloath. It lies upon the Road from Magdeburg to Hamburg and Lubeck, by which the Inhabitants make good profit. The Courts of Civil Judicature for the Old Mark are held here. It is distant 32 Miles from Brandenburg to the West, and 2 from Havelburg to the South.

Schwedel, a large Town, 35 miles from Stendal to the North-west, 5 from Zell to the N. E. and on the Road between Stendal and Lunenborg. It is seated on the River Fitz, and divided into the old and new Town: Its chief Trade is in Beer. This was formerly the Capital of a Marquisate subject to its own Lord, but was long since united to that of Brandenburg.

Tangermünde or Angermund, seated on the Elb at the mouth of the Anger or Tanger, 8 miles from Stendal to the South. It was at first a Castle built by the Emperor Charles IV. in the year 1376. but is now a place of pretty good Trade in Corn and other Commodities, convey'd by the Elb to other places.

Landspetz stands upon the River Warta, 20 Miles East from the Oder, and 35 North-east from Frankfurt: Its convenient situation makes it a place of good Trade: which consists much in casting of Iron Ordnance, &c. This City was often taken and re-taken in the German Wars.

Kustrin on the River Oder, near the mouth of the Warta, 50 Miles from Berlin to the East, formerly an inconsiderable Village, now a very strong Town, and esteem'd the Key of the New Mark, having been wall'd with Stone, and otherwise strongly Fortified in the last Age by John Marquis of Brandenburg, and in 1631. was strong enough to baffle Gustavus Adolphus, who was forc'd to raise his Siege, and withdraw his Army from before it. The Houses are nearly and well-built, and the Market-place is the handsomest in all the Marquisate.

MAGDEBURG, a Territory of about 60 miles in length from East to West, and in some part 30 from North to South, situate between Brunswick on the West, Saxony on the East, Brandenburg on the North, and Anhalt on the South, the Elb running through it; was formerly an Arch bishoprick, being made so by the Pope at the instance of the Emperor Otho I. and its Prelate Primace of all Germany, in which state it continued till the Reformation; when the Canons having embrac'd the Doctrine of Luther in the Year 1566. chose the Son of the Elector of Brandenburg Administrator of their Arch bishoprick, after which it remain'd in the Administration of a secular Prince; till at length, in the Treaty of Munster, A. D. 1648. it was agreed, That after the Death of the then Administrator, the whole Country should devolve on the Elector of Brandenburg as a secular Estate and a Dukedom, which, together with the Bishoprick of Halberstadt, were given him as an Equivalent for the higher or upper Pomerania, by the same Treaty granted to the King of Sweden. It is accordingly now subject to that Elector, and is thought to have advanced his Annual Revenue at least 600000 Rix Dollars.

The City of Magdeburg, Magdelburgum call'd in old Writing Parthenopolis, is seated on the Banks of the Elb, 45 miles below Wittenburg, in a pleasant Country abounding with Corn, but wanting Wood; as on the contrary the Land on the other side of the River wants Corn, but has plenty of Wood. It is distant 30 Miles from Brandenburg to the South-west, 60 from Brunswick to the East, and as many from Leipsick to the North. It was built, or much enlarg'd at least, and wall'd round, by the Emperor Otho, about the year 940. at the desire of his Wife Edgitha, Daughter to our English-Saxon King Edmund; and being made a City he endow'd it with large Privileges, made it Imperial built also the stately Cathedral yet standing, and Translated the Bishoprick of Uiterleben thither. and obtain'd the Dignity of Primacy to be added to it: By which means it grew exceeding Wealthy and Powerful, and continued so till the Year 1631. that barbarous Count Tilly having taking the City, Massacred the Inhabitants in a most Bloody manner, and burnt and destroy'd the whole Town, except the Cathedral, and some few inconsiderable Houses; the Slaughter was so great, that of 40000 Citizens, 'tis said not above 400 were left alive, which Loss it has never been able to recover; and tho' the Electors of Brandenburg have much assisted it, and repair'd the Fortifications which are very strong, yet it still remains far less considerable than it has been. The Cathedral is a very noble Structure and worth a Stranger's view; in it are forty nine Altars; and in one of the Chappels is the Tomb of the Emperor Otho and his Wife Edgitha, the Foundress of this Church.

There are 28 Towns more in this Dukedom, but none of them contain any thing worthy of a particular description.

The Province of HALBERSTADT is a small Country of about 30 miles in length, and 25 in breadth, being bounded by the Duchy of Magdeburg on the North East, the Principality of Anhalt on the South, the Bishoprick of Hildesheim on the West, and Brunswick Wolfenbittel on the North. The Soil of it is good and yields plenty of Corn, and the Forests contain store of Venison. The Bishoprick, which was at first founded in the year 780. by the Emperor Charles the Great, and planted at Osterwyck, a Town in this Province, being in a little time remov'd to Halberstadt, gave name to this Country, which continued subject to its own Prelate till the Civil Wars of Germany, when the Bishop Leopold William having restored Popery, which had been abolish'd in 1591. The Swedes besieg'd and took Halberstadt, restor'd the Lutheran Religion, and kept the Town and Country till the Treaty of Munster, by which this Bishoprick was Seculariz'd and given to the Elector of Brandenburg, and now bears the Title of a Principality.

Halberstadt, the chief Town, is seated upon the River Havel, 32 miles from Magdeburg to the South West. It was heretofore an Imperial City, but afterwards exempted and subject to its Bishop, and now under the Elector of Brandenburg; it is reasonably well built, the Streets are even, and the Houses neat and uniform. There is an Inn in this City that is thought the largest, and will accomodate the greatest number of Persons of any in Europe.

Osterwick, once called Salingstade, in which this Bishoprick was first planted, it is seated on the River Ilse, about 15 miles from Halberstadt to the West.

Gruninghen, a small Town with a Castle re-built in 1593. formerly the Seat of the Bishop, stands 10 miles from Halberstadt to the East. There is a remarkable Wine-fat in it of vast bulk, containing near 1000 Hogsheads.

Queidlingburg is also reckon'd in the Limits of this Principality, but belonging to the House of Saxony, is describ'd with the rest of that Elector's Estates.

S E C T. II.

The Dutchy of POMERANIA, call'd Pommeren in High-Dutch.

Pomerania is the most extreme North-East part of Germany, being bounded by the Baltick Sea on the North, and Prussia on the East, Brandenburg on the South, and Mecklenburg on the West. It is about 80 Miles broad, and 250 long: The Air is very cold, but the Soil however yields Corn and Fruits, also good Pasture. which is fill'd with Cattle, and Forests which abound with Venison. The River Oder falls into the Sea, after it has run thro' the middle of this Country: Besides which, the River Pen, Rega, Persant, Wiper and the Stolp, water this Dutchy.

Pomerania was long govern'd by its own Dukes, of whom Parninrius at his Death in 1277. divided it between his two Sons; the Seat of the eldest being Wolgast, and of the younger Stetin; but the House of Stetin failing of Issue in 1464. that part of Pomerania Was conferr'd on the Marquis of Brandenburg by the Emperor. This the Duke of Pomeran Wolgast oppos'd with all his might, and at length forc'd the Brandenburger to surrender it, but with this Condition, that if the House of Wolgast should fail, the whole Dukedom should descend to the House of Brandenburg; which happening in the Year 1637. when Bugislaus died without Issue, the Elector of Brandenburg claim'd the whole Country: But the Swedes in the mean time had got footing here, being call'd in by Bugislaus to assist him against the Imperialists in the German Civil Wars, and could not be persuaded to leave a Province which they esteem'd so convenient to them. This caus'd a War between the King of Sweden and the Elector of Brandenburg, which was ended in 1648. by the Treaty of Osna-brug and Munster, wherein they agreed to share it betwixt them; the Swede having all on the West-side of the Oder, and the Brandenburger that on the East: And as a Compensation to the Elector, the Dukedom of Magdeburg and the Principality of Halberstadt were assign'd him by the same Treaty; which however did not satisfy him, and therefore when the rest of Europe were in Arms, the Elector of Brandenburg assumed his for the recovery of this Country, and entering the Swedish Pomerania, took Stetin in 1677. and Straelsund, and other Places, soon after: But at the Treaty of St. Germain, what then remain'd in his Hands was restor'd, and the Country is still divided, as we have said above.

The Division of it will be seen by this Table.

STETIN, Stetinum, is a very considerable City, the Capital of all Pomerania, and a Hans-Town. It is seated on the River Oder, at the distance of 18 miles from the Frontiers of Brandenburg, 40 from the Coasts of the Baltick Sea, and 70 from Berlin to the N. E. It is a large, strong, and well-built City, and a Place of great Trade, to which the River Oder much contributes; for it self flows from Silesia, and the Warta falls into it about 50 miles above this City; and about 40 miles below it both together fall into the Baltick Sea; so that this is a good Centre for exchanging the Commodities of Germany, Poland and the Baltick. The Palace which was formerly the Seat of the Duke, and is now the Place where the Swedish Governor resides, is an old magnificent Building. This City is exceeding populous, and the Inhabitants are noted for Civility and Valour; an instance of the latter they effectually gave in the gallant defence they made against the Elector of Brandenburg in 1677. when tho' he brought a great Army before this City, and very vigorously attack'd it from the 7th of July, he was not able to take it before the 26th of December, and then too gave them very honourable Terms: In the succeeding Peace it was restor'd to the Swede, under whom it still continues.

Wolgast is seated near that mouth of the Oder call'd Pfin about 5 miles from the shoar of the Baltick Sea, 50 North west from Stetin, and 30 South-east from Straelsund. It was formerly, as we have said, the Capital of a Dutchy, but now subject to the Swede. It is strengthen'd with a noble Castle, and hath the most convenient Haven, except Straelsund in Pomeran. It was taken by the Swedes in 1630. after by the Brandenburgers in 1675. and restor'd to the Swedes in 1679.

Straelsund, a Free City, is near the Banks of the Sea, over against the Island of Rugen, 80 miles from Stetin to the N. W. and 40 from Rostock to the N. E. It is esteem'd the largest and wealthiest City in Pomeran, and enjoys many great Privileges, which the Citizens have maintain'd against several Princes that have endeavour'd to subject them, wherein they have been remarkably Brave, having at once oppos'd the united Force of the Kings of Denmark and Sweden, and Ten other Princes. It is govern'd by its own Magistrates, who judge all Causes as well Criminal as Civil. The Buildings are beautiful, the private Houses being of Stone and uniform: It is a place of very great Trade, (particularly for Corn) having an excellent Haven, and Ships coming up into the very Town. This City was Founded or Re-built at least in 1230. and soon grew populous, and was strongly fortified; by the help whereof, in 1629. it oppos'd Count Waldeck, who besieged it: After which, they put themselves under the Protection of Gustavus Adolphus, King of Sweden, whose Successors have ever since held that Title. In 1678. it was besieg'd and taken by the the Elector of Brandenburg, but restor'd at the Treaty of S. Germans, in 1679. The Fortifications consist of regular Bulwarks and large Ditches, besides natural Marthes, through which there is no passing but by Causeys that are well Fortified.

Bardt stands in a fruitful Country, 12 miles West from Straelsund, upon a little Arm of the Sea, which would be a good Haven, but that the Water is shallow, and so the Town cannot be traded to. It was sometime the Metropolis of the upper Pomeran.

CAMNIN, esteem'd the Capital of the Ducal Pomerania, is seated on the East-side of the mouth of the Oder that is call'd Drawenow, 30 miles North from Stetin, 40 East from Wolgast, and 5 South from the Coasts of the Baltick. It was formerly a Bishop's See, but by the Treaty of Munster it was Seculariz'd and given to the Marquels of Brandenburg:

Colberg, at the mouth of the small River Perfant, and near the Banks of the Baltick Sea, 30 miles N. E. from Camnin, is a strong Town with a convenient Haven. It is pretty much resorted to for Salt, which is made in great plenty near it; and being hence Transported, makes the Town rich and considerable.

The Three Islands lye in the Baltick-Sea, before the Coast of the Upper Pomeran. That of RUGEN is the largest and most considerable; it is 30 miles in length, and as many in breadth, but with several Arms and Creeks of the Sea within it. It is situate to the N. W. over against Wolgast and Straelsund, between which last Place and it, the Sea is not above a League broad: The Land of it is exceeding fertile, yielding Corn in great plenty, and very good Grass, whereby great Herds of Cattle are fed. It was formerly govern'd by its own Princes, who, assisted by the notable Valour of the People, long defended it against the neighbouring Kings: But the Straelsunders opposing the Authority he pretended over the Strait that leads to their City, occasion'd Prince Wislous to besiege it; but the City defended it self so well, that not only he could not take it, but in a Sally he was slain, and being the last of this Family, that Government afterwards was subjected to the Duke of Pomeran, from whom it descended to the King of Sweden: But the Danes, having some old Pretensions, in the War of 1678. Invaded and took the whole Island; but in 1679. by Treaty, restored it to the Swede, to whom it is still Subject. The chief Town is Bergen, which is a Place of no great Note, being not fortified nor even Wall'd, though call'd a City. It contains about 400 Houses; and is distant about 25 miles from Straelsund to the North-east, and as many from Wolgast to the North.

The Island denominated from the Town WOLLIN, call'd anciently Julium, is the Western of the 2 Islands that make the three Mouths of the Oder. The Town is seated on the Mouth of the Oder, call'd Druenow, 25 miles North from Stetin, and 25 South-west from Wolgast. It was anciently one of the largest Cities of Europe, and resorted to by Merchants of all Nations, and said to have been so Powerful, as alone to maintain a War against Denmark, and three several times took their King Prisoner: But it was partly destroy'd by Lightning, and finally by the Arms of Woldemar King of Denmark, in 1170. totally demolish'd. Since when it hath been only a small incon siderable Town.

USEDOM, which gives name to another Island that lies West from that of Wollen, and makes the other two Mouths of the Oder, one whereof runs between these two Islands, and is call'd Swine, and the other beyond Usedom, which is nam'd Pfin. Upon the Destruction of Wollen, this Town was resorted to by the Danish and Polish Merchants, and became a Place of good Trade, but in 1473. it was all burnt down by an accidental Fire, which destroy'd its Trade; and it hath since been only a small Sea-port Town, and not considerable.

CHAP. XII. SAXONY.

SECT. I.

A short Account of the History of Saxony in General.

THE Saxons were anciently a great Nation, and Possessed all the Northern Parts of Germany from Franconia and Bohemia in the South, to the Baltick-Sea and Denmark in the North; and from the River Elb on the East, to the Rhine on the West; whereby not only the present Upper and Lower Saxony, but also all Westphalia and Holstein were part of their Country: Nay, also Jutland, now reckon'd part of Denmark was inhabited by them.

Concerning the Etymology of the name Saxon, the Learned differ; some are of Opinion, that they were deriv'd from the Saci, a People of Asia, to which our Learned Country-man Mr. Camden inclines. Others say, they were deriv'd from Saxum a Stone, as being a hardy strong People. Verstegan and others affirm that they had their Name from a Weapon they wore call'd a Seax, which was a short Sword of different form from those commonly worn, and peculiar to this Nation.

They were Men of a large Bulk and great Strength, renown'd Warriors; and so notorious for Piracy, that the Romans were oblig'd to keep Forces all along the Coast of Gaul and Britain to hinder their frequent Incurfions.

It was this Warlike People that K. Vortigern invited to Britain to assist him against the Picts and Scots, who upon the Romans forsaking them, much annoy'd the Britains: But of what part of this great Nation those were that he Invited, is somewhat uncertain; ancient Histories tell us they were Angles and Jutes: Jutland is suppos'd to have been the Country of the latter, but from what part the former came is more disputed: Mr. Camden is of Opinion that they dwelt in Sleswick, which was sometime call'd Angle; though others affirm they came from Westphalia, and were accompanied by the Frisons. For the Reader's farther Satisfaction, he may consult Camden's Britannia, where he will find this Matter most learnedly and ingeniously Discussed.

They were Pagans, and Govern'd by 12 Noblemen, chosen by the Commons, out of whom in time of War they chose a King; which Government continued till the time of Charles the Great, who made War upon them, and was long oppos'd under the Conduct of Wittikind their King; but the Power of Charles prov'd too strong in time, and Wittikind was oblig'd to submit and receive the Christian Faith, which which by the great Care of Charles was planted and propagated over the whole Nation, and Wittikind was by him created Duke of Saxony.

The Race of Wittikind continu'd Dukes of Saxony till Otto III. who being chosen Emperor in 984. gave his Country to Barnard Lord of Lunenbourg, whose Grandson Magnus was depriv'd by the Emperor Henry III. and Henry Guelph, Duke of Bavaria, made Elector of Saxony whose Son Henry, surnam'd the Lion, siding with the Pope against the Emperor Frederick Barbarossa about the Year 1170. was proscrib'd, and by the Emperor's Command depriv'd of his Estates by the neighbouring Princes. The Electoral Dignity was Anno 1180. given to Bernard, Earl of Anhalt, Son to the Marquis of Brandenburg, and descended from Magnus above-mention'd, who had conquer'd Lauenburg from Henry, to which the Emperor added the City of Wittemberg, and the little Country that lies between the Elb and the Sala on the North of Misnia, and gave it the name of the Upper Saxony. The Posterity of Bernard enjoy'd this with the Title of Duke and Elector of Saxony, till 1422. when Albert III. dying without Issue, Frederick Landgrave of Thuringen and Marquis of Misnia, who was the Head of the Family of Wittikind, by the Emperor's Favour succeeded; in whose Family it still remains. His Successors have been zealous Defenders of the Reformation, especially Duke John, who was one of the Princes who protested against the Decree of the Diet at Spire in 1529. as we have elsewhere said, and was the Author of the Smalcalden League: But in the War that ensu'd thereupon, his Son and Successor Frederick John had the Misfortune to be taken Prisoner by the Emperor Charles V. and depriv'd of his Honour and Estate, which in 1547. were given to his Cousin Maurice, Grandson to the Landgrave Frederick above-mention'd, from whom the present Duke and Elector is descended. Who declar'd himself a Roman Catholic, when he was chosen King of Poland.

S E C T. II.

The Upper SAXONY.

The Upper Saxony is bounded on the North by the Principalities of Magdeburg, Halberstadt, and the Marquisate of Brandenburg, on the South by Franconia and Bohemia, on the East by Silesia, and on the West by Hesse and Brunswick. Its Extent is from North to South about 130 English Miles, and from East to West 260. The Air is cold but healthful, and the Soil fertile, producing much Wheat, but very little Wine; here are Mines of Lead that are very profitable, and some of Silver, that yield the Elector above 100000 Pounds a Year. The chief Rivers are, the Elb, the Sala, the Elster, the Unstruck, the Spree and the Neisse.

The Religion of the Inhabitants is generally the Lutheran, though there are also some Calvinists and Roman-Catholics.

The Elector of Saxony is the wealthiest Prince of Germany, except the Arch-Duke of Austria, his yearly Income being reckon'd to be 400000 Pounds Sterling; which is rais'd by the Silver Mines above-mention'd, and by Excise upon Beer, Corn, Wine, Fruit, &c. The Splendor of his Court is very great, being attended by a vast number of Servants, among whom are several Gentlemen of great Quality. 'Tis said of the Elector Christian II. that he had, besides a great number of the Gentry of his own Country, 3 Dukes, 3 Earls and 5 Barons of foreign Nations his Pensioners at the same time. The Dominions of this Prince were increas'd in the Year 1620. by the Emperor's Donation of the Marquisate of Lusatia to Duke John George, in reward for the service he did him in the Bohemian War.

So that his present Dominions are, the Dukedom of Saxony, and the Marquisates of Misnia and Lusatia, &c. The chief Towns whereof are seen in this Table, together with those of the other States, that compose the rest of the Circle of the Upper Saxony, viz. Anhalt, Thuringen, &c.

The Duchy of Saxony is but a small Country, lying between Brandenburg on the North, Misnia on the South, Lusatia on the East, and Anhalt on the West. The chief Towns are, Wittemberg, Torgaw.

The Marquisate of Misnia is bounded on the N. by the Duchy of Saxony and Anhalt, on the S. by Bohemia, on the East by Lusatia, and on the West by Mersburg, Naumburg and Altenburg. Its extent from North to South is near 100 Miles, and from East to West 80.

Voigtland, the South part of Misnia. Zwickau, Plawen.

The Marquisate of Lusatia lies Eastward from the Duchy of Saxony and Misnia, and is bounded on the North by Brandenburg, on the South by Bohemia, and on the East by Silesia. It is in length from North to South about 90 Miles, and in breadth about 50 Miles; the chief Towns in it are, Bautzen, Gorlitz, Cottbus, Guiben, Sorah, Liebau, Luben.

Other smaller States belonging to several Branches of the House of Saxony, and lie Westward of the Countries above-mention'd, viz.

The Duchy of Sax-Hall, Hall.

Sax-Mersburg, Mersburg.

Sax-Naumburg, Naumburg.

Sax-Altenburg, Altenburg.

The Principality of Anhalt is a long but narrow Tract of Land lying on the North of Misnia. Zerbst, Bernberg, Dessau.

The small County of Barby joyns to Anhalt on the North.

THURINGEN, formerly a Kingdom, afterwards a County, and then a Landgraviate, was govern'd by its own Princes for many Ages, till 1124. when, upon the Death of Herman, it descended to the Marquis of Misnia, and, with that Country, came afterwards to the Duke of Saxony; but is divided into several Lordships and Sovereignities, according to the following Table.

Erfurdt, Cap. subject to the Archbishop of Mentz.

Getha, Dutchy.

Eysenack, Dutchy.

In Thuringen are these chief Towns, Weimar, Dutchy.

Mansfeld, County.

Stolberg, County.

Hohenstein, County.

Schwartzemburg, County.

Mulhausen, Imp.

WITTEMBERG, Wittemburga aut Vitarum Mons, the Capital City of the Duchy of Saxony, is seated on the River Elb, 40 Miles South from Brandenburg, as many North from Leipzig, 70 East from Halberstadt, and as many West from the River Oder. It is a fair large City, of an oblong square Form with one great Street in the middle; adorn'd with an University, which was founded by the Elector Frederick.

rick III. in 1502. and made famous by the Preaching of Martin Luther: And well fortify'd both by Nature and Art, having Marshes on the North, and a great Canal to the Elb, also a very deep Ditch a good Rampart and 5 large Bastions on the side that is most expos'd. This is the Capital of the Electorate, and was the Seat of the Elector, till that Honour came into the Family of Misnia, when it was remov'd to Dresden.

Torgau is a fair City, built by John Frederick the Elector in 1535, and beautify'd with a stately Castle. It is seated on the West-side of the Elb, 20 Miles South from Wittenburg.

D R E S D E N, Dresda, is seated on the River Elb, which divides it into two Parts, at the distance of 55 Miles from Wittenburg to the South-East, 25 from the Confines of Bohemia to the North, and 50 from Leipzig to the East. It is a large well-built City, and the usual place of Residence of the Elector of Saxony; whose Palace is a strong and magnificent Castle, adorn'd with many Curiosities, especially a Chamber of Rarities, and an Armory extremely well furnish'd, as also very fine Gardens and Stables. The City, as we have said, is divided by the River into two parts, that on the Right side is call'd Alt Dresden or the Old Town; to which the New is join'd by a Stone Bridge of 17 Arches, which is reckon'd a curious piece of Workmanship.

Misfen, Misnia, once a rich and populous City, and the Metropolis of the Province, but now not considerable, stands on the Left side of the Elb, 12 Miles West from Dresden: It is a Bishop's See, and has a Territory belonging to it, which, with the City, was formerly subject to its Bishop, but now in the Hands of the Elector. Here was a wooden Bridge over the Elb, that was much admir'd, but was destroy'd in the German Wars.

LEIPZIG or Leipsick, Lipsia, Lupsurdum, is thought to have been built by the Vandals (who were the ancient Inhabitants of this Country) about the Year 700. It stands upon the River Plesse, and near the Eister, and is distant 50 Miles from Dresden to the West, and 40 from Wittenburg to the South. It is a very large, rich and populous City, the most considerable of any in this Elector's Dominions. It is very full of Houses, and those well-built and very high, many 7, and some 9 Stories. St. Nicholas's Church is very fine, and esteem'd the best of any Lutheran Church in Germany. The Citizens have a great Trade, especially by reason of 3 Fairs held yearly, which bring a concourse of Merchants from all Parts. A high Court of Judicature is held in this City, which hath great Power, even to summon the Elector himself. Here is also an University, which was establish'd in 1408. by Frederick Marquis of Misnia: It hath 4 Colleges and 24 Professors, and is well fill'd with Students. The Castle seated on the Plesse, and call'd Plessenburg, is a very strong Fort and well guarded. In 1520. Martin Luther disputed here with Eckius against the Pope's Supremacy, and quickly after this City embrac'd the Reformation. It suffer'd much in the Civil Wars of Germany, having been several times besieg'd and taken.

Freyburg is a famous and pleasant Town, 20 Miles from Dresden to the South-West, very pleasantly situated, near the River Mulda. St. Peter's Church here is the usual Burial-place of the Electors, many of whose Monuments are there to be seen; but that of the Elector Maurice is the most magnificent, not only of those, but of any in Germany. But that which makes this Town most considerable, is the famous Mines that are found near it; out of which they dig great quantities of Silver-Ore, besides Copper, Lead, Brimstone, Vitriol, &c. and so much Silver is hereby produc'd, that the Elector's Profit out of it is esteem'd at 130000 l. per annum, clear of all Charges.

Plawen or Pleven, a small City, the Capital of Veigtland is seated upon the River Eister, 16 Miles South-West from Zwickow, a small City, seated upon the River Mulda, 40 Miles South from Leipzig: It was a Free Imperial City till the Year 1308. at which time it was taken by Frederick Marquis of Misnia. This Country was the chief Seat of the German Civil Wars, and many Incampments were made near this City.

BAUTZEN or BAUDISSEN, Budissina aut Bubesia, the chief City of the Marquisate of Lusatia or Lausnitz, stands on the River Spree, near the Frontiers of Saxony, 30 Miles from Dresden to the East, 20 from Gorlitz to the West, and 70 from Prague to the North. It was formerly an Imperial City, but lost its Privileges. Before the last German Wars it was well built; but in 1634. the Imperialists having got Possession of it, were besieg'd by the Elector of Saxony and intending to drive off the Enemy, set Fire to the Suburbs, which was unhappily driven over into the City, and burnt it to Ashes, and soon after it suffer'd much from the Swedes; since when it has not been able to recover its former Lustre.

Gorlitz, call'd by some the Capital of this Marquisate, is seated in a Marsh upon the River Neisse, which rises on the borders of this Country, and after it has run quite cross, it falls into the Oder. This is a good City, having many stately Dwelling-houses, and several neat Churches; its Trade lies chiefly in Brewing and making Linnen and Woollen Cloth: It is 20 Miles distant from Bautzen to the East.

Leibaw, Lobaw, Liben or Lubben, is a small Town, seated in a Plain among pleasant Meadows in the middle between Bautzen and Gorlitz: It was formerly so rich, that when the Swedes plunder'd it in 1639. they confels'd they got 70000 Rix Dollars in Money, besides much rich Booty.

Soraw, call'd by some the Capital of the lower Lusatia, is a small City 30 Miles North from Gorlitz, and very near the Borders of Silesia. It was often taken and retaken in the German War, but is now subject to the Elector of Saxony.

Cotwis or Cetbus is a fair Town, seated on the small River Havel, where it falls into the Spree, 35 Miles North from Bautzen, and 22 South from Luben. It is now subject to the Elector of Brandenburg, as are also Peytze, Somerfeld, and some other Towns of less note in this Marquisate.

On the West of Misnia lye these Countries:

MERSBURG, formerly a Bishop's See, under the Archbishop of Magdeburg, but now possess'd by the Elector, as Administrator of it; and with the Territory belonging to it, serves for the Portion for some of the younger Brothers, who are styl'd Dukes of Sax-Mersburg. The Town at present consists of a great number of old-fashion'd ruinous Houses, and hath nothing considerable in it but the Cathedral.

NAUMBURG, a City once Imperial, now subject to the House of Saxony, is seated upon the River Sala, Sala, where it receives the Unstrut, 25 Miles West from Leipsick, and 15 from Mersburg to the South. It is a Bishop's See, under the Archbishop of Magdeburg, and has a Territory of about 20 Miles Extent belonging to it, which was formerly govern'd by its Bishop: But it was yielded to the House of Saxony by the Treaty of Passaw in 1552. one of which Family is Administrator of the Bishoprick.

ALTENBURG stands upon the River Pleisse, 27 Miles from Leipsick to the South, and 46 from Dresden to the West. It was once an Imperial City, but was taken by Frederick Marquis of Misnia in 1388. and united to that Dutchy. It has a Castle in which the Dukes of Saxony have some time kept their Palace.

HALL, call'd Halla Saxonum for distinction, a considerable Town on account of the profitable Salt-Pits near it. It was at first a small Village, and call'd Dobredor, but by reason of the Salt-Pits, encreas'd much, and obtain'd a Charter in 981. from the Emperor Ordo II. and got at last to be an Imperial City; but it has been long exempted, and subjected to its own Duke, with a Territory belonging to it; since fallen to the Archbishop of Magdeburg, and so subject to the Elector of Brandenburg. This City is seated on the Bank of the River Sala, 24 Miles North-West from Leipsick, on the side of a pleasant Hill, cover'd with Vines: It is neatly built, and the Inhabitants are civil. The Salt-Pits yield a Toll to the Administrator of Magdeburg of 500 or 600 Crowns a Week.

The Principality of ANHALT is bounded on the S. by the Counties of Hohenstein, Mansfeld and Hall, and on the North by the Principality of Halberstadt and Dutchy of Magdeburg, and is extended from East to West the space of 90 Miles, tho' but very narrow: It is subject to its own Prince who is of a very ancient Family, from which sprung both the Houses of Saxony and Brandenburg. The chief Towns in it are Zerbst, on the East side of the Elb, about 20 Miles from Magdeburg to the West and 50 from Leipsick to the North; the Place of the Prince's Residence.

Deßau, on the Elb, at the Mouth of the Mulda, a strong fortified Town, pleasantly seated, in a fruitful Country, 8 Miles from Zerbst to the South, and 20 from Bernburg to the East; in which also the Prince has a Palace.

ERFURT, Erford or Erfurdt, lat. Erfordia, aut Erfurtum, the Capital City of Thuringen, is seated on the Banks of the River Gere, 60 Miles West from Leipsick, 60 North from Bamberg, and 70 South from Halberstadt. It is a considerable Place, both on account of the Wealth of its Inhabitants and the Beauty of its publick Edifices, especially the Churches and Abbeys, the stately Castle call'd Cirixberg and a famous University. This City hath a large Territory, wherein stand many Villages, all which were subject to the Archbishop of Mentz, but at the Reformation the Inhabitants embrac'd the Protestant Religion, and put the City under the Protection of the Elector of Saxony, which occasion'd great Contentts between those two Princes: At length the Bishop of Mentz, with the Assistance of the French, took it by force, and oblig'd the Citizens again to receive his Government. However, by the Treaty of Leipsick, 17 of the Villages, its Dependencies, were granted to the Elector of Saxony, and the City, with the rest of the Villages, are still subject to the Elector of Mentz.

Mulhausen is an Imperial City, but under the Protection of the Elector of Saxony. It stands at the foot of a Mountain, upon the River Unstrut, near 30 miles from Erfurt to the North-west, 20 from Eysenack to the North, and 10 from the River Weser to the East.

Weimar, a neat, well-built, and a very ancient City, stands 12 miles from Erfurt to the East, in which is a stately Palace, where the Landgrave of Thuringen used to reside. This City gives Title to a Branch of the Family of Saxony.

Jena is a handsome City, seated on the River Sala, 25 miles from Erfurt to the East. It is famous for an University, founded here by John Frederick Elector of Saxony, to which were granted many Privileges by the Emperor Charles V. and Ferdinand; it is in a flourishing state, and has bred many Eminent Men, particularly J. Lipsius the great Philologer. The Town is well Fortified, and stands in a pleasant Vale, in which grows plenty of Vines.

Gotha, 16 miles West from Erfurt, the Seat of another Branch of the Saxon Family, who is still Duke of Gotha, and is Lord of this Town, and the Counties of Altenburg, Coburg, Honnshurg in Franconia, and Osterland in Upper Saxony. It is a large wall'd Town, and has a good Trade in the Plant call'd Wood, which is sowed and dressed here, and exported in great Quantities.

Eysenach or Isenach, Isenacum, a small City, standing on the River Nesa, near the Borders of Hessen, and distant near 30 miles from Erfurt, and 15 from Gotha to the West. It gives Title to a Duke of the Family of Saxony, and hath an University in it, which was founded 1555.

The small County of HOHENSTEIM lies North of Schwartsburg: Its chief Town is Northausen, an Imperial City, said to be built in 447. by Mercureus King of France. It stands upon the River Zorge, 40 miles from Erfurt to the North, and is under the Protection of the Duke of Saxony.

STOLBERG is a very small County, lying North of Schwartsburg, between Hohenstein to the West, and Mansfeldt to the East. Its chief Town is of the same Name.

The County of MANSFELDT is bounded on the West by Stolberg, on the East by the River Sala, on the South by Thuringen, on the North by some part of Anhalt, and about 30 miles in length from North to South, and 15 in breadth. This Country abounds with Mines of several sorts, but particularly of a Mineral, call'd Scheifforstein, which yields much Copper and some Silver. It is possess'd by its Counts, but now with some acknowledgment of Homage to the Duke of Saxony. This Family is branch'd out into several Houses, who have divided the Country among 'em; by which means they are not now so considerable as they have been.

The Chief Town is Eisleben, a small City near the Lake call'd Suffe See, 40 miles from Weimar to the North, and 55 miles West from Wittenburg. It has its Name from the abundance of Iron-Ore found

The Lower S A X O N Y.

The Lower Saxony comprehends, at present, the Duchies of Brunswick, Lunenbourg and Lauenburg, the Ducies of Hildesheim, the Principalities of Magdeburg and Halberstadt, the Duchies of Bremen, Ferden and Mecklenburg, together with that of Holstein, which partly depends on the Jurisdiction of the King of Denmark. Besides these 9 principal Parts of the Lower Saxony, there are also many other Sovereign States of a lesser Extent, viz. the Duchies of Hanover, Zell, Gottingen, Grubenhagen; the Cities of Hamburg, Lubeck, &c.

The whole Country is bounded on the North by the German Ocean, Denmark and the Baltick Sea; on the South by Hesse and the Upper Saxony, on the East by Pomerania, and the Marquisate of Brandenburg, and on the West by Westphalia. It is extended from North to South for the space of about 200 miles, and from East to West about 220. The most remarkable Rivers are, the Elb, the Weser, the Aller, the Hamma, the Ilmenon, the Leme, the Ocker and the Eldt. Every Prince is absolute within his Dominions, and generally assumes a Title from thence, excepting the States of the Duchies of Bremen and Ferden, whereof the King of Sweden is Administrator; those of the Principalities of Magdeburg and Halberstadt, which depend on the Jurisdiction of the Elector of Brandenburg, and the free Cities of Hamburg and Lubeck. The Lutheran Religion is generally predominant throughout the Lower Saxony, the Princes, Prelates, and even the Abbots of Quedlinburg professing it, except the Bishop of Hildesheim, and some Abbots and Abbesses that profess the Romish. Tho' the Air be cold, the Land produces Corn and Pasture.

The Lower Saxony, with its Dependencies, hath these chief Cities and Towns, viz.

BRUNSWICK, including the Dutchy of Hanover, Principality of Grubenhagen, and Counties of Blackenburg and Reinstein, is bounded on the South by Hesse-Cassel, on the West by the River Weser, on the North by Lunenbourg, and on the East by Magdeburg. The chief Rivers in it are the Leina and the Ocker, besides the Weser which washes its Borders. This Country was anciently part of the Hercynian Forest, and there still remain great Woods and Parks, by which the Inhabitants are plentifully furnish'd with Timber and Fuel, and great store of Game. The Corn grows extreme high, but there is not a great deal of it, nor is the Country very populous. The Inhabitants are of a large size and very robust, feed coarse and lodge hard; Swine's Flesh, with Wheat or Rye-Bread, is their common Diet, insomuch that they are, by the other Germans, call'd Bacon guts.

Upon the Division of Saxony before mention'd, this Country and Lunenbourg were left to Henry the Lion, whose Grandson Otho was created Duke of them by the Emperor Frederick II. A. D. 1235. But he leaving two Sons, these Duchies were divided in 1264. but upon the Failure of Issue, again united in the Year 1368. in the Person of Duke Magnus; whose Sons being ambitious, parted it again. In the Year 1491. this Dukedom of Brunswick was divided by the two Brothers Henry and Erick into equal Shares, whereof Henry's Part was known by the name of Brunswick Wolfenbittel. In 1584 Erick's Issue failing, the whole Dukedom was united in the House of Wolfenbittel, and remain'd so till 1634. that Frederick Ulrich dying without Issue, this Dukedom of Brunswick fell to Augustus Duke of Lunenbourg, and then the Dutchy of Wolfenbittel descended to the younger House of Lunenbourg. The present Duke, Ernest Augustus, is descended from the House of Hanover, and has succeeded to all the Estates of that Dutchy, as well as Lunenbourg and Brunswick, and has been lately (An. 1692) honour'd with the Title of an Elector of the Empire. He was Born Anno 1629. and in 1658. Marry'd the Lady Sophia, Sister to our Prince Rupert (being a Protestant by whom he has had three Sons and a Daughter And is the declar'd Successor after his Mother to the Crown of Great-Britain.

This Family is the only Relict of that famous one of the Guelphs, who were sometime Dukes of Bavaria and Saxony; of the Original of which there goes a notable Story, as follows, Fermiltrudis, Countess of Altorf, upbraided a Woman with Adultery, and made her be punish'd because she had 12 Children at a Birth: It happen'd, that shortly after she herself was deliver'd of the same Number, all Sons; at which she was much concern'd, as fearing the same Scandal; and therefore (her Husband being then absent) commanded her Nurse to kill 11 of them; who accordingly carrying them secretly out in her Apron, was met by the old Count, and ask'd what she had there. The Nurse reply'd, Welpen Whelps; he not contented with that Answer examin'd farther, and forced her to confess the whole Matter: Upon which he enjoynd the Woman Secretly, and dispos'd of the Children, and 6 Years after produc'd them all together to his Lady and all their Friends, at a Feast he made for that purpose, and caus'd them all to be call'd Welpen which after alter'd to Guelphs.

BRUNSWICK, Brunops is, Tulisurgium, was first built by Tanguard and Brano, Dukes of Saxony, A. D. 861. since when it has been often enlarg'd, and is now one of the most considerable of the Hanse-Towns. It is divided into 5 several Corporations, each of which hath its Court of Judicature, but unite in Matters relating to the Common Interest. It is a rich and populous Place, and drives a great Trade in Hides and Malm, which is brew'd here by certain Persons who have the Monopoly, and exported to several Countries. Brunswick claims to be a Free, Imperial City, and has several times disput'd with the Duke, who all along claim'd the Sovereignty; on which account it has endur'd many Sieges, the last of which was in 1671. when it was taken by the present Duke, who has ever since kept a good Guard, and built a Citadel, and otherwise strongly fortify'd it, tho' to the Injury of the City; for the Merchants being displeas'd, have remov'd to other Places. The Houses are well built, and the Town-house is very magnificent: The Form of the Town is almost square, the River Ocker running thro' the middle, and is two miles in Circuit, and surrounded with 2 Walls and 2 Ditches. It is seated in a Plain, near the Northern Bounds of the Country, and is distant 100 miles from Erfurt to the N. and 40 from Halbestadt to the N. W. 70 from the River Elb to the W. 60 from the Weser to the E. and 60 from Magd. burg to the W. Lat. 52. 20.

WOLFENBUTTEL stands upon the River Ocker, but 10 miles from Brunswick to the South. It is the ancient Seat of the Dukes of Brunswick. It is divided into 2 Parts, viz. Ara Guelpica, the Duke's Palace, and Hemisch Stadt, the Town. In the Palace is a Library exceeding well furnish'd with valuable Books, founded by the late Duke Augustus; in the Town the new Church is remarkable, being an admirable piece of Architecture, and in it are bury'd 21 Dukes and Duchesses of Brunswick. It is defended with strong and impregnable Fortifications, and secur'd by marshy Grounds.

HANOVER, Hannovera, call'd anciently Laxenroda, and Han-aver, from a Ferry over the River Leina, on which it stands, 35 miles from Brunswick to the West, and 28 from Zell to the South. It is a strong and populous City, once Imperial, but has long been subject to its Princes. The Inhabitants are much enrich'd by 4 yearly Fairs held here: It is the Capital of the Territory of Culenberg.

Gottingen, a City seated on the River Leina, near the Confines of Hesse, 10 miles from the Weser, 60 miles from Hanover to the South, and 20 from Castel to the North-East.

Hamel, seated on the River Weser, over which it hath a Bridge at the mouth of the Hamel, is a strong, fortify'd and well-garrison'd Town, being near the Confines of Brunswick toward Westphalia, and call'd the Key of this Duke's Dominions; it is distant 44 miles from Gottingen to the North, and near 30 from Hanover to the South. There is a Story of a strange Accident, that, they say, happen'd in this Town on the 26th of June, 1284. of a Piper that undertook to rid them of Rats, with which they were very much annoy'd, which he did, it seems, by the power of his Musick; for at the sound of his Tabret and Pipe, all the Rats follow'd him out of the Town to the River, where they were drown'd. When he had done his Work, he return'd for his Pay, which the Townsman refus'd him, pretending it was too much for so little Work: Upon which he went away in a great Rage; and a Year after came again, and playing as before, all the Children follow'd him into the mouth of a Cave, on the top of a neighbouring Hill, and neither Piper nor Children were ever after heard of. This Story the Towns-men relate with great Confidence, and there is still to be seen, near this Cave's Mouth, a Monument of Stone, with an Inscription expressing the loss of 130 Children swallow'd quick in that Cave.

Grubenhagen, a Cattle near the River Leina, and about 12 miles from Gottingen to the North, has a Territory belonging to it, which is a Dukedom, but subject to the Duke of Brunswick; it is very Woody, having been part of the Hercynian Forest, and abounds with Pine and Fir-Trees. In this Province are rich Mines of Silver, Copper, Lead, and many sorts of Minerals. These Mines were first discover'd in the Year 972, as the Germans relate, by a Hunter who having ty'd his Horte to a Bush, and gon a little from him, at his return found a piece of Ore beat out of the Ground with his Hoof; this Hunter's Name was Ramm, whence the Mountain in which this Mine is, was call'd Ramelsberg. In 1045, other Mines were also discover'd in the neighbouring Hills; and here are now many Towns inhabited only by Miners. The chief Town of this Duchy is

Helmstedt a City built by Charles the Great, A. 782, is seated near the Borders of Magdeburg, and 24 miles from Wolfenbuttel to the East, wherein is an University, founded by Julius Duke of Brunswick-Wolfenbuttel, A. 1576. which is endow'd with large Privileges; particularly that its Rector should for ever have the Title and Dignity of Count Palatine, and has bred many eminent Men, particularly J. Horstius Meibomius, Reineccius, Comringius, &c.

Goslar stands upon the River Gos, which falls into the Ocker near the Confines of Hildesheim, and is 40 miles distant from Gottingen to the N. W. and 25 from Brunswick to the South; it is a Free and Imperial City enjoying large Privileges. The Origin of this City was a Palace built by the Emperor Henry I. The Trade of it is in cleansing, tempering and vending all sorts of Metals and Minerals dug in the neighbouring Countries.

The Counties of BLACKENBURG, REINSTEIN and QUEIDLINBURG, (together with Hohenstein, Stolberg and Schwarzburg in the Upper Saxony, already describ'd) were formerly one Province, and call'd Hartingow. It is a cold Country, and has Mountains, on which Snow lies till Midsummer; affords little Corn; but the Valleys are fill'd with Cattle, and the Forests with Venison. The Inhabitants are thought the longest Livers in Germany, frequently arriving to the Age of 100 or 110 Years. They have Mines of Iron in the Bowels of the Mountains, of which one here call'd Brocken or Brockenberg, is esteem'd the highest in Germany.

Betwixt Blackenburg and Ellingrode is a remarkable Cave, call'd Buman's-Hole, of which none can find the End, tho' many have travell'd very far in it. Large Bones are frequently found in it, and not many Years since a Skeleton of a Man of prodigious Bulk was brought out among other Rarities. There goes goes a Story of a young Fellow, that seeking after his Cattle in this Cave lost his way, and wandering 3 Days together in it, at his return his Hair was chang'd grey, and he told strange Stories of Spirits and Apparitions that he said he had met within it. Here are 2 great craggy Rocks not far from Blackenburg, which naturally represent 2 Monks in their proper Habit, as exact as if they were carv'd out.

Blackenburg and Reinslein are two small Counties which lie betwixt Hilberstadt and Anhalt. They both receive their Names from Castles, of which that of Blackenburg stands 36 miles from Wolfsenbuttel to the South, and 25 miles from Mansfeld to the North, and is the Hunting-seat of the Duke of Wolfsenbuttel. That of Reinslein is old and not considerable: Many other Castles hewn out of Rocks are to be found in these Countries but are not regarded.

Quedlinburg, a small City, formerly a Hanse-Town, now not considerable but for a Lutheran Nunnery, the Abbess whereof is of the House of Austria, and Lady of the City and a small Territory belonging to it. It is distant 8 miles from Blackenburg to the East, and 10 from Halberstadt to the South.

The Bishoprick of HILDESHEIM lying between the 2 Rivers Leina and Ocker, is surrounded with the Territories of the Duke of Brunswick, and is before much in his Power, tho' properly under the Elector of Cologne, as Administrator of Hildesheim, to whom it was restor'd by the Treaty of Brunswick, A. D. 1633. having been for many Years before in the Hands of the Duke of Brunswick. His Suffragan the Bishop, is the immediate Governor of this County, and Protector of the City of Hildesheim, which is a Hanse Town, and considerable on account of the great Trade in Corn, which they maintain. The Buildings are old and venerable, but near enough. The Inhabitants are most of them Lutherans, tho' the Bishop be of the Romish Church, and the only one in Brunswick. It is distant 15 miles from Hannover to the South-East, 50 from Gottingen to the North, 30 from Zell to the South, and 25 from Brunswick to the South-West.

Peina, a small City, stands on the River Fuse, about 12 miles from Brunswick to the West, and has a strong Castle, the Bulwark of this Bishoprick, on a Hill; a remarkable Battle was fought near it in 1553. between Maurice Elector of Saxony, and Alot Marquess of Brandenburg, in which the former lost his Life.

The Dukedom of LUNENBURG,

Is bounded on the South with Brunswick, on the North with the River Elb, on the East with Brandenburg, and on the West with the Dutchy of Bremen and County of Hoye; it is full of large Woods and Forests, which abound with Deer and other Game; other parts of the Country are Heath, barren and desert Lands of vast Extent. The Inhabitants are the most rustic of all Germany.

The Government of the Dutchy of Lunenburg, as has been already said in the Description of Brunswick hath been all along enjoy'd by the Descendants of Henry the Lion, and is at present united with that of Brunswick, under the Illustrious Prince Ernest Augustus, Duke and Elector of Hanover, Brunswick and Lunenburg.

LUNENBURG or Lunenburg. Lunenburgum, a Hanse-Town, and the principal City of this Sovereign Dutchy, is seated on the River Limow, at the distance of 8 miles from the Elb, and 35 from Lunbeck to the South, 60 from Brunswick to the North, and 30 from Hamburg to the East. It is a fair City, of an oblong Form, and about 2 miles in Circumference; the Streets are broad, and the Houses well built. The Town Hall is a handsome Building, over against which stands the Duke's Palace; the Bridge over the River is a very stately one. There are famous Salt-springs near the Town, out of which great store of Salt is made, and affords the Inhabitants a considerable Trade. The Castle that stands on an adjacent Mountain, call'd Kalchberg, they say, is 124 Years older than the City, which was built by Henry the Lion in 1190.

ZELL, the Capital of a Dutchy possess'd by a Branch of the Family of Lunenburg, is seated on the River Ocker, where the Fulda falls into it, 35 miles South from Lunenburg, 25 North from Hannover, and 29 North-East from Brunswick. The Dukes Palace is a square Building, adorn'd with very pleasant Gardens, Orchards and Groves. It is noted round, and was built A. D. 1485. In it are held the chief Courts of Judicature.

Bludewick, but 5 miles distant from Lunenburg to the North, was anciently a strong and very populous City but now a poor Village only. The Cathedral Church is the only one now left of 9 that were formerly in this Town, in which is still a College of 8 Residentiary Canons.

Hamburg is a strong Town upon the Elb, 30 miles West from Lunenburg; it has a Castle, and is the strongest Frontier of this Country: The Town is but thinly inhabited, and not considerable.

Utzzen, a little neat Town in the midway between Lunenburg and Zell, was formerly call'd Lewenwald, and had this Name of Utzzen from a Monastery in the Neighbourhood call'd Olden Stadt. In the Year 1646. it was destroy'd by Fire, but is the greatest part rebuilt more splendid than formerly. The Inhabitants pretend, that the English Saxons went from hence, and that a Ship of Tin gilt, that was to be seen in the Market place before the Fire, was hung up in remembrance of it, by some of them that return'd.

Walstode, at first only a Monastery, built by one Walo Prince of Anhalt, A. 986. but now a considerable Town, driving a good Trade in Honey, Wax, Wool and Beer; it stands in a pleasant Valley encompass'd with Mountains and Woods, 25 miles from Zell to the East, near the Borders of Ferden.

The Counties of Hoye and Diepholt, already describ'd are subject to the Duke of Lunenburg.

The Dukedoms of BREMEN and FERDEN.

Eastward from Lunenburg, and between the Rivers Elb and Weser, lies the Dutchy of Bremen, which was formerly an Archbishoprick, and the whole Country subject to its Prelate, till about the Year 1644. This Country was conquer'd by the Swede, and by the Treaty of Munster the Archbishoprick of Bremen, with the Bishoprick of Ferden, were granted to that King, and turn'd into a Dukedom: But tho' this is spoken of the Country in general, it is not meant of every part of it; for the City of Bremen is Free, and has a Territory of its own; the Citizens of Hamburg have the 2 Forts of Ritzenbuttel and New Werk, and a part of it belongs to the Dutchy of Sax-Lawenburg, as will be seen more particularly in our Description.

The Soil of this Country is in the middle Parts sandy and barren Heath, but the outer part towards the two Rivers is very fertile, and abounds with pleasant Fields and Meadows.

The Inhabitants are reckon'd as good Soldiers as any in Germany; and 'tis said of the Wustlanders, the Inhabitants of that part of the Country that lies to the Sea-side that they will Fight and Drink with the best Men in Germany.

BREMEN, B emia & Bremenfis Civitas, which gives Name to this Dukedom, is a very considerable, large and well built City, seated in a fruitful Plain on the Banks of the Weser, 70 miles from Zell to the West, and 60 from Emden to the East, 90 from Munster to the North, and 60 from Hamburg to the South-west. It is very strong, for besides the Walls and Castle, the situation affords them a good Defence, the low Grounds about it being easily overflowed from the Weser.

It is a free, Imperial City, and reckon'd the third of the Hanse-towns. Charles the Great founded the Archbishoprick, and made it the Metropolis of the North. The Emperor Henry V. A. 1111. granted the Citizens great Privileges in reward of their valiant Performances in the Holy War. It receiv'd the Reformation in 1532. and zealously defended it against their Archbishop. Upon which account it was besieged by order of the Emperor Charles V. in the Year 1547. but the Citizens so valiantly defended themselves, that Goenghen Governor of Zeeland, who commanded in chief, was Kill'd, and the Duke of Brunswick who succeeded him, was forced at last to raise the Siege, after near a Year's labour in vain. It is Govern'd by four Burgo-Masters and 24 Common-Council Men, who also judge all Law-suits between the Citizens. The River Weser divides it into two Parts, of which that on the North-side is the Old City, and the other is call'd the New; these are joyn'd again by Wooden Bridges, the biggest of which has a curious Engine on it that raises the Water and distributes it all over the Town. The Streets of the old Town are large and center in the Market-place, wherein stands an old Image of Giganuck Buik, call'd Statua Rolandina, on which is an ancient Inscription, importing it to be a Testimonial of the Liberty granted by Charles the Great and other Emperors, to this City. These Statues have been set up in many Cities, and by the Germans (tho' with little reason) said to be the Image of a certain General nam'd Roland, employ'd by Charles the Great in the Conquest of these Countries; in whole Honour he order'd these Statues to be set up, and made the Condition of their Tenure of certain Privileges. In the old Town stands also the Town-house and the ancient Cathedral Church dedicated to S. John, wherein they shew the Tomb, as they say, of Willibald, an English Priest, who was sent over into Germany by Egbert Arch-bishop of York, at the request of Charles the Great to convert these Infidels; who, after he had labour'd many Years with great success, was made the first Arch-bishop of this See, and died A. D. 790. In the new Town are the Arsenal and the Gymnasium or small University; at first a Free-School, built soon after the Reformation, and endow'd by the Citizens; which encreasing by degrees, is now a noted University, and has educated several famous Men, particularly Clytræus, Pezeli-us, Pierius, Mat. Martinus, and Jo Cocceius. This City, by means of the River, is much frequented with Merchant Ships from Holland and other Nations, by which they export their own Commodities, Corn, Minerals, Wool, Timber, Fish, Leather, &c. and receive those of other Countries, which they, by the same River, transmit to the other Provinces of Germany. The Territory of this City extends about 5 or 10 miles round.

Stade, the next considerable City in this Dukedom, is situate on the River Zwinge near the Elb in a fruitful Country and wholesome Air, about 30 miles from Bremen to the N. and 25 from Hamburg to the W. It is a very strong Place, being fortified with vast Ramparts, Bulwarks, and a strong Castle: It has a commodious Haven, into which larger Ships can enter than are able to get up to Hamburg. This City hath been endow'd with great Privileges; particularly it was an Asylum, or place of refuge for all Offenders, and had a right to demand a Toll of Ships passing up the Elb; besides, it is a Hanse-town: By all which means, no wonder it was once rich and populous. But it seems Hamburg out-strip it, and this Place became so poor, that they were forc'd to sell its great Privileges to that City and put themselves under the Protection of the Arch-bishop of Bremen, and it is now subject to the King of Sweden. It was anciently the Capital of a County subject to its own Earl, which was annex'd to the Arch-bishoprick by Philip Duke of Schwaben an Earl of Stade, about the Year 1240. After its decay above-mentioned, our English Merchants, upon some Abuse offer'd them at Hamburg, remov'd hither; which reviv'd its Trade, and in a little time made it again rich and populous, and it is at present in good condition. The Town is well built, and the Market-place, Town-hall and Churches, are worth a Traveller's sight.

Buxtehude, another Hanse-town, is seated on the River Esja near the Elb, in a very fruitful and pleasant Country, 15 miles from Stade to the West, and as many from Hamburg to the East. It is a Granary to Hamburg, that City receiving a great part of its Provisions from this.

Bremerfurde, a wall'd Town, on the Road betwixt Bremen and Stade, being distant 25 miles to the North from the first, and 15 to the South from the latter. It was once the Palace of the Arch-bishop and has a Castle, wherein, because it commands the neighbouring Plains, the Swedes keep a good Garrison. The Town is otherwise not considerable having little or no Trade.

Ottersberg, a small fortified Town defended by a strong Castle, which was for some time the Place of Residence of the Arch-bishop, stands 16 miles from Bremen to the East.

Rutzenbittel is a strong Fort at the mouth of the Elb, 32 miles to the North-west from Stade, and no 10 miles from the utmost point of Land of this Country. It belongs to the Hamburgers, who have all another small Fort near it, call'd New-Weck, and a small Territory round them.

The Duke of Sax-Lawenburg is Lord of that part of this Country call'd Hadeland, which is the most North-east part of it, but contains nothing considerable enough to deserve a particular Description. The extent of it the Reader may judge by the Map when he knows that Nubenhays on the Elb, and Carlsstadt on the Weser belong to the Swede. Hadeland which gives Name to the Country, and Ottersberg are the two best Towns in it.

The Principality of FERDEN or VERDEN formerly a Bishoprick, and now subject to the Swede as above-said, is situate next to Lunenburg, and bounded on the West by the Weser; it was made a Bishoprick by Charles the Great. The chief Town of the same Name stands upon the River Alte which which falls into the Weser, and is distant 42 miles from Zell to the West, and 27 from Bremen to the East. It is supplied with all Foreign Commodities by Barges from Bremen: The City has nothing very considerable in it. It has been several times taken, viz. by Count Tilly, in 1626. by the Imperials, in 1631. In 1676. it was seized by the Duke of Lunenbourg, but restored to the Swede, in 1679. to whom it still remains.

Rottenberg, a small City on the River Wein, stands in the Bounds of this Principality and near the Borders of it, 15 miles from Ferdin to the North. It was at first the Bishop's Palace, which was Fortified in the Year 1500. and the small Village near it wall-ed in and made a City; which since is considerably encreas'd, and grown a place of some Trade and well inhabited.

The Cities of HAMBURG and LUBECK.

HAMBURG, that flourishing, rich and populous City, is seated on the North side of the River Elb, at the distance of 40 miles from Lubeck to the South-west, and 65 from Bremen to the North east, and 30 from Lunenbourg to the North-west. 60 from Zell to the North, and 72 from the Mouth of the Elb; which River makes it a most commodious Haven, being so deep that Ships of very great Burden can come up to the very Walls of the Town, and the Tide flows up 16 miles above it. It is the chief Port, and hath been long the greatest Mart-town of Germany: The Haven is continually full of Ships, and the Exchange daily crowded with Merchants. The Town is divided into two parts, the Old and the New, but both close together and parted only by a Wall, and both well Fortified. The Buildings are of Brick, and exceeding high and stately; the chief Church, formerly a Cathedral, is dedicated to S. Peter, and was built about 830. Several of the Earls of Holstein and Schawenburg lie Buried in it. In S. Catharine's Church is a Pulpit of white Marble curiously Carved, and adorn'd with Figures of Alabaster and Ornaments of Gold. The Poor and Sick are extraordinarily well provided for in Hamburg, by the many Hospitals liberally endow'd. of which there are no less than 6 for the maintaining old, decrepit, poor People; for curing the Sick, for educating poor Children, to receive poor Strangers fallen Sick in Travelling, and for the maintenance of maimed Seamen: Besides which, care is taken of the Widows and Children of those that lose their Lives in the Service of the Publick.

The Trade of the City consists in all manner of Foreign Goods, as well as those of the product of Germany, the former being receiv'd by Ships from all parts of the World, and from hence convey'd up the Elb to the heart of Germany; and the Commodities of the several parts of the Empire return'd by the same River, and transported to other Nations, to the great Profit of the Inhabitants, who are the Managers of this vast Traffick. Our English Merchants having brought great Profit to this City, are treated with great Civility and Respect, and have the Privilege of trying and deciding Controversies among themselves, before their own Resident; and are permitted the free Exercise of their Religion, which is denied to other Nations. The Inhabitants, being Lutherans, forbid the Exercise of the Romish Religion.

This rich and powerful City is a free and imperial State, and independent of any Power but the Emperor's, to whom they pay a small Homage.

They enact Laws, punish Criminals even to Death, levy Taxes, make League and War as they please, by a Grant of the Emperor Frederick I. and confirm'd by Ferdinand II. The Citizens of Hamburg are exempted from all Tolls and Customs upon the Elb, betwixt their own City and the Ocean; notwithstanding which, the King of Denmark has sometimes compell'd their Ships to pay Toll at his Castle of Gluckstadt, which occasioned great Contests. This was made up in the Year 1645. and the Hamburgers permitted to re-assume their ancient Privileges, upon the payment of 120000 Rix Dollars to that King.

The Government of this City is in its own Magistrates, who are 4 Burgomasters, 20 Schepins or Aldermen, and 12 Common-council, call'd die Oberalten, or chief Elders. These upon extraordinary Occasions call to their Assistance 60 more eminent Citizens, call'd, The Elders of the City; and if it be too difficult a matter for them to determine, the whole Commonality of Free-men are assembled. This City is able to arm 15000 Men.

It was taken by Waldemar Duke of Sleswick about the Year 1200. who gave it Albrecht Earl of Orlimumd, of whom the Citizens bought their Liberty, and so became a free State; which was several times confirm'd by the Earls of Holstein and Schawenburg his Posterity, to the last of that Family, who died A. 1459 after which, the Province of Holstein falling into the Hands of Christian I. King of Denmark, the Hamburgers contracted a League of Friendship with that Prince, whose Successors have often endeavour'd to have the Protection of this City, but could never obtain it. In the Year 1510. the City of Hamburg was declared Free and Imperial by the Emperor Maximilian in the Diet, and the Duke of Holstein summon'd to make good his Pretensions to it, or renounce them for ever. In fine, the City has to this Day preserv'd its Freedom, which it has been the better able to do, by reason of the continual Jealousies between the two Northern Crowns; for the Swede being Master of the South side of the Elb, as the Dane is of the North, what mischief this does them from Gluckstadt, will be reveng'd by the other from Stade. However, the Dane has several times fleec'd them; in the Year 1679. he got 220000 Rix Dollars of them, to take them again into his Favour, as 'twas term'd in the Treaty; and in the Year 1686. he again brought an Army and Besieg'd it, but was bought off.

LUBECK, Lubea & Lubecum, an Imperial City, and the Capital of all the Hanse-towns, is conveniently seated near the Sea, and on the Banks of the Trave, which having receiv'd the Waters of a lesser River into its Channel, form a kind of Marsh round about the Walls, and passing through the City conveys Vessels of as large size as any that sail upon the Baltick, up to the Town, which by that means, is a Place of great Traffick. It was heretofore only a small Town, built by Adolphus Count of Holstein, under the Reign of the Emperor Conrad III. from whom it was taken by Henry the Lyon Duke of Saxony, afterwards conquer'd by Waldemar Duke of Sleswick; but being ill treated by the Danes, the Citizens expel'd them, and put themselves under the Protection of the Emperor Frederick II. who constituted it an imperial and free City, A. 1209. and it is at present one of the principal ones of Germany. It is distant 10 miles from the Coasts of the Baltick Sea, 37 from Hamburg to the North-east, and as many from Wismar to the West. The Streets are very fair and adorn'd with divers magnificent Buildings, the chief whereof are the the Cathedral dedicated to S. John, the Collegiate Churches of the Virgin Mary, S. James, St. Peter, &c. Its Episcopal See under the Metropolitan of Bremen, was translated hither from Oldenburg, A. D. 1162. but the Bishops have been Protestants ever since the Year 1561. when the Reformed Religion was introduc'd here by Dietterus of Reventon, and a Custom hath prevail'd. That the Administration of the Bishoprick of Lubeck should devolve as an Appanage or Inheritance on the younger Sons of the Duke of Holstein Gottorp, the shadow of an Election being only left to the Chapter, whence they are stiled Dukes of Eutin, from a Town about 4 miles from hence so called, wherein this Prelate usually Resides, and which was annexed to the Episcopal See by Adolphus II Count of Holstein, when it as yet retain'd the name of Oldenburg. The City is Govern'd by twelve Burgo-masters, who are Civilians and Gentlemen. The Common-Council are compos'd of Lawyers and Merchants, Mechanicks being excluded. A remarkable Treaty of Peace was concluded at Lubeck, between the Emperor and the King of Denmark, A. D. 1629.

The Duchy of LAIVENBURG lies on the Banks of the Elb, between the Dukedoms of Holstein, Mecklenburg and Lunenburg, and is subject to its own Duke, who is of the Family of the ancient Dukes of Saxony. The chief Town of the same Name is seated on the River Elb, 25 miles from Lubeck to the South, 35 from Hamburg to the East, and 15 from Lunenburg to the North. It is said to have been built by Henry the Lion Duke of Saxony, and thence call'd Leoburgum; but in the Wars against that Prince it being much damaged, Bernard of Anhalt, who succeeded him, re-edified, enlarg'd and strengthened it, and gave it to John his Second Son, with this Duchy; from whence the last Duke of Sax-Lawenburg was descended, who dying in the Year 1692. and leaving no Issue Male, the Succession to this Duchy hath been claim'd by the Elector of Saxony and other Princes.

Ratzeburg, seated on a Lake of the same Name, 15 miles from Lawenburg to the North, and 12 from Lubeck to the South, is the See of a Bishop, under the Archbishop of Bremen, planted by Henry the Lion, when he Conquer'd these Parts. It was subject to its Bishop before the Treaty of Westphalia, A. D. 1648. by which the Jurisdiction of it was divided between the Dukes of Mecklenburg and Lawenburg, the Town being given to the former, and the Castle to the latter. This Town receiv'd the Augsburgian Confession, A 1566. It is the Capital of a Country of the same Name, and the ancient Burial-place of the Dukes.

To this Duke, as hath been already said, some part of the Dukedom of Bremen is subject, as are also Frankenhausen, Sassenhausen, and some other Towns on the Elb.

The Dukedom of MECKLENBURG.

The Dukedom of Mecklenburg is situate between the Dutchies of Holstein and Sax-Lawenburg to the West, the Baltick Sea to the North, Pomerania to the East, and Brandenburg to the South. It is a Country reasonably large, and stor'd with Corn, Fruits, Fish, and Fowl but in an unpleasant Air, being not wholesome in the Summer, and extream Cold in the Winter: The ancient Inhabitants were the Vandals. At present the Country is divided between the two Dukes of Swerin and Gustrow. This Division was made in the Year 1592. for the sakes of the two Sons of John III. the Eldest seated in Swerin, and the Youngest in Gustrow.

Swerin, seated upon a Lake of the same name, is distant 40 Miles from the River Elb to the North, 20 from the Baltick Sea to the South, and 35 from Lubeck to the East: It was built by Henry the Lion, A. D. 1163. who bestow'd it on Guntzelone of his Generals, with the Lordships belonging thereto, and made him Earl of Swerin, but his Family ending in 1355. it was annex'd to Mecklenburg. The Bishop's See, which had before been at Mecklenburg, was about the Year 1260 remov'd to this City, at the request of Henry, who built the Cathedral and Library and endow'd it, since which time there was a continual Succession til the Treaty of Munster, when the Bishoprick was Seculariz'd. In this City the Duke of Mecklenburg Swerin keeps his usual Residence.

Mecklenburg is at present a small inconsiderable Village near Wismar, tho' anciently a large City, and gave name to this Dukedom. There are some little Remains of Ruins to be seen for some miles round.

Gustrow, the place of the Residence of the Duke of Mecklenburg Gustrow, is a strong well fortified Town, and stands 35 miles from Swerin to the East, and 15 from Rostock to the South.

Rostock a Free Imperial City and Hanse-Town, but under the Protection of the Duke of Mecklenburg is seated on the River Warna, which 8 Miles below it falls into the Baltick Sea, and makes it a reasonable good Port, which was well frequented by Merchants Ships; but since the Treaty of Munster the Sweeds have built a Fort at the mouth of the River, and exact a Toll on all Ships that pass by, to the great decay of the Trade of this Town. An University was founded here by the Dukes of Mecklenburg, Anno 1419. which is now one of the most flourishing in Germany. It stands 16 Miles from Gustrow to the North and 36 from Wismar to the East.

Wismar, a Hanse-Town, is seated at the bottom of a Bay of the Baltick Sea, 12 Miles from Swerin to the N. Henry de Mecklenburg about the Year 1266. establish'd the same manner of Government here as was at Lubeck by which it quickly grew rich, and the Haven being convenient, it was made the Harbour of the Men of War belonging to the Hanseatick Society, and the Town very strongly fortified. This City was granted to the Sweed by the Treaty of Munster, and was taken from him by the Dane in 1675. By the last Treaty of Peace between those two Princes, it was agreed to be deliver'd to the Sweed upon payment of certain Sums of Money, which it seems are not yet paid, for the Town still remains in the Hands of the King of Denmark.

C H A P. XIII.

The Circle of WESTPHALIA.

THIS Circle lies on the West-side of the River Weser, from the German Ocean on the North, to the Province of Hessen on the South, and between the Lower Saxony on the East, and the Netherlands on the West. The utmost extent of it may be reckon'd about 200 miles from North to South, and from from East to West in some parts 100. in others 150 miles; which Extent comprehends many Sovereignities, viz. the Principality of East Friesland, and Bishopricks of Munster, Osnabrug and Paderborn; the Duchies of Cleve and Juliers, with several smaller States, as is more particularly express'd in the Table annex'd.

It was anciently inhabited by the Saxons, and by them call'd Westvelden, from its situation on the West-side of the Wefer, as the Country on the other side was call'd Oost-velden: From hence, some affirm, the Saxons came that Invaded England; and many Arguments, not altogether improbable, have been made by some Learned Germans to prove it. But since Mr. Camden, who was so indefatigable an Enquirer into, and so excellent a Judge of Antiquity, inclines to the common Opinion, that they came from the most Northern part of Saxony, it is most reasonable to be concluded by him, and reject the Arguments of others, how plausible soever they may seem.

When Charles the Great had conquer'd the Saxons, and plant'd Christianity among them, he erected several bishopricks, to which he gave Lands for their support. In the part we are speaking of, we find three very considerable ones, besides that of Liege, who have Sovereign Princes; they were not made altogether so potent in his time, but encreas'd their Dominions at the general Partition that was made of the great Dukedom of Saxony, when Henry the Lion was Proscrib'd; 'twas then that the Bishop of Munster enlarg'd his Country, and that the Archbishop of Cologne obtain'd that part of Westphalia which he still holds, and by that part of it styles himself Duke of Westphalia. The other Sovereignities are the County of East Friesland, the County of Oldenburg, the Principality of Minden, the Counties of Hoye, Lippe, Ravensburg, &c. together with the Duchy of Cleve, Juliers and Beig; all which have been erected at several times, upon several occasions, which we have not room here particularly to shew.

The Air, especially in the Northern part, is very Cold, and great part of the Ground is Marshy, or Barren; however Corn and Pasture is produc'd in plenty; but the Fruit is very ordinary, and serves chiefly to feed the Hogs, whereof this Country hath good store, and of an Excellent Kind; so that the Bacon which they send abroad, is very much esteem'd. The chief Rivers are the Wefer, the Ems, the Lippe, the Roor, the Aa, &c. The Accomodations a Traveller may meet with here, is prettily enough express'd in this Disick, very common in Germany, viz.

Hospitum Vile, Groof Broot, dun Bier, lange Milen, Smit in Westphalia: Qui non vult credere, Loop daer.

That is,

Who Travels into Westphalia's sure to find, vile.
Long Miles, small Beer, coarse Bread and Lodging

The BISHOPRICK of MUNSTER is stretched out on both sides the River Ems, from the Borders of the County of Emden on the North, to the Duchy of Cleve, County of Mark, and Duchy of Westphalia on the South, being in length near 100 miles. On the East it is bounded by the Counties of Delmenhorst, & Diepholt, the Bishopricks of Osnabrug and Paderborn, and the Counties of Ravensburg and Lippe. On the West it hath the Province of Overissel, the County of Bentheim, and the County of Zurphen, containing in breadth in some parts 60. in others 40. and in some parts not above 20 miles. This Province is intirely subject to the Bishop, who is a Count of the Empire, and a powerful Prince, being able to maintain an Army of 15000 Men. The chief Cities and Towns in his Dominions are these, viz.

MUNSTER. Monasterium, olim Minigrods, which is reckon'd the Capital of the Circle of Westphalia, takes its name from a Monastery built here by Charles the Great. It is pleasantly situated in a large Plain, on the Banks of the River Aa, which falls into the Ems, a little below the Town. This was an Imperial City and Hanse-Town, but hath been subject subject to the Bishop since 1661. It is adorn'd with a stately Cathedral, a College belonging to the Jesuits, and other fair Buildings; and is Fortified with a strong Castle and regular Out-works. An Insurrection of the Anabaptists here in the last Age was very remarkable; for these furious Enthusiasticks, under the Conduct of a Sanctified Taylor, call'd John of Leyden, seiz'd the City, turn'd out the Magistrates, and Lorded it at pleasure for a Years time: But at last their doughty Prince was taken Prisoner, and duly rewarded with a publick Execution, whereby the publick Peace was restored in the Year 1534. And in this Age, this City hath been made famous by a memorable Treaty in it held, and a Peace concluded between the Emperor and Princes of Germany, which put an end to the Civil War first began between the Elector Palatine, but had at last engag'd most of the Princes, and miserably harras'd all Germany, from about the year 1618. till 1648. in which year this Westphalian Peace was made. Munster stands 90 miles South from the German Ocean, 60 miles West from the River Weser, as many East from the Rhine, and an 120 North from the Maine, in the Lat. of 51 deg. 40 m. and Longit. 27 deg.

Kneppenburg stands at the head of the little River Sceffe near the borders of the County of Oldenburg, 65 miles North from Munster. It is a strong Fortified Town, but was taken by the Swedes in 1635. and recover'd soon after by the Bishop, to whom it is still subject.

Vecke, the Capital of a small Barony, formerly govern'd by its own Lord, stands near the Borders of the County of Diepholt, 15 miles South East from Kneppenburg.

Meppen, a strong fortified Town, stands on the River Hase, where it falls into the Embs, 25 miles S. W. from Kneppenburg. It was taken by the Dutch in 1587. but regain'd, and since, together with Kneppenburg, and another Fort call'd Haselunnen, made over to the Bishop of Munster, by the Counts of Tecklenburg, to whom they then belong'd.

Tilligt, which stands near the Embs, 10 miles West from Munster, was made famous by a Convention of the States of Munster, held in it, in 1532.

Ketzfeldt is a small Hanse-Town on the River Berfel, 20 miles West from Munster.

The County of Embsden, Emmerlandt, or EAST-FRIEZLAND, is bounded on the North and East by the German Ocean, on the West by the County of Oldenburg, and on the South by the Bishoprick of Munster. This was part of the Kingdom of the ancient Frisons; but this part was made a Province of Germany by Charles the Great, and in 1453. Ulrich the Governour of it was made Count, and his Family have since been Princes of it to the present Count Christian Everard, EMBDEN, Embsda, Amassia aut Amisla, the Capital of East Friezland, is seated near the mouth of the River Embs, and on the Bay call'd Dollaert, at the distance of 25 miles from Groningen to the East, 60 from Bremen to the West, and 100 from Munster to the North. It hath a very convenient and deep Haven, and the People are of an industrious nature, it is therefore a place of good Trade, and much resorted to by Merchant Ships from Foreign parts: Our Merchants, upon their removal from Antwerp, brought hither the Staple, or chief Ware-house for Englisc Cloath, but being ill-us'd, remov'd it to Hamburg. The Houses here are generally well-built, and the Stad-huys, or Town-hall, is very Magnificent. This City was formerly subject to the Count of Friezland, but it hath thrown off his Authority and is now a Free-state, under the Protection of the Hollanders. It is defended by two strong Castles, a Wall with Bastions and regular Bulwarks, and a double Ditch round about.

Norden, a pleasant Port-Town about 15 miles N. from Embsden, is well-built, but not Fortified. The Harbour is not deep enough to receive Ships of any great Burthen.

Auwich, in a Triangule with Embsden and Norden, is the place where the Supreme Court of Judicature for this Country is held. Here is a Castle belonging the Count, and a slight Wall round the Town.

Efens, 12 miles East from Norden, is defended by a strong Castle.

Wimund is a good large Town, about 7 or 8 miles S. E. from Efens, both formerly Barones, but devolved on the Count of Friezland. This was once a place of good Trade, but now much declined.

Jever, about 10 miles S. E. from Efens, is a fair Town, and gives Title to a Baron. It has a good strong Castle; and by means of the River Hoek, which falls into the Ocean 10 miles below, it hath acquir'd a pretty good Trade. This Barony is now subject to the Count of Oldenburg.

On the South East of Embsden lies the County of OLDENBURG, a poor barren Country, extended along the Banks of the Weser, near 50 miles in length, and 25 in breadth. Its chief Town of the same name is seated on the River Hunte, at the distance of 35 miles from Embsden to the East, and as many from Bremen to the West. It is well Fortified with Walls and Ditches, and a strong well-built Castle, which is the Seat of its Earl. The Houses are very mean, but the place hath a pretty good Trade by the means of the River, which falling into the Weser, Ships of Burden can come up into the Town.

DELMENHORST, the Capital of a small County, lying next to Oldenburg on the South-east, is a strong fortified Town, but otherwise not considerable. It stands upon the River Dilma, 16 miles East from Oldenburg, and 10 S. W. from Bremen.

DIEPHLOT, a small County, lies on the South of Delmenhorst, and between Munster on the West, and Hoje on the East. It is now subject to the Duke of Lunenbourg. The chief Town of the same name is seated near the Lake call'd Dummer, out of which the River Hunte arises, and passes by this Town, which is distant 40 miles from Oldenburg to the South, and 35 from the Weser to the West.

HOYE, a County on the Banks of the Weser, East of Diepholt, and South of Bremen, was Govern'd by its own Lords, till 1582. when the last Count dying, it was parted among several Princes. Hoje, the chief Town, (a small place, but well Fortified) with Nieuburg, Lavenaw, and Bruchausen, became subject to the Duke of Lunenbourg; the Forts of Selzenaw, Ezenburg, and 5 more Towns, to the House of Brunswick; and Freudenburg and Ucht to the Landgrave of Hesse.

MINDEN the Capital of a small Principality, is a large rich Hanse-Town, standing on the Weser, 55 Miles from Bremen to the South, and 35 from Osnabrug to the East. This Principality was given to the Elector of Brandenburg at the Treaty of Munster. It is a good Country and produces plenty of Corn; the extent of it is about 25 miles in length, and 20 in breadth.

The Bishoprick of OSNABRUG lyes between Minden on the East, and Munster on the West Diepholt on the N. E. and Ravensburg on the S. W.

and in the middle between the two Rivers Wefer and Embs. Its extent from North to South is 45 miles, and from East to West 25 miles. It is a fruitful Country, and subject to its Bishop, who is a Count of the Empire.

Osnabrug, Osnabrug, Osnabrugum, aut Osnabrucum, the Capital, is subject to the Bishop, though call'd a Hanse-Town. It stands upon the River Hase in a fruitful Valley, 30 Miles from Munster to the North-east, and 60 from Oldenburg to the South; it has a Fort for its defence call'd St. Peter's Castle. This City was honour'd with a Treaty of Peace between the Emperor and the King of Sweden, in the Year 1648 wherein an Agreement was made concerning all the Affairs of the Protestants, and the Bishopricks made alternative between the Roman Catholicks and Lutherans, in favour of the House of Brunswick.

Iburg, stands about 12 miles South from the City, and is the place where the Bishop resides.

TECKLENBURG, a strong Castle and Fort, stands about 10 miles West from Osnabrug, and is the Capital of a small County, formerly under its own Counts; now subject to that of Benthem.

SCAUMBURG, or Schaumburg, an old Castle on the top of an Hill, on the North-side of the Wefer, 45 miles from Hoye to the South, and 50 from Osnaburg, and 16 from Minden to the East, gives name to a County of 25 miles extent from North to South, and 18 from East to West, which lies on the East of Minden, and South of Hoye; the River Wefer passes cross it; besides which it is water'd with the Rivers Hannel, Awe, Caspaw and Exter; these yield the Inhabitants abundance of Fish, and the Country plenty of Corn, Hay, Timber, and Venison: Here are also Quarries of Stone, which they send abroad, and some Mines of Allum, Coal, &c. This County is subject to the House of Lippe.

Saxenhagen, or Sassenhagen, a Fort and Town in the most Northern part of this County.

Bukenburg, the Seat of the second Branch of the House of Lippe, who are thence still'd Counts of Lippe-Bukenburg.

Oldendorp, on the Banks of the Wefer, a small but strong Town, 5 miles from Schaumburg; it repell'd the Imperial Forces in 1633. but was taken by them in 1639. The Counts of Lippe have a Custom-house here to receive Duty paid by all Vessels that pass this way.

LIPPE, or Liepstadt, is a very strong and well fortified Town, seated on the River Lippe, 45 miles from Osnaburg to the South, and 35 from Munster to the East. This place was besieg'd by the French in the War of 1674 but defended it self so well that they were forc'd to raise the Siege. It is the Capital of a Country which lies between Ravensburg to the North, and Paderborn to the South, a narrow Tract of Land, in length from East to West about 50 miles, and in breadth 15 or 20. Its Counts are of a very ancient Family, and are not only Lords of this County, but of several other places in the Neighbourhood.

Dietmold, or Dietmelle, as 'tis writ in the Maps, 30 miles from Lippe to the N. E. and 25 from Minden to the S. is the place of Residence of the Eldest House of Lippe, but not considerable on any other account.

Horn, an old Town near Dietmold, once subject to Counts of its own, now to the Count of Lippe.

Lemgow, a rich and near Hanse-Town on the River Pega, 7 miles North from Dietmelle, once subject to the Bishop of Paderborn, by whom made over to the Counts of Lippe, on whom it hath still some dependance, but hath obtain'd many Privileges.

The Bishoprick of PADERBORN is bounded on the North with Lippe, on the South with Hesse-Cassel and Waldeck, and on the West with Munster and Westphalia, and contains in it 24 Market Towns, 20 Castles, 54 Parishes, and 16 Monasteries, which are all subject to the Bishop.

PADERBORN, Paderborna, aut Padrabranna, stands near the source of the River Lippe, from whence it is distant only 16 miles to the South, 30 from Corway, 45 from Cassel to the North west, and 50 from Munster to the South-east, and is handsomely built and well fortified. The Emperor Charlemagne made it an Episcopal See, under the Metropolitan of Mentz, and held a Convention or Parliament there, A. C. 777. It was a free City, and one of the Hanseatick Society; but the Bishop hath been Temporal as well as Spiritual Lord of it, and of the whole Diocess, ever since the Year 1604. Theodore of Furstemburg, Bishop of Paderborn, built the adjacent Castle of Newbanse or Nienhus near the confluence of the Lippe and the Alme, A. D. 1590 which serves as an Episcopal Palace; he also founded an University in the City, in 1592.

Lippesburg, about 5 miles from Paderborn, standing on the edge of a great Heath call'd die Senne, has a stately Castle belonging to the Dean and Chapter of Paderborn, who are Lords of the Town. The River Lippe springs near this Castle.

Warburg, a Hanse-Town, is seated in a fruitful Country on the River Dymel, 25 Miles South-east from Paderborn. Some Neighbouring Mines of Iron and Lead afford this Town a good Trade, Between the Bishoprick of Paderborn and the River Wefer, lies the Territory of the Abbey of CORBEY, founded by the Emperor Lewes I. It is about 15 or 16 miles in length, and in it, besides other Towns, stands

Hoxter, a fair City on the Wefer, 25 miles North from Cassel, and directly West from Paderborn, which by the means of the River, is a place of good Trade.

Besides this Territory, the Island of Rugen in Pomerania was given to this Abby by the Emperor Lotharius, A. 844.

And now having survey'd all the Countries on the East of Westphalia, we must cross Munster, and before we come to Cleeve, and its Dependences, view

The Earldom of BENTHEM which lies on the West-side of the Bishoprick of Munster, stretching out into the Province of Overissel, wherewith it is surrounded on all the other sides. It is in length near 40 miles, and in breadth about 15. The chief Town Benthem, stands near the South-border of the County, 30 miles North-West from Munster, 36 West from Osnabrug, and 40 East from Deventer. It is fortified and has a Castle, but is a place of no Trade, being seated in a Wood and far from a River.

LINGEN, a strong Town on the River Embs, 40 miles North from Munster, is subject to the Prince of Orange; tho the County, of which it is Capital, be under the Bishop of Munster.

STEINFURT or Borchstenford, is also a small County, lying South of Benthem, to whose Earl it is now subject, tho' formerly it had Lords of its own. The chief Town stands 20 miles North from Munster.

The Dutchies of CLEEVE and JULIERS, with their dependencies the Counties of MARCK, BERG, RAVENSBERG and RAVENSTEIN, lie mostly on the Banks of the Rhine, but are so intermixt with other Countries, that it is difficult to give the particular Limits. In general, they are bounded on the N. by Guelderland, Zutphen and Munster, on the S. by the Archbishoprick of Trier, on the E. by Hesse and Westphalia, and on the W. by Brabant, Liege and Limburg. The principal Rivers here are the Rhine, the Roer, and the Lippe; which two latter fall into the Rhine, the first at Duisburg, and the last at Wesel. The Air is cold, but the Soil is fruitful in Corn, and yields some Pasture.

G g bounded

The Right of succeeding to these Territories, upon the Death of John William the last Duke, without Issue in 1609. gave occasion to great Commotions in Germany; for the Elector of Brandenburg, the Duke of Neuburg, the Duke of Deuxponts, the Duke of Saxony, and the Marquis of Burgow, having all marry'd Sisters or Daughters of the Sisters of John William, all claim'd to succeed. But the Elector of Brandenburg and the Duke of Neuburg only maintain'd their Claims by force of Arms; the former by the Assistance of the Hollanders, and the latter by that of the Spaniards. Until at length an Agreement was made, that Juliers and Berg, with the small Territory of Ravenstein should be granted to the Duke of Neuburg, and that the Elector of Brandenburg should for ever enjoy the Duchy of Cleeve, and the Counties of Marck and Ravensburg; under which Princes they at present remain.

The Duchy of Cleeve is a Country generally Woody and Hilly, but however produces divers sorts of Grain. It lies on both sides of the Rhine, between Munster on the East, Guelderland on the West, Zutphen on the North, and Juliers on the South, extending about 40 miles from North to South, and 25 from East to West.

The City CLEEVE, call'd Cleef by the Germans, and Clivis ant Clivis in Latin, which gives name to the Country, a very ancient Place, and suppos'd to have been founded by the Romans, stands on a Hill, among craggy Cliffs, between the Rhine and the Maes, about 12 miles South-East from Nimeguen, 70 West from Munster, and 60 North-West from Cologne. It is small, but well peopled; near it are seen an old square Tower and other Remains of Buildings, which shew it to have been formerly much larger. The Castle is old and not very strong, but pleasantly seated, and affords a delightful Prospect from the top of Span-Tower. The private Houses are but mean, and the chief publick ones are the great Church and two Monasteries. On the West side of the Town is a very pleasant Park call'd Prince Maurice's, wherein are many Ponds and Water-works, above which is the high Hill call'd Steenberg, from whence Utrecht with four more Cities and several great Towns may be seen, thro' 12 Vissers or strait Walks cut thro' the Wood. On the East of the Town stands the Prince's House, in which are many Rarities and Monuments of Antiquity.

Embrick, on the Eastern Banks of the Rhine, 8 miles from Cleeve to the East, and Rees, on the Banks of the same River, about 10 miles higher, are both well fortified.

Gennep, at the Mouth of the Nierse, where it falls into the Maes, near the Borders of Guelderland, 10 miles South-West from Cleeve, was anciently a large and populous City, and well fortified; but in the late Wars its Fortifications were demolish'd, and the Town is much decreas'd and now of small moment, tho' conveniently seated for Trade.

Goch on the Nierse, 6 or 7 miles above Gennep, a small Town of no great Strength nor Traffick. All these four, tho' seated in the Duchy of Cleeve, have been taken from it at several times by the Dutch, and are now subject to them.

Calcar, a place of great Strength, and built by the Dukes of Cleeve for a Refuge against any sudden approach of an Enemy, is seated near the Western Bank of the Rhine over against Rees, about 10 miles distant from Cleeve to the South-East. It quickly grew populous and rich by a Linnen Trade which they manag'd, and since they have been noted for making Malt, which is now a great Trade in this Town. The Town-house, St. Nicholas's Church, and the Monastery of the Dominicans, are stately Buildings.

Santen, on the Western Bank of the Rhine, is a Town of very great Antiquity, but not considerable on any other account; it is said to be the place where the Theban Legion suffer'd Martyrdom under the Emperor Maximianus, and therefore call'd Santen Holy.

Wesel, call'd Nether-Wesel for distinction, seated in a fair Plain on the Eastern Bank of the Rhine near the Mouth of the River Lippe, 25 miles distant from Cleeve to the South-East, and near 10 from Santen to the East, is a strong, populous and well-built City, reckon'd the largest and best in this Duchy. It is a Hanse-Town, and was Imperial, but exempted by the Dukes of Cleeve, of whose Dukedom it was always a Member. It was taken and plunder'd by the French in the late War; and, the Burgers being rich, they exacted intolerable Contributions from them. Here is an Hospital for decrepit old People, founded by H. Oliver Baers, and nobly endow'd by him and his Son.

Duisburg, a small City on the Roer, which a little lower falls into the Rhine, and on the Confines of Cleeve and Bergen, 15 miles above Wesel, 35 South-East from Cleeve, 15 from Duseldorp, and 25 from Cologne to the North-West. It was once an Imperial City, but now subject to the Elector of Brandenburg, as Duke of Cleeve, tho' the Burgers still claim their former Liberty. Here were formerly Fairs held yearly, which brought great Trade to the Town. An University is establish'd here by the Duke of Brandenburg, which was open'd Oct. 14, 1655.

Mewe, a small City, the Capital of an Earldom, lying between the Duchy of Cleeve and the Archbishoprick of Cologne, belongs to the Prince of Orange, to whom it was given in 1600. by the last Countess; but it is claim'd by the Duke of Brandenburg, as part of the Duchy of Cleeve. In this Earldom stands also Orsey, a small but strong Town, taken from the Dutch in 1634. by the Prince of Orange, and by the French in 1672. but abandon'd by them in 1674.

The Dukedom of FULIERS lies between the Rivers Maes and Rhine, bounded on the North by the Spanish Gueldre and Cleeve, on the South by Luxemburg and Trier, on the East by the Bishoprick of Cologne, and on the West by Liege and Limburg, extending about 60 miles in length, and 30 in breadth. The Country is fruitful in Corn, Hay and Wood, and yields also Woad for Dying, whereof the Inhabitants make great Profit; and an excellent Breed of Horses.

FULIERS, or GULICK, as the Inhabitants call it, Juliacum, the Capital of this Duchy, is an ancient City seated on the River Roer, at the distance of 50 miles from Cleeve to the South, 25 from Cologne to the West, and 25 from Maastricht to the East. It is a small Place, but neatly built; the Houses are of Brick, and the Streets broad and even: The Citadel is large, and render'd as strong as the best Engineers of Germany could make it: Notwithstanding which, it has been often taken in the present Age, Age, but at last restor'd to the Duke of Neuburg, according to the Articles of the Pyrenean Treaty.

Aken or Aquisgranum, call'd AIX LA CHAPELLE by the French, anciently a very considerable Place, having been the Seat of the Emperor Charlemagne, stands near the Borders of this Dutchy of Juliers and that of Limburg; it is distant 15 miles from Juliers to the South-West, 16 from Maestricht to the East, and 36 from Cologne to the West. It is an Imperial and Free City, and a very large beautiful Place; and by reason of the hot Baths in it, which cause a great Resort thither, very populous and rich. The chief publick Buildings are the Collegiate Church and the Senate-house; the former was built by Charles the Great, who was buried in it, and is a very curious piece of Architecture of the Gothick Order: At the West-end stands a high Steeple with several Pyramids, and in the middle a Cupola, the Inside whereof is adorn'd with a great number of Pillars of white Marble and of Brass gilt; also many gilded Statues, Brass doors and Partitions; and the Roof is beautified with Mosaick Work. In this Church are kept many Relicks, which are visited by zealous Pilgrims. The Senate-House is a very stately Fabrick, built A. D. 1533. and adorn'd with the Statues of all the Emperors; the upper Story of it is only one Room of 162 Foot in length, and 60 in breadth, wherein the Emperors us'd to receive their first Crown of Iron, and entertain the Electors and others that attended at their Coronations.

The Baths are much esteem'd for their Virtue in curing Chronical Distempers. It is said that they were first found out by Serinius Grænius, Lieutenant-General of Gallia Belgica, about the Year of Christ 53. who beautified them, and built a Palace near them. But the Place being afterwards destroy'd by Attila, the Baths lay bury'd till the time of Charles the Great, whose Horse (as he was Hunting here) accidentally struck his Foot into one of them, which the Emperor observing, caus'd them to be search'd out and rebuilt; and being much taken with the Pleasure of the place, built a Royal Palace and a large Town. Of these Baths there are 3, the chief of which is the very same that Charles the Great us'd often, with his Sons and Attendants, to swim in: It is now divided into many Apartments. These Waters rise so hot, that they cool them 12 Hours before they are us'd. There are also others in the other part of the Town, but not so hot. Near the Town are many Mines of Lead, Sulphur, Vitriol and Iron, and in the Mountains which surround the Territory of this City, abundance of Lapis Calaminaris is found. In 1656. a great Fire happen'd in this City, which burnt down 20 Churches and 5000 Dwellings, (by which the bigness of this Town may be guess'd at) which were quickly rebuilt, and it is now more large and beautiful. In 1668. a Treaty was held here, and Peace concluded between the Kings of France and Spain.

In the Village Borset or Porsetum, about a Furlong South from Aken, are many other hot Springs, which are by Pipes convey'd into 28 Baths; these Waters are even hotter than those at Aken.

Duren on the River Roer, 15 miles East from Aix la Chapelle, and 10 South from Juliers, is a small City, the Building neat and uniform, with a clear Stream of Water running in the middle. It was made Imperial by Charles IV. and burnt by Charles V. but being rebuilt, is now subject to the Duke of Neu- burg. This Place pretends to great Antiquity, and according to Cluverius, it was the ancient Marcodurum.

DUSELDORP, Dusseldorpium, is a very pleasant and well fortify'd City on the Banks of the Rhine, 20 miles below Cologne to the North, and as many from Juliers to the North-East. It is the Metropolis of the Dukedom of BERG, which is extended along the Banks of the Rhine, about 50 miles in length, and in breadth about 20, being craggy and mountainous, and therefore not very full of Inhabitants. The City is pleasantly seated upon the Rhine, and adorn'd with some publick Buildings, which make a delicate Show to the River; especially the Palace of the Elector Palatine, who commonly resides here. It was anciently an Imperial City and a place of much Traffick, and the yearly Fairs, since remov'd to Francfort, were kept in it.

DORTMOND, Tremonia aut Dormanía, is seated on the River Empfer, almost in the midst between those of the Lippe and the Roer, scarcely distant 6 miles from both, as also from the Territories of the Bishoprick of Munster to the South; 30 from the City of Munster, 26 from Soest to the West, and 35 from Dusseldorp to the North-East. It is a Free Imperial City, and one of the Hanse-Towns under the Protection of the Elector of Brandenburg; and is a small, but rich and populous Place. It is the Metropolis of the County of MARK, a Country of about 40 miles in length and 20 in breadth, bound on the North by the Rivers Empfer and Lippe, which part it from Munster, on the West and South by the Dutchy of Bergen, and on the East by Westphalia. The Soil is like that of Westphalia, not very fruitful.

Unna, a poor Hanse-Town, but formerly a place of good Trade, till the War between the Dukes of Brandenburg and Neuburg for the Right of these Countries, disturb'd and spoil'd it, stands 10 miles from Dortmond to the East.

Ham, another poor Hanse-Town, stands 10 miles from Unna to the North, on the Road between Holland and Brandenburg. The Country about it yields store of Corn, Hemp and Flax.

Soest, a large and populous City, seated in the neck of Land belonging to this County that shoots into Westphalia, 30 miles from Dortmond to the East, and as many from Munster to the South. It is esteem'd the largest City in Westphalia, except Munster, fortify'd with a double Wall, whereon are 30 Watch-Towers, and a large deep Ditch. In it are 10 Parishes and many Churches, one of which is a Collegiate, and under the Jurisdiction of the Archbishop of Cologne. This City has many Privileges, and a Court of Judicature within it self, but under the Protection of the Elector of Brandenburg, to whom this County is subject.

RAVENSBURG, Ravensberga, a small Town, the Principal of a County, lying between Osnabrug, Minden, Munster and Lippe, stands on a Hill at the distance of 16 miles from Osnabrug to the South, about 25 from Paderborn to the North-West, and 30 from Munster to the East toward Minden.

RAVESTEIN, Ravasteinum, is a small Town seated on the River Maes, 20 miles West from Cleeve, 20 North-East from Bolduck, and 15 South-West from Nimeguen; the Capital of a small Territory, bearing the Title of a Lordship, appertaining to the Jurisdiction of the Duke of Neuburg, but is at present possess'd by the Hollanders.

The Bishoprick of Liege is usually reckon'd part of this Circle, but being spoken of already in the Description of the Netherlands, it must be omitted here.

SWITZERLAND.

CHAP. I.

Switzerland, Helvetia, or the Swiss-Cantons, together with their Allies and Subjects, in general.

THIS Country was anciently inhabited by the Helvetii, a People, according to Pliny, Strabo, and Tacitus, of Gallia Celtica; who were divided into the Ambrones, Tigurini, Tuzeni, and Urbegeni; and were bounded on the North by the Rauraci, and Vindelicia, on the East by Rhetia, on the West by the Sequani, and on the South by the Allobroges, Seduni, and Veragzi. Their Chief Towns Towns were Aventicum, now Avenches, Eburacum, now Tverdun, Sahodurum, now Soleure, Viscodurum, now Wintertsur and Urba, now Orbe.

They were a very warlike People, and having joyn'd themselves with the Cimbri, had a considerable share in the Victories which those Barbarians obtain'd over the Consuls Manlius Servilius Cepio, and Lucius Crassus; but after the bloody Battle which they lost against Marius, the Helvetii retir'd into their own Country, and lived peaceably until the Time of Julius Caesar; and having then form'd a Design of making themselves Masters of Gallia Celtica, they spent two Years in making the necessary Preparations for that Expedition; and having burnt all their Towns and Villages, to cut off all Hopes of returning, took the Field, in conjunction with the Rauraci, Turingi, and Latobriges, their Neighbours; making in all a Body of above 90000 fighting Men, besides old Men, Women and Children. But Caesar, by his good Conduct and Valour did so terrifie them that they were willing to come to Articles with him; and afterwards did gain such a signal Victory over them in a pitch'd Battle, that they humbly beg'd Peace, which he granted them, on Condition that they should return to their own Country, and re-build their Towns and Villages which they had burnt. This they punctually put in execution, and were afterwards faithful and true to the Roman Interest.

After the Declining of the Roman Empire, they put themselves under the Protection of the Kings of Burgundy, and afterwards under that of the Kings of France, who sent Governors to Rule them. Raoul Duke of Startlinguen taking advantage of France, when it was engaged in War with the Normans, made himself Master of this Country in the Reign of Carolus Crassus. Raoul the Third dying without Issue, in the Year 1027. the Emperor Conrad the Second, whom he left his Heir, did incorporate it with the Empire, as a Free-State; but during this Union, which was about eighty Years, the Dukes of Zerighen, who were descended of Sigeberg King of Austria, acted rather the part of absolute Masters than Governors.

This People having been for a long time kept under, and grievously oppress'd by their Governors, resolv'd at last rather to venture all than live in perpetual Slavery. The first War began were the three small Cantons of Ury, Switz, and Under-Walden, commonly call'd the three Forrest Towns. They enjoy'd very ancient Privileges, which they pretend-ed to have been granted them by the Emperor Lewis, firnam'd the Picus, Son of Charles the Great; yet so that the Emperor used to send a Judge or Vicar thither, who had the supreme Jurisdiction in Criminal Affairs. During the Differences between the Emperors and the Popes, the Noblemen (of whom there were a great Number in that Country) got the ascendant over the common People, and did mightily oppress their Liberty. The Divisions betwixt the Nobility and the People (the former siding with the Popes, the latter with the Emperor) grew very high, especially during the great Interregnum which happen'd after the death of the Emperor Frederick the Second, which breaking out into an open War, the Nobility was driven out of the Country; but by the Emperor Rudolph's Authority, a Reconciliation was made betwixt them, and the Nobility restor'd to their Estates. Thus these Countries did enjoy their former Liberty till the Rign of Albert the First, about the Year 1300.

who having conceiv'd a hatred against them, because they had sided with his Rival Adolph of Nassau, was very desirous to annex them to his Hereditary Countries. The Monasteries, and most of the Nobility having, upon his desire, submitted themselves to the Jurisdiction of the House of Austria, and the three above-mention'd Places refusing to do the like, they had Imperial Vicars set over them; who, contrary to ancient Custom, began to reside in strong Castles, and greatly oppress the People, whose Petitions and Complaints found no manner of Redress from the Emperor; which so encourag'd the Tyranny and Insolence of those Vicars, that Geisler, the Judge of Under-Walden, was so ridiculous as to set his Hat upon a Pole at Altorf, and demanded the same Respect to be paid to it as to himself; which one William Tell refusing to do, was ordered to shoot an Arrow through an Apple which was placed upon his own Son's Head, which he perform'd, and sav'd his Life, and by a providential Escape from the Imprisonment design'd him by the Government, had the opportunity of retiring into the mountainous part of the Country, where he skulk'd till he found an opportunity to revenge himself by the Death of Geisler, whom he Shot as he pass'd along the Road by those Mountains: After which the People universally express'd their Hatred against the Judges, and the three foremention'd Places entred into a Confederacy to rid themselves of this Tyranny and restore their ancient Liberty, An. 1307. In the Year 1315. Leopold Arch-Duke of Austria, the Son of Albert the First, march'd against them with an Army of 20000 Men, but was defeated near Morgarten. After which, they renew'd their Confederacy, and confirm'd it by solemn Oaths, that it should continue for ever; which was done at Brun, on the 7th of December, 1320. But tho' they administred their own Affairs at Home, and did not send Deputies to the Diets of the Empire, they were not declar'd Independent of the Empire till the Westphalian Peace, An. 1648. In the Year 1332. Lucern, and in the Year 1351. Zurick, entred into this Confederacy. Immediately after Glaris, in the Year 1352. Zug and Bern, in the Year 1481. Friburgh and Solothurn, in the Year 1501. Basil and Schaffhausen; and at last all Appen-Zell, were united with this Confederacy; which made up the whole Body of the Swiss-Cantons, consisting of thirteen Common-wealths: Whereof Zurick, Bern, Lucern, Zug, Basil, Friburg, Solothurn, and Schaffhausen, are Cities; Ury, Switz, Under-Walden, Glaris, and Appen-Zell, are Countries, in which are a good number of Towns and Villages. The Switzers (which is a general Name for them all) have also some other Confederates, viz. the Abby and City of St. Gall, the Grisons, the Vallesins, the Cities of Retweil, Munthusen, Bienne, the Biel, G-neva, and Newburg on the Lake; besides several Cities and Countries (which we shall treat of particularly afterwards) that are either subject to the whole Confederacy, or to some particular Common-wealths: Every one of these Cantons is absolute within it self; but they differ as to the Nature of their Government and Constitution, some being more Aristocratical, others more Democratical.

The Christian Religion is said to have been planted in this Country pretty early; and the Reformation was begun here by Zuinglius, who was afterwards slain in a Battle against the Roman Catholics.

tholicks. The Cantons of Uri, Switz, Under-Walden, Lucern, Zug, Friburg, and Solothurn are Popish; Zurich, Bern, Basil, and Schaffhausen Protestant; but tho' the number of the latter be lesser, their Power is greater. The Catholics hold their Conventions at Lucern; the Protestants at Aarau; and the General Assemblies are held at Baden, where they meet every year about the end of June, to deliberate about the Affairs of the whole Body of the Swiss. This Diet is compos'd of two Deputies from each Canton; those of Zurich have the first Place, and the antienter of the two Presides; and it is his part to send circular Letters for convocating the Diet. And however they may differ in Religion and Form of Government, yet they all agree in the defence of their Liberty and common Interest.

The SOIL in these Countries is different; for in the mountainous Parts scarce any thing but Pasture Grounds is to be met withal; but the Valleys and flat Country produces good store of Corn and Wine, tho' scarce enough for the number of the Inhabitants; and Foreign Commodities cannot be imported without great difficulty, and what is deficient in the Soil is not repair'd by Traffick and Manufactures. They enjoy this benefit by the Situation of their Country, that by reason of the high Mountains and narrowness of the Passages, it is almost inaccessible, especially on the Italian Side, and in the midst of the Country; but some of the outward Parts are of a very easy access.

As to the Genius of the People, they are generally Honest and True to their Word. Simple and Plain-dealing, without any great Cunning or By-designs, Stout and easily Provok'd, Stedfast in their Resolutions, and abundantly Valiant; which together with their Tallness and Strength of Body, has so recommended them to a great many Princes, that they have chose them for their Guards, particularly the King of France, who maintains a considerable Number of them. They don't care for undergoing much Hardship and Labour, and expect to have their Pay duly, otherwise they are ready to make good the Proverb, No Money, No Swiss.

The main Strength of this Common-wealth (as the Judicious Puffendorf observes) consists in the number of its Inhabitants. For the Canton of Bern, which has the greatest Territories, pretends alone to be able to send into the Field 100000 Fighting Men, and the rest proportionably. So that their not having extended the Bounds of their Dominions beyond what they are, seems to be owing, partly to their Inclination, which does not prompt them to encroach upon their Neighbours; partly to the Constitution of their Government, which seems to be unfit for great and sudden Enterprizes; and partly to the difference of Religion among them. So they are the best Neighbours in the World; as being never to be feared, and always ready to assist you in case of Necessity, if you pay them for it.

The most considerable Rivers in Switzerland are, the Rhine, the Aar, the Russ, the Inn and the Tessin; but the Russ and Inn are the most serviceable. The Principal Lakes are those of Geneva, Constantz, Zell, Neufchatel, Biel, Moral, Thun, Brientz, Lucern, Zurich, Zug, Ocaru, and Riva.

The modern Bounds of all that Country which goes under the Name of Switzerland, especially if you take in the Allies and Subjects of that State are different from those of the antient Helvetia. It is extended from South to North for the Space of about 180 Miles, from the Bailiage of Mendrisi to the Frontiers of Schwaben; and 280 from West to East, from the County of Bormio to Mount St. Claude. It is bounded on the North with Alsace and Schwaben, on the South by Lombardy and the Lake of Geneva, on the East by the County of Tyrol, and on the West by Burgundy. The whole of it may be divided into four Parts, viz. The 13 Cantons, the Allies, the Subjects, and Stipendiary Towns; as is to be seen in the following Table, where the Cantons are set down according to their Precedency in the General Diets.

THE Canton of ZURICH, Tigurinus Pagus, is bounded with Schaffhausen on the North, Appenzell on the East, Zug and Switz on the South, and Bern and Lucern on the West. Its Extent South and North is about 60 Miles, and 48 from East to West. This Canton is very powerful and richer than that of Bern, altho' it be not so large. It is so well Peopled, that in Twenty four Hours it is able to raise Fifty thousand Men: And comprehends One and Thirty Bailiages; whereof there's Nine that are call'd Great Bailiages, and the rest Chatellanies. The Bayliffs and Chatellans that are sent to them have full Power to Judge both in Matters Civil and Criminal, and are chosen out of the Grand Council. The People of this Canton enjoy greater Privileges, and are more highly Tax'd than in most others, where the Bayliffs are in a manner absolute Masters. The great Bailiages are those of Gniffensee, Grüringen, Wädischweil, Regensburg, Eglisow upon the Rhine, Andelfingen along the River Thur, Lauffen, below the Cataracts of the Rhine, and Kiburg. The most considerable Chatellanies are those of Stein upon the Rhine, and Wintenthur, upon the Eulac. The most considerable Towns and Villages in this Canton are.

Zurich, Tigurum, Cesar and Livy place it in Gallia Celtica and its call'd Turegum by the Authors of the middle Age. It lies in the midst betwixt Schaffhausen and Lucern, about 32 Miles from either, 11 from the Rhine to the South, 30 South-west from Constance, and about 60 North from the Alpes, and is divided into two Parts by the River Simath, where it comes out of the Lake of Zurich. It is thought to be one of the most ancient Towns in that Country; for according to an ancient Tradition it is said to have been built sixteen Years after Treves. It shook off the unsupportable Yoke of its Lords in the Year, 1218. After the Death of Berthold 5th Duke of Zerlingen, and put it self under the Protection of the Emperor, upon Condition that it should never be alienated; which was confirmed by the Emperor Richard, in the Year, 1262; but 68 Years after, the Emperor Lewis of Bavaria, being drain'd by an expensive War, and not in a Condition to Pay, after the Battle of Muldois, to Frederick Duke of Austria, the Sum which he had promis'd him to renounce his Pretences to the Empire, offered to give him the Towns of Zurich, Schaffhausen, Rhinteild and Neulurg; but the Inhabitants of Zurich opposing that Alienation, he was fain to give Brifac in lieu of it; which so enraged the Dukes of Austria, that they turn'd its mortal Enemies, and made as many others so as they could, which was the principal Cause of their entering into Alliance with Ury, Switz, Underwalden and Lucern. There is in this City a noble Library, a Strong, regularly Fortified, and well furnish'd Arsenal; and several other Things very well worth the observation of a curious Traveller, particularly a fine Collection of Medals. The Lake of Zurich is about 24 Miles long, and 2 or 3 broad: And the River is very useful for carrying away to the Rhine their Manufactures, whereof that of Crape is the most considerable, and turns to the best Account.

Kiburg, Kiburgium, stands upon a Hill, near the River Tess, about 7 Miles from Zurich, to the East, towards Constance, and about half a Mile from the Ruins of Vitorius or Winterthun. It was once famous for its Counts, who were Men of great Note.

The Canton of BERN, Bernensis Pagus, is bounded on the North with that of Solothurn, and a part of the Bishoprick of Basil, on the East with Lucern and Underwald, on the South with the Vallais or Wallisland, and the Lake of Geneva, and on the West with the Franche Comte, and the County of Neuchâtel. It is very large and comprehends almost a third part of Switzerland, being in length from South-East, to North-West about 172 Miles, in breadth, from West to East, about 132. It contains 72 Bailiages, which comprehend the greatest part of Nuitland, Argow, and the Pais de Vaud. Those which lie within Argow and Nuitland do make that which is called the German Territory, and the Pais Vaud, the French Territory, or the New Conquests. The first contains 300 Parishes, the other 150. The Bailiffs who govern these Bailiages are nominated by the Council of 200; and are at once both Judges and Governors, and their Office continues six Years. They choose their Assessors in the Country under their Jurisdiction, and to them Appeals may be made from the Chatellanies; but after they have pass'd Sentence of Death, it cannot be put in execution, before it be confirm'd by the Grand Council. Bern, Berna, is seated on the Banks of the River Aar, between Solothurn and Friburg. It is not a large City, but very neatly built, and is said to owe its Name to a Bear which Berthold the 4th Duke of Zerlingen kill'd as he was laying the Foundations of it; for Bern in the Language of the Country signifies a Bear. Berthold the 5th finish'd it, Ann. 1191.

The

The Emperor Frederick II. did incorporate it with the Empire, 1291, and granted considerable Privileges to it. It did afterwards own for its Superior Philip Earl of Savoy, to whom it sent Commiſſioners, in the Year, 1263. to Swear Fealty to him. Philip's Successors did afterwards restore them to their ancient Liberty, in recompence of the good Service they had done them against the Bishop of Lausanne, the Earls of Neuchâg, and Charles the Terrible, Duke of Burgundy. This City stands in a Peninsula wash'd on three sides of it by the Aar, the fourth being well Fortified with Bastions and Trenches. The Streets are very neat, and watered with clear Brooks running through the middle of 'em, and adorn'd on each side with Portico's, Arches and Pillars of Free-stone. The principal Church is a very noble Structure, as are also the Town-House, the Court of Chancery, the Arsenal and publick Library. In one of the Apartments of the Arsenal, which is furniſh'd with Arms for 40000 Men, is to be seen the Statue of William Tell of Schmitz, whom the Governor commanded to shoot an Apple off his Son's Head, with an Arrow; which with other Grievances provok'd the Switzers to take up Arms for asserting their Liberty.

Lausanne, Lausonium or Laufanna, is the chief Town of the Country of Vaud, and has its Name from its Situation between the Brooks Laus and Anna. It stands near the North-side of the Lake of Geneva, which because of the Situation of this Town is often call'd the Lake of Laufanna. It is 30 Miles from Geneva to the North-East, 64 from Bern to the South-West, 25 from Friburg, 20 from Yverden to the South, and 70 from Lucern to the West. The Situation of it is pretty odd, it being built on three Hills; and that part of it which they call The Old Town enjoys great Privileges, especially that of the Power of Life and Death. It was formerly a free and Imperial Town, but has been under the Jurisdiction of Bern since the Year, 1536. It was also an Episcopal See under the Arch-bishop of Basle, but after the Protestants had made themselves Masters of the Town, it was Translated to Friburg. There is an old Tradition passes among the Inhabitants, that Hercules in his passage from Spain into Italy, finding the Country adjacent to this Place so Fruitful and Pleasant, left some of his Troops under the Command of Arpentinus, who they say was the Founder of Arpentina, upon the Ruins of which Lausanne (as they say) is Built: But the Reader may believe as much of this Story as he thinks fit.

Yverden, Ebrodunum, lies in the Country of Vaud, upon the Lake of Neuchâtel, where the Thile runs into it, about 10 Miles from the Confines of the Country of Burgundy, and 15 from Friburg. Formerly both it and the adjacent Country was under the Jurisdiction of the Duke of Savoy; but in the Year 1536. it was taken by the Bernois, who are still Masters of it.

The Canton of LUCERN, Lucernensis Pagus borders with those of Bern, Zug, Schmitz, and Underwald. It was anciently the Country of the Ambrones, who having join'd the Teutoni, were defeated by Marius in the Plains of Perriers in Provence. It is divided into 12 Baillages, which are governed by the Counsellors of Lucern, except those of Wiken and Sempach, whose Bailiffs are choien from among the Burghers of these Towns, by the Grand Council of Lucern. This Canton is extended from North to South for the space of about 43 Miles, and from West to East 32, and was united to the other confederate Cantons in the Year, 1332. The most considerable Towns in it are.

Lucern, Ch.	{	Saathusen.

Lucern, Laceria or Lucerna, is situated on the Lake of Lucern, at the Mouth of River Rust, 36 Miles from Bern to the East and 40 from the Rhine to the South. Some Historians say, That it was call'd Lacucerna, as if one should say, Quod vicinum lacum cernat; but there is more reason to believe, that it was so call'd from a Lanthorn, which was set up there in the Night-time to direct Travellers; for one may now see an old Tower near the Bridge, which seems to have been design'd for that use; and to confirm this Opinion, there is to be seen another Tower of the same kind near Zurich, which is call'd Vallenberg. This Town owes its Original to an Abbey which Vigard Brother, of Robert, Duke of Swabia, founded there. Pepin gave it to the Abbey of Murbach; and this Donation was confirmed by Lotharius, Ann. 850. The Abbots of Murbach gave it great Prerogatives; but one of their Successors sold it for 2000 Marks of Silver to Albert Duke of Austria. This Town is the ordinary Residence of the Pope's Nuncio: And from hence Goods may be carried down the Rust into the Rhine, and so to the Ocean. It was once a free and Imperial City, but united it self to the other Cantons, Ann. 1332. The Things most remarkable here are, the great Church, adorn'd with two large Steeples, an Altar beautified with fine Marble Columns, an excellent Pair of Organs and fair Cloyster. The Market-place also is both large and stately; and so is the Town-house and College of Jesuits, and two Bridges about 500 Paces long.

Suſee, stands on the Lake of Sempach, about 20 Miles from Lucern to the N. W. The Avoyer or Governor of it takes an Oath of Fidelity to this Canton. There is one thing peculiar to this Place from all the rest of Switzerland, which is, that they only make use of a Brass Cornet instead of a Trumpet; because, as they say, they had one of these presented to them by Charles the Great, in Recompence of the good Service they did him in the Wars against the Saracens.

The Canton of URI, Pagus Uranius, or Uricensis, lies between the Mountains of Crispaltberg and St. Gotthard, and the River Rust; having the Canton of Schmitz to the North, those of Underwald and Bern to the West, the Valley of Verzasco to the South, and the Gifsen League with the Canton of Gris to the East. It is in Length, from South to North, about 60 Miles; and in Breadth from West to East, about 20. This Country belong'd anciently to the Abbey of St. Felix, and St. Regulus of Zurich, by the Donation of the Emperor Lewis the Debonaire, whose Daughter Hildegade was first Abbess of it; but it was transferr'd from the Abbesses of St. Felix to the Abbots of Vertinger; having afterwards purchas'd its Freedom by a Sum of Money, did put it self under the Protection of the Emperors, who sent Governors to it, from whose Sentence there was no Appeal in Matters Criminal, there being other Judges for Civil Causes who were assisted by certain Counsellors chosen from among the

the People of the Country : And thus they continu'd so long as the Emperors let them enjoy their ancient Privileges ; but so soon as the Dukes of Austria began to encroach upon them, and endeavour to make themselves absolute, they took up Arms for the defence of their Liberty and Privileges, as we have said before. This Canton is divided into 10 Parts, which the Inhabitants commonly call Gnoszaminen, and has under its Jurisdiction these Towns, Altorf, Ch. } Ariola.

Airinghusen. } Gessinen.
Fornike.

Altorf or Altdorf, Altorsium, that is to say, the old Village is seated in a Plain, near the River Rufs at the Foot of the Alps, about 12 Miles from Lucern to the South East, and about 24 from Schwitz to the South. It is a very fine and delightful Place, the Houses being very near, and the Streets well pav'd ; and there being so many Gardens and Country-houses round about it, it affords a most lovely Prospect ; and which contributes to its Greatness. and helps to encrease its Riches, is, that the Courts of Justice for the whole Canton are held in it. But it is a Place of very difficult Access, by reason it stands at the bottom of the dangerous Precipices of the Mountain St. Godard ; near to which four considerable Rivers, viz. the Rufs, the Tessin, the Rhone, and the Rhone have their Source. Besides this, there are under the Jurisdiction of this Canton, that which the Ancients call'd Leopontiorum Vallis, and now by the French call'd la Valle de Liviner, situate at the Foot of those Hills which the Italians call Monte di San Bernardino, which is govern'd by a Bail ff, that is chang'd every third Year, and is Judge in all the Affairs, together with Assessors, who are chosen from among the Inhabitants. The Inhabitants of Mont St. Godard are also subject to this Canton.

The Canton of SCHWITZ, Suitiensis Pagus, is bounded on the North with those of Zurich and Zug, on the West by Lucern and Underwald, on the South by that of Uri and part of Glaris, and on the East by the same Canton of Glaris, and the Bailiage of Gastellen and Ulzenach, and is extended from North to South about 28 Miles, and from East to West about 36. The whole Country that now goes under the Name of Switzerland, has its Denomination from hence ; either because the Wars which these People began for recovering their Liberty took their Rise here ; or because they first entered into a Confederacy for that end in this Place. The Inhabitants of it pretend to be descended from the Cimbri ; but I am apt to believe that it is much easier for them to say than to prove this. This Canton is divided into 6 Parts, and the most considerable Towns in it are,

Schwitz, Ch. } Wag.
Kusnach. } Grinow.
Elrifelden. } Eunichen.

Schwitz, Suitia, is only a large Village standing on the Banks of the River Muse, in a Valley surrounded with Hills, which for the most part are cover'd with Snow ; about 2 miles from the Lake of Lucern, 10 from the Town of the same Name to the East ; and as many from Glaris. This little Town was once an Imperial and Free one ; but it ceas'd to be so in the Year 1315.

The Canton of UNDERWALD, which by Geographers is commonly call'd Sylvania, or Sylva- niensis Pagus, from a Forest of Oak Trees which divides it into two Parts, viz. Above and Below the Wood. The whole Canton has its Name from the latter, Underwald being no other than sub sylva, or under the Wood. It lies between Schwitz and Lucern to the North, between the Provinces of Lucern and Bern to the West and South, and that of Uri to the East ; and is extended North and South 32 Miles East and West 24. Leopold Duke of Austria invaded this Country An. 1336. and was defeated : Nevertheless he attempted it again, with an Army of 15000 Men, and march'd as far as Navalia, but was again worsted by a handful of the Inhabitants of Glaris and Schwitz, and forc'd to leave the Field, with the loss of 3000 Men. Since which time these People have retain'd their Liberty. This Canton contains no very great Towns ; but those of greatest Note are, Stantz, Ch. } Liungeren.

Krientz. } Bakerriet.
Sarnen. } Hamstadt.
Engelberg.

Stantz, Stantia, is no more than a large Village near the Lake of Lucern, at the Foot of the Mountains, about 12 Miles from the Town of Lucern, to the South East. In this Place the Great Seal of the Canton us'd to be kept.

The Canton of ZUG, Tugiensis Pagus, is bound-ed with that of Zurich on the North, that of Schwitz on the East and South, and that of Lucern on the West. Its Breadth and Length are much about one, neither exceeding 12 Miles. It was anciently govern'd by Lords of its own ; but afterwards came under the Jurisdiction of the Dukes of Austria ; whose insupportable Yoke it threw off with the rest, in the Year 1352. that is 44 Years after Schwitz, Uri, and Underwald had done so. It comprehends 6 Bailiages, and the most remarkable Towns in it are,

Zug, Ch. } Egen.
Cham. } Risch.
Bar. } Oberwil.

Zug, Tugium, is a pretty little Town, standing on a Lake of the same Name, at the Foot of a Hill, some part of which produces good store of Grapes, the rest is Pasture Ground and Wood, which affords plenty of Game. It is 12 Miles from Lucern to the East, and 18 from Zurich to the South.

The Canton of GLARIS, Glarenensis Pagus, is bounded with the River of Limath on the North, the Grisons on the East and South, and the Cantons of Schwitz and Uri on the West. It is about 30 Miles North and South, and 25 East and West, Ursus and Landolph, who were Lords of it, gave this Country to the Abbey of Seckingen ; to which the Inhabitants paid the tenth and hundredth Parts of their Rents ; but the Mayoralty depended on the Emperor. The Emperor Barbarossa gave it to Otto, Count Palatine of Burgundy ; and from his Posterity it pass'd to the House of Hapsburg ; and from thence to that of Austria. This Canton is partly Popish, partly Protestant, which is the cause of frequent Squabbles betwixt them ; and therefore it is appointed that such Differences shall be decided by Judges, two thirds of whom are of the Defendant's Persuasion. The most considerable Towns in this Canton are,

Glaris, Ch. } Nestel.
 Wesen. } Elin.
 Urnen. } Quart.

Glaris, Glarona or Clarena, stands in a Valley of the same Name, upon the River Sarneff, surrounded by the Mountains call'd Glerenschberg, 18 Miles from Aar to the North East, as many from Schwitz to the South East, and 30 from Chour or Choir. The Inhabitants are reckon'd the wisest People in Switzerland.

The Canton of BASIL, lies betwixt Brissgow, the Canton of Lucern, the Bishoprick of Basil, and Sungow. It is of no great Extent, containing only 5 Bailiages, and about 30 Parishes, and is entirely Protestant. The most considerable Towns and Villages are,

Basil, Ch. } Veltemburg.
Dagst. } Grolingen.
Dornach. } Dirmenach.
Augst. } Belingen.
Leichstall. } Videstein.
Manchstein. } Ramstein.

Basil, or Bale, Basilea, stands upon the Rhine, on the Confines of France and the Empire, about 24 Miles from Friburg, 64 from Constance to the West, 48 from Zurich, and 56 from Strasbourg to the South. It is thought to have rise from the Ruins of the old Augusta Rauracorum or Raurica, some Vestigia of which are still to be seen near the Village Augst, about 7 Miles distant from it to the East. Cluverius thinks it was formerly call'd Arialbinum; but it owes its Name of Basilea to Julian the Apostate, who would have it call'd so in Honour of his Mother Basilina. The Romans sent a Colony to it under the Conduct of Munatius Plancus, and the Emperor Gratian did greatly enlarge it. The Hungarians having ruin'd it, the Emperor Henry the Second, caus'd it to be re-built, An. 1010. and granted such Privileges to those who would set up there, that in a little time it became considerable. There was a Council held here, An. 1431. under Pope Eugenius the Fourth, and was adorn'd with an University 1460. The Rhine divides it into two unequal Parts. That which lies on the German side, is call'd the Lesser, and is not much above the fourth Part of the whole Town, and is joyn'd to the other by a large Stone Bridge. It was formerly an Episcopal See, suffragan to the Bishop of Bisanzien; but since the Protestant Religion got footing there, the Bishops have been oblig'd to live at Brontrus, or Porentru (as the French call it) upon the Confines of the Higher Alsace. The most remarkable Things in this City are, the Cathedral Church of St. Mary, the Arsenal, and their Guildhalls, and the curious Paintings in the Dominicans Cloyster, and the University; where, besides many others, Des. Erasmus, Amerbachius, and Johb Buxorf were educated. There are also several considerable Libraries, and some fine Collections of Medals, particularly that of Mr. Sebastian Fisch. The Repository also of Erasmus and Amerbachius, belonging to the University, in which are preserv'd 20 Original Draughts of the famous Painter Holben, a Native of this City. There is also in the Publick Library a rare Manuscript Copy of Virgil, and another of the Alcoran, written on China Paper. Ordinary Paper is said to have been first made here, by Antony and Michael Galician, An. 1417. And Printing was first begun here by Bernard Rickel, 1478. And the Reformation advanc'd by Oecolampadius, 1522. Erasmus died, and was buried here in July, 1536. aged 70 Years. This Town is well fortified.

The Canton of FRIBURG, Friburgensis Pagus, is surrounded almost by that of Bern, and is divided into two Parts by the River Sane. It comprehends 19 Bailiages, 5 of which are about Friburg, the rest are in Nutthland; among which is that of Gruyeres, which was once the Residence of the Counts of that Name; the last of whom sold it to Bern and Friburg, who divided it, An. 1554. And it is to be observ'd, that the Earls of Gruyeres were Vassals of the Duke of Savoy, and always paid him Homage for the Lordships of Lcuanel, Gringin, Granges, Chatelard, Moln and Treves. It joyn'd in Confederacy with the rest, An. 1481. The Towns of greatest Note are,

Friburg, Ch. } Corbert.
Romont. } Rut.
Gruyeres. } Peterlingen.
Tavernach. } Montenach.

Friburg, Friburgum, stands upon the River Sane, in a very pleasant Country, about 28 Miles from Solothurn to the South, 24 from Lausanne, and 9 from Bern to the South West. It was built in the Year 1179. by Berthold the Fourth, Duke of Zeringen, who also built Friburg in Brissgow. It was for some time possess'd by those descended from him; but after the Death of Berthold the Fifth, who was the last of that Race, An. 1218. it came into the Hands of the Earls of Kiburg. Eberhard Count of Hapsburg became Master of it, An. 1260. and in the Year 1277. sold it to the Emperor Rodolphus, for four thousand Marks of Silver. Some time after it did redeem it self from under the Sovereignty of the House of Austria, and put it self under the Jurisdiction of the Duke of Savoy, by an Act of the 10th of June, 1450. upon Condition that he should preserve and maintain them in the full use of their Privileges; but afterwards there happening some Difference betwixt Yoland Dutcheß of Savoy and them, upon the account of some Money which she was oblig'd to pay them, they shook off that Yoke, An. 1477, and for the better securing of their Liberty, enter'd into a Confederacy with the rest, An. 1487. The most remarkable Things in it are, its Piazza's and publick Buildings, as the Cathedral with its high Altar, the Town-house, and high Tower, the Fountain with its Basin and Foot, a Commendary of Malta, and several Churches and Convents of Jesuits, and a College of these founded by Petrus Canisius, who died An. 1597. The 2d. of May, and the 22. of June are observ'd as great Festivals in this Place, for two signal Victories obtain'd over Charles Duke of Burgundy on these Days. But the Reader must not confound this Town with another of that Name in Brissgow, which was taken by the French, under the Conduct of Mar. de Crequi, from the House of Austria, An. 1677 and restor'd by the Treaty of Nimiguen, An. 1679.

The Canton of SOLOTHURN, or Soleure, Salodorusensis Pagus, is bounded on the North by that of Basil, and part of Alsace, on the West by the Bishoprick of Basil, and on the South and East by the Canton of Bern. It is divided into 12 Bailiages, and the most considerable Towns in it are,

Solothurn, Ch. } Leingen.
Osten. } Balstem.

Solothurn which the French and Inhabitants commonly call Soleure, stands upon the River Aar; and as it is a delightfully situated Town, so it is thought to be one of the most ancient in that Country. It stands betwixt Basil and Friburg, about 28 Miles from either, and 20 from Bern. It is said to have been built at first by some of the ancient Kings of Gaul; but this Opinion has no other Foundation than that of an old Inscription, which calls it The Sister of Treves. Some Historians say, That it owes its Name to an old Tower, which is still to be seen there, call'd Soloturn; that is, the Tower of the Sun. Queen Bertha gave this Town to a Chapter that she founded there. It came afterwards under subjection to the Bishop of Geneva; and after that was an Imperial Town, and then subject to the Empire, whose Yoke it at last shook off, and entred into a Confederacy with the other Cantons, An. 1451. In the Year 1531. the People of this Place were pretty well dispos'd to receive the Protestant Religion; but a popular Commotion arising on that account, the Mass was re-establish'd, and so they still persist in their Superstition. Bishop Burnet gives an account of them and their Religion in his Letters. In their great Church they have God the Father represented as an old Man with a black Beard, with Jesus Christ on his Knees, and a Dove over his Head. Superstition equal to, if not exceeding, that of the wildest Heathens. The Houses of this Town are very fair, and the Streets large, adorn'd with many Fountains. There is also a stately Church, and a College of Jesuits, towards the Building of which, the present King of France, Lewis XIV. gave 10000 Livres. The Fortifications likewise are very strong, and have cost a vast Sum of Money, being all of very fine and large Stones.

The Canton of SCHAFFHAUSEN, Scaphusianus Pagus, is bounded on the West with the Black-Forest, on the South with the Canton of Zurich, on the East with Turgau, and on the North with Schwaben. It is but of small Extent, not exceeding 12 Miles North and South, and about 20 East and West. The Chief Towns in it are,

Schaffhausen, Ch. } Newkilch.
Herblingen. } Halaw.

Schaffhausen, Scaphusia, stands upon the Rhine, on the German side, about 4 Miles from Constance to the West, 2 from the Lake of Zell, 6 from Basil, and 4 from Zurich to the North. It is sometimes call'd Probalopolis, because it has a Sheep for its Arms, which is also stamp'd on its Coin. It owes its beginning to an Abbey founded there by Eberard Count of Nellenberg, about the Year 1052. in honour of All Saints. The Emperor Frederick II made it a Free and Imperial City, in which the Abbey enjoy'd great Privileges. In the Year 1320. the Emperor Lewis of Bavaria engag'd it, together with Rhinfeild, Newburg and Brisac, to Frederick le Bel Duke of Austria; but about 80 Years after the Emperor Sigismund restor'd it to its Liberty. It entred into a League with Zurich and St. Gall, An. 1424. and with Zurich, Bern, Lucern, Switz, and some other Cantons, An. 1501. The Reformation was carry'd on by Jacobus Riegius and others, An. 1520. The Cataracts of the Rhine oblige the Vessels that come from the Lake of Constance to unload their Merchandise in this Town; which are put on Board again below it, where the Stream becomes more gentle. The Streets of it are broad, and the Houses for the most part painted without, as in many places of Switzerland. At the upper end of the Town stands a large Tower, which, they say, the French King keeps in Repair, according to a Treaty of Alliance with the Swiss; it has a good number of Guns mounted on it, but serves more for Ornament than Defence of the Town.

The Canton of APPENZEL, Abbatifellensis, lies betwixt the Abbey of St. Gall and the Rhine, which separates it from the Grisons, having the Republick of Leichtenstein on the West, and the Country of Rhental on the East, about 30 Miles long, and 24 broad. It is divided into 12 Communities, which they call Roden. There are 6 of 'em call'd by the French, Les Ordres du dedans, that is, the Inner Appenzel; the other are nam'd, Les Ordres du dehors, or Outer Appenzel. This Country is so call'd from a Town of that Name. Both Papists and Protestants are tolerated in this Canton, as in that of Glaris. It formerly depended on the Abbey of St. Gall, and entred into the general League with the other Provinces, An. 1353. The Protestants possess the Outer, and the Papists the Inner Appenzel. It is the last in order of all the 13 Cantons, and contains these Towns, Appenzel, Ch.

Gonten.
Urnäsch.

Appenzel, Abbatifcella, is a rich and populous Town, situated near the Source of the small River Sintra, near 30 Miles from Chur, about 16 from St. Gall, and 30 from Constance. It was formerly the Residence of the Abbots of St. Gall; but the Inhabitants redeem'd themselves from under the Jurisdiction of those with a good Sum of Money, at a Treaty concluded at Constance with Cunon de Stoufen, Abbot of St. Gall, by the Emperor Robert's Mediation; and for the better Security of their Liberty, entred into a League with the Cantons of Uri, Schwitz, Underwald and Lucern. The Abbots of St. Gall protested against this Alliance; and Henry of Mandorf renew'd his Pretensions at the Emperor's Court, An. 1425. and had them declar'd Enemies to the Empire. The People of Appenzel were not much troubled at this, but march'd into the Territories, demolish'd some Castles, and oblig'd him to make Peace. Not long after the Abbot of St. Gall entred into a Confederacy with the Nobility of Constance against them; but their Troops were beat; and the Appenzelins made themselves Masters of Rhental, and oblig'd the Lords of Rangewil, who held that Valley by Engagement, to part from their Right for 6000 Crowns. In the Year 1457. they made a perpetual Alliance with the 7 other Cantons, and did considerable Service against the Dukes of Austria and Burgundy; and at last in the Year 1513. they were receiv'd into the number of the 13 Cantons.

The Allies of the Switzers.

The G R I S O N S or G R A U B U N D E N.

THE Country of the Grisons is a part of the ancient Rætia, the old Inhabitants of which, a Savage People, were subdu'd by Drusus and Tiberius, in the Time of Augustus and was call'd Rætia Prima by the Romans, who govern'd it by a President that depended upon the Præfectus Prætorio of Italy. This Province being ravag'd by the Germans, and afterwards expos'd to the Irruptions of the Babarians, submitted it self to the Emperors of the West. The People of this Country, being born Soldiers, have often list'd themselves in the Service of foreign Princes, especially the Kings of France. In the Year, 555. they assist'd Chilperic against the Lombards: And serv'd Thierry King of Burgundy in the Year, 616. Charlemain had many of them in his Service, in his War with the Saxons: And under the first Kings of the third Race, we find them in many Battles against the Enemies of France. Lewis XI. employ'd them in his conquest of Burgundy. Charles the VIII. in the Kingdom of Naples. Lewis XII. when he attack'd the Duchy of Milan. Frances the I. did comprehend them in the Treaty of Perpetual Peace, which he made with the Swiss, Ann. 1516. and was renew'd by some of his Successors; but Lewis XIV. excluded them. Ann. 1663.

This Country is bounded with Swabia on the North, Tirol on the East, the State of Venice and the Milanese on the South, and Switzerland on the West. It is a mountainous and barren Country, which obliges them to bring Corn from the Milanese for their Subsistence (altho they might have as much as they have occasion for from Alsace and the State of Venice) which makes them adhere so much to the Interest of Spain.

The Grisons in general make up a Commonwealth, which is commonly call'd the Grison Leagues; because it is compos'd of Three lesser Leagues; each of which has its own Laws and Jurisdiction, and forms a particular State, whose Government is popular. The first is that which the French call La Ligue haute, or Grise, the Upper League, which comprehends 23 Communities; whereof 18 are Popish, and 10 Protestant. Each Community is a little sort of State by it self, and the People of it meet every Year to choose their Judges, whom they call *Amman*s, who determin in all Matters Criminal and Civil, and from whom there is an Appeal to the Assembly of the League. The Second is the League of the House of God or Cadee, which the Germans call Gotteshpunt, which comprehends 24 Communities almost all Protestant. The Third is the League of the ten Jurisdictions, which the Germans call Zehen Gerichtenpunt, and the French, les dix Droitures. These three Leagues entred into a perpetual Alliance in the Year, 1437. and the Sovereignty is represented by a Diet, which meets sometimes at Tanz in the Grison League, sometimes at Chur in the Cadee, and sometimes at Davas in the Ten Jurisdiction. It consists of 67 Deputies, viz. 28 from the First League, 24 from the Second, and 15 from the Third, who must all be Men known to be true to their Country, and who have no Pension from, or are in the Service of any Prince. When any Affair of great Importance happens, which requires speedy Dispatch, it is remitted to the Senate, which is made up of the principal Magistrates, and the chief Men of the three Leagues, viz. the Grand Prevot of the Grison League, the Burgomaster of Chur for the Cadee, and the Amman of Davas, for the Ten Jurisdictions; but their Resolutions must be confirm'd by the Communities.

The Grisons possess likewise the VALTELINE, and the Counties of Chiavenna and Bormio, ancient Dependences of the Duchy of Milan; which Maximilian Sforza, Duke of Milan gave them in recompence of their good Service done him; and which Francis I. afterwards confirm'd to them. Of these we shall treat particularly afterwards.

The GRISON League, is bounded with the Canton of Glaris on the North, that of Uri on the West, the 4 Governments of Italy on the South, and the ten Commonalties on the East, and has within it these Towns,

Ilantz, Cap. } Flintz, Dissentis. } Splagen.

Ilantz, a small Town upon the Rhine, about 15 Miles from Chur to the South-west, wherein the Assemblies of the three Leagues meet.

The League of Cadee or Gotteshpunt, is bounded on the North with the Ten Commonalties and the Province of Tirol, on the South with the Country of Chiavenna, on the West with the Grison League, and on the East with the Country of Bormio. The most considerable Towns in it are,

Chur, Cap. } Vesprum, Cassaccia. } Bergon.

Chur, Curia, by the French call'd Coire, is the chief City of this League, and the most considerable Town in the Grison Territories, seated at the Foot of two Mountains, on the Banks of the little River Plesur, about a mile and a half from the Rhine, 26 miles from Chiavenna to the North, 41 from Altof to the East, and 60 from Constance to the South. It was formerly defended by the Castles of Marsoil and Imburg, and was a free Imperial Town till the Year, 1498. The Bishop of Chur is a Prince of the Empire: And his Revenues were formerly very considerable, the greatest part of the League of Gotteshpunt depending on him. But the most part of the Commonalties of that League redeem'd their dependance with a Sum of Money, and the rest shook off the Yoke upon the change of Religion; so that his Revenue is not now above Sixteen Thousand Livres per Annum.

The League of the TEN JURISDICTIONS, Fædus decem Jurisdictionum, viz. Taffas, or Davas, Alfenau or Belfort, Churwalden, Langwis, S. Peter, the Abby in Perigow, Schiers, Languart and Mynenfeld. The first eight of these belong'd to the House of of Austria, by a Donation made in the Year, 1489. by Gaudens Count of Amat, who was Heir to the Counts of Toggenburg, who succeeded the Barons of Varz. The other two belong'd to the Counts of Toggenburg, from whom the Counts of Brandis did purchase them. Their principal Town is Davas, which stands on a Lake about 20 Miles from Chur, to the North-East.

The VALTELINE, Vallis Tellina, or Volturena Vallis, is a part of Rhetia propria, anciently inhabited by the Vennones. It is a long and pleasant Valley, stretch'd out betwixt the Lake of Como and Tirol. It owes that Name to the Castle of Tell, situated on the top of a Hill, whose foot is wash'd by the Adda. It is bounded by the Grisons on the North, Tirol on the East, the State of Venice on the South, and the Milanese on the West. The Soil of it is very Fertile, and the Country well Peopled. It is ordinarily divided into 3 Parts, or Tertiaria, which the Italians call, il Terzero di Sopra, or the upper third Part, Terzero di Mezzo, or the middle, and Terzero di Sotto, or the lower. In the First of these is Tirano, in the Second Sondrio, and in the Third Morbegno.

Tirano, Tiranum, the chief Town of this Province, is seated on the Banks of the River Adda, about 6 Miles from the Frontiers of Italy and Territories of Venice, 85 South East from the Lake of Constance, and 50 from Chur to the South-West. It has eleven Communities depending on it.

Sondrio, Sondrium or Sondrisum, the chief Town of this Part of the Valtelline, stands also upon the Adda, where it receives the Brook Maler, almost in the middle between Tirano to the East, and Morbegno to the West, 37 Miles from Chur to the South, and 40 from the Head of the Rhine to the East. It is the Place of greatest Strength in all the Valtelline; and the Captain of the Valtelline, who is both first Administrator of Justice and Commander in chief of the Forces, keeps his ordinary Residence there. He can substitute a Deputy to determine Causes both Civil and Criminal, but there lies an Appeal from him to the General Diet of the Grisons.

Morbegno, Morbonium, a little Town, in this Valley, about 8 Miles from the Lake Como, and 16 from Sondrio to the North-East, on it there depends eleven Communities.

The Spaniards have, since the beginning of this Century, attempted several times to make themselves Masters of this Valley, that they might the more easily bridle the Grisons, and secure the Communication betwixt the Territories of the House of Austria in Germany, with those of that House in Italy, but the French have not suffer'd them to keep possession of it.

The County of CHIAVENNA, Comitatus Clavennae, which is of no great extent, is bounded on the North and West by the Grison League, on the South by the 4 Governments of Italy, and on the East by the Valtelline. It is divided into two Bailiages, viz. Chiavenna and Pleury.

Chiavenna, Clavenna, is a little Town upon the River Maisa, at the foot of the Mountains, which a little below falls into the Lake of Como; it is delightfully Situated, and very well Built. It was once much larger than it is now, but about Five hundred Years ago, all the north Part of it was Buried in the Ruins of a Mountain. The like sad Accident befel the Town of Pleury, on the 25th of August, 1618. It was not so large a Town as Chiavenna, but the Houses were finer, insomuch that it pass'd for one of the finest Towns in Italy; but the Inhabitants were horribly leud and debauch'd, and so drew down that heavy Judgment upon themselves.

The County of BORMIO, Bormiensis Comitatus, by the Italians call'd il Contado di Bormio, is bounded on the North and West by Cardee, on the West by the Valtelline, on the South by the Venetian Dominions. It is surrounded with inaccessible Mountains, and divided into 5 Bailiages, which they call Communities, or Neighbourhoods.

Bormio, Bormium, is the Chief Town of the County of that Name, and is otherwise call'd Worms by the Germans. It stands on the Adda, 3 Miles from its Spring, near the entrance of the Valtelline, and the South side of the River Oglio, 40 Miles from Chiavenna to the East, near 50 West from Trent to the West, and 50 from Chur to the South-East.

The ABBEY OF S. GAL, Fanum Sancti Galli or Respublica Sancti Galli. This Abbey, from which the Country has its Name, was founded in Turgow, in the Reign of Dagobert, by one Gal, a Scotchman, who having successfully preach'd the Gospel in those Parts, about the Year, 630. refused, as they say, the Bishoprick of Constance, and retir'd into a Desert, and was followed by a great many People, and founded this Monastery, or rather it was built afterwards in Honour of him. Sigebert King of Austria bestowed great Revenues on it. About 80 or 100 Years after, the King of France erected it into an Abbey, and gave the Monks the Privilege of choosing their own Abbots. Omer having been chose Abbot, and finding St. Gal's Rules to be a little too rigid, chang'd them for those of St. Bennet. Several of the Bishops of Constance enjoy'd that Dignity, till the Monks growing jealous of the Bishop's Authority, resolv'd to own none for their Governour, but their own Abbots. Udo of Alsace was made a Prince of the Empire by the Emperor Philip, and extended his Dominions considerably. Canon of Stouffen had great Differences with the People of Appenzel, who had redeem'd themselves from under his Sovereignty. Henry of Mandorff renew'd his Pretensions at the Emperor Sigismund's Court, Ann. 1425. But Gasperd of Landenberg, a Man of greater Temper and Moderation than his Predecessors, knowing very well that those Pretensions would be the ground of a perpetual War, did renounce them, by the Alliance which was made with the Cantons of Zurich, Lucern, Schwitz and Glaris, in the Year, 1454. This Territory lies on the North of the Cantons, and on the Banks of the Lake of Constance.

The Town of S. GAL has its Name from an Abbey, which we have describ'd. It stands in Turgow, 3 Mile from the Lake of Constance, and 12 from Lindaw to the West. The Emperor Frederick I. made it an Imperial City, and bestow'd upon it great Privileges, which were confirm'd by the Emperor Frederick II. Ann. 1220 it redeem'd itself with a Sum of Money, and entred into Alliance with the Cantons of Zurich, Bern, Lucern, Schwitz, Zug and Glaris, in the Year, 1454. The Government of this Town is in the Hands of a Society of the Nobility, and six Companies of Tribuns of the People; the first of which is that of the Weavers, because Linnen Cloth is the greatest and most profitable table Commodity of that Country. Out of all these Companies there are 90 Chosen, 66 of whom make up the Grand Council, and 24 the Lesser. The former meets five times a Year; the other every Tuesday and Thursday, except Holy-days and Fair-days. There are several other Courts of Justice, particularly one for inspecting the Cloth; which as we have said, is their greatest Manufacture.

Besides this, the Abbot of St. Gal possesses the Country of Toggenburg, the Seignorie and Town of Gersfuzgult in Turgow, and several other Places in Rhental.

The Country of VALAIS. Vallesia, by the Germans called Wallisserland and Valinfa, by some Writers of the middle Age, the ancient Seat of the Seduni and Veragri, a People of Gallia Narbonensis, lies among the Alps, between Switzerland on the North and East, the Milan and the Dutchy of Acust on the South, and Savoy on the West. It is divided into the Higher and Lower; the Higher is divided into 7 Parts, call'd Dizains by the French, and Zenden by the Germans. The Lower, which lies to the West of the other, is divided into six Parts or Communities, called Bannieres, according to Platina. They entered into Alliance with the Cantons of Lucern, Uri and Underwald, in the Year, 1446. and with that of Bern, 1475. at last the Bishop of Sion and the other Dizains, have entered into and confirmed a particular Alliance with the seven Popish Cantons, by the Treaties made in the Years 1553, 1600 and 1634. This Country is a large, pleasant and fruitful Valley, surrounded with Hills and Rocks, having but one Passage into it, where there are two Gates and a Castle. It produces plenty of Corn, Saffron, Grapes and other Fruits; also some Mines, and Springs of Mineral Water. It is reckoned to be 80 Miles long, and between 10 and 20 broad. The most considerable Towns in it are,

Sion, Cap.

Martinach.

St Maurice.

Sion, Sedunum, anciently a Town in Gallia Narbonensis, posses'd by the Seduni. and now called Sitten by the Germans, stands upon the River Sitte, which throws it self into the Rhone a little below. It is situated in a delightful Plain, overlook'd by a Hill of a moderate height, on the East-side. The Hill rises up with two Tops; upon the highest of which Majoria, as they call it, there is a Fortrefs, where the Bishop for the most part resides. Upon the other top is the Fortrefs call'd Valeria, and the Third call'd Tubilion, is a Fortrefs built upon the top of the Majoria. This Town is distant from Bern to the South about 55 Miles, from Geneva 65, to the East, and 100 from Milan to the West. It belongs to the Bishop ever since the Donation made by Charlemain to Theodofius, who then govern'd that Church. Adrian of Ribmal made an Alliance with the Seven Catholick Cantons, in the Year, 1533. chiefly for the sake of their Religion.

Martinack, or Martigny, the ancient Obedurum or Obedurus, as Rhenanus and Simlerus think, a Town in Gallia Narbonensis, according to Cesar, tho' there was another Obedurum in Hispania Tarraconensis. It stands upon the little River Dranse, which falls into the Rhone a little below. There are to be seen the Ruins of a strong and very fine Castle; and here they say it was that the Theban Legion call'd Fulminatrix, whereof St. Maurice was Chief, was first decimated, and afterwards cut in Pieces, under the Emperor Dioclesian, for not assisting at the Pagan Sacrifices, and embracing that Religion. It lies 12 Miles to the West from Sion, 30 to the North from Acuste in Piedmont, and 20 East from the Lake of Geneva.

The County of NEUCHATELL, called Newstat by the Germans, lies extended for the space of about 22 Miles, between the Mountains Jura on the West, which separates it from France and Burgundy, and the Lakes of Neufchatell and Bien on the East, which divide it from the Canton of Bern, and between Basil on the North, and Lausanna on the South. Memphis was Count of Neufchatell about the Year 815; but to trace down the Succession from him to this present time, would be tedious; and therefore we shall only put the Reader in mind, That Johanna of Hochberg, Heiress of Neufchatell, having married Lewis of Orleans Duke of Longueville, about the Year 1504. translated that County into this Family. Francis his Son dying without Issue, 1551. Leonor of Orleans, Marquis of Retoion, his Cousin, succeeded him; James of Savoy, Duke of Nemours, Son of Philip and Charlotte of Orleans, Sister of Lewis Duke of Longueville, laid claim to the half of the County, which Leonor would have consented to, but the States of that Country would not allow it, because they could not endure to have two Masters. Thus the Matter stood undecided for some time, till the Year 1557. that the Estates summon'd the Dukes of Longueville and Nemours before the Council of Bern, where it was concluded, That the County of Neufchatell should remain intirely in the Possession of the Duke of Longueville; and that the Duke of Nemours should have 2000 Livres a Year in Land, in the Dutchy of Burgundy, and 2000 Crowns from the Town of Neufchatell. Leonor left by Mary of Bourbon, Henry I. who had by Katharine of Gonzague, Henry II. who died, An. 1663. leaving by his first Marriage with Louisa of Bourbon, Daughter of Charles of Bourbon, Count of Soissons, Mary of Orleans, who was married to Henry of Savoy, Duke of Nemours, in the Year 1657. Henry II. took for his second Wife Ann Geneveve of Bourbon, Daughter of Henry of Bourbon, Prince of Conde, by whom he had John-Lewis-Charles, and Charles-Paris; the former of whom gave the County of Neufchatell to his Brother, in the Year 1668. upon Condition that if he should die without Children, the County should return to him; which case happening in the Year 1672. he entered again into the Possession of his Estate; and so the Dutcheß of Nemours his Sister, putting in for his Successor in the County of Neufchatell. the Matter was brought before the Estates of the Country, who rejected her Pretensions, and adjudged the Sovereignty to his Brother. After whose Decease the Succession was claim'd by the Dutcheß of Nemours and the Prince of Conti, between whom a Suit was commenc'd in the Parliament of Paris wherein the Prince obtained a Decree in his Favour; but the Estates of the Country acknowledg'd the Dutcheß for their Sovereign, and continued their Obedience to her Death, which happen'd in the Year 1707. Several Pretenders put in their Claims immediately, and after mature deliberation the Tribunal of the City declared the King of Prussia their Sovereign, Nov. 3. N. S.

The Town of Neufchatell, is seated on a Lake of the same Name, and so call'd from a Castle built on on a Hill that commands the Town, being distant 30 Miles from Laufanna and the Lake of Geneva to the North, 28 from Bern to the West, and 30 from Solothurn to the South West.

MULHAUSEN, Mulhusia, stands in the upper Alsace, upon the River Ell, about 10 Miles from Pfirt to the North, as many from Basil to the North West, and Newenburg to the West. It freed itself from the Jurisdiction of the Bishop of Straßburg, Ann. 1261. and was made an Imperial City, and has been in Alliance with Switzerland since the Year 1515. There is another City of this Name in Thuringen under the Protection of the Duke of Saxony.

ROTWEIL, Rotevilla, a Town in Schwaben, and one of the Allies of Switzerland. It stands on the River Necker, near the Mountains of Albenow, about 40 Miles from Brisac to the East, and 42 from Schaffenhäusen to the North. Duke Conrad III. erected a Court of Justice here for the whole Province of Schwaben, Ann. 1147. and Mr. de Guebriant Marshal of France, being mortally wounded in the Siege of this Place, died in it after it was taken by the French, 17 Nov. 1643.

BIENNE, Bienna, is a small Town on the Banks of the River Tschus, which empties it self into the Lake of Bienne, a little way from the Town. It lies within the Bishoprick of Basil; but is free and independent. The Bishops of that See have had great Pretensions to it; and therefore finding it self like to be hard put to it, allied it self with the Canton of Bern, Ann. 1552. and afterwards more strictly, Ann. 1567; which it confirm'd with Solothurn, Ann. 1597. and not long after with the Canton of Friburg. However, notwithstanding this Alliance, it does in some measure own the Bishop's Superiority, since it is obliged to furnish him a certain Number of Men in the time of War, and to pay him Tithes. The Valley of St. Immer, otherwise call'd the Lordship of Largue, belongs to this Town. It is divided into several Communities, who have each of 'em their Amman, from whom their lies an Appeal to the Council of the Town.

GENEVA, Genova & Aurelia Allobrogum, or Genuesium Civitas, anciently a City of the Allobroges in Gallia Narbonensis, stands on the River Rhone, where it comes out of the Lake Leman, commonly call'd the Lake of Geneva. In the Lat. of 46. 20. Long, 26. at the distance of about 80 Miles from Bern to the S.W. as many from Lions to the N.E. and 110 from Basil to the South West. The Rhone divides it into two Parts, the South part of it, which stands upon a rising Ground, and is the greater, is call'd Geneva; the other, which properly belongs to the Country of Gex, is call'd Gervais. This City is very considerable, for its Antiquity, advantageous Situation, the great number of its Inhabitants, and its Commerce. It was here that Cæsar, to prevent the Irruptions of the Helvetii, caused an Entrenchment to be made 19 Miles long, and 16 Foot high, from the Lake of Geneva to the Mountains of Jura; some Vestigia of which are still to be seen near Gingin. It was almost burnt to Ashes in the Time of Helicababius, and ordered to be re built by Aurelian, who would have it nam'd after him; but after his Death it resum'd its former Name. The Burgundians are said to have driven the Romans from hence, and after the fall of their Kingdom, it became an imperial Town; and a long time after the Bishops of it were both Spiritual and Temporal Lords, but it was with great difficulty that they preserved their Sovereignty, by reason it was disputed by the Counts of Geneva, after they became Vicars of the Empire. Peter dying without Children, Ann. 1392. appointed Humbert de Villars, his Nephew, his Heir; who died, Ann. 1400. Odo de Villars, his Uncle, succeeding, sold the Country of Geneva to Lewis Count of Savoy, Ann. 1401. But the Male Race of the House of Geneva failing, this Prince was forc'd to desire a new Investiture; which the Emperor Sigismund granted him, Ann. 1424. and Maximilian I. confirm'd it, Ann. 1519. as did also Charles V. Ann. 1530. The Dukes of Savoy pretended that the Town of Geneva was under their Jurisdiction. It is true, they did appoint Judges and Notaries in it, and coin'd Money; but all this was owing to the weakness of the Bishops, who were not able at that time to oppose such Inroachments. The Publick Cries were made always in Name of the Bishop or his Vidame; the inferior Officers did so much depend upon him that he could depose them when he thought fit: And the Magistrates received Power from the Bishop to judge in Criminal Causes, when the Person was not an Ecclesiastick. Nor need it be brought as an Argument against their Sovereignty, that before they entred upon Possession of their Bishoprick, they took an Oath to maintain the Liberty and Privileges of the City, since that it is no more than what most Kings and Princes in Europe do at their Coronation. At last, in the Year 1535. the Reformation prevailing in this City, the Bishop, Peter de Beaum, together with the Roman Catholicks, was obliged to leave the City; nor has he or any of his Successors ever been able to return, but live in the enjoyment of their empty Title at Annecy, about 26 Miles from Geneva. After this Revolution, the Form of Government was chang'd, and a new Constitution establish'd, which is popular, and not much different from that which is in most of the Swiss Cantons; for the Sovereignty is lodg'd in the Council of 200, out of which Number 25 are chosen to make up the lesser Council; both are for Life, and serve as Checks on one another; the Sovereignty residing in one and the Magistracy in the other. The lesser inspects into the great, when they choose the Coun- & Colonias, fellows; and the great examines all that the lesser Allobrogum does. Besides these two, there is a third Council, consisting of 60 Persons chosen out of that of 200, which is properly the Council of State; and it is they who direct and advise the lesser Council, in Matters of Importance and Difficulty. The Syndicks are the Chief Magistrates of this little Commonwealth; and are elected by the whole Body of the Burgeses on the first Sunday of the Year. There are several other inferiour Courts and Judges, appointed by the grand Council, whose Office is annual.

This City is pretty well fortified, and their Ramparts might secure it against any sudden Surprise or Scalade, but are not sufficient against the vigorous and frequent Attacks of a numerous Army; and therefore they place their greatest Strength and Security in that firm Alliance which they preserve with the Cantons of Zurich and Bern. The most remarkable Things in this City, are the Arsenal, which is very well furnish'd, and (as Doctor Burnet says) the best in the World in proportion to the State, there being Arms in it for more Men than there are in the State; with good store of Cannon. In the Arsenal are also to be seen the famous Scaling Ladders, which the the Savoyards made use of when they attempted to surprize the Place, An. 1602. and the Petard, with which they design'd to have broken the New Gate. The Town-house, which has a Stair-Case of singular Workman-ship, and is a very fair and stately Building. The publick Library, which is, at the College, and consists of about 3000 Volumes; but it is not in very good order, by reason here is no Fund for augmenting the number of Books or maintaining a Library-keeper. The Academy; which is furnish'd with able Professors; but since the Protestants were expelled France, the number of Students of Divinity is much less: But to make amends for that, especially during the late Wars, many come to this Place to learn their Exercises, especially Protestants. The principal Church is dedicated to St. Peter, and in it is to be seen the Tomb of Hen. II. Duke of Roban. There is also a Dutch and Italian Church, and there was an English one.

The Streets of this City are very large and beautiful, and the greatest part of their Houses, especially such as have been built within these 20 or 30 Years are of free Stone; but the Town is neither large nor very fine, yet it may (according to Misson) be call'd a very lovely Place. It has the advantage of pleasant Walks, and the Conversation of the Inhabitants is very familiar and easie. The common People are clownish, but honest; and the Persons of Note are extremely kind, civil and ingenious. The vulgar Tongue here is Savoyard, but People of Quality and Breeding speak French. The Revenues of this little State may amount to about 100000 Crowns: And they keep some Gallies on the Lake, and so does the Duke of Savoy and the Switzers.

The Lake is above 50 Miles long, and 12 at most broad, for its depth is not equal or easily found in some Places, as exceeding 500 Fathoms. It is very well stockt with great Variety of good Fish, especially Trouts, some of which weigh above 50 Pound. Which tho' it looks a little strange to us here, Mr. Misson says, he saw one in one of the Halls of the Arsenal of Munick, that weigh'd 73 Pounds. The Water of the Lake extremely clear and fresh, except when it is disturb'd by the Winds, then it rages like a little Sea. Nor is it credible, that the Rhine passes through it without mingling his Waters, as Polybius, and after him other Authors have maintain'd; for considering the length and crooked Figure of the Lake, that seems absurd and impossible.

CHAP. IV.

The Subjects of the Switzers.

THE Cantons of Switzerland having entred into Alliance with one another, not at the same, but at different times, they must have their particular and separate Subjects; because when a new Canton was receiv'd into the Society of the perpetual League, they did not at the same time enter into the Participation of what the rest possess'd, but only those that they should hereafter acquire. So the Bailiages of Usnach and Gustal belong to the Cantons of Schwitz and Glaris, and Rhinatal to the seven first Cantons; and that of Appenzel. These Bailiages and Places are all govern'd after the same manner, without derogating from their Laws or encroaching upon their Privileges and Customs. The Cantons to whom they belong send once a Year or once in two Years sometimes, Governors, who are Judges in all Matters, who receive the Revenues and Customs, and make account of their Managements to the Diet of Baden. Nevertheless those Governors are not look'd upon as such in the Bailiages before they take an Oath for maintaining inviolable the Privileges of the Country, which they call their Municipal Laws. In Switzerland these Governors are call'd Bailiffs; but in Italy, Captains. In Criminal Cases they make the Country Magistrates their Assessors, and give an account of their Administration to the Deputies who are sent by the Cantons to Lugan to determin Appeals. In the time of War these Bailiages are oblig'd to send their Militia to be list'd under the Banners of the Cantons to which they belong.

The Bailiages of Usnach and Gustal lie between the Lakes of Zurich and Wesen, and because they depend upon the Canton of Schwitz as well as that of Glaris, they have a Governor from each Canton by turns.

Rhinatal, Rhingovia, has its Name from the Situation of it along the Rhine, extending from the Lake of Constance to the Barony of Sax. It is divided into two Bailiages; that which lies on the right Bank of the Rhine belongs to the House of Austria, that on the other side belongs to the 7 first Cantons and that of Appenzel; and in it there are two little Towns, viz. Altest and Rhinec upon the Rhine, in the latter of which the Bailiff keeps his Residence. The Inhabitants of this Valley are chiefly employed in spinning Flax, the greatest part of which is employed in the Manufacture of St. Gall.

The County of Sargan, Sarentia, is separated from the Grisons by the Rhine, and owes its Name to the River Sarn which divides it into two; tho' others are of Opinion that it is so call'd from the Sarnutes, People of Rhetia, who dwelt about the Source of the River Inn; but it is not worth the while to debate it. This Country was sold to the 7 first Cantons by the Count of Montfort, in the Year 1488. There are in it, besides Sargan, which is a pretty little Town, and enjoys several Privileges, Valbenstat, upon the Lake of Riva, Ragatz, and the Abby of Pfuers, of the Order of St. Bennet, founded, An. 720.

The Free Provinces, Provinciae Liberae, consist in certain Villages and Castles lying along the River Russ, above and below Bremgarten on the left Bank of the River. They are call'd Free, because the Villages of Mayenberg, Richensea, and Argow, set themselves at Liberty, and choose their particular Magistrates. These Provinces formerly made up the County of Rore, the Lord of which resided at Arow. The Lucernois made themselves Masters of it in the time of the Council of Constance, and would have appropriated it to themselves, in prejudice of the 7 old Cantons; but the Canton of Bern being made Umpire to decide the Matter, condemn'd the Lucernois, and made the other Cantons Sharers. Within this Country is the Abbey of Muren, which is the ordinary Residence of the Bailiff.

The Country of Turgow, Turgea or Turgovia, is of a preta pretty large Extent, reaching from the Lake of Zurich to that of Constance, and takes its Name either from the Taurisci, who inhabited it, or the River Thur, which washes it. The 7 old Cantons possess only a small part of it, viz. that where Dissenhow lies upon the Rhine between Stein and Schaffhausen; which the Swiss made themselves Masters of, Ann. 1460. The rest is possess'd by several Proprietors, some of whom are Lay-men, some Clergy-men. The Bishop of Constance possesses the Lordships of Arbon, Tannez, Guittengen, Gottliebe, and Bischoffzel. The Chapter of Constance that of Altnau; the Abbot of St. Gall, a considerable part of it. Among the Lay mens Possessions may be reckon'd, the Seigniories of Pfin, Winfilden, Burglen, Wingi, and Spiegelberg.

The County of Rore, comprehends the Burroughs of Meimberg, Richace, Mury, Bremgarten and Vilzergen.

The Bailiage of Morat, lies between the County of Arbeg, the Canton of Friburg, and the Bailiages of Louppen and Avenzel. It is the first of the 4 Bailiages that depend on the Cantons of Bern and Friburg. Which they made themselves Matters of during their Wars with Charles the Terrible, Duke of Burgundy.

The Town of Morat, Moratum, or Muratum, lies in the County of Romont, on a Lake of the same Name, about 6 Miles from Friburg to the North, and 12 from Bern to the West. It is famous on the account of a signal Victory which the Switzers obtained over the Forces of Charles Duke of Burgundy on the 22d of June, 1476. in which they slew above 18000 of his Men; and as a Monument of their Victory, built a Chappel in the Field of Battle, in which they put the Bones of the slain. At Friburg they renew the Memory of this and another Battle, by solemn Feasts and publick Rejoycing, twice a Year, viz. the 2d of March, and 22 of June.

The Bailiage of Orbe, is so call'd from a little Town of the same Name, which stands on a Hill, near the little River Orbe, about 5 Miles from Iverdun to the West, and 18 from the Lake of Geneva to the North. It is said to be the ancient Urba, where the Urbigeni dwelt. In this Bailiage also stands the Borough of Eschalen, near the little River Talen.

The Bailiage of Granson, is likewise so call'd from a Town of that Name, near the Lake of Newschatel, about a Mile from the Town of Newschatel to the South, and 15 from Friburg to the West. It is also famous for the Battle which the Bernois and Friburgois gain'd over Charles Duke of Burgundy, Ann. 1476. on the 2d March; where this Prince left all his Baggage, which consisted in Money and other Things of great Value.

The Bailiage of Schwarzenburg is upon the Confines of the Canton of Friburg, and is very well peopled, having many good Villages in it; the chief of which are Valeren, Albingen, and Guggisberg.

The Bailiage of Lugan, Lucarn, Mendrisse, and Valmedie belong to the 12 first Cantons by a Donation, which Maximilian Sforza made, in the Year 1512. which was confirm'd by Francis I. after the Battle of Marignan. The Governors of these Bailiages are sent from the several Cantons to which they belong, by turns. They are very well peopled; that of Lugan comprehending 90 Villages, Lucarn 5 Parishes, and the rest proportionally.

The Bailiages of Belizone, Valbrun, and Riviere, belong to the Canton of Uri, Schwitz and Underwald. They did depend on the Dutchy of Milan; but were given to these Cantons in the Year 1422. The Dukes of Milan took Possession of them again; but by the Treaty of Alliance which was made between Francis I. and the Cantons, it was agreed, That they should return to the Cantons of Uri, Schwitz, and Underwald, to be enjoi'd by them for ever.

The Stipendary Towns of the Switzers.

THE Towns of Baden, Bremgarten, Mellingen, Rapservivil, Frawenfeld, are under the Dominion of some of the Cantons, and are call'd Stipendary, because they enjoy some Immunities, as, to live according to their own Laws and Customs, and to choose their own Magistrates; but are oblig'd in the time of War to raise a certain number of Troops, and maintain them at their own Charges.

Baden, Castellum Aquarum, or Thermarium, anciently call'd Aque Helvetiae, stands upon the River Limath, which a little below falls into the Aar. It is distant 6 Miles from the Rhine to the South, 30 from Basil to the East, and about 12 from Zurich to the North West. It was the chief Town of a County which pass'd into the Hands of the Counts of Kyburg, Ann. 1180. by the death of Henry last Count of Baden. Herman of Kyburg leaving no Children, and the Succession being disputed by several Pretenders, Radolph Count of Hapsburg made himself Master of it; and his Successors kept it 'till the time of the Council of Constance. This Town, on the account of the Conveniency of its Situation, several Houses in it being fit for great Assemblies, was chosen for the ordinary Place of the Meetings of the General Diets of the Cantons, and for entertaining Foreign Ambassadors. It is famous for a Conference that was held in it about Matters of Religion, An. 1526. and the mutual League made with the Cantons the same Year. It is call'd Ober Baden, or Upper Baden, to distinguish it from another Town of that Name in Schwaben. Both of them are famous for their hot Baths, and each of 'em are defended by a strong Castle built on a Hill.

Bremgarten, Bremocartum, is a little Town upon the Banks of the River Russ, 10 Miles from Baden, towards Lucern, and 8 from Zug to the North. It was once an imperial Town, afterwards subject to the Counts of Hapsburg, from whom it pass'd to the Dukes of Austria, and from them to the Swiss, and belongs to the 8 first Cantons.

Mellingen, Mellinga, stands upon the same River, about 12 Miles from Zurich to the West, and about 28 from Lucern to the North. The Emperor Sigismund sold it to Zurich, and it now belongs to the 8 old Cantons.

Rapservil Rapserville, or Ruperti Villa, stands upon the Lake of Zurich, where it is divided into the Lake of Zurich, properly so call'd, and the Upper Lake. It formerly belong'd to the Counts of that Name, who were succeeded by the Counts of Hapsburg. The People of Zurich having ruined it, it was re-built, Ann. 1351. by Albert Duke of Austria. It is 26 Miles from Zug to the East, and 15 from Zurich to the South East, towards Chur.

Frawenfeld, stands upon the River Murg, about 20 Miles from Constance to the West. The Swiss made themselves Masters of it, Ann. 1460. in the time of Sigismund Duke of Austria.

SAVOY, Sabaudia.

THIS Country was anciently inhabited by a part of the Allobroges, the Centrones, the Nantuates, Garocelli, the V-ragri and the Sa-laffi. The Allobroges possess'd that part of the Coun-try which lies between the Rhone, where it comes out of the Lake Lemán, the Country of the Nantuates, that of the Centrones and the Ifere. The Centrones liv'd in the Valleys of the Alpes Graia (le Mont Joux) now call'd Tarantaise: The Garocelli, in the Country now call'd Maurienne: The Nantuates in that that which is now Chablais and St. Maurice; The Verag-i, in that part of the Valais where Martigni is; and the Salaffi, in that which is now the Valley of Aouft. Terentius Varro subdu'd the Salaffi, and Augustus vanquish'd the rest of those People. After the Roman Empire became a Prey to the barbarous Nations, this Country was possess'd sometimes by one, sometimes by another of them. The Burgundians remain'd Masters of it for a long time, and incorporated it into the Kingdom which they establish'd of a part of Gallia Celsica and Gallia Narbonensis. Bosc, Count of Ardenne, who Marry'd Ermenega de, Daughter of Lewis II. Emperor of Italy, caus'd himself to be chosen King of Provence by the Estates of that Country, assembled at Mental, in the Month of October, 879. Lewis his Son surnam'd the Blind, who was likewise King of Italy left by Adelias, Charles Constantine Prince of Vienne, who had by Th.berge, Amadeo Father of Humbert, surnam'd White Hands; from whom some Authors derive the Succession of the Princes of Savoy; tho' others, considerable both for their Authority and Number, will have them come from Berold of Saxony, as the more honourable Stock. And therefore since Historians are so much divided about it, we must desire the Reader to have recourse to those Authors, and go on to that which more properly belongs to a Work of this Nature.

Savoy is bounded on the North by the Lake of Geneva and Valais, on the East by the Valleys of Sesia and Piedmont, on the South by Dauphine, and on the West by the Rhone; which separates it from Bugey. The Soil of this Country is generally very good; the Valleys affording plenty of Corn and Grapes, and the Mountains Pasture for great Numbers of Cattle, and good Variety of Game. The Lakes afford good store of Trouts, Pikes and Carps, and several other sorts of Fishes. This Country is very well provided with Timber, especially Walnut and Chestnut Trees. The Air is also cool and temperate, by reason of the great number of Mountains that are always cover'd with Snow. The Isere, Arche and Arve, are the most considerable Rivers, as those of Biariget and Annacy are the most noted Lakes. The Savoyards are an industrious and courteous People, and of a gentle Disposition, especially the Persons of Quality, who have something of Greatness in their Looks and Mien. They are all of the Roman Catholick Religion.

The chief Commodities of this Country are Paper, Fustians, Raw Silks, Hides, Cloths, Linnen, Thread, Iron-work, Fir-trees for Masts of Ships, and other valuable Things.

JUSTICE is administred in this Country very regularly and orderly. There are three Senates, to whom Appeals are made from the Bailiages and inferior Tribunals. The first is for Savoy, the second for Piedmont, and the third for the County of Nice and its Dependencies. The Seat of the first is at Chambery; and it is compos'd of 4 Presidents, 15 Senators, without reckoning the Abbot of Hautecomb, who is a Senator born, 1 Advocate General, 1 Procurator General, 2 Registers, and 2 Secretaries. It was instituted by Amadeo VIII. 1430. The Senate of Piedmont was establish'd by Lewis I. Duke of Savoy, who resolving to reside in Piedmont, did by his Ordinance the 15th of May, 1459 create a Council in the City of Turin, to determine Affairs in that Country without Appeal; which afterwards assum'd the Name of Senate. It consists of 4 Presidents, 2 Knights, 18 Senators, an Advocate General, and a Procurator General. The Senate of Nice was instituted by Charles Emanuel; and it is compos'd of 2 Presidents, 6 Senators, an Advocate General, and 2 Procurator General.

Besides these Sovereign Courts, there are 2 Chambers of Accounts, and a Council of Finances. That of Savoy was instituted by Amadeo the Green, An. 1351. and Philibert Emanuel declar'd it Sovereign and Independant of the Senate of Chambery, by an Edict, dated at Mendovi, 6 Oct. 1630. and at the same time created that of Turin, with the same Prerogatives. The Superintendent of the Finances presides in the Council of that Name, and appoints the Meetings of it. He examines all the Accounts of those who have the Management of the publick Money; and it is here that all Affairs relating to the Finances are examin'd and determin'd.

Altho' the Duke of Savoy be a Vassal of the Empire, he governs his own Dominions with an absolute Authority. His Revenue in all may amount to about 5000000 Livres; and his Army in time of Peace is very small, but in time of War about 10 or 11 thousand Men. The Situation of his Dominions upon the Confines of France, and at the Entry to Italy, renders this Prince considerable. The Alps were formerly a Rampart to them against the Attacks of their Enemies; but after the French King took Pignerol, those Mountains were found not to be inaccessible, Savoy is defended by several strong Places, the best of which is Montmelian. Nice, when it is in the Duke of Savoy's Hands, secures the Communication with the Mediterranean; and towards Lombardy there are several well fortified Places, to oppose the Insults of the Spaniards, who questionless would most willingly have Piedmont, which without doubt is one of the finest Countries in Italy.

Savoy is commonly divided into 8 small Provinces, as you may see in the following Table,

Savoy , properly so call'd,	Montmelian , Ch. Town.
The County of Geneva ,	Annecy .
The County of Chablais ,	Tonnon .
The County of Aouste ,	Aouste .
The Tarentaise .	Meusniers .
The Valley of Morienne ,	S. John de Maurienne .
The County of Fossigny .	Bonneville ,
Part of Bugey ,	Yenne .

SAVOY in particular, or properly so call'd, is bounded on the North with the County of Geneva, on the East by Tarentaise and Maurienne, on the South by Dauphiny, and on the West with Bugey and the Rhône. The chief Towns in it are,

Chambery , Ch.	Rumilly .
Montmelian .	Aix .

Chambery, Cameriacum, or Camerium, stands on a Plain, at the Confluence of the two little Rivers Laisse and Albens, 10 miles from Montmelian to the South, 7 from the Lake of Bourget to the North, about 60 from Lyons to the East, and 30 from Grenoble, and 70 from Geneva to the South. It is a rich and well peopled City; and some take it for the ancient Forum Voconii, which Pliny and the Itinerary of Antoninus make mention of; tho' Cluverius and others think Draguignan in Provence has a better Title to that ancient Name: And some think it is Civitas that Cicero speaks of in his Epistles; but whatever may be of that, it is now the Chief City of the Duchy of Savoy, and in it's ancient State might be call'd a well built Town, but 'twill hardly now bear that Character. The publick Buildings are very beautiful, particularly an ancient Castle, the principal Church dedicated to S. Leger, the Jesuits College, and some Monasteries. Divers Channels of the River Albens run through this City, as do several little Streams of Springs rising in St. Martin's Hill. In this Place the Emperor Sigismund erected the County of Savoy into a Duchy, 19 Febr. 1416. It was taken by the French, 1690. and restor'd by the Treaty of Peace at Turin, 1696. But seiz'd again by the French in the Year, 1703.

Montmelian, Montmelianus, is a little City on the right Bank of the Isere, defended by a Citadel, whose principal Strength consists in its Situation, being founded on a high Rock; in which is cut out a large Well which supplies the Garrison with fresh Water. The French under the Command of the Constable of Lesdiguières, took it 9. Nov. 1600. And again it was Besieg'd by the French, under the Command of M. Catinat, 1691. and taken after a vigorous Resistance; but restor'd by the Treaty of Peace at Turin, 1696.

Aix, Aque Gratiæ, is the chief Town of a Marquisate, and famous for the hot Baths, which were the Work of the Romans; as the Town was rebuilt by the Emperor Gratian. It stands at the Foot of the Mountains between Chambery, Annecy and Rumilly. Its Waters are impregnated with Allom and Sulphur, and are very much frequented.

The County of GENEVA, Genevensis Tractus, lies between Bugey, the County of Gex, Faucigny, Savoy, properly so call'd, and the Rhône, about 45 miles long. It was formerly possess'd by its own Lords who did bear the Title of Counts, and were Vassals to those of Savoy. Pope Clement VII. was the last of that Family: After whose Death, his Sisters, the eldest of whom was married to the Sire de Villars, the other to the Prince of Orange, pretended to succeed him; but the Emperour Sigismund adjudg'd it to Amadeo the 8th. Duke of Savoy, and with it all the Right the Emperor could pretend to that Country, and came to an Accommodation with the House of Villars for their Pretensions: And after he was in peaceable Possession of it, gave it to his Son Amadeo, who died without Children, as Janus Son of Lewis Duke of Savoy also did. Philip youngest Son of Philip Duke of Savoy got it for his Appenage, or Portion, together with Faucigny and Beaufort; and so it has been handed down from one to another, and at last to this present Duke. The Chief Towns of this Country are,

Annecy , Cap.	Tonnes .
Albi .	Clairmont .
La Roche .	Chamont .

Annecy, Annecium or Anneciolum, stands on the Lake of the same name, at the foot of the Mountains about 20 miles from Geneva to the South 24 from Chambery to the N. W. and about as many from Bellay to the East. There are several little Streams flowing from the Lake through the Town, which form themselves into a River call'd Trioud, and render the Situation of the Town very delightful, and is a great convenience to the Inhabitants. It was formerly a very large and well Peopled City; but since the Fire that happen'd in it, Ann. 1448. it has hardly recover'd its former greatness, or number of Inhabitants. It has been the Residence of the Bishop of Geneva ever since the Year, 1535. that the Reformers drove him out of Geneva: And here, in the Cathedral Church is preserv'd the Corps of S. Francis Sales, Bishop of Geneva. There are here also two Collegiate Churches, a Seminary of Priests of S. Lazarus, a College of Barnabites, a Convent of Dominicans, a Monastery of Capuchins, and one of Benedictins, and several others, some of which are very Magnificent. This Place was taken by the French in the Year, 1630. and again by them in the Year, 1690. but restor'd Ann. 1696. by the Treaty of Peace at Turin. And again taken and possess'd by them during the late War.

The Country of CHABLAIS, Caballicus Ducatus, is bounded on the North with the Lake of Geneva, on the East with the Valais, on the West by the Counties of Fossigny and Geneva. The Emperor Conrad Salis gave it to Humberg White Hands; and the Emperor Frederick the II. erected it into a Duchy, Ann. 1238. Formerly it reach'd as far as St. Maurice: The Valeese made themselves Masters of this Country, Ann. 1536. when Bern and Friburg were engag'd in a War with Charles III. Duke of Savoy. They were ordered, by an Arrest of the Imperial Chamber to restore it; and Charles V. sent an Herald to Summon them to do it; but they mock'd the Emperor's Threatnings; and by the Treaty of the fourth of August, 1569. they yielded all that lies between the Rivers Morfe and Dranse; the Bernois having before, in execution of the Treaty of Laufanna 15 Oct. 1564. surrender'd all that they possess'd in the Bailiage of Tonnon, Ternier and Galliard. This Province is about 30 miles long, and 12 broad. The chief Towns in it are,

Tonnon , Cap.	Ternier .
Evian .	Galliard .
Aups .	Ripaille .

Tonon, Tunonium, stands upon the Lake of Geneva, about 25 miles from the City of that Name to the East, 30 from Annecy to the North-east, and 15 from Lufanna to the South; and is a very delightful Place.

The Dutchy of AOUSTE, Augustanus Ducatus, is bounded with Valais on the North, Vercellois and the Valleys of Sesia on the East, Maurienne on the South, and Savoy and Foucigny on the West. It is a mountainous but fertile Country, and is divided commonly into 7 Parts or Valleys. It was anciently inhabited by the Salassii, and afterwards had its own particular Masters, till the Marquiss of Susa took possession of one part; and the Bishops of Aouste became Proprietors of a part of their Diocels under the Emperor's Sovereignty. This Dutchy was united to Savoy by the Marriage of Adelaide of Susa with Amadeo the II. Count of Savoy, together with the Marquisate of Susa, and the Dutchy of Turin. The Emperor Frederick the II. erected it into a Durchy in the Month of February. 1238. in favour of Thomas. The chief Towns in it are,

Aoste , B. Cap.	} Chantillon .
Morges .
Iffigne .
Montjoux .
Bardfort .
	} Cour-majeur , anciently
	} Curia Major .
	} Donas .

Aouste, Augusta Prætoria or Augusta Salassiorum, stands in the middle of a Valley of that Name, upon the Banks of the Dorea, where the Rivulet Baurreggio runs into it; 25 miles from Jurea to the N.W. 50 from Turin to the North, and but 10 from the Confines of the Milaneze to the West. Augustus (as it is commonly believ'd) sent a Colony here, and would have it nam'd after him, Augusta Prætoria, whereas before it was call'd Cordella by the Salassii, from one Cordellus Stasiellus, who they say, was the Founder of it. There is still to be seen here a Triumphal-Arch rais'd in Honour of Augustus, in Memory of the Victory he obtain'd over the People of the Alpes; and 'was for this Reason that it was call'd the Trophæe of the Alpes; which some less knowing Writers have plac'd at Turbie near Monaco. The Bishop of Aouste is Suffragen to the Archbishop of Tarentaise. St. Anselm Bishop of Canterbury was Born here. This City with the rest of Savoy was taken by the French in 1704.

The TARENTEISE, Tarentasia, is bounded with the Alpes, and the Dutchy of Aouste on the East, Toffigny on the North, Savoy proper on the West, and the Valley of Maurienne on the South. It was anciently inhabited by the Centrones, and for a long time was govern'd by Lords of its own; from whom it pass'd to the House of Briançon. Amery did treat his Subject's so cruelly, that Humbert II. Count of Savoy, being invited by Heraclius, Archbishop of Tarentaise, made himself Master of this Country, and united it to his Dominions. It lies extended between the Village S. Germain, which is at the Foot of the Hill call'd little S. Bernard, to Mount Sapey and Regnez, about 36 Miles in length. The most considerable Towns in it are,

Moustriers, Ch. Ar. B.
S. Maurice.
Briançon.

Moustriers, Monasterium, or Forum Neronis, stands upon the Ifere, where the Brook Doron runs into it 25 miles from Chambery to the East, towards Aouste, 60 from the Lake of Geneva to the South, and 60 from Turin to the North West. The River Ifere divides it into two Parts, and the Avenues to it are extremely difficult by reason there is no way to come at it but by defiles, or narrow passes betwixt Torrents and Precipices. Some Geographers have taken this for the ancient Tarentasia, which had been formerly call'd Forum Claudii; but they mistake it, for after this Town was ruin'd, the Archbishoprick was transfer'd to Moustriers. The Bishopricks of Aouste and Sion are Suffragans to it.

The County of MAURIENNE, Mauriana, lies between the Alpes and the Ifere, between Tarentaise on the North, and Dauphiny on the South. It is a Valley of about 50 miles long, beginning at Chamoux, a little below the Confluence of the Arche and Ifere, and ending at the foot of Mount Cenis. It is a fertile Country, particularly of Saffron and Pasturage, and contains about 100 Parishes: And is a part of the ancient Estate of the House of Savoy; for Humbert White Hands, had for his Patrimony the County of Savoy and that of Maurienne together with Chablais and Valais. The only considerable Town in it is St. John Mourienne, altho' there be several others of less note,

S. Andrew .	} La Chambre .
S. Michael .
Modane .
	} St. Julian .
	} Iffe .

St. John Mourienne, Fanum S. Johannis Mauriani, stands upon a Plain in the middle of a Valley, upon the Banks of the little River Arches, 10 miles from the Frontiers of Dauphine to the East, 65 North West from Turin. It is a very fair Town, but not Fortified: And is an Episcopal See, Suffragan to the Archbishop of Vienne. In the Cathedral Church of S. John are to be seen many Tombs of the Dukes of Savoy.

The Province of FOSSIGNY, or Foucigny Fociniacensis Tractus, lies at the Foot of the Alpes, between the County of Geneva on the West, of which it was formerly a part, and that of Valais on the East. For a long time it was govern'd by particular Lords, descended from Emerard, who liv'd in the 10th. Century, and whose Posterity fail'd Ann. 1200. in the Person of William, whose only Daughter and Heire's married Thomas Count of Savoy. It has been the Portion of the Brothers of this Family, but was re-united to the Dukedom of Savoy, 1659. The most remarkable Towns in it are,

Bonneville , Cap.	} Salanches .
Passi .
Vieu .
	} Cluse .
	} Tanning .

Bonneville, Bonnopolis, stands in the Low Foucigny, at the foot of the Mountains, on the River Arve, 16 miles below Cluse, 15 from Annecy to the N.W. and 20 from Geneva to the South East. It is defended by an old Castle, and is the Seat of the chief Justice of the Country.

That part of Bugey, which remains in the possession of the Duke of Savoy, by the Treaty of Lions, comprehends only that which lies on the other side of the Rhone, and is 24 miles long, and 6 broad; from the Mountain Chall to the Rhone. The most remarkable Towns in it are, Yenne, a little Town, surrounded with a Wall, Loissey, a considerable Burrow, and chief Town of a Barony, and the Suburbs of Pont-Beauvoisin, a Town in Dauphiny upon the River Gue, which is the Bounds betwixt this Province and Dauphiny.

The County of NICE, &c.

THE County of Nice is bounded on the North with the Marquisate of Saluzes, the County of Tende and the Genovesat on the East, the Mediterranean raean Sea on the South, and the County of Bueil and Provence on the West. The Vediantii were the ancient Inhabitants of it. Amadeo the Red, Duke of Savoy, got it by a voluntary offer of the People of Nice, in the Year, 1338. Ladislaus Son of Charles de Duras not being in a Condition to give them Succour. Ladislaus is said to have confirm'd this Alienation by an Act made at Viterbo, the 18 of January, 1402. And by the Treaty of Chambery, the 15th of October, 1419. Island of Arragon, Mother and Tutors to Lewis III. King of Naples, and Count of Provence, d'd resign to Amadeo the VIII. all the Right that her Son could claim to that County, and the Principality of Barcelonnet; in recompence of which Amadeo did discharge the Sum of a Hundred and sixty Thousand Livers, which Amadeo the VI. his Uncle had lent to Lewis the I. Uncle of Lewis the III. for his Expedition into Naples. But this Cession of Island's, as most think, was contrary to the Fundamental Laws of the Land, and the express Acts of the Counts of Provence, and consequently of no Force. However the Case may be, we must leave it to be decided by others, and go on to that which is more properly our Business. The most considerable Towns in this County are Nice and Ville franche.

Nice, Nicaea, from whom the County takes its Name, stands on the Sea, and is defended by a very strong Citadel, which stands on a Steep high Rock inaccessible on all sides but on that from the Town; it also may command the Port; which is none of the best, the Anchorage not being good. This Town was built by a Colony of the Masiliens; from the Ruins of the ancient Cemenelium, a City of the Vediantii. It is an Episcopal See, Suffragan to the Archbishop of Ambrun: And is distant about 2 Miles from the Mouth of the River Varo, and 7 from Monaco, and 15 from the Frontiers of the Genoese to the West, and 60 from Pignerol to the South. It was taken by the French in the Year, 1691. and restor'd, Ann. 1696. by the Treaty of Peace at Turin. The French took the Town in the late War, but not being able to conquer the Castle they undermined and blew up the Fortifications of the Town, when they quitted it in Aug 1705. Afterwards at the latter end of the same Year they besieg'd the Castle, which after a brave Defence surrender'd on the 4th. of Jan. 1706. The Fortifications whereof they also destroy'd.

Ville Franche, Olivula, stands upon the Sea of Genova, about 2 Miles from Nice. It is thought to be the ancient Olivula Portus by some; but others, particularly Petrus Jofredus, think that Olivula Portus stood 5 Miles to the East of Nice; but whatever may be of that, Charles II. King of Naples and Count of Provence caus'd it to be built, Ann. 1295. It stands in a Bottom among high Hills which render its Harbour an excellent Shelter from Winds, and the entry to it is defended by a Castle, and within by a strong Citadel; which Emanuel Philibert Duke of Savoy caus'd to be built. It was restor'd to Savoy by the King of France, Ann. 1696. by the Treaty of Peace at Turin. This Town was taken by the French in 1704. and the Castle in April 1705.

The Principality or Valley of BARCELLONET, Barcino, is bounded on the North with the Marquisate of Salusse and Ambrun, on the East by the County of Nice, and on the South and West by Provence. The Inhabitants of it acknowledg'd Amadeo the VII. Duke of Savoy for their Lord, in the Month of May, 1338. The Town of Barcelonnet is no very large one, tho' it be the only one of any Note in this Valley. It stands upon the little River Hubay, near the Frontiers of Dauphine, and 20 Miles South East from Embrun; and was built by Ramond Berenger, Count of Provence, Ann. 1230. There are besides in this Principality Peget, and the Valley of Etienne, which has its own particular Governour, and is properly an Annex of the former.

The County of Tende Comitatus, Tentendensis, is bounded on the North by Piedmont, on the East by the County of Gonoua, and on the South and West by the County of Nice. It was formerly in the Possession of the Family of Lascais, who were descended from the Emperors of Constantinople by the Mother's side. It pass'd into the Family of Savoy by the Marriage of Ann, only Daughter of John Antony last Count of Tende, with Reney of Savoy, natural Son of Philip Duke of Savoy; who in consideration of this Marriage, gave his Son all his Estate; which was done the 25th of January, 1501. The Town of Tende is a pretty little Burrough, in the Appenines, upon the Confines of the County of Geneva, about 30 Miles from Nice to the North, and 50 from Turin to the South.

The County of Bueil or Boglio, Boleensis Comitatus, is bounded with Barcelonnet on the North, the County of Nice on the East, and Provence on the South and West. For a long time it belong'd to the Family of Grimaldi; who had a very just Title to it; but the Senate of Nice having condemn'd Hannibal Grimaldi, Count of Bueil, as guilty of Treason, under the Reign of Charles Emanuel, confiscated all his Estate. Andrew Grimaldi his Son, was restored to it by Prince Maurice; but by some secret Article of the Accommodation, agreed upon between this Prince and the Dutchess of Savoy the 14th of July, 1642. She, without either approving or disapproving what Maurice had done in favour of this Andrew, promis'd to allow him 30000 Livers per Annum during the Minority of the Duke of Savoy, her Son: And that, till he should be of Age to do him Justice, he should remove out of the Dominions of Savoy with all his Family: Since which time, neither he nor his Children have been able to obtain Satisfaction for this Usurpation. The Town of Boglio or Bueil, stands on the Frontiers of Provence, about 30 Miles from Nice to the North, and 40 from Pignerol to the South.

The Principality of Oneille or Oneglia, Onelias Tractus, is almost enclosed within the West part of the Genoese. It formerly belong'd to the Family of Doria; till Jerom Doria, either exchang'd it for some other Lands, or sold it to Emanuel Philibert Duke of Savoy, in the Year, 1576. Charles Emanuel erected it into a Principality, by his Letters Patents dated at Turin, the 17th. of December, 1620. It comprehends the Lordships of Marro and Prela, which are very fertile and well Peopled Countries. The Town of Oneglia or Oneille stands upon the Sea, about 10 Miles from Nice to the West, 20 from Vintimeglia, and as many from Mondovi to the South: And drives a great Trade in Oyl.

ITALY.

CHAP. I. Of ITALY in General.

ITALY, as it was anciently the most famous Country in the World, being the Seat of the glorious Roman Empire, from whence Laws and Decrees were issued out almost over all the then known World, for the Government of those mighty States and powerful Kingdoms which it had swallowed up and brought under its Subjection; So it is at this time one of the most Fertile, and on many Accounts

Accounts most delightful Countries on Earth. If one does consider the vast number of valiant and prudent Generals, as Camillus, Fabius Maximus, the Scipios, Pompey, Cæsar, &c. The famous Orators, as, Cicero, Hortensius, Antonius, &c. the Admirable and almost inspir'd Poets, as Virgil, Ovid, Catullus, Tibullus, Plautus, Terence, Horace, Juvenal, Perseus, &c. all excellent in their kind; the renowned Historians, as, Livy, Tacitus, Salust, &c. I say if one should consider all these, and besides, the stupendous and lasting Monuments of Power and Wealth, such as, particularly, their Publick Buildings, Causeways, and such like, he must necessarily confess, that never any Country had more advantages than this has had; inasmuch, that the Gods and Muses seem to have been emulously concern'd to make it the Glory and Envy of the World in those Days, as it is the Wonder and Admiration of all who see it in these. And altho' the Art of War and Arms flourish'd more in this Country anciently than it does now, when the softer Arts, of Painting, Architecture, Musick, &c. seem to be the chief Study and Employment of the Inhabitants; yet it cannot be said that the former has been quite neglected, or that the Muses have forsaken this Country. Thomas Aquinas, Belarmine, and Baronius, were great Divines in their way: Rodolphus Valterranus, and Picus Mirandula, were good Humanists; Ficinus, Cardan, Galileo, Torricelli, Malpoggi, Borelli, Redi, &c. good Mathematicians and Philosophers; Panigarelle and Loredano good Orators; Guicciardine, Bentivogli, Davila, and Strada, excellent Historians; Tasso and Ariosto, famous Poets, and Raphael, Michael Angelo, Titian, &c. admirable Painters.

As for the NAMES of this Country, it has had several, as Hesperia, Saturnia, Ausonia, Oenotria, and Latium, which, tho' they were but the Names of particular Parts of it at first, were used by the ancient Grecians to signify the whole; and in that they were imitated afterwards by the Latin Poets. How it came to be call'd Italia, is much (and perhaps too nicely) disputed among the Antiquaries; some deriving it from the Greek word Ἰταλῆς, which signifies the same as Taurus, a Bull; because this Country abounded with such, of an extraordinary size, and very beautiful. Others, with greater probability, bring it from one Italus, King of the Siculi, who first inhabited Sabina and Latium; and that this Name afterwards was given to the whole Country betwixt the Alpes and the Streights of Messina, or Il Faro de Messina. There are several other Accounts of it, but we hope the Reader will excuse the omitting them here; or if he has a mind to know more of this Matter, he may consult Bochart and others, who have laboured abundantly in that sort of Criticism.

Nature seems to have had more than ordinary care of this Country, in giving it so convenient a Situation; it being bounded on the North with the Alpes, on the East with the River Arso, in Histria, and the Gulf of Venice, on the South with the Tuscan Sea, on the West by the Alpes and the River Var. Its length (according to Claudian) from Anusæ, a Town at the Foot of the Mountain call'd Great S. Bernard, to Rigio, and the Capo del Armi, is about 900 Miles. Its breadth is different, but under the Alpes it is about 560 Miles broad. It lies between 26 and 33 degrees Longitude, and 37 and 46 Latitude; the figure of it resembling a Man's Leg; and some, who trace this Comparison a little nicely say, that the end of it serves to kick Sicily into the Sea; tho' indeed I should think this Island deserved better Treatment from Italy; for it was very useful to the ancient Romans, by reason of its Fertility and great Product of Corn; and the modern Italians, no doubt, are often beholden to it. They say farther, that the Toes of it appear at the Faro of Messina, the Heel about Otranto, the Soal towards Mount S. Angelo, the Calf about Ancona, the Ham about Ravenna, the Kneetowards Piombino and the Port of Leghorn, and the Thigh towards the Alpes.

The SOIL, generally over all Italy is very good, and watered with a good number of Rivers, whose Courses are not long by reason the Country is not very broad; and the Air (some Places in the Ecclesiastical State excepted) healthful and pretty temperate; but after hot Days the Nights are found to be very cold in comparison. The Product of Italy is, Corn, Grapes of several kinds, of which many sorts of Wine are made, Oranges, Citrons, Lemons, Pomegranates, and Olives, whose Oyl turns to good account. And in the South part of it, are some Sugar, Almonds, and abundance of Mulberry-Trees, which have render'd that Country famous for its Silk Manufactories. Their Meadows are well stock'd with Bufflers and other sorts of Cattle, as their Forests are with great variety of Game. There are likewise in this Country Rocks of Alabaster, and a rich kind of Jasper; also Mines of Iron, Allom, Sulphur, Gold and Silver.

The most considerable Rivers are, the Po, the Tyber, the Arno, the Adige, the Adda, and the Tesin. The chief Lakes are those of Como, Isco Luzano, Garda, that of Trafimenus, Vulfin, Braciano, Tuinas, Fundi, Lago di Castello, Gendafho, Celano, Andera, Varam Lersino, and that of Bolsano. The most remarkable Mountains are, the Alpes, the Apennines, Mount Misso, Mount Barbaro, Vesuvius, and Mount S. Angelo.

Italy hath been differently divided by the Ancients, according as Nations shifted their Habitations or mingled with one another. After vast Numbers of the Gauls, who liv'd betwixt the Ocean, the Rhine, the Alpes, the Mediterranean Sea and the Pyrenees, had cross'd the Alpes, and taken Possession of that part of Italy which lies between the Alpes and the Apennines, as far as the River Æsis, or Esino, the Romans call'd that Country Gallia Italica, and Gallia Citerior, and Cisalpinia, and Gallia Circumpadana, and also Tegata, because they had assum'd the Roman Habit as well as their Customs; whereas that on the other side was call'd Gallia Comata, because the Inhabitants used to wear their Hair long. The Emperor Augustus, as Pliny relates, divided Italy into 11 Regions, viz. Liguria, Ættruria, Latium, Campania Felix, Samnium, Picenum, Umbria, Gallia Tegrata, Gallia Transpadana, Venetia and Istria. Strabo divided it into 8 Regions or Parts, viz. Venetia, Liguria, Picenum, Lucania, Tuscia, Roma, Campania, and Apulia. Antoninus the Emperor in his Itinerary, divides it into 16 Provinces; and Prolem into 45 Nations or People. After the Dignity and Seat of the Roman Empire was translated to Germany, Italy was at several times strangely harass'd and torn in a great many little Pieces, which were establish'd into Principalities, Duchies, Counties, and Marquissates, as the Marquissate of Istria, the Duchy of Friuli, the Duchy of Milan, the Duchy of Mantua, and a great many more. Italy, as it is now, may be very fitly divided according to the several Sovereignities in it; of which we shall treat afterwards. Who

Who the first Inhabitants of Italy were, is a very hard matter to tell, it being so long ago since it was first Peopled. Whether any one People sometime after the Flood came into this Country and in time spread themselves over it all, or whether different People at different times came in'o it and possess'd themselves of such Parts of it as they found uninhabited, and gave different Names to the Places where they settled, is more than can be well determin'd. The Aufenes are said to be the most ancient, and to have possess'd the most Southern Parts of Italy, where the Brutii and Lucani liv'd afterwards; next to these the Opici and Ofci, who liv'd in Campania and Samnium; then the Siculi, in Sabina and Latium; the Umbri, whose Territories reach'd between the Mare Superum, or Hadriatick, and Inferum, or Tyrrhenian Sea; next to these the Tusci, whose Country reach'd as far as the Alpes; and next to them again the Ligures, whose Dominions reach'd as far into Gallia as the Rhone; beyond these were the Veneti, whom some will have to be come from Illyricum, others from the Hereti, a People in Paphlagonia. The Gauls drove out the Tusci, as these did the Umbri out of their Territories. A certain People, call'd Oenotrii from their Leader, drove the Aufenes out of their foresaid Habitations, and forc'd them to seek themselves a new Seat as far North as the River Luis or Borigliano, and Vulturnus, or Volturno; and not satisfied with that, they likewise expell'd the Siculi out of their Country, and assum'd the Name of Aborigines, as they did afterwards that of Latini. The Sabini were descended from the Opici, of those came the Picentes, Vestini, Marfi, Prentani, Peligni, Maruccini, Samnites, and from these the Campani, Lucani, and the Brutii. In the mean time several Families arriving from Greece, at different times, fill'd all the Sea Coast along the Mare Superum and Inferum, and built many good Towns; and by this means, as Strabo and Trogus relate, Italy and Sicily came to be call'd Magna Græcia. But other People having expell'd the Grecians out of most of their Possessions, forc'd them to confine themselves within that which afterwards was call'd Magna Græcia, and is now call'd Calabria Superior. But after the Roman State was become powerful, and had subdued all Italy, it continued under the Roman Jurisdiction, divided and distinguished into Regions and People, as we've said already, 'till the time of Honorius the Emperor; when the Goths, Vandals, and Heruli, People of Germany, and the Huns passing the Alpes, invaded this whole Country, and divided it into several little Kingdoms and States. Justinian having driven out all these, establish'd the Exarchat of Ravenna, whilst Rome lay in its Ruins. At last the Longobards having taken Ravenna, establish'd their Kingdom in Gallia Togata; but they were rooted out by the Valour and Conduct of Pepin King of France, and his Son Charlemaign, who had been call'd into Italy for that end by the Pope; to whom he gave a great part of the Revenues of that Country, reserving to himself the Sovereignty. Pepin died in the Year 768. and Charlemaign was Crown'd Emperor in 800.

I am in hope the Reader will not think himself abused, or look upon it as a thing foreign to a Work of this Nature, if we refresh his Memory a little here with some few Hints concerning the Rise, Progress and Fall of the Roman Empire. Every Body almost knows that the first Inhabitants of Rome were a sorry Rabble of indigent People, and the very Dregs of Italy; who might justly be call'd a Den of Wolves, since they liv'd by continual Robberies, and thirsted after their Neighbours Goods and Blood. The hand-breadth of Ground which they first possess'd, was too little to maintain a considerable number of People; and therefore they must either have always remain'd Beggars, or cut out their Fortunes with their Swords. As mean and inconsiderable as their beginning was, by the Valour of some of their Kings, and prudent Management of others, and afterwards by the good Qualifications of their Generals, and Wisdom of their Senate, they grew up to such a Pitch of Power and Glory, that never any State on Earth was able to equal, much less to excel them. One good Politick of theirs was, that they no sooner conquer'd a Nation, than they transplanted the best and richest Men of it to Rome, and sent Romans in their Places. Athens and Lacedæmon seldom naturaliz'd Strangers; but Rome observ'd that good Politick, Romulus its Founder having set the Copy; for 'tis said of him, That he us'd to receive as Citizens of Rome in the Evening, those with whom he had fought in the Morning. Servius Tullius did prudently correct a considerable Mistake in the former Reigns; for under them it was allow'd that every Body without distinction should serve in the Wars; whereas he ordered that only the ablest and most wealthy Citizens (except upon extraordinary Occasions) should serve as Soldiers, who were to equip themselves according to their Ability; wisely considering, that their Wealth was a Pledge of their Fidelity; and by fighting valiantly for their Country, they secur'd their private Possessions; whereas a poor Man carries all his Wealth with him; and if he has a Prospect of being better with the Enemy, 'twill be no hard matter to persuade him to desert his own Party. And after this Custom grew out of fashion, in the time of the Emperors, yet they us'd to keep part of the Soldiers Arrears behind, to secure the Fidelity of the Army, which was never clear'd 'till they were dismiss'd.

Never any but Porfenna and the Gauls were able to bring them to dishonourable Conditions of Peace; the first having oblig'd them to give Hostages, that they should make no Iron-work, but what was requisite to Till the Ground; the other, forcing them to prevent the utter Ruin of Rome by a Sum of Money. For the Story of Camillus's coming up just at the time of weighing out of the Gold, and driving the Gauls from the Capitol, is look'd upon by many as fabulous. The former of these the Roman Writers have cautiously avoided to speak of, as they have taken care to disguise the other. These, I think, are the only Instances. Upon all other Occasions they did bear their Misfortunes and Losses with the greatest Fortitude and Constancy imaginable, and sometimes rather deliver'd up their Generals, and suffer'd their Soldiers to be made Slaves than agree to base and disadvantageous Conditions. It is very well known that their Form of Government was various. They began with the Kingly, which lasted 242 Years, 'till Sextus Tarquinius gave some sort of Pretence for altering it, by his ravishing Lucretia. The Fact was abominable, 'tis true, and Junius Brutus had good reason to be angry; but whether his and the Peoples Resentment ought to have been carried so high, is more than I will say. For (as the judicious Puffendorf observes) a Fact, tho' never so criminal, committed by a Son, without the Knowledge and Consent of his Father, ought not to be prejudicial to the Father and Family; much less could be a pretence to depose a King from a Throne which be lawfully possess'd; especially since to take Vengeance of Criminals belongs to the King, and not to the Subjects. After the Expulsion of the Kings, an Aristocratical Form of Government was introduced, which prov'd as heavy a Yoke to the Necks of the People as the former. For at that time there were no written Laws in Rome; and the Nobility being in Possession of all publick Offices, gave Sentence more according to Favour and Affection than Justice. And the Citizens being obliged to serve in the Wars at their own Charge, became miserably exhausted, and were forc'd to borrow from the richer sort; and not being able to pay their Debts, were grievously oppress'd by their Creditors, and at last reduc'd to that degree of Despair that they unanimously left the City. Neither could they be persuaded to return, before the Senate had agreed to constitute Magistrates, call'd Tribunes of the People, who were to protect the Commons against the Nobility; which, as it form'd a new Division in the State at that time, did afterwards afford perpetual Fuel for Civil Divisions, 'til at last they broke out into Civil Wars, and sheath'd their Swords in each others Bowels.

After this Common-wealth, notwithstanding all those intestine Commotions and Divisions, had arriv'd to its highest Pitch of greatness, it return'd again to a Monarchy, tho' not of the best kind. Augustus, as he laid the Foundation of it, so by his wise and prudent Management he seem'd to have settled it pretty well; but the Nobility not being able to brook the Government of one Person, who was rais'd by the Soldiers, without their Consent, was always for recovering their ancient Liberty; which obliged the succeeding Emperors, first to weaken, and afterwards extinguish the Power and Splendor of this Order, insomuch that within the space of 200 Years, few of them were left, and upstart Favourites put in their Places. Thus the Senate and People became empty Names; and the Emperors were no more than the Creatures of the Army: And as double Pay and great Presents purchas'd them the Favour of the Soldiers, and procur'd them the Title; so the want of Money to support themselves withal, was thought sufficient ground for taking away their Lives, to make way for another whose Coffers were fuller. Hence came nothing but Misery and Confusion in the Roman Empire: And oftentimes the bravest Princes were basely murder'd, and some of the lowest Rank and meanest Capacity set up in their Room: And sometimes two or more were declar'd Emperors, by several parts of the Army, who made horrid slaughter among the Citizens in diciding their Titles to the Empire. As this did mightily weaken the Strength of this vast Body, so Constantine the Great hasten'd its Fall, by transferring the Imperial Court to Constantinople, and sending away the veterane Legions which guarded the Frontiers of the Empire along the Danube and Rhine, to the Eastern Parts, whereby the Western Provinces, destitute of their Guards, became a Prey to other Nations. After the Western Empire had fallen into the Hands of the Germans, Goths, Vandals, Suevians, Franks, and others, the Eastern Provinces remain'd for a great many hundred Years after, 'till at last the City of Constantinople being storm'd and taken by the Turks, in the Year 1453. this part of the Roman Empire also was brought to its fatal Period, and Constantinople made the Place of the ordinary Residence of the Ottoman Emperors.

As to the Forms of Government and Administration of Justice in Italy, the Reader is to expect that in the particular Description of the several Sovereignities in it; and so we go on to the GENIUS and CUSTOMS of the Italians, They are generally very Ingenious, ready Witted, and of great Application in Study and Business: Of a middle Temper, between the starchy Gravity of a Spaniard, and the Levity of a French Man. They have a great Sense of Gratitude, and are willing and ready upon all Occasions to return a Favour done them, tho' never so inconsiderable; but on the other Hand, they are revengeful in the highest degree, and cannot forget Injuries. They have a great Affection towards their Kindred and Alliance; and are very Ambitious of Honours and Preferment. To keep the World and themselves in Mind that they are the Successors of the old Romans, they mightily affect their ancient Names with a variation, as, Camillo, Scipione, Julio, Mario, Pompeio &c. For all their Gravity, there's no People on Earth that can Act a Buffoon, Mimick or Scaramouch, comparable to them. They shun all occasions of Quarelling, especially with Strangers; to whom they are very Civil and Courteous, after once you have got their Acquaintance. They are great Lovers of Liberty; and therefore in many Places Discourses and Books about former Revolutions are forbid. The Italian Nobility and Gentry live most in Towns, and lay out their Money more upon fine Houses and Gardens, Pictures, Statues, and such Things as may contribute to the adorning their Houses; and upon fine Coaches and a handsome Retinue of Servants (who are for the most part at Board-wages) than on luxurious Tables and strong Liquors; which is too common in other parts of Europe. If there are two or more Brothers in a Family, it often happens that only one of them Marries, commonly the Eldest; and the rest live upon Purchase. In many Places they have Hospitals for entertaining Pilgrims and poor Travellers; and others for nursing and bringing up Children, whom Fear or Shame obliges the Parents to expose. When they lay them down, they have no more to do but ring a Bell, and tell the Officer that comes for the Child, whether it be Baptized or not. The Italians are the most scrupulously nice upon all the little Punctilios of Civility of any People in the World, and profusely lavish of their Complements and high Titles: And know exactly how to receive and entertain Persons of all Ranks and Conditions. They never Whisper in any Company, or Talk in another Language, or interrupt any Man before he has done what he had a mind to say; and nothing is thought more odious among them than Slandering and Backbiting. They never visit Persons of Note without first sending them Word. The Right Hand is more Honourable than the Left, when two Walk together, and the middle when Three. Their Conversation is very Civil and Obliging, nor does the greatest Familiarity make them forget their courteous Carriage.

They have some Customs more peculiar to themselves, such as their reckoning their Hours from Sun-set to Sun-set, as the Athenians of old did. They Sleep commonly two Hours after Dinner. They make their Children go Bare-headed till they are five Years old, to harden them and prevent Catarrhs when they come to be old. Their Women affect yellow Hair, as the Roman Ladies and Courtezans did of old, and have a particular Wash for it. After the Men have been abroad visiting or so, they throw off their Hat, Bands and Cuffs; and put on a Gray Coat and a Cap, which they commonly Dine in. When they call one at a Distance, they point to him with their Finger downwards, looking upon't as an Affront to do it upwards. At their Meals, they begin with their Roast Meat and end with their Potrage; and Roast their Meat very dry. Boyl'd Snails serv'd up with Pepper and Oyl, and fry'd Frogs serv'd up the same way, are in great esteem. They commonly eat Kites, Hawks, Magpies, Jackdaws, and several other lesser Birds which are not us'd here: And drink their Wine in Winter as well as in Summer out of Snow.

The Italian Language is the old Latin corrupted by the Goths, Vandals and other Nations. In Savoy and Piedmont the French is generally Spoke. There are in Italy above 30 Archbishopricks; and the inferior Bishopricks, as they are generally small, so they are almost innumerable. There are also 12 Universities, viz. Padua, Venice, Turin, Pavia, Siena, Bononia, Rome, Ferrara, Macerata, Fermo, Naples and Salerno. Bononia was formerly Famous for the Study of the Roman Laws, as Salerno was for that of Medicine. There are several of the most considerable Cities and Towns in Italy that have peculiar Epithets commonly given them, as, Rome the Holy, because it is the Seat of the Pope; Naples the Noble, because of the great Number of Nobility and Gentry that are in it: Florence the Fair, because of the stateliness of the Houses, and the broadness and cleanness of its Streets; Venice the

Ricb, because of its Power and great Riches; Genova the Stately, because of its magnificent Buildings; Milan the Great, because of its Largeness and great number of Inhabitants; Ravenna the Ancient, because it is so; Padua the Learned, because there Learning flourish'd; Bononia the Fat, because of the Excellency of the Soil about it: Leghorn the Merchandizing; Verona the Charming; Luca the Jolly; Casal the Strong, &c

As we have said already, Italy cannot be more fitly divided, considering the present State of it, and by whom it is now possess'd, than according to the several Dominions and Sovereignies that are in it, viz. those of the King of Spain, the Pope, the Republick of Venice, the Great Duke of Tuscany, the Republick of Genova, the Duke of Parma, the Duke of Savoy in Piedmont, the Swissers beyond the Lakes of Maggiore and Como. But because throughout all this Work we have observ'd one Order of describing the Kingdoms and Countries according as they are situated next to one another, (tho' perhaps describing the Dominions of particular Princes altogether, however they may be dispers'd, as those of Spain are in Italy, would be no ill Method) we shall begin with that part of Italy that lies next to France, and so go on to the most Southern Parts of it, in the same Order as you see in the following Table.

P I E D M O N T.

Piedmont, Pedemontium, owes its Name to its Situation, at the Foot of the Mountains. It was anciently call'd Gallia Subalpina, and is bounded (according to Baudrand and others) with the Duchy of Milan and Montferrat on the East, the Genouois and the County of Nice on the South, Dauphine and Savoy on the West, and the Duchy of Aouste and a small part of the Duchy of Milan on the North: And divided into two Parts by the River Po. It is about 140 Miles long, South and North, and 100 broad, East and West. Charles Emanuel, Duke of Savoy, divided it into 12 Parts or Provinces, to which his Successor, Duke Victor Amadee, added 4 more: So that now (according to Franciscus Augustinus, Bishop of Saluzzo) it is divided into 16 Provinces.

Theodorick, King of the Goths, having vanquish'd Odoacer, King of Italy, gave this Country to the Hepuli, who were subdu'd by the Lombards; whose 17th King, Aripert, gave it to the Church of Rome; but it lying far off, and not being confirm'd by his Successors, at the Subversion of that Kingdom, it fell into the Hands of the Kings of Italy, of the House of Charles the Great. Thomas and Peter, Counts of Savoy, made themselves Masters of the greatest part of it by force of Arms; the former in the Year 1210. the latter in the Year 1256. since which time the eldest Son of Savoy is styl'd Prince of Piedmont. The Marquisate of Saluzzo (which we shall have occasion to speak of afterwards) was annex'd to it by the Marriage of a Daughter of this Family with Charles Duke of Savoy, An. 1481.

Piedmont, as it is a very fertile and rich Country, so it is also one of the most pleasant and plentiful in all Italy. It produces plenty of Corn, Wine, Fruit, Hemp, Flax, Metals, and affords good store of Cattle, and every thing fit for the use and delight of Man; and is so populous, that the Italians us'd to say, That the Duke of Savoy had but one City in Italy 300 Miles in Compass. Notwithstanding the different Divisions that have been made of this Country at several times, as we said before, it may not improperly be divided now into 10 Parts: Altho' one of them, call'd the French Piedmont, was restor'd to the Duke of Savoy, by the Treaty of Peace at Turin, An. 1696. The 10 Parts are,

Piedmont, properly so call'd, is bounded with Montferrat on the East, the Territories of Genova on the South, the Marquisate of Saluzzo on the West, and that of Susa and a part of Montferrat on the North. The principal Cities and Towns in it are,

Turin, Augusta Taurinorum, and Taurinum. Pliny and Ptolemy place it in Gallia Subalpina. Livy and Appianus Alexandrinus call it Taurasia, and Stephanus Taurenia. This City is seated at the end of a Charming Plain, upon the River Po, which furnishes it abundantly with all Necessaries and Conveniences of Life. It is enclos'd with strong Walls, and surrounded with broad, deep, and well lin'd Ditches. The Citadel is a Master-piece of Fortification; and the present Duke has done all he can to make it Impregnable. The Streets of the new Town are broad and strait; but the old Town is very irregular, the Streets narrow and crooked, and the Houses not worth looking at. The publick Places in the new are Spacious; the Palaces are the noblest Improvements of Architecture, the Paintings, Guilding and other Ornaments of the Churches are suitable to the Beauty of the Buildings; the Shops are all well furnish'd, and the Academies for Riding, Dancing and Martial Exercises, well provided with Masters; and in short, hardly any thing wanting to make it a most glorious City. And to compleat the Glories of the Place, there is a Court, that, notwithstanding its Smallness, may be justly reckon'd the Seat of Gallantry and Politeness. All the Ornaments of this City are Modern; except what's to be seen in the Duke's Gallery, there's scarce any thing of Antiquity here. It is full of all sorts of fine Paintings, rare Manuscripts, Medals, Vases, and other Curiosities of that Nature. There is lately added to the Cathedral Church, dedicated to St. John, a Chappel of surprizing Beauty and Riches. It was Built on purpose in Honour of the Holy Sheet, or Cloth (as they say) in which our Saviour was wrapt at his Burial, and upon which the Image of his Face was miraculously stamp'd. The University was erected here under the Pontificat of Benedict XIII. An. 1405. and the Citadel built by Emanuel Philibert, Duke of Savoy, An. 1565. which, notwithstanding its great Strength, was taken by the French, under the Command of Count Harcourt, An. 1640. But both that and the City have been so exceedingly well Fortified by the present Duke of Savoy, that it was able to resist the vigorous Attacks of the French for 3 Months in the Year 1706. at the end of which, Sept. 6. the Duke of Savoy being reinforc'd by the Imperial Army under Prince Eugene, they rais'd the Siege, and obtain'd a most signal Victory. It stands in the Lat. of 44. 40. about 12 Miles from Pignerol to the North East, 45 from Vercelli, 25 from Asti to the West, and 80 from Genova to the North West, 70 from the Mediterranean Sea to the North, and 100 from the Lake of Geneva to the South.

Fossano, Fossanum, so call'd from the wholesome Springs that are in its Neighbourhood. It was built in the Year 1236. and stands upon the River Stura, between Saluzzo to the West, and Mondovi to the South West, 6 from Coni, 24 from Turin to the South, and 26 from Pignerol to the South East. Pope Gregory XVIII. founded an Episcopal See here, under the Arch-Bishop of Milan. The Duke of Savoy had posted himself very strongly near that City at the time of the Siege of Turin, but was forc'd from it by the Duke de Feyllade. Mon- Lombardy.

Mondovì, Mons Realis, or Mons Vici, stands at the Foot of the Appennines, 2 Miles from the River Tanaro; 13 from Cuni to the East, 26 from Fossano to the North West, and 37 South E. from Turin. It was once a part of the Marquisate of Montferrat, till at the Solicitation of Theodore II. Marquis of that Name, it was erected into a Bishoprick, An. 1385. subject to the Archbishop of Turin. Pope Pius V. was sometimes Bishop here, call'd then Cardinal Macliel Giffertius. There was formerly an University here, which was translated to Turin. In the beginning of the Year 1699. the Inhabitants of the flat Country, about Mondovì, join'd with the Banditi, who were the Ringleaders of it, form'd a formidable Rebellion against the Duke, and in several Skirmishes wasted his Forces, and killed several Officers of Quality, and a great many of his Soldiers. 'Tis true, the Mondovì in general, are no better than the Banditi; but whether His Royal Highness's Rigour towards his Subjects was to blame for this, or no, we leave to others to decide: He at last extinguish'd this Flame, by the Blood of such of the Offenders as were taken.

Carignano, Carinianum, stands on the Po, about 5 Miles from Turin to the South, and near as much from Carmagnole; and did bear the Title of a Principality, with which Thomas Francis of Savoy, fifth Son of Charles Emanuel I. and Catherine Michelle of Austria, was honour'd, as he was likewise with that of Great Master of France. It is defended by a strong Castle, and has the Advantage of a stately Bridge over the Po. It was taken by the French, An. 1691. and regain'd the same Year by the Duke of Savoy.

Ceva, Ceba, or Ceva, stands upon the River Tanaro, near the Confines of the Dutchy of Montferrat, about 7 Miles from Mondovì to the East, and 40 from Turin to the South East. It had formerly Marquises of that Title, and from it the neighbouring Country was call'd the Marquisate of Ceva. The Castle is strong, and was able to preserve itself from the French, in 1706. when they had taken possession of the Town.

Savillano, or Savigliano, Savillanum, stands upon the River Magra, in the middle between Fossano to the East, and Saluzzo to the West, about 5 Miles from either, and 20 directly South, from Turin. It is most advantageously situated between 2 Rivers, insomuch that 'tis said that Philibert Emanuel, Duke of Savoy, design'd to make it the Metropolis of his Dominions.

Cuni, or Cunio, Cunetum, is a strong Town and Castle built on a Hill, at the Confluence of the Rivers Stura and Ges. It held out against Francis I. King of France; but was taken by Count Harcourt in the Year 1641. in the Reign of Lewis XIII. of France. In the Year 1691. the French attempted to take it; but were forc'd to raise the Siege. It stands about 11 Miles from Fossano, and 30 from Turin to the South, and is said to have been built in the Year 1150.

Cherasco, Carrea, stands in the County of Asti, upon the River Tanaro; but this old Name, according to Francis Augustin Bishop of Saluzzo, belongs rather to Chieri in Piedmont; which was once a considerable free Town, before it fell into the Hands of the Duke of Savoy. It stands about 5 Miles from Turin to the East.

The Country which of late has been call'd FRENCH PIEDMONT, does not now deserve that Name; since by the Treaty of Peace between France and Savoy, concluded at Turin, An. 1696. it was agreed, That the City and Citadel of Pignerol, after the Fortifications should be demolish'd, at the King's Charge together with the Forts of St. Bridget, the Percuse, &c. as well as the Territories and Dominions compriz'd under the Name of the Government of Pignerol (which did belong to the House of Savoy, before the Cession or Surrender, that Victor Amadeo, the first Duke of that Name, made to Lewis XIII. of France, should be restor'd to the Duke of Savoy. This Country lies between Piedmont properly so call'd, and the Valleys of the Vandois; and contains these Places, Pignerol Cap.

Percuse.

Briqueras.

Pignerol, or Pinarolo, Pinariolum, stands upon the River Chisius, commonly by the Italians call'd Il Chiese, at the Foot of the Alpes, near the Confines of Dauphiny. It was lately a very well fortified Town; and the Citadel as it was before the demolishing of it, might have been justly reckon'd one of the Strongest Places in Europe; and a terrible Thorn in the Duke of Savoy's Foot while it remain'd in the French King's Hands; which one day might have made him halt, if he had not taken care to pluck it out by the late Treaty. It was formerly under the Jurisdiction of Savoy, and was commonly an Appenage of the younger Sons of that Family, till it was taken by the French Forces, under the Conduct of Armand John de Pleffis, Cardinal of Richelieu, in the Year 1630. and afterwards sold by Duke Victor Amadeo, together with the Fort and Valley of Percuse, for the Sum of 494000 Crowns to the King of France; who, besides this Sum, resign'd to the Duke the City of Alba in the Dutchy of Montferrat, with the adjacent Territories, by a Treaty concluded at Cherasco, 31 March 1631. In the Year 1693. the Duke of Savoy, at the Head of the Confederate Forces, laid Siege to it; but afterwards his Royal Highness thought fit to leave it and go meet General Catinat, who then lay encamp'd with 12 or 14000 Men between the Mountains of Fenestrelle and Biffi, about 20 Miles North West of Pignerol; but finding it hard to come at him, went back and open'd the Trenches before Pignerol, in September. In the mean while Catinat's Army was reinforc'd with several Retachments from Germany and Catalonia; and the Confederates rais'd the Siege, blew up the Fortrefs of St. Bridget (which has a Communication with the Citadel by a cover'd Way, and a Passage under Ground) and set forward to meet him, near Orbessan in the Plains of Marcellane; where a bloody Battle was fought on the 4th of October, 1693. in which the French won the day but lost above 6000 Men, and the Confederate about 5500. The City of Pignerol (as we said before) was surrendred to the Duke of Savoy, and all its Fortifications demolish'd, by the Treaty of Turin, 1696. It stands about 20 Miles from Turin to the South West, 24 from Susa to the South, 15 from Saluzzo to the North, above 40 S. West from Casal, and 350 from Paris to the South East.
